ROYAL COMMISSIONS APPOINTING THE COMMISSIONERS AND THE SECRETARY.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor, Leonard Henry Courtney; Our trusty and well-beloved Sir Thomas Henry Farrer, Baronet; Our trusty and well-beloved Robert Durning Holt, Esquire, Mayor of our City of Liverpool; Our trusty and well-beloved Henry Homewood Crawford, Esquire, Solicitor to the Corporation of our City of London; and Our trusty and well-beloved Edward Orford Smith, Esquire, Town Clerk of our City of Birmingham, Greeting.

Whereas We have deemed it expedient that a Commission should forthwith issue to consider the proper conditions under which the Amalgamation of the City and the County of London can be effected, and to make specific and practical proposals for that purpose.

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your knowledge and ability, have authorised and appointed you, the said Leonard Henry Courtney; Sir Thomas Henry Farrer; Robert Durning Holt; Henry Homewood Crawford; and Edward Orford Smith; to be Our Commissioners for that purpose.

And for the better effecting the purpose of this Our Commission, We do by these Presents give and grant unto you, or any three or more of you, full power to call before you such persons as you shall judge likely to afford you any information upon the subject of this Our Commission; and also to call for, have access to, and examine, all such books, documents, registers, and records, as may afford you the fullest information on the subject; and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever.

And We do further by these Presents authorise and empower you, or any three or more of you, to visit and personally inspect such places in Our United Kingdom, as you may deem it expedient so to inspect, for the more effectual carrying out of the purpose aforesaid.

And We do further by these Presents will and ordain that this Our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue; and that you, Our said Commissioners, or any three or more of you, may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment.

And We do further ordain that you, or any three or more of you, have liberty to report your proceedings from time to time, if you shall judge it expedient so to do.

And Our further Will and Pleasure is that you do, with as little delay as possible, report to Us, under your hands and seals, or under the hands and seals of any three or more of you, your opinion upon the matter herein submitted for your consideration.

Given at Our Court at St. James's the twenty-seventh day of March, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, in the fifty-sixth year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,

(Signed) H. H. ASQUITH.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, Commissioners appointed under Your Majesty's Royal Warrant of the 27th March 1893, to consider the proper conditions under which the amalgamation of the City and County of London can be effected, and to make specific and practical proposals for that purpose, beg humbly to submit to Your Majesty the following report :—

Previous attempts to deal with problem of London Government.

Though the particular form in which Your Majesty has desired us to approach the subject is a new one, the general question of the organisation of the Government of London has been frequently considered, and by other Commissioners than ourselves.

Effect of Act of 1835 on Municipal Corporations generally.

2. Under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835,* the municipalities of England and Wales, other than London, which was excepted for special reasons, and certain boroughs which were not dealt with on account of their insignificant size and comparative unimportance, were completely reorganised. The two main changes introduced may be especially noted.

Two main changes introduced by the Act : i. Reform of constitution.

3. The governing bodies were entirely transformed. Up to that time their members had been "in the great majority of instances" self-elected, and "generally for life";† but under the Act these bodies were composed of councillors directly elected by resident rated occupiers for a term of three years, and of aldermen chosen by these councillors to the extent of one-third of their own number for a term of six years. The limits of the area of each borough were extended as the town had extended. In the case of towns possessing a representation in Parliament, the limits adopted were those prescribed for the Parliamentary boroughs as created or re-constructed in 1832.

ii. Extension of area.

4. This second change produced in cases requiring it an extraordinary extension of the areas of the towns dealt with, as they had outgrown the narrow space occupied when they were first incorporated; and as the Act provided there should be no discontinuity of existence, the powers and possessions of the governing body of the smaller area passed to their immediate successors, the corporation of the extended borough. Many of the boroughs so extended have continued to grow since 1835, and under Private Acts of Parliament and Provisional Orders confirmed by Parliament, their boundaries have from time to time been extended, so as to include what had become parts of the same community, though outside the original limits.

Instance of Liverpool.

5. It was stated in evidence‡ that the population of Liverpool, which was raised by the extension effected under the Act of 1835 from 165,000 to 206,000, and is now 520,000, will under a Provisional Order about to be submitted to Parliament be further increased by 120,000 to 640,000.

London excluded from Act of 1835. Its case separately considered by the Royal Commissioners in 1837. Their views upon it generally in favour of a single municipality for London.

6. The case of London was excluded from the legislation of 1835, but the Commissioners upon whose report that legislation had followed proceeded in 1837 to make a special report on the case of the capital. They pointed out how small a proportion of the Metropolis was comprehended within the municipal boundary of the City,§ their estimate being that the population within the limits of the City was "less than a ninth "of the population of what might be considered, in a general way, the Town of "London." After indicating the difference between London and other boroughs, they stated‖ that they "did not find any argument on which the course pursued with regard "to other towns could be justified, which did not apply with the same force to London, "unless the magnitude of change in this case should be considered as converting that "which would otherwise be only a practical difficulty, into an objection of principle," and "they were unable to discover any circumstance justifying the distinction of "the small area within the municipal boundary from the rest, except that in fact "it was, and had long been, so distinguished." At the same time they referred to the possible suggestion that the outer parts of the town might be formed into separate communities, as follows* :—"We hardly anticipate that it will be suggested, "for the purpose of removing the appearance of singularity, that the other quarters "of the town should be formed into independent and isolated communities, if indeed "the multifarious relations to which their proximity compels them would permit them "to be isolated and independent. This plan would, as it seems to us, in getting rid "of an anomaly, tend to multiply and perpetuate an evil." While thus discountenancing the creation of a congeries of municipalities the Commissioners called attention to the peculiar conditions of the Metropolis as the seat of the Legislature and of the Executive Government; and after indicating certain functions of local administration which in their judgment could never be "so economically and efficiently performed in "one town as when superintended by an undivided authority," added that† "the only "real point for consideration was how far these duties for the whole Metropolis could "be placed in the hands of a Metropolitan Municipality, or how far they should be "entrusted to the officers of His Majesty's Government."

Alterations recommended by Commission of 1837. How far carried into effect.

7. The Commissioners proceeded to describe and criticize, in detail, the various features of the city government as it then existed, and to indicate certain alterations which seemed to them desirable. Some of these have since been carried into effect, but no general legislation, or attempt at legislation with respect to the government of the Metropolis, followed this Report, a fact which may in some measure be attributed to the circumstance that the Corporation of the City was, unlike most other old Corporations, a popularly elected body, but still more to the political conditions of the ensuing years, and to a consciousness that the Commissioners themselves had hesitated to formulate any conclusions on the subject more definite than those above indicated.

Royal Commission of 1853–4. Their recommendation in favour of seven separate municipalities in London under a central Board of Works. How far carried into effect.

8. In 1853, another Commission was appointed to inquire specially into the affairs of the City Corporation. In their Report in the following year they made various recommendations for the reform of the City Corporation, a few of which have been carried out,‡ either by the Corporation itself, or by legislation such as the City Elections Act of 1867, and the City Ballot Act of 1887. Though the general question of the Government of the Metropolis had not been referred to these Commissioners, they reported at some length upon that subject, and suggested that the seven Parliamentary Boroughs then existing in the Metropolis should be created Municipal Boroughs combined with a central Board of Works, the members of which should be elected from each municipality.

9. No action was taken to bring into existence these seven municipalities, but the suggestion for the creation of a central Board of Works was carried into effect by the Metropolis Local Management Act introduced by Sir Benjamin Hall in 1855. In this measure use was made of the existing parishes, the vestries of which—either separately or grouped by means of secondary indirect election into District Boards—were made at once the primary local authorities for the government of the Metropolis, and also the constituent electors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, which was created for the management and control of matters, such as main drainage, common to the whole of London. In this legislation there was for the first time provided a central body entrusted with the administration of certain functions throughout the whole Metropolitan area (including the City), while leaving local functions to be discharged by local authorities in the City and surrounding parishes.

Recommendations of Select Committees of 1861, 1866, and 1867.

10. Select Committees of the House of Commons sat in 1861, 1866, and 1867, to inquire into the Local Government and Taxation of the Metropolis. The Report of the Committee of 1861 contains a most valuable sketch of the existing condition of local government in London, but the only definite recommendation made by it with which we are at present concerned, was a suggestion that greater authority would attach to the deliberations of the Metropolitan Board of Works were its members elected directly by the ratepayers of the Metropolis.§

11. The Committee of 1866 also refrained from making specific recommendations, confining themselves to a suggestion that, in any re-arrangement of the financial resources of the Metropolitan Board of Works, a portion of the charge for permanent improvements and works should be borne by the owners of property within the Metropolis, and that the owners should be represented on the Board.‖

§ Third Report, page xii. ‖ First Report, paragraphs 48 and 49.

12. This Committee was re-appointed in 1867, and made several definite suggestions, the principal being* :—

(1.) That the Metropolis should be constituted a county of itself.

(2.) That the Metropolitan Board of Works should contain, besides representatives of the several vestries and district boards as before, a number of metropolitan justices, to represent the owners of property, and a further number of members elected directly by the ratepayers in each district.

(3.) That the powers and duties of the Metropolitan Board of Works having been much enlarged since its first establishment, its name should be made more conformable to its present and future condition, and it should be called "The Municipal Council of London."

(4.) That its powers should be still further extended, as regards gas and water supply, railways, and securing uniformity of assessment.

(5.) That the existing divisions of the Metropolis for the purpose of local government should be readjusted, and divided into convenient wards, the ratepayers of which should directly elect the members of the district governing bodies.

(6.) That the governing authority for each district should be called the "Common Council" of the district.

(7.) That these common councils should absorb the boards of guardians, so that the functions of local government brought into close relations with the relief of the poor should be exercised by one body, subject to such superior control by the Municipal Council as might be necessary for the general welfare of the metropolis.

(8.) That all the police in the Metropolis should be placed under one control; but if that should be found too heavy a charge, the police of the remoter districts should be transferred to the counties in which they were situate where an efficient county police was established.

Sir William Harcourt's London Government Bill, 1884, proposing a municipality for London with power to delegate some of its functions to local bodies.

13. The question of the government of London again remained dormant until 1884, when it was taken up by the Government of the day. That Government submitted to Parliament a measure based on the creation of a single municipality for the whole of London, by an extension of the area, and a reform of the constitution of the ancient City Corporation. It was proposed that this municipality should absorb all the powers of the existing vestries, giving out again to them such functions as in its judgment might be advantageously exercised by local bodies; and the Bill had naturally to contend in Parliament, not only with the opposition of the City of London, but also to some extent with that of the vestries and district boards, whose independence was threatened by the proposed limitation of their powers in future to such as might be delegated to them by the municipality. After several interesting debates the Bill was withdrawn at a late period of the session, but its introduction and discussion had done much to awaken interest and mature opinion on the question of the practicability of the government of London by a single municipality.

Local Government Act, 1888.

14. In 1888 a Bill was carried through Parliament for the extension to the counties of England and Wales of the principle of self government, by the creation of directly elected representative bodies called county councils, and occasion was taken to convert the area, under the administration of the Metropolitan Board of Works, into a separate county, with a council elected as in the other counties.

Its effect on London government. The County of London, and the County of the City of London, form together the Administrative County of London.

15. The Local Government Act of 1888 affected London in a special and somewhat complicated manner. For non-administrative purposes, it constituted London outside the City a county at large, with an organisation corresponding to that of other counties in England, except in so far as that organisation is modified by the existence of the Central Criminal Court District, the Metropolitan Police, the Metropolitan Police Courts with their Magistrates, and a paid Chairman of Quarter Sessions. For similar purposes the Act left the City of London, which is a county of a city, practically untouched. For administrative purposes the Act created the Administrative County of London, which includes the City, and for which the County Council is elected; and it treated the City as nearly as possible as if it were a quarter sessions borough, with a population exceeding 10,000, lying within the Administrative County of London. It therefore transferred or reserved to the Common Council of the City, the powers of the council of a borough of that class. The theory was simple; the complexity lay in the existing facts. On the one hand the Metropolitan Board of Works had extensive powers of town government outside the City, including not only direct administrative functions, but also various powers of control over the action of the local authorities, the vestries, and district boards; and it had also some powers which almost of necessity extended to the area of the City, for example, main drainage. All these powers and duties were transferred to the London County Council, which thus obtained not only large powers of town government over the whole area of the administrative county with the exception of the City, but also powers and functions within the City, which no other county council exercises in a borough lying within its administrative area. On the other hand, the Corporation of the City, by ancient privilege or special legislation, had rights and powers which extended beyond the area of the City, and applied to or affected the whole Administrative County of London, such for example, as market rights, and powers as to foreign cattle, and as port sanitary authority. These rights and powers were left untouched, and they connect the City with the Administrative County of London in a way in which no borough is connected with the Administrative County in which it lies. The machinery of local government applicable to a rural county with boroughs lying within its area, was insufficient for the far more complicated case of London, and the problem of its government was not solved by the Act of 1888.

16. It will thus be seen that the Act of 1888, in creating the London County Council, combined in that body two distinct characters, and invested it with two distinct classes of duties and powers. It not only constituted London outside the City a separate county under a county council, exercising the functions hitherto performed by the justices in quarter sessions, but also transferred to this council the powers and duties previously vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works, so that the London County Council stands out amongst other county councils, as regards both the extent and limitation of its authority. Over the county of London—London outside the City—its powers are very extensive. Where it has no power of direct administration itself, it controls in various ways the action of the local authorities, the vestries and district boards. At the City boundary many, if not most, of these powers are stopped, and we come into the jurisdiction of a separate municipality—the City of London, which also exercises some powers beyond its own precincts—and into a new county—the county of the City of London. For some purposes, however, such as main drainage, the two areas are combined under the County Council into one, the Administrative County of London, comprising both the County of London and the City of London with the County of the City of London.

Acreage, rateable value, and population of the three counties.

17. We have therefore three principal areas existing in London: (1) the City of London governed by an unreformed Corporation, which is also a separate county for non-administrative purposes, viz., Quarter Sessions, Justices, Militia, Coroner, Sheriffs, &c.; (2) the county of London, which is the area under the government of the London County Council, minus the City; and (3) the Administrative County of London, which is the whole district under the County Council, and which for certain administrative purposes includes the City.

The rateable value, acreage, and population of these three areas are shown in the following table:—

	City and County of City of London.	County of London outside the City.	Administrative County of London, including the City.
Acreage	671	74,771	75,442
Rateable value (1891)	£4,100,798	£28,998,515	£33,099,313
Population (Census of 1891)	37,705	4,194,413	4,232,118
RATIO PER CENT.
Acreage	·89	99·11	100
Rateable value	12·39	87·61	100
Population	·90	99·10	100

The task set before the Commission is the amalgamation of these areas and jurisdictions.

Terms of reference to the Commission. Interpretation put upon them.

18. That such an amalgamation is desirable if it is practicable we understand to be assumed in the terms of the reference to us, "to consider the proper conditions "under which the amalgamation of the City and County of London can be effected, "and to make specific and practical proposals for that purpose." This assumption did not command the assent of our late colleague, Mr. H. Homewood Crawford, the City Solicitor, and he and those who represented the City before us as witnesses, protested against their appearance on or before the Commission being regarded as an admission that the amalgamation was desirable. Some correspondence and delay in the production of evidence on behalf of the City followed, and ultimately the witnesses who had attended on behalf of the City withdrew, and Mr. Crawford himself retired from the Commission. We cannot but be glad that the participation, so far as it extended, of the City in the inquiry placed at our disposal a large amount of valuable information as to the history, constitution, and working of the government of the City both by the Corporation itself and the Commissioners of Sewers; and the advantage derived from the co-operation of our colleague, Mr. Crawford, is apparent on every page of our proceedings throughout the earlier part of our inquiry. We desire to express our indebtedness to him, and our regret that we had not the benefit of his assistance to the end of our labours. Incidentally we may mention that we had not the advantage of receiving direct evidence upon the City estates and accounts from the Chamberlain, and upon the City police from the Commissioner of that Police.

Withdrawal of the City representatives.

19. The reasons assigned for withdrawal by the City were the conditions attached by us to the receipt of evidence which the Corporation wished to offer with regard to local authorities other than themselves, and the manner in which witnesses tendered by the Corporation had been examined, which led them to the conclusion that "due "consideration had not been and was not being given to the important interests "involved in the reference" to us.* How far these complaints were justified we must leave to be determined by those who read our proceedings,† but we may say for ourselves that our endeavour throughout has been, whilst carrying into effect the instructions by which we are bound, to do full justice to the representatives and evidence put before us on behalf of the City. We believe that no evidence tendered by the City was rejected, and we received at first hand evidence from the representatives of the vestries and district boards, on whose behalf the City apparently desired to speak.

Reasons assigned by the City for withdrawal.

20. Besides representatives of the Corporation—including a former Lord Mayor (Sir D. Evans), the Town Clerk, the Recorder and Common Serjeant, the Comptroller, and other high officials—and of the Commissioners of Sewers—including the Chairman and Principal Clerk—we have had the advantage of obtaining evidence from Mr. Rotton, legal adviser to the Local Government Board; the Vice-Chairman, Deputy-Chairman, and other members and officers of the London County Council; from the chairmen, clerks, and other members and officers of several vestries and district boards of works; from the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, the Town Clerk of Nottingham, the Deputy Town Clerk of Liverpool, the Chairman of the Essex County Council, the Secretary to the Municipal Corporations Association, representatives of the Incorporated Institution of Municipal and County Engineers, and other gentlemen, and we believe the assistance we have thus received extends to all the subjects of our inquiry, and enables us to approach with some confidence the questions referred to us by Your Majesty.

Witnesses examined.

21. We began, in the first instance, by obtaining from the Local Government Board a statement of the present condition of local government in the Metropolis and an enumeration of the several bodies exercising local functions, and the powers and duties entrusted to each.‡ We then applied to the County Council, the Corporation, and the Commissioners of Sewers for more detailed information upon their powers and duties, and received from all three bodies printed statements (to be found in the Appendix), which subsequently formed the basis of oral evidence.§ As a rule, we confined our inquiries to such matters as each witness could speak to at first hand, but an exception had to be made to this rule in taking evidence from Mr. John Kemp and Mr. Gomme, witnesses tendered by the London County Council, in respect of the City, pending the decision of the Corporation as to continuing to give evidence before us.‖ After thus obtaining an account of things as they were, we proceeded to the consideration of a scheme of amalgamation put forward by the County Council, and to the comments made upon it by persons qualified to speak; and inasmuch as the vestries and district boards had certain relations to the County Council, a consideration of which might be important in reference to the future government of the present limited City, we thought it well to take evidence from them both as to their present powers and duties, and also as to any modifications which seemed to them desirable, especially as regards their relation to the central body.

General conclusion suggested by the evidence. There must be a central body and strong local bodies in London.

22. A consideration of the evidence we have received confirms the opinion suggested by the course of previous inquiries and of legislation, or, in other words, by the historic development of the Metropolis, that the government of London must be entrusted to one body, exercising certain functions throughout all the areas covered by the name, and to a number of local bodies exercising certain other functions within the local areas which collectively make up London, the central body and the local bodies deriving their authority as representative bodies by direct election, and the functions assigned to each being determined so as to secure complete independence and responsibility to every member of the system.

Object: to apply to London as far as possible the principles of the Act of 1835.

23. If the two great principles of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, viz., 1. Extension of area; and 2. Reform of constitution, had been applied to the City of London half a century ago, much subsequent legislation might have been spared, and there would obviously have been no necessity for the present Commission. To complete the work then left undone, and, as far as possible, on similar lines, in order to bring London into harmony with the other municipal corporations of the country, seems to be the proper solution of the problem with which we have to deal.

Difficulties in the way of such application. (i.) Complexity of the jurisdictions affecting London.

24. Independently of its position as the capital and seat of government, the important points of difference between London and any other large city, are, first, its enormous size, and secondly, the complexity of the jurisdictions affecting it. The term London is at present so indefinite as to cover at least 10 different areas,* though the London with which we are concerned is, as above stated, the Administrative County, comprising the County and the City and County of the City. Many other cities and towns are also counties in themselves, and the difference between counties at large, and counties of cities, is rather one of degree than of principle. Many boroughs which are not counties of cities, were made separate Administrative Counties (County Boroughs) under the Local Government Act, 1888, and are thus in administrative matters exempt from the jurisdiction of the authorities of the counties in which they are situated.

London requires town rather than county government.

25. The recent treatment of the large area of London outside the City as a county, while adequately recognising its essential unity, gave undue prominence to county rather than to city characteristics. London is really a great town, and requires town and not county government. In those cities and boroughs that are also counties of themselves, the county government is so merged and blended with the municipal constitution that the former in practice is almost obliterated. Bearing this in mind, we have to apply to an area, called a county, but really a town, now endowed with an elementary form of government, the dignity and completeness of the highest form of municipal life.

London is really one great town comprising within itself several smaller towns.

26. Our task, however, does not end here. We have already dwelt on the necessary co-existence of a central body exercising functions over the whole area of the Metropolis, and of local bodies with functions exercised within local areas, and we have been much impressed by the fact that whether we undertake the organisation of the government of the greater area, or of the smaller areas comprised within it, we are in all cases dealing with areas which possess the characteristics of town life, and the organisation of their joint and several government should be settled accordingly. London, we repeat, is one large town, which for convenience of administration, as well as from local diversities comprises within itself several smaller towns; and the application of the principles, and still more of the machinery, of municipal government to these several areas, must be limited by conditions arising from this fact.

There must be local bodies as well as a central body.

27. It seems possible that the hesitation which marks the report of the Commissioners of 1837 may have been due to the fact that they imperfectly appreciated the double aspects of unity and separability of London as a whole; and this view of the problem has indeed been developed in later years by the course of inquiry and legislation. It has now grown into so general an acceptance, that all the witnesses before us, we believe without exception, concurred in recognising the necessity for the existence of a central body exercising functions common to London as a whole, and of local bodies exercising functions restricted to their localities, both the one and the other being directly elected by their respective constituents, thus having independent origin if not exercising independent jurisdictions.

Any controversy that remains turns upon the partition of powers between this central and these local bodies.

Difficulty presented by the position of the City of London.

28. It will be at once apparent that the principal difficulty in effecting a re-organisation of the government of London as a whole, lies in the existence of the City as now limited, containing barely one square mile (671 acres) out of the 118 miles (75,442 acres) covered by the administrative county; with a population insignificant at night—only 37,700 out of 4,232,000 in the whole county—but in the daytime more thronged* than the most crowded district of the rest of London; a rateable value out of all proportion to its size,† forming one-eighth instead of $\frac{1}{112}$th of the whole; and with an historic reputation for splendour and wealth which are the pride, rather than the envy, of the rest of the Metropolis.

Repugnance felt by the City to extension.

29. It is not surprising that any change, however agreeable to the course of municipal development throughout the kingdom, and however full of promise of enhanced splendour in the future, which proposes to carry over this heritage of tradition and renown from the limited area hitherto specially enjoying it to the whole Metropolis that has grown up around it, should be viewed with mistrust and repugnance by those who may be called upon to share what they have hitherto exclusively administered with the mass of their fellow-citizens.

Similar difficulties dealt with by Commissioners of 1835 in cases of Liverpool and Bristol. Their success.

30. But this was identically the same difficulty which confronted the Commissioners of 1835 in dealing with cities second only to the City of London in all that makes London famous. Liverpool and Bristol, no less than London, had a commercial centre with large estates and peculiar privileges confined to a small number of citizens, many of whom were not resident; but these and many other towns had their boundaries extended, so as to take in the suburbs at their gates; and if there was in any case unwillingness to accept this extension at first, no sooner had the road once been opened, than extension followed extension until town now vies with town, not which shall contain the smallest area and population, but which the largest.‡ We can hardly believe that when the work of amalgamation has been completed, the citizens of London will be content to be judged by any other standard.

(ii.) The great size of London makes it impossible for a single municipality to deal with all the details of government, and necessitates the co-existence of local bodies.

31. The real point of difference between London and any other large town, viz., its huge area and population, makes it necessary that besides the over-government of the future Corporation, there must be subsidiary bodies to discharge local highway, sanitary, and other duties, and these are already found in the existing vestries and in the district boards created by the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, which bodies now discharge in London the important duties of urban sanitary authorities. Some of our witnesses§ have indeed told us that they saw no other limits than those set by the geographical formation of the ground to the extent of a town which might be directly governed by a single municipality, and the experience afforded by the administration of large Continental towns like Paris and Berlin lends some countenance to this view. But in the government of these cities there is an admixture of State control materially modifying the character of their administration, an admixture which we may observe seems to have been present in the minds of the Commissioners when they made their further Report in 1837, while the government of the City of New York supports the suggestion that there is a danger of a decay of municipal spirit attendant upon the administration of a large town area, unaccompanied by guarantees of local zeal and activity.‖

Local bodies available for detailed administration in the vestries and district boards of works.

32. In considering the government of the Metropolis we must take note of existing facts, and London already contains within itself a large number of separate areas administered with varying but in many cases considerable success, and possessing attributes of local life which could not wisely be weakened or endangered. So far as this local life exists outside the City, it is in connexion with the vestries and with the district boards of works set up by the Act of 1855 for the management of such affairs as can efficiently be administered locally; and with these ready to hand it would be, in our opinion, most unwise to discard a system which goes far to meet this very difficulty of size which has formed such an obstacle in dealing with the question of London government. Whether the present areas of local administration are always those best suited for convenience of management is a question which we will not discuss at length; some of our witnesses* have urged the creation of from 6 to 14 municipalities, with wider powers and greater dignities, in lieu of the existing 41 vestries and district boards: while others† have advocated the retention of an area as small as that of the present parish of St. James, Westminster – containing no more than 164 acres and a population of 25,000—as a separate unit of local government. Our opinion is that while some of the existing areas are of a convenient and suitable size, others might with advantage be grouped even more than at present. How these authorities should be constituted we will discuss later in dealing with the local administration of the area now governed by the City Corporation, which must to some extent form a model for the other local bodies in its constitution, functions, and relations to the central authority.

The existing areas of local administration need some modification.

Questions to be considered: 1. Constitution and functions of central body. 2. How should the existing Corporation be dealt with? 3. Functions and constitution of new local authorities. 4. Relation of new local authorities to central authority.

33. As we have said, all our witnesses,‡ even those most opposed to centralisation, have admitted the necessity of having a central body charged with the duties of administering matters common to the whole of the Metropolis, in this following the view of the Commissioners of 1854. We think we may therefore start from this as a postulate, and confine ourselves to considering the following four questions:—

1. What should be the constitution and functions of this central body?
2. How should the powers, duties, and property of the existing Corporation be dealt with?
3. What should be the functions and constitution of the local authority of the City (and other local authorities in London)?
4. In what relation should it (and they) stand to the central body?

These questions cannot be kept altogether distinct, but such repetition as is necessary will not, we think, obscure the issues.

1. Constitution and Functions of the Central Body.

a. Constitution.

1. (a) Constitution of the central body. Direct election of councillors preferable to indirect.

34. The Commissioners of 1854 favoured the principle of the election of members of the central body by delegation from the various local bodies, and this principle of indirect election was followed in the constitution of the Metropolitan Board of Works. In practice it had the advantage of keeping the central body in touch with the local bodies, but something of this kind may perhaps be secured by other means; and as Parliament deliberately discarded the principle of indirect election in the Act of 1888, we think we need not further consider it. In the same Act Parliament applied to London the machinery provided for other counties of a council with councillors elected all together every third year, the constituencies being the Parliamentary constituencies within the metropolitan area; and in applying this machinery no consideration seems to have been paid to the fact to which we have called attention, that London is a town with town life, rather than a county.

Triennial election of the whole body of councillors as against annual election of one-third.

35. We have received much evidence from those familiar with municipal life in the provinces§ in favour of the plan of the Municipal Corporations Act of electing councillors in thirds every year; and these witnesses have laid great stress on the elements of continuity and stability thus insured in town councils. On the other hand, members of the London County Council, representing different parties and opinions,* have concurred in favour of maintaining the system adopted in 1888; whilst some witnesses† more familiar with the experience of the existing City of London have urged the advantages attendant upon an annual election of all the members of a council. Evidence thus tendered in support of the experience with which each witness is familiar, accompanied in some cases by a confessed want of acquaintance with the working of other systems, is necessarily somewhat inconclusive. If the subject had been open for consideration as a question of the first instance, we should probably have recommended the application to London of the well-tried machinery of the Municipal Corporations Act; but we do not feel called upon to suggest an alteration of the recent decision of Parliament—whether taken after much deliberation or otherwise (and it does not appear that the point was debated in relation to the Metropolis)—until a larger experience has demonstrated the expediency of re-opening the question.

Aldermen; election and tenure of office.

36. The Act of 1888 added to the elected councillors aldermen, holding office for six years, in the proportion of one alderman to six councillors, instead of one to three as under the Municipal Corporations Act, but (as in other county councils) confined the privilege of co-opting these aldermen to the elected councillors, departing in this respect also from the machinery of the Municipal Corporations Act. All the witnesses examined in reference to this matter‡ concurred, as we do, in approving of this last departure from the Act of 1835, and we had some evidence§ as to the expediency of a further change in the election of aldermen, which should secure in these co-opted members some representation in due degree of the divisions among the elected councillors, so that the election of aldermen should not operate as the addition of so many votes to the power of the majority. We think this suggestion deserving of serious consideration whenever the question of the election of aldermen is reopened, but we do not recommend any alteration in the election of aldermen in connexion with the work before us; and we would only add that we have been much impressed with the evidence we have received‖ as to the valuable addition to the strength of municipal government from the presence of aldermen as attested by the experience of municipal corporations. It is right to say that it has been suggested to us (1) that the aldermen of the London Corporation should be elected by the local bodies¶; and (2) that they should be elected directly at the same time as the ordinary councillors, but should have a term of office of six instead of three years. The former of these suggestions might have the advantage of keeping the central body more in touch with the local bodies; but this object may be attained by other means, and we have not been led to think that by either of these processes there would be secured such elements of weight and strength as have been brought into municipal corporations since 1835.

Numbers of aldermen and councillors.

37. The existing Council consists of 118 councillors and 19 aldermen, and in the constitution of the new Corporation we have not suggested any alteration in the methods of choosing these members. In view, however, of the incorporation in London of the present City on the same conditions as the rest of the Metropolis, it may be considered whether, remembering that its rateable value is about one-eighth of the rateable value of the whole, there should not be an additional representation given to the City. If we combine the elements of population and rateable value, as is already done in the case of the division of parishes into wards under the Local Government Act, 1888,†† it would seem that this representation might not unfairly be doubled, so that the present City might have eight representatives; and it may be pointed out that this would cause an addition of one more alderman to the Council. In this connexion we may add that there are tendencies, which are certain to be realised, towards a future unequal development of the different districts of the Metropolis, as well as towards an increase in the duties of the central body, and we recommend that, if at any time the Council think fit, they may frame a scheme for altering the number of aldermen or councillors or either of them. Every such scheme should be submitted to the Local Government Board, and should take effect if confirmed by Order in Council.

Electorate for councillors.

38. Up to the present year the electorate for the County Council was the widest existing in London, but the Local Government Act of last session made the electorate for vestries wider still by combining the Parliamentary with the County (Council) register, and removing the disqualification previously attaching to married women as regards the latter.* It is manifestly convenient as well as economical to have one register of electors for both the central and local bodies, and we think that the electorate fixed by the Act of 1894 should be taken for both.

The extended City of London.

The Old City.

39. Having thus considered the composition of the Council and the electorate from which it should originate, we proceed to recommend that the area subject to its administration, being the whole area of the present Administrative County of London, including the present City, should in future be styled the "City of London," and should be a county in itself; while the present City should be styled, and we shall herein-after always so refer to it, the "Old City."

The new Corporation of London to succeed to the Corporation of the Old City and to the London County Council.

40. The governing body of the City of London and its electors should be incorporated under the name of "the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of London"—the designation hitherto borne by the Old City—and this Corporation should succeed to the present Corporation of the Old City and the London County Council, and should act through its Council as already described.

The Lord Mayor: position, functions, privileges, and remuneration.

41. The Council should elect from the citizens of London a Lord Mayor, and he should be admitted in the same manner, and with the same ceremonies, as the Lord Mayor of the Old City is now admitted.

42. He should be the titular chairman of the Council, but it should not be necessary for him to be present or to preside at its meetings. He should be the official representative of the people of London, and, except as otherwise provided in our proposals, he should exercise and enjoy all the personal rights, offices, dignities, and privileges which belong to the Lord Mayor of the Old City by custom, charter, or law.

43. He should be a justice of the peace for the City of London during his year of office, and, if not disqualified to be mayor, for one year afterwards. His name should be included in the Commissions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery for the district of the Central Criminal Court.

Town Clerk.

Sheriff.

44. We further propose that the Council should have power to appropriate such sum as it thinks fit for the remuneration of the Lord Mayor, or the expenses of his office, and to choose a Town Clerk and other officers, and to pay them such salaries as it sees good, but that no member of the Council, other than the Lord Mayor or Sheriff, should hold any office of profit under the Council.

Head of the Staff.

45. At present the head of the staff of the County Council is the deputy chairman, one of the elected members, who receives a salary. We have taken much evidence† upon the relative advantages of this system and of that obtaining in provincial municipalities generally, under which the head of the staff is the Town Clerk, a permanent officer, usually possessing legal qualifications. We have not been able to ascertain that there were any reasons either of expediency or of experience which induced the departure from ordinary practice adopted in the organisation of the London County Council, and it seems possible that it was in some measure due to the accidental circumstances of the time. We think it highly desirable that the head of the staff should be independent of the party divisions and conflicts necessarily found in the Council, and we are impressed with the inconvenience that would arise if at a critical moment the Corporation, through the chances of a contested election, were deprived of the services of its principal officer. We are, therefore, decidedly of opinion that the system provided by the Municipal Corporations Act is to be preferred.

Lieutenancy.

46. A suggestion has been made that the Lord Mayor should be Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the County of London.‡ We mention this though we do not adopt it. We think, however, that the present Commissioners of Lieutenancy for the county of the Old City might continue as Deputy Lieutenants for the County of London, as was provided by the Act of 1888 in the case of Deputy Lieutenants appointed by the Constable of the Tower of London.

b. Functions of the New Corporation.

(b.) Functions of the new Corporation.

47. We have now to consider what the functions of the new Corporation should be, and its relations to the subordinate local authorities, especially to that of the Old City. As we have already intimated, we think the re-settlement of the government of the Old City should be made on lines which are capable of being more or less rapidly adopted in the other component parts of London, so that its organisation may be regarded as an example to be followed.

Everything should be left to the local authorities that can be administered by them with equal efficiency.

48. In developing this principle we think that everything possible should be done to maintain the strength, authority, and dignity of the local bodies of London; and that, in the partition of functions between the Corporation of London and local authorities, the former should be relieved of all administrative details for which its intervention is not really necessary, and the latter should be entrusted with every duty they can conveniently discharge. In the case of doubt our inclinations would lean to the allotment of functions to the local bodies, and we believe that, in cases where uniformity of action is necessary, this may often be best secured by giving to the Corporation the authority to frame byelaws which should be locally administered; with provision, however, for the intervention of the Corporation to secure their enforcement, should they be neglected.

The new Corporation should deal with matters common to the whole of London.

Partition of functions between the existing Corporation and Commissioners of Sewers.

49. The proposals put before us by the London County Council aimed at the extension over the Old City of the powers of the Council which are now stopped at its boundary, and the transfer to them of such powers, duties, and property now vested in the Corporation of the Old City as relate to matters in which the whole metropolis has an interest.* In distinguishing these we are much helped and guided by the fact that the Old Corporation has in practice, so far as the area of the Old City is concerned, delegated to the Commissioners of Sewers the principal part of the functions usually exercised by a municipal town council; and this delegation suggests a distinction between central and local powers which, though not in all cases strictly accurate or complete, still affords a good general indication of the division that should be followed.

50. Before considering how this principle of distinction between central and local functions may be applied, it may be useful to recount briefly the powers and duties of the two bodies—the County Council and the existing Corporation.

A. Existing powers of County Council over all London.

A.—The County Council has already jurisdiction over the whole of London, including the Old City, in matters relating, inter alia, to—

Main sewers;
Main roads, and tramways thereon;
Embankments, and prevention of floods;
Fire brigade;
Metropolitan commons;
Parks and open spaces (other than those now managed by the Corporation of the Old City, or by the vestries and district boards);
Street naming and numbering. Formation and width of streets, and control of line of frontage;
Pollution of rivers (except Thames and Lee);
Licensing of theatres (except within the jurisdiction of the Lord Chamberlain), music halls, and racecourses;
Framing of byelaws as regards overhead wires, &c.;

and it has limited powers as regards:—

The notification of infectious diseases, payment of the salaries of medical officers of health, and other duties under the Public Health Act (London), 1891;
New and dilapidated buildings;
Street improvements.

Origin of these powers.

51. These powers fall into three classes:—

1. Those inherited from the Metropolitan Board of Works.
2. Those transferred from the justices under the Act of 1888, including, as regards the Old City area, those which were transferred to the County Council and not to the City Corporation.

* See Appendices XII and XIII.

3. Those created by recent legislation, the tendency of which would seem to have been to assign to the County Council the duty of administering each new Act, without always minutely considering whether it was the body best adapted for it.

As a rule these powers would naturally vest in the new Corporation, but we think that they should be reconsidered, with the view of seeing how far any of these functions can be exercised by the local authorities without loss of efficiency. A good deal of evidence* has been given before us on this subject on both sides, which deserves careful reading, and we shall have to recur to it in a later part of the Report.†

B. Powers exercised in the Old City by the Corporation or Commissioners of Sewers, and outside it by the County Council.

52.—B. There are other functions exercised in other component parts of London by the County Council, but in the Old City by the Corporation or the Commissioners of Sewers; these comprise powers relating to—

Bridges	Exercised in the City by the Common Council.
Locomotive traffic on highways other than main roads
Street improvements
Water supply
Infant life protection
Storage, &c. of petroleum and explosives
Contagious diseases (home animals)
Coroners
Gas, testing purity of Asylums
Reformatory schools
Shop hours
Weights and measures, testing, &c. of
Dangerous structures	Exercised in the City by the Commissioners of Sewers.
Unhealthy areas under the Housing of the Working Classes Act.
Provision of lodging-houses for the working classes under the Housing of the Working Classes Act.
Licensing of offensive trades and slaughter-houses
Sky signs

These powers would, under the scheme of the County Council, vest in the new Corporation for the whole of London. But while we approve of this proposal, we do so subject to such reconsideration as has been already recommended in dealing with class A.

C. Matters for which the existing Corporation is the authority for the whole of London, viz., markets, some bridges and open spaces, and sanitary administration of the port of London.

53.—C. There remain a few matters, for which the existing Corporation is the authority for the whole of London, such as the provision of markets, supervision of foreign animals as imported, and the sanitary administration of the Port of London. The Corporation has also provided and maintained Epping Forest, and other open spaces in and near London, for the benefit of the metropolis at large. These, while arising out of, and dealt with under, special Acts of Parliament, are clearly administrative municipal functions, and their benefits extend to the whole of London. Accordingly they, with their appropriate revenues and debts, would naturally vest in the new Corporation. Bridges, which have already been included in class B, partake of the same characteristics. The City Corporation maintains out of trust funds appropriated to the purpose London Bridge, Southwark Bridge, Blackfriars Bridge, and the new Tower Bridge; and it will be observed that the southern approaches of these bridges, and the whole of the Tower Bridge and its approaches, are outside the ordinary jurisdiction of the Old City. In the event of the municipalisation of the supply of gas and water and electric lighting, which are now in the hands of private companies under a more or less effective control as regards quantity, quality, and price, these functions,—either in their entirety or subject to any modification short of municipalisation—would pass, under appropriate conditions, to the Corporation of the new City.

D. Other municipal functions.

54.—D. The other duties of municipal administration, which in an ordinary municipality are, as a rule, exercised by the town council, are, in London, now vested in the Old City, partly in the Corporation, but more generally in the Commissioners of Sewers, and outside the City in the vestries and district boards, in burial boards, overseers, commissioners of baths, washhouses, and public libraries, and guardians of the poor. Many of these duties, including practically the local sanitary administration of London, are of the greatest possible importance, and will require special examination when we deal with the functions of the local authorities.

2. Powers, Duties, and Property of the Old Corporation.

55. We have indicated the powers and duties which we think should be transferred from the old to the new Corporation. As a general rule revenues and properties which are specially appropriated to those powers and duties will, of course, be transferred also. We proceed to consider some of these transfers in detail, and also to consider the way in which the remaining powers, duties, and property of the existing Corporation should be dealt with under our scheme. 2. Powers, duties, and property of the old Corporation.

56. After the transfer to the new Corporation of the duties, powers, and revenues applicable to the whole space of the Metropolis, there will remain the duties of local administration of the area of the Old City, and the management of various charitable, educational, and other institutions and trusts, which are in their nature or origin confined to the inhabitants of that district. Local administration of the area of the Old City, &c.

57. At present the municipal administration of the City is practically in the hands of the Commissioners of Sewers, and though they would not continue to exist under that name, their duties would naturally fall to be discharged by a local authority similar to those of the other districts outside the Old City, and the constitution of this authority we will presently discuss. Functions now entrusted to the Commissioners of Sewers.

Property, &c.

58. The duties now exercised by the Corporation of the Old City are so mixed up with its property that it will be well to consider in greater detail than has yet been given what may properly be left to the local administration of the Old City and what should be transferred to the new Corporation. We have already expressed the opinion that bridges and markets should be transferred to the new Corporation, and with them would pass the Bridge House and Blackfriars Bridge Estates, and the debts for which they and the market tolls are liable. Due steps should be taken to secure the extinction of these debts within a reasonable time, say 30 years, as would be done in an ordinary borough. Property, &c. Bridges. Markets.

59. The Corporation of the Old City has, with but few exceptions, been under no obligation to provide for the reduction and extinction of its debts, and its loans have, in fact, been raised by the issue of bonds for a certain number of years, at the expiration of which they may be freely renewed.* When such debts have been contracted for special purposes, and are primarily secured on special estates, they are, as a rule, ultimately secured on the general estates of the Corporation. To propose a scheme for the redemption, with or without consolidation, of such debts, preserving the rights and securities of creditors of every class, would be a work of great delicacy, upon the details of which we do not enter. We can, however, have no doubt as to the propriety of applying to the Corporation's debts obligations of repayment similar to those which are imposed upon other municipal corporations. Corporation loans generally.

60. The very clear and able analysis of the Corporation accounts prepared for us by Mr. Gomme, statistical officer of the London County Council, shows that, if this were done, the net revenues of the Markets, now about 120,000*l.* per annum, would barely suffice to discharge the debt† (2,664,000*l.*) upon them. Market debt.

61. Much the same may be said of the Bridges. The revenues from the Bridge House and Blackfriars Bridge Estates now amount to about 93,000*l.* a year. Nearly 88,000*l.* of this is devoted to defraying the annual cost—24,000*l.*—of maintaining London, Southwark, and Blackfriars Bridges, and to meeting the charge—65,000*l.*—for interest and sinking fund on the money borrowed for these bridges and for the construction of the new Tower Bridge—1,195,000*l.* (including 134,000*l.* paid off and re-borrowed)‡ of which 1,060,000*l.* is still outstanding. There remains, therefore, only a net balance of 5,000*l.* a year to meet the cost of maintaining the Tower Bridge, Bridge debt.

* See Payne, 6853, 6927, 7011.

estimated at 6,000*l.* a year. It is anticipated that the revenues from the estates will considerably increase in the future,* but it will be some little time before equilibrium is established; and even if no new bridges were required, any surplus revenues would be appropriately devoted towards defraying the cost of maintaining the other Thames bridges now under the control of the London County Council.

Special trust and statutory funds.

62. Before coming to the general estates of the old Corporation there are some other trust and statutory funds now controlled by it for purposes more or less common to the whole of London, viz.:—

(1.) The Clerkenwell Improvement.
(2.) The Holborn Valley Improvement.
(3.) The Grain Duty.
(4.) Parks and Open Spaces.
(5.) The Gresham Estates.
(6.) The City of London Court.

Clerkenwell Improvement; Holborn Valley Improvement.

63. (1 and 2.) The Clerkenwell Improvement Fund shows a small annual surplus; the Holborn Valley Improvement a large deficit, which falls on the general estates of the Corporation. Deducting assets from liabilities the net debt outstanding on these accounts may be put at 429,000*l.*, for which the general estates are liable.†

Grain Duty. Parks and open spaces.

64. (3 and 4.) The Grain Duty forms the primary or collateral security for various loans raised for the acquisition of Epping Forest and other open spaces in the neighbourhood of London. The proceeds of the duty are about 18,000*l.* a year, of which about 8,000*l.* is applied to meet the interest on the outstanding debt (219,000*l.*), and the remainder is applied to meet the cost of maintaining Epping Forest, Burnham Beeches, Coulsdon Commons, Highgate Woods, and other open spaces acquired by the Corporation under the Corporation of London Open Spaces Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. cxxvii). The Grain Duty will, under the Metage on Grain Act, 1872 (35 and 36 Vict. c. c.), cease in 1902, by which time the outstanding debt on account of open spaces (including Highgate Woods) may be expected to have been reduced to 195,000*l.*, which will then fall on the general estates of the Corporation.‡ This amount includes 5,000*l.* borrowed in 1888, upon the joint security of the Grain Duty and of the general estates of the Corporation, to meet the cost of laying out Highgate Woods and Kilburn Park, presented to the Corporation by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to be maintained in perpetuity as open spaces for the benefit of the inhabitants of London. The interest on a sum of about 20,000*l.*, bequeathed by Mr. William Ward, for the benefit of the poorer classes, is, under a scheme sanctioned by the Chancery Division of the High Court, applied so far as it will go to meet the cost of maintaining Kilburn Park, but it does not suffice to cover the whole expenditure thereon.

65. Assuming that these four funds are all transferred to the new Corporation, they will carry with them a net debt of nearly 625,000*l.*

Gresham Estates.

66. (5.) The Gresham Estates, now devoted to the maintenance of the Royal Exchange and the Gresham College, are just about sufficient to meet the charges upon them. The uses of these trusts, in the administration of which the Corporation is associated with the Mercers' Company, extend beyond the residents of the Old City, and we think the new Corporation should succeed to the position of the Corporation of the Old City in respect of them.

City of London Court.

67. (6.) The City of London Court is a valuable possession, its revenue from fees exceeding the outgoings, on an average of the last four years for which we have figures, by about 4,000*l.* per annum. It is to all intents and purposes a county court, and we should look to its ultimately passing, like the other county courts of the Metropolis, under the authority of the Imperial Government, but until an equitable arrangement is made for this transfer, it would naturally become the property of the new Corporation.

General estates of the Old City Corporation.

68. We come now to the general estates and revenues of the Old City Corporation. We have asked for, but have been unable to obtain,§ an authoritative statement of their capital value, but more witnesses than one,‖ speaking apparently with some confidence in their knowledge, have told us that, after providing for every liability, the Corporation has a considerable surplus, exclusive of its public buildings. The estates at present produce an annual net revenue of about 160,000*l.*, with a prospect of considerable future increase, and are solely or ultimately liable for the following debts :—

Holborn Valley Improvement Act - -	429,000
Parks, Open Spaces, and Highgate Woods -	195,000
Leadenhall Market Approach - -	148,000
Pauper Lunatic Asylum - - - - -	8,000
	£780,000

We have excluded Bridge and Market debt from this calculation, though part (78,600*l.*) of the Metropolitan Cattle Market debt is directly, and the Tower Bridge debt is ultimately, charged upon the general estates.

69. We think that the whole of these estates should be transferred to the new Corporation, with all the attendant liabilities, including charges for debt, pensions, and maintenance of buildings transferred, but that the new Corporation should pay over to the local authority of the Old City an annual sum, say 10,500*l.* a year, or, as may be preferable, should assign suitable estates sufficient to meet the expenditure on the Freemen's Orphan School, Almshouses, and other institutions left to its management, and certain donations now made to City hospitals, &c. It might be convenient to leave to the Old City some, at all events, of its present buildings and offices.

Revenues assigned to it.

Institutions transferred to the new Corporation.

70. The Guildhall, with its Library and Museum, the Mansion House, and such Schools and Institutions as exist for the whole of London, viz. :—

The City of London School,
Ward's City of London School for Girls, and The Guildhall School of Music, would naturally be vested in the new Corporation.

Management of other institutions.

71. The right of the City to representation in the management of—

The United Westminster Schools,
The Royal Hospitals,
Morden College,
Sir John Soane's Museum,
Aske's Charity, Hoxton,
Epping Forest,
West Ham Park,
The Thames and Lee Conservancies, and any other matters over which the City has a controlling element, would pass to the new Corporation, to be exercised upon the conditions on which they have been hitherto exercised by the Corporation of the Old City.

Ceremonial functions of the Lord Mayor, &c.

Ceremonial functions of the Lord Mayor, &c.

72. As the new Corporation would thus inherit and succeed without breach of continuity to the powers and possessions of the existing Corporation, and as it would be within its discretion to assign to the Lord Mayor such sums as might be thought proper to meet the expenses of his office, we may look for the maintenance in the future of all the useful and many of the stately traditions of the past; and in particular the Lord Mayor may be trusted to represent before the world the great community of which he is the head, with the splendour becoming his position. It may be noted in this connection, that among the privileges which would be transferred, should our recommendations be approved, would be the right of special access of the Corporation to the Sovereign, and of the presentation of petitions at the Bar at the House of Commons.

Officers.

Officers.

73. The officers of the old Corporation should, as far as possible and convenient, be transferred to the new, on equitable terms of employment, remuneration, and retirement if necessary. As the functions of the Commissioners of Sewers would be vested in the new local authority for the Old City, their officers would naturally remain attached to it, and it may also be convenient that some of the officers of the old Corporation should remain connected with the Old City.

Law and Justice.

Law and justice. The sheriffs.

74. The Sheriffs of London should be appointed by the Council of the new Corporation, as provided in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The jurisdiction of the court of Quarter Sessions and justices of the County of London should extend into the area of the Old City, which should cease to be a county of itself.

Magistracy.

75. The justices by charter of the City of London should be abolished, but the names of the existing Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the Old City of London should be included in the Commission of the Peace for the County of London. It would probably be ultimately found convenient to extend the Metropolitan Police Court Acts to the Old City, and to make the Mansion House and Guildhall Justice Rooms Metropolitan Police Courts, as elsewhere; but pending legislation for the police courts of the whole metropolis we see no objection to the present aldermen continuing to serve these courts so long as they can furnish a rota. The jurisdiction of the aldermen appears from the evidence given before us to be both efficient and popular with the classes which frequent the justice rooms, and the assistance of commercial men is not unreasonably claimed to be an advantage in dealing with commercial cases.

Police Courts.

76. In the large provincial municipalities paid and unpaid magistrates not uncommonly sit together or in adjacent courts, and we think the same system might be usefully tried in London, especially if means could be found of allotting to separate courts the trial of cases not properly of a criminal character though involving penalties, such as summonses under the Education, Metropolis Management, Building, and other Acts, which often require the attendance of respectable women and young children, to whom the contaminating atmosphere and companionship of the ordinary police court are an unnecessary evil.

City of London Court.

Mayor's Court.

77. We have proposed that the City of London Court should pass to the new Corporation, at all events for the present, and a similar course should be followed with regard to the Mayor's Court, the jurisdiction of which should be extended over the whole metropolis. The new Corporation would also take the place of the Corporation of the Old City in relation to the London Chamber of Arbitration. Obsolete courts and offices, such as the Court of Hustings, the Borough Court and Bailiwick of Southwark, and the judicial power of the City Chamberlain over apprentices and masters, which is concurrent with that of the magistrates, should be abolished.

Quarter Sessions. Recorder. Common Serjeant.

78. The Recorder of London should be the Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the County of London. The present Chairman of Quarter Sessions and the Common Serjeant should be Deputy Recorders, each with power to hold a Court of Quarter Sessions by himself subject to a scheme to be approved by a Secretary of State. Power should be taken for the new Corporation to petition the Crown for the appointment of additional Deputy Recorders as required. No sufficient reasons exist for maintaining the present anomalous mode of appointment of the Recorder, and we recommend that he should in future be appointed, as in other boroughs, by the Crown.

Central Criminal Court.

79. The Central Criminal Court should continue as at present, except that the aldermen should no longer be included in the Commission. In any legislation dealing with this court it might be well to restrict its area to the Administrative County of London, apart from special removals under Palmer's Act.

Freemen and Liverymen.

Freemen and liverymen.

80. Freedom by patrimony, apprenticeship, redemption, and gift, should be abolished, with the exception that it should be lawful for the new Corporation to grant the honorary freedom of the City of London to any person as a mark of distinction. The existing freemen of the City, who are liverymen, would retain the Parliamentary franchise, and the freemen, their widows, children, or orphans, should retain such rights to charities and schools as they at present possess. We elsewhere recommend that the management of these schools and charities should be reserved to the local governing body of the Old City.

81. The power of granting and fixing the numbers of the Livery of the City Companies should be transferred to a department of the Imperial Government, probably the Privy Council, which at present deals with the grant of charters to such companies.

Customs of the City of London.

82. The customs of the Old City, so far as they are inconsistent with the common law, remain to be considered. The only important customs at present appear to be those of Market Overt and Foreign Attachment. Of these the latter is practically obsolete, as a recent decision of the House of Lords has rendered it necessary to observe the custom in the letter, and modern conditions of commerce make it almost impossible to do this.* The question whether the custom of Market Overt should cease or be extended to the area of the enlarged City must depend upon the view taken of its expediency in relation to commerce. No reason can be given for upholding such a custom in Cheapside which would not extend to the Strand, but the determination of the general question seems to lie outside our particular inquiry. Customs of the City of London.

Ecclesiastical Patronage.

83. The Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, provided (sec. 139) that all ecclesiastical patronage in the hands of the corporations with which it dealt should be sold as the Ecclesiastical Commissioners might direct, that the proceeds should be invested in Government securities for the use of the body corporate, and that the annual income payable thereon should be carried to the account of the borough fund. The question of the sale of ecclesiastical patronage generally is now occupying the attention of Parliament, and, pending a decision upon it, we only recommend that the patronage of the City of London should vest in the new Corporation, and should be dealt with hereafter as Parliament may determine. Ecclesiastical patronage.

The Irish Society.

84. The question of the Irish Society requires to be separately noticed. This may not inaccurately be described as a Committee of the Corporation invested with certain estates in Ireland, but upon what trusts and obligations (if any) is a matter of dispute. The Society consists of a governor (an alderman), a deputy governor, and 25 assistants (five of them being aldermen and one the Recorder), and 12 assistants retire every year, when their successors are elected by the Common Council. The Irish Society.

85. The Commissioners of 1854 recommended† that the Irish Society should be dissolved, that its trusts should be declared by Act of Parliament, and that new trustees should be appointed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. Select Committees of the House of Commons examined the case of the Society in 1889, 1890, and 1891, and in the last year a somewhat narrow majority further recommended that the property of the Society should be transferred, part to the Corporations of Derry and Coleraine, and the rest to any elective county authority which might be created in Ireland, being only vested in trustees (to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland) until such authority should be created. The County Council have adopted these recommendations in their proposals.

86. We understand, however, that litigation is now proceeding in the Chancery Division in Ireland, to which the Corporation, the Irish Society, and the City Companies interested have been made parties, with the view to a determination of the trusts upon which the properties of the Society and of the Companies are said to be held. Pending the result of such litigation we can make no recommendation as regards the uses of the property administered by the Society; but it is necessary that provision should be made for maintaining the administration that exists, and we recommend that the powers of election now vested in the Common Council should be transferred to the new Corporation, who should, as existing members of the Society retire whether by effluxion of time or otherwise, elect from their own body their successors, so that the Society would remain composed of a Governor, the Recorder, and 24 members, 12 retiring annually and being ineligible for one year.

Police.

87. The question of the police in the area of the Old City must be dealt with by itself. The City Police is now under the control of a Commissioner appointed by the Common Council, with the approval of the Secretary of State, and removable for misconduct, either by him, or by the Court of Aldermen with his approval. The pay, Police.

* See Kemp, 4544–60, 5914–34.

clothing, and general equipment of the force are dealt with by a Committee of the Court of Common Council, but the Commissioner is practically independent in all matters relating to the discipline and disposal of the force, the control of the Corporation over him being much less than that exercised by the Watch Committee of an ordinary municipality over their chief constable. The expenses of the Force are paid, one-fourth—about 30,000*l.*—by the Corporation, out of their general estates and revenues, and three-fourths out of the police rate, which is levied on the Wards together with the ward rate to meet ward expenses.

88. The County Council have proposed* that this force should be transferred on amalgamation to the new Corporation, and that one-fourth of its cost should continue to be paid by the new Corporation out of their general revenues, the remainder, about 90,000*l.*, being raised, as at present, by rate. We cannot say that we concur in this proposal. Though we have no reason to suppose that any serious harm results from the present arrangement, the advantages of having the whole of the Police of the Metropolis under one administration are so obvious that we do not see that any counterbalancing advantage would be gained by vesting in the new Corporation the control of a small part of it. It has been pointed out by the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police† that any control of the police within the area of the Old City by a body having general jurisdiction over the Metropolis without the City would be a very different thing to, and might lead to much more serious inconvenience than, the control of the police within the Old City area by a body having general jurisdiction only within that area. With whom the control of the police of London, as a whole, should rest, it is not for us to discuss; but we can only say that, so long as it remains under the Imperial Government, the police within the area of the Old City should form part of it.

89. If the force within the Old City were thus fused with the Metropolitan Police there would result, on the present figures, an advantage to the London ratepayers of over 50,000*l.* per annum, supposing that the Metropolitan Police Force were correspondingly increased, and that the Imperial Exchequer contributed, as in the rest of London, four-ninths of the cost of the pay and clothing of the whole, as follows:—

Total present cost of City Police Force per annum (say) -	120,000
Of which there is paid by the Corporation out of its general revenues - - - - -	30,000
Leaving to be raised by Police rate - - - -	90,000

As proposed:—	£
Total cost of addition to Metropolitan Police to replace the Old City Police Force (say) - - - -	120,000
Contribution from Imperial Revenues (four-ninths of whole) -	53,333
Leaving to be raised by rate - - - - -	64,667

90. It has been urged on behalf of the Old City that if its area were policed by the Metropolitan Police Force, there would be a danger lest the Commissioner should assign to that district a number inadequate to protect the banks and warehouses, with all their valuable contents, which are often left entirely unoccupied at night, even by a caretaker. The experience of the manner in which the Police is managed by the Watch Committees in large provincial towns with business quarters does not justify this apprehension, and it can hardly be suggested that the Imperial authorities would not have the necessary regard to interests so important. In addition it may be remarked that there would apparently be no difficulty in arrangements being made for the assignment of a larger number of police than the Commissioner thought necessary, so as to meet the views of the local authority, upon its paying for them, as banks, docks, railway companies, and other institutions pay for their own special police.

91. The Chairman of the Essex County Council, Mr. Andrew Johnston, has thrown out the suggestion‡ that, in the event of the control of the Metropolitan Police being transferred to the new Corporation, it might be convenient for the area in the south-west of Essex, now under the control of that force, to be separated from it, and given its own police jointly with West Ham. It may be remembered that this suggestion is in agreement with the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1867, to the effect that the remoter districts of the Metropolitan Police area might be annexed to the neighbouring county districts where an efficient police had been established. So long, however, as the Metropolitan Police continues, as at present, under the control of the Home Secretary, no change is desired.

Finance.

92. We propose that there should be one City or Borough Fund for London, and that there should be a rate levied by the new Corporation, to be called the City or Borough Rate.* So far as any functions may be entrusted to the Council of the Old City which are at present vested in the London County Council as regards the rest of London, it would be necessary to have a special Fund and Rate, as well as a general Fund and Rate, but we contemplate that the existence of the former should be temporary only. We think it of the highest importance that the relation of the central body to the local bodies should be uniform throughout London, and that the separate funds and rates should only exist until the functions of the District Councils generally are assimilated to those assigned to that of the Old City, should the re-settlement of the other districts not be contemporaneous with that of the Old City. Finance.

93. The County Council have made detailed proposals† for the management of this fund, and the incorporation in it of the several funds now managed by the County Council and the old Corporation, which seem to us, in the main, unobjectionable. These contemplate that a separate account should be kept of, inter alia, markets receipts and expenditure, with the provision that any net surplus receipts therefrom, after allowing for all contingent liabilities, should be devoted to the extension or improvement of market accommodation, the reduction of tolls, or otherwise for the purposes of markets generally throughout London. We approve of this proposal, but in view of the uncertainty of the receipts from many of the markets, we think that a considerable reserve fund should be built up out of these surplus receipts before they are applied as proposed.

94. The proposals of the County Council contemplate the formation of a separate "Corporation Estates Account," into which all receipts in the nature of income arising from property transferred from the Corporation of the Old City, except market receipts, should be paid, and upon which all debts and sums of money secured upon or payable out of any of those receipts should be made a first charge, according to their several priorities. The proposals suggest that any surplus remaining after satisfying these charges should be divided according to its origin into portions under the following heads, viz.:—

(2.) Bridge House and Blackfriars Bridge Estates.
(3.) Other trust and statutory funds.
(4.) General estates.

And should be respectively applied to—

(1.) Charitable objects.
(2.) Other bridges and tunnels in London.
(3.) Objects similar to those to which such portion is now applicable.
(4.) Any purposes to which such portion may now be applied.

95. It appears to us that there would be great and unnecessary difficulty in working out this plan, and that it would be better to keep these four accounts separate,—as we have already recommended with regard to the markets, and, in effect, to the bridges —until at least the obligations outstanding in respect of any one were satisfied, when the question of merging the assets of such account in the general estates might be reconsidered. Meanwhile, after allowing a sufficient reserve, the balance on the General Estates Account should pass into the City or Borough Fund.

96. If the City or Borough Fund is insufficient to meet the expenditure of the Corporation in any year, the deficit should be made good by a rate to be levied for that purpose over the whole of the Metropolis, subject to the provision as regards a special rate already referred to in respect of the Old City.

* Borough Fund and Rate are the terms used in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (sections 139 to 149).

97. In addition to the purposes already specified, the County Council has proposed that the council of the new Corporation should have power to vote the expenditure of money out of the City or Borough Fund for the purposes of entertaining and of conferring the freedom of the City of London upon, and for making presentations to, distinguished persons, and of contributing to public charitable objects, and of making inquiries into any matter of municipal concern, and of illuminating and decorating the streets on occasions of public rejoicing, and of the purchase of works of art and books for civic galleries and libraries, and of maintaining the City of London School and the Guildhall School of Music.

In these recommendations we concur, but we think it necessary before any expenditure is incurred upon objects beyond these, that the consent of the Local Government Board should be obtained. We think also that the power of the new Corporation to alienate Corporate property should be made subject to the restrictions imposed by the Municipal Corporations Act upon town councils generally.

98. We think also, that the Corporation should be subject to restriction as to the amount of debt which they may charge upon future ratepayers, and that they should be bound to pay off their debts within a limited period. What such restrictions or limitations should be is a matter which we cannot undertake to settle, and must be left to be determined from time to time by the Government and by Parliament. It may, however, be laid down as a general rule that the amounts to be borrowed, and the purposes to which they may be applied, should be strictly defined, as those of the present London County Council are in the Acts by which loans are sanctioned,* and that the duration of any loan should never exceed the probable duration of any work for the execution of which it was raised.

99. The treasurer of the new Corporation should, we think, retain the title of Chamberlain, but he should be elected, as provided by the Municipal Corporation Act, by the Corporation, and should hold office on the same conditions as a borough treasurer.

100. Besides the restrictions imposed upon ordinary boroughs by sections 139 to 149 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, as regards payments out of the Borough Fund, the Local Government Act of 1888 laid upon the London County Council further restrictions from which county boroughs were in terms exempted, viz.:—

(i.) That all payments out of the County Fund should be made in pursuance of an order of the Council, signed by three members of the Finance Committee present at the meeting, and by the clerk of the Council. (Section 80.)

(ii.) That no order for the payment of money should be made, and no liability exceeding 50*l.* be incurred, except upon a resolution of the Council passed on a recommendation of the Finance Committee. (Section 80.)

(iii.) That three clear days before any meeting of the Council a summons should be sent to every member specifying the business to be transacted, and stating every sum of which payment was to be ordered, and the amount of every liability over 50*l.* which was to be incurred, with the purposes for which they were to be paid or incurred. (Section 80.)

101. We have had evidence† to show that some difficulty is experienced by large Corporations in complying strictly even with the comparatively elastic provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act as regards finance, and the ingenuity of the London County Council is taxed to find means of observing the letter of the more rigid requirements of the Act of 1888.‡ The result of these provisions is to load the agenda papers and weekly cash statements of the County Council (of which we were shown copies)§ with an unnecessary mass of details, which serve no end but to provoke useless discussion. We are strongly of opinion that no sufficient reason exists for subjecting the finance of the new Corporation of London to greater restrictions in this respect than those imposed upon the finance of other municipal boroughs.

Audit.

102. It seems doubtful whether the machinery of audit provided by the Municipal Corporations Act would be well suited to the circumstances of the Metropolis. Under it three auditors are annually appointed, two being elected by the burgesses and one (who must be a member of the Council) nominated by the Mayor, and the term of office of each is one year only. There is no provision in the Act as to the remuneration of these officers. Under the organization of the Old City the City's cash and other principal accounts are audited by four persons serving for two years,—two going out of office each year, and being ineligible for 12 months; and these gentlemen are elected by the Livery in Common Hall under a statute of George I. Under the general provisions of the Local Government Act, 1888, the accounts of the London County Council are audited, like those of other county councils, by district auditors appointed by the Local Government Board. The Act of 1894 provides that the accounts of parish councils and of urban district councils shall also be audited by the district auditors of the Local Government Board, but the construction of the Act appears somewhat uncertain in relation to the accounts of London vestries. We think it expedient to maintain for the new Corporation the machinery of audit provided for the London County Council, and we would recommend that the latest legislation should be followed, by requiring that the Corporation accounts should be audited by two district auditors appointed by the Local Government Board, with whom, however, might be associated a third auditor appointed by the Lord Mayor. Audit.

3. Constitution and Functions of the Local Authority in the City and other Local Authorities in London.

a. Functions of the Local Authorities.

103. As we have already said, we contemplate the establishment in the Old City of a local authority for the discharge of the functions of local administration at present exercised, within that area by the Common Council and the Commissioners of Sewers, and outside by vestries and district boards. Functions of the local authorities.

These functions comprise, amongst others :—

(1.) Sanitary administration generally, including the sanitary construction and drainage of new buildings, control over unhealthy dwellings under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, and sewers other than main sewers.

(2.) Maintenance of highways other than main roads, including the regulation of locomotive traffic and tramways upon them, and small street improvements.

(3.) Valuation and assessment and registration of voters (in cases where the vestries exercise the powers of overseers).

(4.) The provision and maintenance of small open spaces and mortuaries.

(5.) Powers as regards electric lighting and (as regards the four small companies only) gas supply.

(6.) The administration of the Overhead Wires and Sale of Food and Drugs Acts.

Powers now exercised by the Corporation or Commissioners of Sewers in the Old City, and outside it by vestries and district boards.

These functions, with their respective officers, buildings, sources of income, and debts, would, subject to the observations made elsewhere as to the partition of powers and duties between the central and local bodies, remain with the local authority of the Old City.

104. The powers of the Corporation and Commissioners of Sewers in the City, however, extend beyond these, embracing in addition powers as regards—

Dangerous structures,
Unhealthy areas,
Provision of lodging-houses for the working classes, } Under the Housing of the Working Classes Act.
Licensing of offensive trades and slaughter-houses, and registration and inspection of dairies.
The administration of the Sky Signs and Weights and Measures Acts, which are in the rest of London exercised by the County Council. These powers, as well as all or most of those now exercised by the Common Council in the area of the Old City, would, subject to the qualification already suggested, naturally pass to the new Corporation. Powers now exercised in the Old City by the Corporation or Commissioners of Sewers, and outside it by the County Council.

105. The duty of inspecting common lodging-houses is now entrusted in the Old City to the Commissioners of Sewers, and outside it to the metropolitan police, but negotiations are, we understand, proceeding with the view to its transfer in the latter case to the County Council. If this transfer should take place, the duty of inspecting these Inspection common lodging-houses.

houses in the area of the Old City would naturally also pass to the new Corporation, otherwise it should be confided to the police controlling the Old City.

Partition of powers between central and local authorities.

106. We have already stated that we have taken much evidence on the subject of the partition of powers between the central body and the local bodies, to which we desire to call particular attention.* We venture to repeat that we think it important for the sake of the dignity and usefulness of the local bodies, whose status should be enhanced as much as possible, as well as for the sake of the central body—where a continuous increase of work may be expected requiring relief from needless administrative detail—that no duties shall be thrown upon the central body that can be equally well performed by the local authorities.

Officers entrusted with the enforcement of penal statutes should generally be dissociated from local influences, and local administration should be uniform throughout London under bye-laws framed by the central authority.

107. It must at the same time be remembered that there is often an administrative advantage in dissociating from local influences officers entrusted with the enforcement of penal statutes. This would apply, for instance, to the administration of the Weights and Measures Act, now enforced by the County Council and Common Council, and the Food and Drugs Act, now administered by the Commissioners of Sewers and the vestries and district boards within and without the Old City respectively. In such matters as the licensing or inspection of cow-houses, dairies, slaughter-houses and offensive businesses, and, no doubt, in many other cases of a similar kind, the central body should, to whatever hands the immediate administration is entrusted, have, in accordance with the general principle we have already enunciated, power to regulate the performance of the work by general byelaws, so as to secure uniformity of administration. The administration of the Petroleum and Explosives Acts, involving as it does the superintendence of their removal from place to place, as well as of their storage, should, we think, for convenience sake, be in the hands of the central authority.

It might be well in any legislation to provide some machinery for such a repartition of functions between the central and local authorities as experience might prove desirable, without having recourse to Parliament in each particular case.

Baths and washhouses, libraries, and vaccination.

108. The Commissioners of Sewers also provide burial grounds, a duty which outside the area of the Old City is entrusted to Commissioners appointed by the vestries of the several parishes. Many of our witnesses† have urged that the powers of the vestries and district boards should be extended so as to embrace these functions, and also the provision of Public Libraries,—a duty which in the Old City rests with the Court of Common Council, and outside the Old City with Commissioners appointed by vestries and district boards adopting the Public Libraries Acts,—and of Baths and Washhouses, which is in the hands of Commissioners appointed by the vestries both within and outside the Old City. In this recommendation we concur, and would desire that all these powers, as well as those of the present vestries and district boards, should, subject to the observations made above, be entrusted to the new local authority of the Old City. We think, however, that it might be well to retain a power of appointing on the Libraries' and, perhaps, the Baths and Washhouses' committee gentlemen interested in these matters who are not members of the Council. We think that it would also be well if the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and the enforcement of the Vaccination Acts, were entrusted to the same authority, under the control of the Imperial Government, as at present. Their present association with the administration of the Poor Law is accidental, and may lead to misconception.

109. With the local authority of the Old City would remain the management of many Charities and Trusts, and the property belonging thereto, including some, if not all, of the following, viz.:—

The Freemen's Orphan School.
The London Almshouses.
The Gresham Almshouses.
Wilson's Loan Charity.
Emanuel Hospital (Pensions).
The Mitchell (City of London) Charity.
The City of London Parochial Charities.
Russell's Charity.

Revenues assigned to the Old City.

110. Inasmuch as these and other functions, which we have not recommended should be transferred to the new Corporation, involve an expenditure in excess of the income derivable from the trust and other estates applicable thereto, we have proposed that the new Corporation should, on taking over the general estates and revenues of the old, assign to the local authority of the Old City suitable revenues or a fixed annual payment to meet such expenditure on these objects as could not properly be met out of rates, together with the appropriate buildings and officers. Some assignment is clearly necessary in respect of the Gresham almshouses, since the endowment of the Gresham trusts, out of which they have been sustained, would pass to the new Corporation.

Officers. Rating powers.

111. The Council of the Old City should, like the local bodies of the other districts of the Metropolis, have power to appoint officers and levy a rate, and should be subject to the same provisions as regards audit as district councils generally under the Local Government Act of 1894.

b. Constitution of the Local Authorities.

Constitution of the local authorities.

112. We turn now to the constitution of the local authority for the Old City area, in considering which we have again borne in mind the circumstances of the vestries and district boards, so that what we may say may apply with but slight modification to them.

Composition and numbers.

113. The present Common Council of the City consists of no less than 232 members, viz., 26 aldermen and 206 common councillors, a number which we cannot regard as being in any way necessary for efficient administration. The number of the Commissioners of Sewers is 92, and even this number seems large. The maximum number of members allowed by the Act of 1855 to a vestry or district board is 120, and most of the witnesses who were in a position to express an opinion on the subject* thought this number unnecessarily and even inconveniently large, an opinion in which we concur. The largest number of members comprised in a provincial corporation is, we believe, 72, and this much exceeds the number found sufficient for towns far larger in size than the Old City.

114. In bringing the organization of the Old City into lines applicable, when not already existing, to other parts of the Metropolis, some reduction in number in the governing body is necessary, besides other changes which may appear considerable, but the experience of the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835 leads us to believe that all of them may be accomplished without practical difficulty. The new governing body should be elected as elsewhere in the Metropolis, and the right of election should be exercised under the enlarged franchises of the Act of 1894. We think reasons of analogy as well as a large preponderance of advantage lead to the conclusion that the governing body should be elected in thirds every year, the term of office of each member being three years. A suitable number of members would in our judgment be 72, and the Old City should be divided into 24 wards, each represented by three members. The present Commissioners of Sewers might be invited to frame a scheme for this division of the Old City, but in the event of any difficulty arising, the work could be otherwise performed. We think the body thus elected should be called the Council of the Old City, and the elected members should be empowered to choose annually from the citizens of the Old City a mayor, and the governing body should be styled the Mayor and Council of the Old City. As a transitory arrangement which would be useful in maintaining some continuity of administration, the existing aldermen should be entitled to sit as additional life members of this body. The Mayor should be ex officio justice of the peace for the County of London, and, as we have already said, the existing aldermen who are now justices of the Old City would properly become justices of the County. We have not suggested that aldermen should form permanently a part of the new governing body of the Old City. As we have intimated, we have had in view the other parts of London, and whilst it would be easy, and for many reasons desirable, to confer on these governing bodies the name of Council, and to enable them to elect Mayors of their respective districts, no element analogous to that of alderman is found in their present composition, nor have we met with any desire to adopt such an addition.

Mayor and council.

No aldermen.

115. We may here recall a question to which allusion has already been made. Many witnesses† have urged the propriety of establishing some personal connexion between the local governing bodies and the central authority of the metropolis, and we concur in thinking this a desirable object. We believe it could be best secured by making, where the areas are conterminous, the members of the central body elected for any district ex officio members of the local governing body of the district. The four (or, if our suggestion is adopted, the eight) representatives of the Old City in the new Corporation would then be members of the Council of the Old City. We have been assured by many witnesses* entitled to speak on the subject that there would be no jealousy on the part of members of existing vestries against the addition to their own numbers of the representatives of the same district in the central body, and in at least one vestry a formal resolution has been passed inviting their presence. We believe the same friendly reception would be generally experienced, and the re-organisation of the Old City affords an opportunity of introducing an element which would bring the Corporation of the whole City into touch with the Councils of its component parts.

(ii.) Areas of Local Administration.

Areas of local administration.

116. The suggestion we have thus supported is intimately connected with the question of the re-arrangement of the areas of local administration, which we have already said we would discuss in dealing with the reconstitution of the Old City.† In order to adopt universally the proposal that the members of the Corporation representing any given area should be ex-officio members of the local governing body, it would be necessary that the areas for local administration should either coincide with the areas for electing members of the Corporation, or should actually contain two or more of them. This condition would prevail in the City and in the following parishes, where the proposal might, therefore, be at once adopted‡:—

St. Marylebone.
St. Pancras.
Lambeth.
St. George's, Hanover Square.
Islington, St. Mary.
Shoreditch, St. Leonard.
Kensington, St. Mary Abbott's.
Fulham.
Hammersmith.
Mile End Old Town.
Paddington.
Bethnal Green, St. Matthew.
Newington, St. Mary (Surrey).
Clerkenwell, St. James and St. John.
Chelsea.
Hampstead, St. John.
Westminster, St. Margaret and St. John.
Poplar.
Whitechapel.

117. It will be seen how large a part of the metropolitan area is thus ready for the immediate application of the proposal, and a very slight alteration of present arrangements would extend its application so as to nearly cover the Metropolis. It is beyond our power to make proposals leading up to this extension, and if the principle be adopted it would be necessary to provide other machinery to secure its complete application. We may, however, point out that the vestries of all the areas we have just specified might be at once styled councils and invested with the privilege of choosing a mayor, so that within each of these areas the mayor and council would be its governing body.

118. Considerations of local feeling and of historic development would have to be weighed in conjunction with those of administrative convenience in extending this organization to the rest of the Metropolis, but we are much impressed with a sense of the expediency of attaining a result highly conducive to the simplification and efficiency of the government of London.

4. Relations of the Local Authority of the Old City and of the other Local Authorities to the New Corporation.

4. Relations of the central to the local authorities.

119. There remains the final question of the relation which the new Council of the Old City and the Councils, if we may so describe them, of the other districts of London should bear to the Corporation. The feasibility of a personal connexion between them we have already discussed in dealing with the resettlement of the Old City; and we have only to indicate somewhat further than we have already done the administrative control to which the local authorities should be subject on the part of the central. The control at present exercised by the County Council over the vestries and district boards is of three kinds—

Powers of control to be exercised by central authority.

(1.) It frames byelaws under which they work, e.g., for sanitary matters generally, for locomotive traffic on highways other than main roads, regulating the formation of new streets, drainage of buildings, &c.;

* See H. J. Smith (Lambeth), 11,717–21; Whale (Lee), 12,362–7.
† See Costelloe, 13,945–90, where the question of areas is discussed at length, and Appendix XIX.
‡ See Map I. appended to the Report.

(2.) It has power to act in default, as in sanitary matters, and an appeal lies in some cases from the action of the local authority to the County Council, e.g., as regards the construction of drains, &c.

(3.) Its consent is necessary in certain matters, e.g., to the raising of loans, or closing streets for repairs.

Framing of byelaws.

120. (1.) Most of our witnesses, even those who urge most strongly the aggrandisement and independence of the local authorities, recognise the practical inconvenience of having the administration of an Act different in one locality from that in another, and are content that, to secure uniformity all over the Metropolis, the central authority should frame byelaws under which the local bodies should work.* In this we fully concur, and we think that, if this were done, some of the functions now administered directly by the central authority might safely be entrusted to the local authorities.

Powers of acting in default, of appeal, &c.

121. (2.) The power to act in default and of appeal, especially in sanitary matters, is one that must be preserved. We would wish to see the direct administration by the central authority of such matters as are within the scope of a district authority lessened, as far as possible, and its action limited to general supervision and control in cases where it is necessary. The mere fact that such supervision, control, and appeal exist, with the power of taking action in default, is often sufficient to secure effective performance of a duty, without actual exercise of that power.

Consent to loans, &c.

122. (3.) As regards consent to loans and other matters, we do not find that, as a rule, it has been arbitrarily exercised, or is likely to be in future, and we think that in this respect matters may well stay as they are, at all events for the present. Apart from the fact that the Council in most cases lends the money which the vestries seek to borrow, and thus gives them the benefit of its superior credit, it is well that, so far as possible, the currency of loans for similar objects should be alike, and the administration uniform, throughout the whole of London. The principles of limitation which we have suggested as applicable to borrowing by the central body should therefore be made applicable to local borrowing.

Rating and assessment.

123. The questions of rating and assessment remain, and are of the highest importance. There is much reason for thinking that they should not be left as entirely as they are at present to the local authorities. Assessments vary a good deal between the different localities, as well as within them, and the movement in the direction of uniformity of rating strongly points to uniformity of assessment as its basis, which the present arrangements for assessment cannot be said to secure. Local knowledge and experience are, no doubt, necessary for the purpose, but they should be associated with some representation of the central authority, so as to secure uniformity throughout the Metropolitan area.

124. We cannot conclude without expressing our sense of indebtedness to our Secretary, Mr. Gleadowe. He has brought the quickest and readiest intelligence to the discharge of his task, and he has added to this natural endowment an assiduity and industry commanding our highest admiration. We are satisfied that our labours would have been more prolonged and more difficult had we not enjoyed the advantage of his assistance.

All which we humbly submit to Your Majesty's gracious consideration.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE ROYAL COMMISSION

ON THE

AMALGAMATION OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LONDON.

FIRST DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 9th June 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

SIR THOMAS HENRY FARRER, Bart.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. J. F. ROTTON, Q.C., Legal Adviser to the Local Government Board, called in and examined.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

1. (Chairman.) Perhaps you will begin by telling us what is your position at the Local Government Board?—I am the legal adviser there.

2. You are a member of the Bar?—I am a member of the Bar.

3. And one of Her Majesty's Counsel?—I am.

4. And you are ready to give us information as to the actual government of the metropolis, both the county and the city?—As far as I can.

5. Commencing with the County Council, how is that elected?—That is elected in the same way as other county councils are; but by electors of electoral divisions coincident with the parliamentary boroughs in the metropolis.

6. There are twice as many members for each division as there are parliamentary representatives? Yes.

7. Instead of there being one member for each division, there are two members for each division?—Yes; in the City of course it is the same.

8. (Mr. Crawford.) In the City there are four?—In the City there are four, of course.

9. (Chairman.) Double as many?—Double as many.

10. And the other distinction is that the number of aldermen is comparatively less?—Only one half the proportion—one-sixth instead of one-third.

11. And the area covered by this county council?—Is the metropolis as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, that is to say, the areas for the vestries and district boards in Schedules A. and B., the places in Schedule C. being the Temple and Lincoln's Inn, and a few other places of that sort, which are excluded from the ordinary parochial government and the City.

12. The City is itself a part of the area?—It is a part of the administrative county of London.

13. It is perhaps too early to ask you whether the authority of the Council is the same within that area as without it?—The authority of the Council is not the same in the City in some respects as it is within the part outside the City. When one speaks of the authority of the Council one speaks of the authority of it, not merely under the Local Government Act, not merely as the County Council, but also as the successor of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

14. Well, as a county council independently of the peculiar authorities inherited from the Metropolitan Board of Works, would it have the same jurisdiction within and without the City?—I think not absolutely the same.

15. Turning to the City, the Lord Mayor is the executive chief?—The Lord Mayor is the executive chief.

16. How is he chosen?—He is chosen, I believe, in this way: two aldermen are nominated by a common hall; that is to say, by the freemen being liverymen, to the Court of Common Council, I think.

17. (Mr. Crawford.) No, not the Court of Common Council; to the Court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen?—To the Court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and they select one.

18. (Chairman.) You had better tell us, I think, what the livery is?—The livery, I believe, is certain members of the companies who are by the company put on the livery of the company; not all the members of the company, but certain members of each company are put on the livery of the company.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

19. And the liveryman is necessarily a member of a city company, although all members of the company are not necessarily liverymen?—That is so, I believe.

20. Then some of these liverymen are freemen and some are not; that, I believe, is the case also; how does that come about?—I presume that the companies have power of making members of companies, persons who are not freemen.

21. (Mr. Crawford.) It might be as well if Mr. Rotton drew the distinction between freemen of the City and freemen of the companies?—Yes, I mean by freemen, freemen of the City. Of course, there are freemen of the City who are not members of a company, and so also there may be members of the livery who are not freemen of the City.

22. (Chairman.) We may hope for full information of that elsewhere; but in order to be an elector of the Lord Mayor, or rather of the two aldermen, one of whom would be made a Lord Mayor, you must be both a liveryman and a freeman of the City?—That is so.

23. As a matter of fact, are the two so chosen, do you know, always chosen in seniority?—I believe that, as a matter of fact, the two senior aldermen who have held the office of sheriff are usually nominated.

24. That is a condition also of eligibility, that the alderman should have served as a sheriff?—I am not aware that it is a condition of legal eligibility. I do not think it is; but, in fact, those persons are usually nominated.

25. Is it necessary as a matter of legal eligibility that the Lord Mayor should be chosen from the aldermen at all?—Yes, I think so.

26. They must be two aldermen?—Yes, I think so.

27. And the Court of Aldermen selects one of the two?—Yes.

28. Has the Lord Mayor any personal jurisdiction?—He acts as magistrate in certain cases; he has the power, I believe, of two justices or one stipendiary magistrate; I am not aware that he has any other. He presides, of course, in some courts, but I am not aware that he has jurisdiction in the legal sense.

29. Now the aldermen, how are they elected?—The aldermen are elected in the wards by persons who are rated at 10*l.*, or who are occupiers on the register of voters for Members of Parliament, or who would be entitled to be on the register of voters as occupiers if resident, those are the terms of the 30 Vict. c. 1., a private Act. I have not considered whether those terms are in any way affected, whether that clause is in any way altered by the Acts relating to Parliamentary representation. I am not quite sure about that.

30. Can any person be rated at 10*l.* a year not coming under one or the other of the subsequent categories?—I do not know.

31. Apparently they are merged, I think?—Quite so.

32. These aldermen are chosen for life?—Chosen for life, practically; I believe the phrase is, "Until removal for sufficient reason," or something of that sort. But practically it is for life.

33. Occasionally an alderman resigns his gown?—An alderman resigns his gown occasionally.

34. But you do not know any case in which he was deprived of his gown?—I am not aware of any, there may be such.

35. You speak of the wards, how are those framed?—The wards are ancient city divisions, which have been to a certain extent altered; but, of course, they are very ancient divisions.

36. Comprising a number of parishes?—Comprising a number of parishes in many cases.

37. Does a ward ever divide a parish?—That I cannot say.*

38. Is there any government of the ward?—Yes, each ward has a ward-mote, which the alderman holds, of which the alderman is chairman, and which has certain functions, in respect of rating, for instance.

39. Wards are rated separately?—Wards are rated separately for certain purposes.

40. As distinct from parishes?—As distinct from parishes.

41. And as distinct from the City?—And as distinct from the City; that is to say, they make the rate in some cases.

42. What business has the ward to undertake?—I cannot say what other business; I do not know.

43. That rate must be in respect of some business confided to the ward?—No, I should rather say in respect of what we should call the precept from the Commissioners of Sewers, or from the Court of Aldermen, or the Common Council.

44. That would be to discharge some expense incurred by the Common Council or by the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes.

45. So that this expense would be incurred, I suppose, in the ward?—I do not know; I am not aware whether the ward expenses in respect of such expenses as are incurred by the ward are contributed by the ward, I should think not. Under the Commissioners of Sewers in general the expenses would be treated as a whole—a certain rate would be called for from each ward.

46. Not from each parish?—Not from each parish.

47. Now, the common councilmen represent the same wards as the aldermen?—That is so.

48. And they are elected once a year?—I forget.

49. (Mr. Crawford.) On St. Thomas' Day?—Yes.

50. (Chairman.) On St. Thomas' Day, once a year, the whole body are re-elected?—Yes.

51. And each elector has as many votes as there are places to be filled?—That, I believe, is the case.

52. The Court of Aldermen has many powers of its own?—That is so.

53. Do you know anything specially of their powers?—I cannot say that I do.

54. And the number of common councilmen elected by each ward—how is that fixed?—I believe that it has been fixed by order of Common Council. It has been from time to time altered as the wards have altered in proportionate population. I have not any recent statement of the number elected.

55. Do you understand that it is within the authority of the Common Council, without any express power conferred on it, to alter the number of representatives of the different wards?—That has been frequently exercised; that power has been exercised as one of the powers of regulation inherent in the governing body of the Corporation.

56. Of course, there is no such power in other municipal corporations?—No.

57. Is it subject to a fixed total?—I do not know, I should think not.

58. The ordinary provisions relative to purity of election apply to these elections to the Common Council?—Yes, they apply now both by the Act of 1884 and by the 50 & 51 Vict. c. xiii., which is a private Act.

59. (Mr. Crawford.) The City of London Ballot Act?—Yes.

60. (Chairman.) Then, outside the City originally, I suppose, there were nothing but country parishes?—You had nothing but country parishes. Of course you are aware that before the Metropolitan Management Acts there were Commissioners of Metropolitan Sewers, who had certain powers.*

61. Distinct from the Commissioners of Sewers in the City of London?—Yes; bodies under local Acts, I presume; not, I think, under commissions. But for ordinary purposes there were nothing but parochial authorities.

* It does occasionally. See Blake, 1959.

* But see also Dickinson, 1081.

62. Then these parochial authorities there were modified by the introduction of vestries?—By the Metropolitan Management Act of 1855.

63. But before that?—Before that I daresay there had been vestries under Sturges Bourne's Act; but that has all passed away now.

64. The existing vestries in these parishes, how are they elected?—They are elected by the parishioners rated for the relief of the poor; one-third of the number of vestrymen retiring each year.

65. Like the common councilmen of a municipal borough?—Yes.

66. And each parishioner has one vote for each vacancy?—And each parishioner has one vote for each vacancy.

67. And how many constitute a vestry?—The number varies according to the number of rated householders in each parish, being about 24 for the first 1,000, and 12 for each additional 1,000.

68. A certain number of dozens always?—Yes, always.

69. To what do they run—the maximum, do you know?—I could not say.*

70. These vestries, in some cases, have exercised functions of themselves, and in other cases they elect a district board?—That is so; in the larger parishes which were put into Schedule A. of the Metropolis Management Act, there the vestries are the authorities for the purposes of that Act; in the smaller parishes the parishes are grouped and are placed under district boards, which are elected by the vestries of the group of parishes.†

71. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) A secondary election?—A secondary election.

72. (Chairman.) Each vestry elects its contributory share?—That is so.

73. Of the district board?—The schedules of the Local Management Act have been somewhat altered by subsequent Acts, some of the parishes which were grouped having been made independent.

74. But the same principle prevails, that in the bigger parishes the vestry is the active body?—Yes.

75. And in the smaller parishes the vestries elect representative members upon a district board for the conjoined parishes?—That is so.†

76. (Mr. Smith.) Before you leave the question of vestries, may I ask is there any property qualification?—For vestrymen?

77. Yes. I do not see it on the note. I rather fancied there was; it is an unusual thing now-a-days?—This appears to be the regulation, in section 6 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855: "The "vestry elected under this Act in any parish shall "consist of persons rated or assessed to the relief of "the poor upon a rental of not less than 40*l.* per "annum; and no person shall be capable of acting "or being elected as one of such vestry for any "parish unless he is the occupier of a house, lands, "tenements, or hereditaments in such parish, and be "rated or assessed as aforesaid upon such rental as "aforesaid within such parish: Provided always "that in any parish in which the number of poor "rate assessments at 40*l.* or upwards does not exceed "one-sixth of the whole number of such assessments, "it shall not be necessary in order to qualify a person "to be a vestryman that the amount of rental upon "which he is rated or assessed as aforesaid exceed "25*l.*: Provided also that the joint occupation of "any such premises as aforesaid, and a joint rating in "respect thereof, shall be sufficient to qualify each "joint occupier in case the amount of rental on "which all such occupiers are jointly rated will, "when divided by the number of occupiers, give for "each such occupier a sum not less than the amount "herein-before required."

78. (Mr. Crawford.) We might have it on the notes, the difference between the qualification of county councillors and that of vestrymen. Could you tell us what is the qualification for county councillors?—Yes, in section 2, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act.

79. (Chairman.) It is done by reference?—It is done by reference with a slight alteration. "The "council of a county and the members thereof "shall be constituted and elected and conduct their "proceedings in like manner and be in the like "position in all respects as the council of a borough "divided into wards, subject nevertheless to the "provisions of this Act and in particular to the "following provisions, that is to say: As respects "the aldermen or councillors (a) clerks in holy "orders and other ministers of religion shall not be "disqualified for being elected and being aldermen "or councillors: (b) a person shall be qualified to be "an alderman or councillor who though not qualified "in manner provided by the Municipal Corporations "Act, 1882, as applied by this Act, is a peer owning "property in the county or is registered as a parliamentary voter in respect of the ownership of "property of whatsoever tenure situate in the "county."

80. (Mr. Smith.) It is a little wider than the ordinary municipal qualification?—Yes, it is a little wider.

81. (Chairman.) You have not told us anything of the Commissioners of Sewers in the City; do you know how they are appointed?—The Commissioners of Sewers are a body who are nominated under the seal of the Common Council from their own members.*

82. Necessarily?—I suppose necessarily; section 7 of the Sewers Act of 1848 provides that it shall be lawful for the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons to nominate, and by deed under the Common Seal appoint, such persons as they shall think proper to be Commissioners for carrying the Act into execution.

83. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact, probably you know that they have always nominated from their own body?—Yes, I should think so.

84. (Chairman.) They have power to nominate not only who they like, but as many as they like?—As many as they like.

85. Do you know how many they do nominate?—I do not know the number that the Commission of Sewers consists of.†

86. Do you know how the selection is made?—I do not know; they are simply the persons nominated under seal and their nomination is good until a new commission is issued. It is very much like, in fact, a commission of sewers under the General Sewers Act, only appointed by the Common Council, instead of being appointed by the Crown.

87. The Crown is one and indivisible?—Yes.

88. It might easily make a selection?—Yes, there is no more provision than that section.

89. (Mr. Smith.) Can you tell us the total number of vestries and district boards in the metropolis?

(Mr. Crawford.) There are 25 vestries and 14 district boards?—That is since the alterations. Of course Fulham and Hammersmith have been divided; two of the districts, I think, have been divided, but I am not quite sure which.‡

90-1. (Mr. Smith.) Including the Commissioners of Sewers I believe it is 40?—Yes.

92. (Chairman.) Well, now, going on to the powers and duties you have first to tell us something about the Police; would you describe to us how the police is organised in the City?—The police in the City is under the authority of a Commissioner of City Police appointed by the Common Council with the approval of the Secretary of State.

93. Is there any qualification necessary?—I do not think there is any qualification necessary.

* The maximum is 120. See Dickinson, 1083–5.

† But see also Dickinson, 1087–99. Gomme, 1100–18.

* See also Blake, 1959.

† It consists of 92 Commissioners. See Blake, 1959.

‡ The present actual figures are 26 vestries, 13 district boards, and one local board (Woolwich), in addition to eight extra parochial places and the Commissioners of Sewers in the City. See Dickinson, 1123.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1883.

94. And it is a permanent appointment?—It is a permanent appointment.

95. Can he be removed without the sanction of the Secretary of State?—I think not. I am not quite sure.

96. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, he can be removed by the Court of Aldermen for misconduct.

97. (Chairman.) Not by the Common Council?

98. (Mr. Crawford.) Elected by the Common Council, but removeable by the Court of Aldermen for misconduct, or by the Secretary of State, as the representative of Her Majesty.

99. (Chairman.) And this Commissioner—what is his authority?—He, acting subject, I suppose, to the approbation of the Court of Aldermen, appoints the constables, and may with their approbation and that of the Secretary of State make regulations in regard to the force, and also in regard to street traffic on public occasions as well as other matters.

100. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is there anything in the nature of a watch committee?—I believe there is a committee that deals with such matters.

101. Does he act of his own judgment or discretion, or under the authority of that committee?—There is nothing in the Police Acts, I think, regarding such committee to be appointed as in the case of municipal boroughs, or placing him particularly under that committee.

102. (Chairman.) What is the date of the constitution of this force?—The police force in the City was under 2 & 3 Victoria, c. xciv.

103. Many years after the constitution of the metropolitan police?—Yes, many years after the first constitution of the metropolitan police.

104. The Court of Aldermen appear to be the supervising authority?—That is so.

105. Analogous somewhat to the watch committee?—Yes.

106. You probably cannot tell us the amount of the force?—I cannot.

107. The expense of the police administration, how is that met?—That is met, one-fourth by payment by the Corporation, and three-fourths by a police rate.

108. They get no subsidy from the State?—They get no subsidy from the State.

109. One-fourth contribution out of the Corporation revenues corresponds to what in other cases would be the grant?—Yes; it is not, of course, so large as the contribution in the case of the metropolitan police.

110. But of the ordinary local police, it is not so large as that either?—No; it is not so large as that either.

111. That one-fourth is charged upon the revenue of the Corporation?—That is charged upon the revenue of the Corporation.

112. Perhaps you had better go on to the police courts in the City? How are those organised?—Those are held by aldermen, who are justices for the City, and who act in these police courts in place of police magistrates, have the same powers as police magistrates in the rest of the metropolis.

113. There are how many courts?—There are two courts, one sitting at the Guildhall and another at the Mansion House.*

114. They are like petty sessional courts?—Yes; and also like police magistrates' courts. By the Act relating to the police courts of the metropolis, two aldermen have the power of the police magistrates.

115. Is that the same as two justices elsewhere?—The same as two justices elsewhere.

116. (Mr. Crawford.) Excuse my interrupting you. Are you quite correct there? Is it not just the other way round, that an alderman in the City has all the powers of a stipendiary?—Is it one alderman?

117. Allow me to call your attention to the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1848, and also to the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879. Taking the first Act, section 34 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1848: "And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for "the Lord Mayor of the City of London, or for any "Alderman of the said City for the time being sitting "at the Mansion House or Guildhall Justice Rooms "in the said City, to do alone any act at either of the "said Justice Rooms, which by any law in force, or "by any law not containing an express enactment to "the contrary hereafter to be made, is or shall be "directed to be done by more than one justice." And there is a similar provision in the Act of 1879?—Then I should alter it by saying "one" instead of "two."

118. (Chairman.) Then, in fact, it would be strictly analogous to the jurisdiction of a police magistrate—a stipendiary magistrate?—Yes.

119. You do not know what was the constitution of the police courts before that time?—No, I do not know. In the City I presume that the aldermen, who, of course, have always been justices for the City, acted in the same way as justices did in the rest of London before stipendiary magistrates were appointed.

120. That would mean that for certain purposes they must have two of them?—Certainly, for some purposes they must have two of them.

121. Now, the police outside the City?—The police outside the City are under the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, or the Commissioners of Metropolitan Police. There are three commissioners, but practically the principal commissioner is the person with whom most of the authority rests.

122. They are appointed by the Secretary of State?—They are appointed by the Secretary of State for an area extending much beyond the metropolis.

123. Much beyond the administrative county?—Much beyond the administrative county.

124. The administrative county at no point gets outside that area?—No.

125. It is fully within it?—The police district is a circle of 15 miles from Charing Cross.*

126. Has that been altered from time to time?—That has been extended from time to time.

127. As the metropolis has extended itself?—I believe it may still be altered by Order in Council.

128. It is possible to abstract from the surrounding counties a portion of their area, and bring it within the Metropolitan Police District?—Yes.

129. Do you know when the last extension was made?—It began with 10 Geo. IV. c. 44., and Westminster and parts of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent were mentioned in the schedule. Then that Act provided that parishes in Middlesex, Surrey, Hertfordshire, Essex, and Kent, of which any part is within 12 miles of Charing Cross, might be added by Order in Council. Then 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47. provided that the district was to be any part of the Central Criminal Court district, except the City of London and its liberties and places included in the City Police Act, and any part of any parish or place which is not more than 15 miles from Charing Cross in a straight line may by Order in Council be added to the Metropolitan Police District; therefore that cannot be extended.

129*a*. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Not beyond 15 miles? Not beyond 15.

130. And has it been extended up to the 15?—It has been extended up to the 15.

130*a*. Can you tell at all, either in point of area or in point of population, what is the district outside the administrative county as compared with the district inside the administrative county?—I am afraid I cannot tell you the population.† The rates paid in the County of London were 608,000*l*., and the total rates are 775,000*l*.

131. And how much within?—Within, 608,000*l*.

132. (Chairman.) Four-fifths within?—Yes, nearly.

133. Is this strictly a geometrical figure—15 miles—a circle?—I am not sure. The terms of the section are not, it seems to me, conclusive on the point; and

See also* Kemp, 6111–4; Douglas, 7631–88; Savill, 7689–721.

 See also* answers to Qq. 129 and 134 and Dickinson, 1142.

† See Answer to Qq. 467 seq.

I do not know, in fact, which way it is read. The terms are these: "Any part of any parish or place "which is not more than 15 miles from Charing "Cross in a straight line."

134. (Mr. Smith.) Fifteen miles regulated by the parish boundary?—Yes.

135. (Chairman.) Probably?—It is not quite clear what it means.

136. And the Commissioners of Police make their regulations subject to the authority of the Secretary of State?—The Commissioners of Police make their regulations subject to the authority of the Secretary of State.

137. And the difference between the two systems of organisation is the introduction of the control of the Court of Aldermen?—That is so.

138. The different nominating power and the controlling power of the Court of Aldermen?—Yes.

139. In the metropolitan police area there is no controlling power at all apart from the Secretary of State?—Apart from the Secretary of State, none.

140. No local control?—No local control.

141. If you had such a thing as a watch committee on the County Council, analogous to the Court of Aldermen, the two systems might come nearly alike?—That would be so.

142. A joint watch committee of the City and the County Council might bring the two together?—Yes, if the same persons were appointed.

143. (Mr. Crawford.) I did not understand Mr. Rotton to say that the City police are under the control of the Court of Aldermen similarly to a watch committee of an ordinary borough; did I understand you to say that?—No, I do not think that they are, because I suppose, as a fact, that the Commissioner of the City Police has, as the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has, or exercises, much more discretion—acts very much more by himself than the person in command of the police of a borough would do.

144. (Chairman.) But if a complaint arose in the City as to the misconduct of the police it is carried first to the Commissioner?—Certainly.

145. If the decision of the Commissioner is not satisfactory to the complainant, can he go beyond the Commissioner to the Court of Aldermen?—I am not aware that there is any such provision. If I remember right, all that the City Police Act says is that he is to act with the approbation, or something of that sort, of the Court of Aldermen. I think that is so, but I have not the City Police Act with me.

146. Outside the City, in the metropolitan area, the complaint could of course be carried from the Commissioner to the Secretary of State?—Certainly.

147. But within the City area you are not aware that it could be carried beyond the Commissioner?—Well, that is a matter rather, I think, of practice than of law, and I cannot answer the question.

148. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Supposing that such a question arose within the City as arose in respect of Trafalgar Square, would that be carried to any representative body within the City, or would it go to the Commissioner and from him to the Secretary of State?—I think it would not go from the Commissioner to the Secretary of State. If it went to anybody it would go, in the first case, to the Court of Aldermen. The Secretary of State is mentioned, I think, in the City Police Act only for two purposes, one, as approving the appointment of the Commissioner of Police and approving his dismissal if he had to be dismissed, and in the other case, approving regulations made by him for the government of the force.

149. What I wanted to get at is this: is there a representative body—representative elected body—in the City which is practically responsible for order and good government in the City?—Well, I think I can scarcely answer that question.

150. (Mr. Crawford.) Under the City Police Act there is power in the Court of Common Council to appoint what is called the police committee, but that is simply in connexion with the general equipment of the force and financial matters. But with regard to the conduct of the men the Commissioner is solely responsible. He has ample power of dismissal without assigning even a cause, subject indeed to an appeal to the Court of Common Council, should such dismissal affect a pension of any police constable. Then there is an appeal in this way, that assuming a complaint made against the City police which would in any way involve the commissioner or any of those under him, that complaint could go to the Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen, because with that body lies the power of dismissal, and also a similar compalint could be made to the Home Secretary, because with him, as the representative of Her Majesty, equally lies the power of dismissal of the Commissioner.

151–2. (Chairman.) The Home Secretary has not the power of dismissal apart from the concurrence of the Court of Aldermen?

(Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes, he has, on behalf of the Queen?—If I might say so, I should think probably the position of the Chief Commissioner of Police, both in the metropolis and the City, is more analogous to that of a chief constable of a county; he has a freer hand necessarily than the chief constable of a borough.

153. (Mr. Smith.) But his wings have been a little clipped since the passing of the Local Government Act of 1888?—Yes, that is so.

154. (Chairman.) Now, as to the expense of the police in the metropolitan area?—The expense of the police in the metropolitan area is provided for from two sources, from the payment which is in lieu of the Treasury subvention and from rates. According to the Police Acts a sum not exceeding 9*d.* in the £ on the rateable value of property in the metropolitan police district can be expended. The portion of that sum which is not provided by the Treasury subvention can be raised by rates.

155. The whole expenditure must not exceed 9*d.* in the £?—The whole expenditure must not exceed 9*d.* in the £.

156. And the Chief Commissioner and the Secretary of State must regulate their action accordingly?—Accordingly.

157. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Has not that been a little altered by the recent Act?—I think not.

158. Has it not been altered to this extent, that if you charge for pensions——?—I was not speaking of pensions; I do not think that alters it.

159. I think you will find it, but I should like you to look at it. I speak only from memory, but my recollection is that although very little notice was taken of it at the time the last Act practically gives the Secretary of State power to increase that 9*d.* to any amount that may be necessary to pay the pensions? Yes, that is possible. I was not remembering the police superannuation at the time.*

160. (Chairman.) Apart from pensions, at all events there is this fixed limit?—Apart from pensions this fixed limit remains.

161. And that is the sole controlling power upon the expenditure?—Yes.

162. The sum being expended, how is it practically raised?—The payment in lieu of the Treasury subvention is now made by the Local Government Board to the Receiver of Metropolitan Police out of the Local Taxation Account, that is to say, a sum bearing such proportion to the sum raised by rates in each year as the Secretary of State certifies to be the proportion which would have been contributed out of the Exchequer under the arrangement in force in the financial year next before the passing of the Local Government Act.

163. What was that?—That was either 4*d.* or 4½*d.*; I rather think it was 4½*d.*; either 4*d.* or 4½*d.*

164. Four-ninths?—Yes, perhaps it was.

* See also Answer to Q 474.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

165. That proportion; it was at one time one-fourth?—Yes, it was.

166. It was raised to nearly one-half?—Yes, it was raised.

167. And that proportion is still maintained?—That proportion is still maintained.

168. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) That is not paid into the county fund at all, but it is paid direct to the receiver of the metropolitan police?—It is paid direct; it is one of the payments which the Board makes direct, instead of its passing through the funds of the county.

169. (Chairman.) And how is the sum raised which is raised by rates?—The sum which is raised by rates is paid out of the poor rate on the precept of the Receiver of Metropolitan Police. He issues his precept to each parish, and that sum is paid out of the poor rate.

170. And now respecting the Police Courts in the metropolitan area?—They are provided for by the Commissioners of Works.

171. Do they cover the same area as the police—15 miles?—The police courts, no; there are no stipendiaries for a large part of the police area. There are certain districts which were determined, I believe, by Order in Council under the Act for regulating police courts in London, and the courts for those districts are provided by the Commissioners of Works.

172. That is, the buildings are?—The buildings are maintained.

173. And the number of police magistrates, is there any limit upon that?—They may be, I believe, increased from time to time by Order in Council.

174. They can be re-arranged, but they cannot be indefinitely increased?—Yes, there is a certain limit. The Act with regard to the police courts in the metropolis was the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71. In section 2 of that Act "Her Majesty, with advice of Privy "Council, may alter number of police courts and of "magistrates appointed to any of said courts, and "order changes of the places of holding same within "the metropolitan police district: Provided always "that there shall not at any time be more than "twenty-seven such magistrates."

175. Well, the salaries of the police magistrates are charged on the Consolidated Fund?—On the Consolidated Fund.

176. The expenses of the officers of the courts, and the buildings of the court?—I am not quite sure of the expenses of the officers; I do not know how they are paid.

177. Out of votes of Parliament?—I do not remember; votes of Parliament, are they? The courts themselves are provided and maintained by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works.

178. Out of votes of Parliament?—Out of votes of Parliament.

179. (Mr. Crawford.) You are aware that the City had its own police prior to the City Police Act of 1839?—Oh, yes, a watch, in fact, was it not.

180. There were two sets, what were called the day police and the night watch?—Yes.

181. (Mr. Holt.) Are the stipendiary magistrates and the officers of the police courts paid out of the Government grant; from the Government grant, or out of the police rate?—The police magistrates are paid out of the Consolidated Fund, and their salaries are charged on the Consolidated Fund, like those of judges. The Chairman says that the officers of the court are paid out of votes by Parliament, and not out of the police fund, which is under the Receiver of Metropolitan Police.

182. (Chairman.) Now, with respect to the Sanitary Administration of the area, what is the organisation in the City?—The Commissioners of Sewers are the sanitary authority. They are a sanitary authority under the Public Health Act (London), 1891, and they have very large powers under the City of London Sewers Acts of 1848 and 1851.

183. They apparently would have more executive work to do than the Common Council?—I should suppose very much more; they are the great executive body of the City for street control and sanitary purposes.

184. You are not in a position to tell us how the ambition to get on that Board is satisfied?—No.

185. And the expenses of that body?—The expenses of that body are paid partly out of the sewers rate, and partly out of the consolidated rate. Those are rates levied under the Act of 1848.

186. And this body, though created by the Common Council, is not in any way amenable to it directly?—No, I think not.*

187. There is no appeal from it?—There is no appeal to the Common Council. There may be an appeal in certain cases to quarter sessions, which would be practically to aldermen.

188. What quarter sessions?—(Mr. Crawford.) The quarter sessions in the City of London, section 253 of the Act of 1848: "If any person shall feel aggrieved "by any adjudication or determination of any justice "with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the "provisions of this Act, such party may appeal to "the general or quarter sessions, but no such "appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within "four months next after the making such deter-"mination or adjudication, nor unless ten days "notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature "and grounds thereof, be given to the party against "whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the "appellant forthwith after such notice enter into "recognizances, with two sureties, before a justice, "conditions duly to prosecute such appeal, and to "abide the order of the court thereon"—I thought there was some other provision.

189. (Mr. Crawford.) With regard to auditors. In section 47 the auditors are allowed to appeal to the sessions?—Yes, that is it; practically they are the authority.

190. (Chairman.) They have general sanitary powers; have they not also powers about closing ways and roads?—Very large powers with regard to roads and streets.

191. And stopping any thoroughfares?—And stopping thoroughfares.

192. Diverting ways?—I really cannot say; but I should think they have. The powers given in these Sewers Acts are very considerable. I have not got a note of the sections in regard to highways.

193. Is there an appeal in some cases to your own office?—There is an appeal to the Local Government Board in some cases under the Public Health Act (London), 1891, but no appeal to the Local Government Board under the Sewers Acts.

194. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Did the Local Government Board exist then?—No, but of course there might have been an appeal, which might have been transferred to the Board.

195. (Chairman.) Under the Act of 1891 you have authority to interfere upon complaint made?—Yes, in certain cases. "If it is proved to the Local Govern-"ment Board that the Commissioners have made "default in doing their duty in relation to nuisances "under the Act of 1891, the Board may order any "officer of police of the City to take proceedings," and if complaint is made to the Local Government Board that the Commissioners have made default in executing or enforcing any provisions of the Act of 1891, the Board, if satisfied of the default, may limit a time for the performance of the duty, and if it be not performed within the time limited, the order may be enforced by mandamus, or the Board may appoint some person to perform the duty.

196. That is a recent Act; has any case arisen under it?—No case has arisen under it.

197. What is the general scope of that Act?—The general scope of that Act was to bring into one the provisions of the Nuisances Removal Acts, and other sanitary Acts which had been repealed as to the rest of the country by the Act of 1875, and at the same time make certain further provisions in regard to sanitary matters within the metropolis which those Acts did not contain. It may be taken to be an Act analogous to the Public Health Act relating to the metropolis, but not containing other than sanitary provisions.

* But see also Blake, 1959

198. (Mr. Smith.) But with such improvements as time has shown to be expedient?—With such improvements as time has shown to be expedient.

199. (Chairman.) Under the same Act the Commissioners have certain authority over the port?—Under the same Act the Corporation acting by the Commissioners of Sewers are declared to be the port sanitary authority for the Customs port of London. That follows the Act of 1875.

200. (Mr. Crawford.) Not the Commissioners of Sewers?—The Lord Mayor and aldermen.

201. No, the Court of Common Council; the Corporation. If you look at the Public Health Act of 1891, which followed the Public Health Act of 1875, you will see it is the Corporation that is appointed the port sanitary authority?—Yes, you are right.

202. They carry out the duties of the Act under what is called the port sanitary committee of the Corporation?—You are right, and I was wrong.

203. Nothing to do with the Commissioners of Sewers?—You are right. It is "The mayor, commonalty, and citizens of the City shall continue "to be the sanitary authority of the port of "London."

204. (Chairman.) And they work through a committee?—They work through a committee.

205. I suppose there would be some similarity between the functions of that committee and the functions of the Commissioners of Sewers?—No doubt; but the powers of the mayor, commonalty, and citizens under that section are not determined by the Act, but are in section 112 to be assigned by the order of the Local Government Board:—"The "Local Government Board may by order assign to "the port sanitary authority of the port of London "any powers, rights, duties, capacities, liabilities, or "obligations of a sanitary authority under this "Act, or of a sanitary authority under the "Public Health Act, 1875, and any Act extending "or amending the same respectively, with such "modifications and additions (if any) as may appear "to the Board to be required."

206. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And they have assigned them?—They have assigned them by order.

207. (Chairman.) That committee is active in discharging those duties?—That committee is a very active one.

208. All their expenses are paid out of the revenues of the City?—Paid out of the revenues of the City.

209. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And not out of the consolidated rate at all; not out of the sewers rate?—Not out of any rate that is raised by the Commissioners of Sewers; out of the revenues of the City.

210. (Chairman.) Part of those revenues are possibly connected with the port?

211. (Mr. Crawford.) No, none whatever?—I should think not. The rights which the City have with regard to the port were for the most part transferred by the Thames Conservancy Acts.

212. You will find the expenses provided for by the Act, "They shall out of their own funds," I think the words are?—Shall pay out of their corporate funds all their expenses as such port sanitary authority.

213. (Chairman.) Outside the City the sanitary authorities are?—The authority under the Metropolis Management Act, that is to say, the vestries and district boards, and the Local Board of Woolwich.

214. Why do you distinguish that local board from the vestries?—Because that board is appointed as a local board is appointed; is elected as a local board. Although it is within the Metropolis by the Metropolis Management Act, the Local Board of Woolwich was continued a local board although Woolwich was included within the Metropolis.

215. Was that in 1855?—In 1855.

216. It was a pre-existing board?—It was a pre-existing board.

217. Elected by the ratepayers of Woolwich?—Yes, under the Public Health Act of 1848.

218. Whereas the other district boards are elected by the vestries?—Are elected by the vestries. The method of election of the Local Board of Woolwich was provided for specially in the Act of 1891 by extending to that district certain sections of the Act of 1875, I believe.

219. Now, these vestries and district boards being the primary authorities for ordinary sanitary administration, was any power given to the Metropolitan Board of Works in respect to the same matters over them, or in relation to them?—By the Act of 1891 you mean.

220. I said the Metropolitan Board of Works?—In matters not* relating to sewers there was, if I remember rightly, a certain power of appeal in some cases to the Metropolitan Board of Works.

221. That is historical, perhaps?—Yes. It is not merely historical, because, of course, any power which the Metropolitan Board of Works had would now be vested in the County Council.

222. I was going to ask, without going into how it arose, what powers have the County Council now in sanitary matters?—Under the Act of 1891 they have the power of acting in place of a sanitary authority if the sanitary authority make default in their duty with respect to the removal of any nuisance, the institution of any proceedings, or the enforcement of any byelaws, and they have the power also of complaining to the Local Government Board if the district authority, the local authority, have made default in executing or enforcing any provision of the Act of 1891, or any byelaws thereunder which it is the duty of the authority to execute or enforce, and if satisfied of the default, and that the complaint cannot be remedied under the other provisions of the Act, the Local Government Board may limit a time for the performance of the duty by the authority, and if it be not performed within that time the order may be enforced by mandamus, or the Board may appoint the County Council to perform the duty of the defaulting authority.

223. Has not the County Council also got the power to make byelaws under certain conditions?—The County Council has power to make byelaws for certain purposes, as to offensive trades, water-closets, and certain classes of nuisances.

224. Not an absolute power?—A power with the approval of the Local Government Board.

225. Are those powers exercised?—Whether the byelaws have been sealed or not I do not remember, but they have been exercised or are being exercised. The byelaws are in preparation if not passed.†

226. The County Council are not leaving those powers dormant?—Oh, no.

227. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) They have been in communication with the Local Government Board for a long while?—Yes, they have to communicate with the sanitary authority.

228. It is a long process?—It is a long process.

229. (Chairman.) And have they been appealed to on the ground of default?—I believe not.‡

230. And you do not know whether appeals have been made to the County Council on the ground of the default of the inferior authorities?—That I do not know. I have no official knowledge of such

231. Now going on to the Sewers other than Main Sewers, the Commissioners of Sewers in the City are the authority for that purpose?—Yes.

* See Dickinson, 1147.

† The byelaws were actually sealed on the 28th June 1893. See Dickinson, 1146.

‡ But see also Dickinson, 1149.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

232. And their expenses?—Are levied by a sewers rate.

233. And the vestries and the district boards outside the City are the authority?—The vestries and the district boards are the sewer authority outside the City, subject to certain regulations of the County Council.

234. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) How are these expenses paid?—The sewer expenses are paid out of a sewers rate.

235. In the City?—Yes, the expenses in the City are paid out of a sewers rate. There is no distinction, I believe, as to the incidence of the sewers rate and the consolidated rate. They are really separate merely in name.

236. I wanted just to get at that; the old sewers rate used to be divided between owner and occupier, I think?—"Every such rate as aforesaid" (that is to say, sewers rate and consolidated rate) "shall be "made by the alderman or his deputy and the major "part of the common councilmen of each ward upon "every person who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, "or enjoy, any house or building within the City, or "partly within and partly without the City (whether "such person shall be now liable in respect of such "house or building to be assessed to the relief of the "poor, or be not liable to be assessed to the relief of "the poor in respect thereof, by reason of such house "or building being situated in any precinct or extra-"parochial place, or otherwise), according to the full "net annual value thereof respectively (except in the "several cases herein-after mentioned), the same to be "ascertained in manner herein-after mentioned; and "the said rates shall from time to time be collected "and paid yearly, half yearly, or quarterly, or oftener "if the Commissioners shall think proper, and shall "commence from such time after this Act shall come "into operation as the Commissioners shall think fit."

237. That is one rate. There is a consolidated rate in the City, is there not, which pays all the expenses of the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes, there is a distinction in name between the sewers rate and the consolidated rate, although they are levied in the same way.

238. I wanted to ascertain whether there was any part of the sewers rate charged upon the owner, as distinguished from the occupier?—No, I do not see that there is. There are provisions, of course, for rating houses let out in apartments and so on, but I do not see that any part of it is to be paid by the owner in the case of a house in ordinary occupation.

239. (Mr. Smith.) There would seem to be a certain overlapping of sanitary powers between the County Council and the strictly sanitary authorities in the metropolis; does that exist anywhere else?—I am not aware that it does.

240. As an illustration, the sanitary authority defined by the Act being the vestry or district board, it would seem odd that another body should have the power of prescribing the character of its water-closets, or making byelaws as to nuisances within its area. You do not know of any other instance, I think?—No.

241. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is not the sort of principle that underlies that legislation this, viz., that the regulations for all these purposes should be uniform throughout London although the executive authority to carry them out is different, and that this object can only be got by giving the power of making general regulations to a central authority; is not that the sort of principle upon which the law acts; I do not say it is strictly carried out?—It seems to be a sufficient reason for that special provision with regard to London.

242. And then the other part of the jurisdiction of the Council is rather in the direction of seeing that the local bodies do their duty, giving to the Council the power of doing the thing required if the local bodies do not do it themselves?—Quite so.

243. With an appeal to the Local Government Board?—Yes.

244. I think that is the sort of principle that pervades it?—Yes.

245. (Chairman.) Now, about Main Sewers. Will you tell us what they are?—Main sewers are provided by the County Council, as successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works. They were the sewers mentioned in the schedule of the Act of 1855, and sewers which have been declared by the Metropolitan Board of Works or County Council to be main sewers, and sewers constructed by them, and the outfall works—the sewage disposal works.

246. In respect of such sewers the County Council has jurisdiction in the City as well as outside the City?—Yes.

247. There is no distinction?—There is no distinction.

248. And the expenses?—Are now borne by the county rate.

249. To which the City contributes?—To which the City contributes.

250. Like other parts of the Metropolis?—Just so.

251. You say the County Council has authority to declare certain sewers to be main sewers?—Yes, that was under the Metropolis Management Act.

252. Is that a continuing authority enabling them from time to time to declare other sewers to be main sewers?—I think so; I believe that is a continuous authority.

253. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) If they declare them to be main sewers, they take the expense of them?—They take the expense of them.

254. (Chairman.) In the event of their declaring certain sewers to be main sewers, have the district authorities, vestries, or district boards, any possibility of gainsaying it. Sir Thomas Farrer asked if, in the event of their taking over the sewers, they took over the expense of them?—They take over the expense of them, of course; they take over the responsibility of them.

255. And with respect to a debt having been contracted for their reconstruction and not wholly repaid?—That I will answer later.*

256. Then, with respect to the Housing of the Working Classes; under the Act of 1890, who are the City authority?—There are three branches of the Act of 1890: the first relates to unhealthy areas, that is to say, where the dwellings of a considerable area have to be reconstructed, the second to unhealthy dwelling-houses, where houses which are unfit for human habitation or are obstructive have to be removed or closed, and where smaller areas than can be properly dealt with under the first section have to be reconstructed; and the third as to the provision of working classes' lodging houses.

257. Is there not one clause under which the houses may be required to be repaired and put in order without being destroyed?—They would come under the houses unfit for human habitation. Under clause 2 there would be an order for closing; the authority would obtain an order for closing the houses until the necessary repairs had been effected.

258. (Mr. Smith.) You could do that under the Public Health Act also?—You could do that under the Public Health Act, under the Nuisance clauses.

259. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) That can be done, can it not, without the intervention of an authority, by means of a complaint made by other people to the magistrate, may it not?—I think a complaint might be made under the equivalent clauses of the Nuisances Removal Act by any person aggrieved or by a certain number of rate-payers. It is complaint of the existence of a nuisance; that would be the existence of a nuisance, because the nuisance would be premises in such a state as to be a nuisance, or dangerous, or injurious to health. If a house is such nuisance, an order may be made prohibiting a dwelling-house from being used for human habitation, and proceedings for the removal of a nuisance under section 12:—"Complaint may be

* See Answer to Q. 745.

" made by any person, and thereupon the like pro" ceedings shall be had with the like incidents and " consequences as to making of orders, fines for " disobedience of orders, appeal, and otherwise, as in " the case of a like complaint by the sanitary
" authority."

260. (Chairman.) Now, about unhealthy areas?—For unhealthy areas the Commissioners of Sewers are the local authority in the City, and the County Council in the metropolis outside the City.

261. (Mr. Smith.) That is an unhealthy area of large dimensions?—Yes, that is under Part 1 of the Act of 1890.

262. What we used to call Cross' Act?—Yes; the central authority for the City being the Secretary of State, and the same for the rest of London.

263. (Chairman.) Have the Commissioners of Sewers done much with respect to that Act?—I could not say how many schemes there have been, but there have been a considerable number of schemes in the City I believe, for that purpose. They have not officially come before me, therefore I could not say how many.*

264. And a large number outside?—A large number outside.

265. With respect to unhealthy dwelling-houses, either the vestries or the district boards are the local authority?—They are; the vestries and district boards.

266. (Sir. Thomas Farrer.) Is that the same thing as Part 2?—That is Part 2; and that includes, of course, really the making of schemes of very much the same character as those under Part 1, only for smaller areas.

267. (Chairman.) And the County Council, though not the first authority, have the power of coming in?—They have in certain cases power to come in.

268. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And of sharing the expense?—And of sharing the expense: they are exercising that power.

269. I think it is not always easy to say whether a scheme ought to be under Part 1 or under Part 2?—It is not.

270. (Chairman.) Can you generally describe what are the circumstances which enable the County Council to come in?—The provisions are these: this is section 46, sub-section 5.

271. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is this Part 1 or Part 2?—It is Part 2 as I understand, as to which the question is asked: "Where it appears to " the County Council, whether in the exercise of the " powers of a vestry or district board, or on the repre" sentation of a vestry or district board or otherwise,
" that a scheme under this part of this Act ought to " be made, the Council may take proceedings for " preparing and obtaining the confirmation of a " scheme, and the provisions of this Act respecting
" the scheme shall apply in like manner as if they " were the vestry or district board, and all expenses
" of and incidental to the scheme and carrying the " same into effect shall, save as herein-after mentioned,
" be borne by the County fund." And then sub-section seven: "The County Council may, if they " think fit, pay or contribute to the payment of the " expenses of carrying into effect a scheme under
" this part of this Act by a vestry or district board,
" and if a vestry or district board consider that the " expenses of carrying into effect any scheme under " this part of this Act, or a contribution in respect of " those expenses, ought to be paid or made by the " County Council, and the County Council decline or " fail to agree to pay or make the same, the vestry or
" district board may apply to a Secretary of State,
" and if the Secretary of State is satisfied that, having " regard to the size of the area, to the number,
" position, structure, sanitary condition, and neigh" bourhood of the buildings to be dealt with, the " Council ought to pay or make a contribution in " respect of the said expenses, he may order such " payment or contribution to be made, and the amount
" thereof shall be a simple contract debt from the " Council to the vestry or district board."

272. Is not Part 1 for large schemes which are to be wholly undertaken by the Council?—That is so.

273. Part 2 relates to smaller schemes which may be undertaken either by the vestry or by the Council; and in this case provision is made for sharing the expense by means of an arbitration by the Secretary of State?—That is so.

274. (Chairman.) Is there any provision in the second class of cases requiring the power which is going to put the matter into operation, to give notice to the other before it begins?—Any vestry or district board has, if I remember rightly, to give notice. It is section 45, this is also Part 2: "(1.) Where the " medical officer of health or any inhabitant house-
" holders make a representation or complaint, or give " information to any vestry or district board in the " administrative county of London or to the local " board of Woolwich, or to any rural sanitary autho" rity elsewhere (which vestry, board, or authority,
" is in this Act referred to as the district authority)
" or to the medical officer of such authority, either
" respecting any dwelling-house being in a state so
" dangerous or injurious to health as to be unfit for " human habitation, or respecting an obstructive
" building, and also where a closing order has been " made as respects any dwelling-house, the district
" authority shall forthwith forward to the county
" council of the county in which the dwelling-house
" or building is situate, a copy of such representation,
" complaint, information, or closing order, and shall
" from time to time report to the council such " particulars as the council require respecting any " proceedings taken by the authority with reference
" to such representation, complaint, information, or " dwelling-house. (2.) Where the county council
" (a) are of opinion that proceedings for a closing
" order as respects any dwelling-house ought to be " instituted, or that an order ought to be made for
" the demolition of any buildings forming or forming
" part of any dwelling-house as to which a closing
" order has been made, or that an order ought to be " made for pulling down an obstructive building
" specified in any representation under this part of " this Act; and (b) after reasonable notice, not being " less than one month, of such opinion has been " given in writing to the district authority, consider " that such authority have failed to institute or " properly prosecute proceedings, or to make the " order for demolition, or to take steps for pulling " down an obstructive building; the council may " pass a resolution to that effect, and thereupon the " powers of the district authority as respects the said
" dwelling-house and building under this part of this " Act (otherwise than in respect of a scheme) shall
" be vested in the county council, and if a closing
" order or an order for demolition or for pulling " down an obstructive building is made and not
" disallowed on appeal, the expenses of the council
" incurred as respects the said dwelling-house and " building, including any compensation paid, shall be " a simple contract debt to the council from the " district authority."

275. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) You see it comes to the same thing in principle as the case of main sewers. It is the interest of each body to get the other to do it, in order to avoid the expense, and consequently the first step that either authority takes is to communicate with the other authority and see whether the other authority will not do it, that is what really happens?—Yes, quite so.

276. (Chairman.) Now about working classes' lodging houses?—That is a power to provide lodging houses for the working classes, and that rests with the Commissioners of Sewers in the City and with the County Council in the rest of the metropolis.

277. Has it been exercised in the City, do you know?—I do not know whether it has been exercised in the City; it has been exercised by the County Council, I believe.

* See also Blake, 1960.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

278. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation have built lodging houses out of their own funds and apart from any Act and the Commissioners of Sewers have done so also?—Yes.

279. (Chairman.) Now the next is the Regulation and Inspection of Common Lodging-houses?—The common lodging houses Acts, as far as I can ascertain, do not apply to the City of London, but there are some provisions in the City of London Sewers Act, 1851, under which, I presume, something like the same work is done by the Commissioners of Sewers; in the rest of the metropolis the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, under the control of the Secretary of State, makes and enforces regulations and the provisions of the Act.

280. The County Council has nothing to say to it?—The County Council has nothing to say to it.

281. (Mr. Smith.) Nor the sanitary authority?—Nor the sanitary authority.

282. (Chairman.) They regard it as purely a police matter?—It has been regarded purely as a police matter.

283. (Mr. Crawford.) Except in the City?—Yes.

284. (Chairman.) We are talking now of the police area?—The expenses of that part are part of the expenses of the police.

285. Now we come to some common powers of the City and the rest of London, the Regulation of Building?—Yes, as regards the greater part of the Metropolitan Building Acts the County Council appear to be the authority for the whole of the county.

286. You have something to say about the reservation of the powers of the Commissioners of Sewers?—There are some powers relating to buildings in the Sewers Acts of 1848 to 1851, and the Metropolitan Building Acts specially provide that those powers shall not be interfered with. "But nothing herein contained "shall affect the exercise of any powers vested by "any Act of Parliament in the Commissioners of "Sewers of the City of London for the time being."

287. And what am I to understand is the practical result of that, if buildings are proposed to be erected in the City; is it the County Council or is it the Commissioners of Sewers that sees that those buildings conform to the conditions of the Building Act?—I suppose, practically, it would be the officers, the district surveyors, appointed by the County Council.

288. The district surveyor of the County Council supervises the erection of buildings in the City?—Yes.

289. And the reservation of power to the Commissioners of Sewers appears to be very little?—I do not suppose it is very much.

290. As regards dangerous buildings, what are you going to tell us?—That there the Commissioners of Sewers are the authority in the City.

291. And for the rest of the metropolis?—The County Council.

292. Not the sanitary authorities but the County Council?—The County Council.

293. Not the vestry or district board?—No, originally under the Act of 1855 the authority for that purpose was the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, I believe, and then that was altered.

294. Transferred to the County Council?—Transferred to the Metropolitan Board of Works by the Metropolitan Building Act, 1869, and it has now become vested in the County Council.

295. Now as to Highways other than Main Roads, what is the administration in and outside the City?—In the City it rests with the Commissioners of Sewers under section 119 of the City Sewers Act, 1848, and also under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 57 Geo. 3., chapter 29, and perhaps under many Local Acts, but that is more than I can say; there have been many Local Acts relating to highways, streets, and so on; but now within the City the sole authority respecting paving and maintaining the roads is the Commissioners of Sewers. I am not aware whether Hatton Garden is outside the City, there is a small place there that I think is under a Local Act.

296. Ely Place?—Ely Place, yes, but that is outside the City, I think.

297. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the portion, I think, that Mr. Rotton refers to, as I am not aware of any other body in the City, except the Commissioners, having the power?—No.

298. (Chairman.) And the Common Council, have they any powers in the City?—No, I think as to the maintenance or the repair of roads, it is all vested in the Commissioners of Sewers.

299. As to the use of roads you say they have?—Quite so, they have, under the Local Government Act, power of making certain byelaws and regulations in regard to locomotives and the use of locomotives.

300. But in certain cases with the approval of the County Council?—Yes, in certain cases with the approval of the County Council, that is, under the Local Government Act, section 41, sub-section 4 (a). "In the City of London the Common Council shall "have the power under the Highways and Loco-"motives (Amendment) Act, 1878, of making "byelaws respecting locomotives, and authorising "locomotives to be used on any road within the City, "save that if any difference is made by such byelaws "or authority between any main road maintained by "the County Council and the other roads in the City, "such authority and byelaws shall require the "approval of the County Council."

301. It is when the use of a main road comes in that the County Council's power is reserved?—Yes.

302. Outside the City these highways other than main roads?—Are under the vestries and district boards.

303. And the County Council has nothing to say to them?—The County Council has nothing to say to them, except as to main roads.

304. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And is not the leave of the County Council required for shutting up a street for the purpose of repairs or otherwise?—It is possible that there is such a provision, I was rather thinking of the duty of repairing and maintaining them and the regulation of the traffic.

305. And there are certain thoroughfares such as the Thames Embankment?—Of course, there are certain thoroughfares which under what we may call local or special Acts have been constructed by the Metropolitan Board of Works and remain with the County Council as their successor.

306. (Chairman.) The creation of the County Council or its predecessor?—Yes.

307. (Mr. Smith.) And as you have noted they are the authority for tramways?—Yes.

308. In respect of these tramways being made over, the County Council is the tramway authority?—Yes, I do not know whether there are any separate road commissions, it is just possible; I am not quite sure as to Regent Street, there are certain paving commissions that may be in existence, I do not know whether there are.*

309. (Chairman.) Extra-parochial areas you mean?—No, Regent Street was made by the Commissioners of Public Works, and it remained under them for some considerable time; I do not know how far that is the case, but that is merely what we may call a local exception.

310. The Main Roads, City and extra mural?—The provisions as to main roads apply to London the same as to any other places.

311. And the Common Council in the City occupies the position of a vestry outside the City towards the County Council?—That is so.

312. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The result of that, is that there has been some contention, has there not, in London, as there has in many other places, as to what can be properly considered main roads?—I did not know that there had been any, I was not aware of it officially.

* See also Dickinson, 1152.

313. There have, I think, been certain appeals to the Local Government Board as to what shall be considered main roads, the parishes wishing to throw on the Council streets which originally were maintained by turnpikes?—I do not remember that there had been any such appeals in regard to London.*

314. Yes, there have been some appeals as to the amount of expense which the Council ought to bear, but the Council will give us all that?—Yes, I could, of course, find out, but I do not remember as a fact that there have been any.

315. (Chairman.) You do not know anything practically of the operation of those relations between the County Council and the subordinate boards?—No.

316. Now, will you describe to us the organisation of the Water Supply?—Well, under the Metropolitan Water Act there are certain provisions in regard to requiring a constant supply, and otherwise in regard to the control of the companies, and under those provisions the Mayor, aldermen, and commons in the City and the County Council outside the City are the authority.

317. And the Local Government Board is the ultimate authority?—The Local Government Board is the central authority substituted for the Board of Trade which was in the Act.

318. The water is altogether supplied by private companies?—Altogether supplied by private companies.

319. Having their districts allotted to them?—Having their districts allotted to them.

320. And there is no portion uncovered by a company?—There is no portion uncovered by a company.

321. And the Common Council in the one case and the County Council in the other have authority to require a constant supply?—That is so.

322. For public or private purposes, or both?—A constant supply, I presume, would be for all the purposes for which water is supplied.

323. By inhabitants in their households as well as by those bodies for public purposes?—Decidedly. Section 8 of the Act of 1871 says: "At any time after "the expiration of six months from the passing of this "Act, the metropolitan authority shall, whenever they "are of opinion that there should be in any district "a constant supply, make application to the company "within the water limits of which such district is "situate, requiring a constant supply in such district, "and any company may without any such application "propose to the metropolitan authority to give a "constant supply in any district. When application "has been made to any company requiring such "company to provide a constant supply, or when "any company has given notice to a metropolitan "authority of a proposal to give a constant supply in "any district, and the company so required, or the "metropolitan authority upon whom notice of such "proposal has been served object to such requisition "or proposal, it shall be lawful for such company or "metropolitan authority, within one month after the "making of such application or service of such "notice, to present a memorial to the Board of "Trade, setting forth their objections to such requi-"sition or proposal, and the party presenting such "memorial, or such company, shall give notice to the "other party of the presentation of such memorial, "and shall transmit to such party a copy of the same. "The Board of Trade shall, as soon as conveniently "may be after the receipt of such memorial, take the "same into their consideration, and may, if they "think fit, institute any inquiry in relation thereto, "and may hear such company and authority desiring "to be heard, and may make such order in reference "thereto, and as to the costs thereof and incident to "the same, as to them shall seem just."

324. It is entirely apparently with reference to the constancy of the supply?—That section is entirely as to the constancy of the supply. There is some provision generally, I think, in regard to default.

* See also Answer to Q. 476.

325. Having relation to the same thing, permanent supply?—Yes.

326. We may take that for granted, but how about conditions as to purity of supply?—As to the conditions of purity the Local Government Board are to appoint a competent person to inquire into the quality of the water. He is to be the water examiner; he is to be paid by the companies. An auditor is also appointed by the Local Government Board.

327. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Neither the City nor the London County Council have anything to do with that?—Neither. I think there is in the earlier Act a general provision in regard to a complaint where the supply is not sufficient. The Act also provided for regulations being made for preventing undue consumption and waste of water, but those also were made by the Board of Trade; at least, approved by the Board of Trade, and not by the local authorities.

328. (Chairman.) I suppose without express statutory authority these public bodies could communicate with your office to say there was a case for examination?—No doubt.

329. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) But there was special reason, was there not, for bringing in the local authority in the case of a constant supply, because the great difficulty of a constant supply has been the obligation on the householder to have new fittings?—Certainly.

330. And that has been the great difficulty in introducing a constant supply?—Certainly. I should have added that in the Act of 1852—the Act which I have been quoting is the Act of 1871—there is a provision that before any company resorts to any new source of supply they must give notice to the Local Government Board, which has to certify its approval or disapproval; and that if at any time complaint as to the quantity or the quality of the water supplied by any company for domestic use be made to the Local Government Board by memorial in writing signed by not less than 20 householders a person may be appointed to inquire into the same, and notice may be given to the company if complaint be found to be well founded to remove the ground of complaint.

331. (Mr. Smith.) All these powers have reference to control?—Yes.

332. I understand that there is no statutory authority in London—no statutory body having any right to acquire the water undertaking?—I believe not.

333. That is different, of course, from other municipalities; the Public Health Act, 1875, would give them that power?—Yes, quite so.

334. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Those powers which have been acquired are those acquired by the Council under recent Acts, which only go to give them power to spend money in inquiries?—Yes.

335. (Mr. Smith.) And the powers of the Public Health Act, 1875, which are common to the rest of England do not apply to the metropolis?—Do not apply to the metropolis.

336. (Chairman.) As to the provision you mentioned about resorting to new sources of supply; can any company do that without parliamentary authority?—Well, it is possible. A recent case I remember was the case of a well; I presume the company had purchased by agreement a piece of land.

337. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is there anything to prevent the East London Company, for instance, from sinking an additional well upon land which they may purchase, and bringing the water which they pump from that well into their ordinary supply?—No.

338. (Chairman.) Without having already got authority to do it?—Of course, that would depend upon the terms upon which their powers were originally given them. It is impossible to say without reference to the Act authorising the construction of the works of the company what powers they have with regard to new works. In a great many cases there are powers given for purchasing land by agreement, not exceeding so many acres, and so on. That would enable them practically to make some new works without going to Parliament. I remember there was a case quite recently, in which, I presume, without fresh Parliamentary powers, a water company came to the Local Government Board for their approval to a new source of supply; but I do not see that there is anything to limit that provision to sources of supply not approved by Parliament.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

9 June 1893.

339. It may be that it was held that even after Parliament has approved a source of supply, before it is practically brought into use, the quality of the water should be approved by some central department. I do not think the terms of the section exclude the case.

340. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is that the Act of 1851?—The Act of 1852.

341. Is it not the case that at the time that Act was passed, the water companies were not under any strict control at all; they had got their sources from the Thames, from the Hampstead ponds, from a variety of places, many of which were found to be very improper places?—No doubt.

342. Then there was a committee about it which sat in or about 1851—Sir James Graham, I think, was chairman—and they recommended that the companies should, for the future, be put under stringent obligations not to obtain water, they were prevented from obtaining water, below bridge?—Yes, quite so.

343. And then they were not to obtain water from any other sources without the consent of a Government department?—That was so.

344. But independently of that provision I do not think there is anything, is there, preventing companies from getting water from any source where they have the power to do it by possession of land and by possession of capital?—As I say, I think it would depend, of course, upon the terms of each company's Acts, what its powers are; there is no general Act, I think.

345. Do you think there is anything—for instance, take the Kent Company, which get their water from wells—is there anything to prevent the Kent Company from sinking a new well whenever they please?—That is impossible to say without looking at the Kent Company's Acts. The Act of 1852 was the Act which restricted them from taking any water below Teddington Lock. "From and after the thirty-"first day of August, one thousand eight hundred "and fifty-five, it shall not be lawful for any "company supplying the metropolis, or any part "thereof, with water for domestic use, except the "Governor and Company of Chelsea Waterworks, to "take any water for such purpose from any part of "the River Thames below Teddington Lock, or from "any part of any of the tributary rivers or streams "of the River Thames below the highest point where "the tide flows in such tributary rivers and streams "respectively, and from and after the thirty-first day "of August one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, "it shall not be lawful for the said Governor and "Company of Chelsea Waterworks to take any water "for domestic use from any part of the River "Thames below Teddington Lock." And then there is a provision that reservoirs within a certain distance—five miles of St. Paul's—should be covered.

346. There are a great many provisions about the purity of water?—Yes.

347. And at that time there was nothing in the nature of the Metropolitan Board of Works; there was only the Corporation in the City?—Quite so.

348. And there was nothing except the vestries in London?—Except the old vestries.

349. So that whatever powers of control were then given were naturally given to Government Departments?—Yes, certainly.

350. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not know whether you have had your attention called to recent Acts of the water companies in regard to the creation of a sinking fund?—Well, I have not gone into that question with reference to this; I have had occasion previously to look into that.

351. You do not know whether under the recent Acts there is a sinking fund to be created, of which the treasurer is the chamberlain of the City for the time being, with a view to the ultimate purchase of the water companies?—Yes, quite so, certainly.

352. And I assume you do not give it us as your opinion that the water companies, even under the Acts, can claim an exclusive monopoly of supply?—No, I believe no water company has an exclusive monopoly, under any Act I may say.

353. Is there anything to prevent, for instance, the Commissioners of Sewers sinking a well themselves and supplying the citizens of London with water, and then charging them for it, assuming that the parties are willing to take it upon an agreed price?—As against the companies, I think the Commissioners of Sewers would have such a right. I mean to say the company has no statutary monopoly, or has no statutary right to exclude the Commissioners of Sewers or anybody else, but whether the Commissioners of Sewers themselves have the power to make such works I could not say.*

354. (Chairman.) Without the authority of Parliament?—Without the authority of Parliament; I do not know. The powers of the Commissioners of Sewers are very wide for sanitary purposes, but I am not aware that there is any enactment giving the Commissioners of Sewers power to provide water.

355. I suppose you would say outside the City, in the area of the County Council, although any particular company could not forbid any particular authority undertaking the work, the County Council is not the authority to do it?—Certainly, neither the County Council nor the sanitary authorities have the power to do it.†

356. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And is it not the fact that the Water Acts differ considerably from the Gas Acts in this, that whereas in the case of gas London was divided into districts among the separate companies by an Act of Parliament, nothing of the sort has been done in the case of the water companies. Whatever exclusive position each company has, has been done by arrangement between themselves without any direct parliamentary sanction, is not that so?—I believe that is so. I could not say whether there may not be in some of the Acts a limitation, but generally there has been no general enactment, such as there was in the Metropolis Gas Act, providing for the districting of the metropolis with reference to the supply of water.

357. On the other hand, the difficulty of introducing a new supply where a company has already got possession of the streets would be very great indeed, would it not?—That is an engineering question upon which, of course, I cannot express an opinion.

358. (Mr. Crawford.) Only one other question: you are aware, I suppose, that under recent Acts notice has to be given, certainly to the Corporation, of the sale of stock?—Yes, quite so.

359. (Chairman.) We may as well take Baths and Wash-houses in connexion with the water?—The Commissioners of Sewers are the authority in the City, and in the rest of the metropolis the vestry of each parish.

360. District boards have nothing to say to it?—District boards not being the authority.

361. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) District boards are not the authorities, are they?—No.

362. (Chairman.) Where parishes contribute to district boards for other purposes the parishes are exempt in respect of baths and wash-houses?—Yes.

363. The borrowing of money with respect to baths and wash-houses requires the sanction of the Local Government Board?—The sanction of the Local Government Board, yes.

* But see also Blake, 1961.

† But see also Dickinson, 1157.

364. Petroleum and Explosive Acts?—The Lord Mayor and aldermen are the local authority in the City, and in the rest of the metropolis the County Council.

365–6. The Lord Mayor and aldermen, not the Common Council?——

(Mr. Crawford.) That under the Local Government Act is now transferred to the Common Council?—Is it? Under the Local Government Act?

367. (Mr. Crawford.) Section 41, sub-section 1(a): "Such of them as would, if the City were a quarter "sessions borough with a population exceeding "10,000, be exercised by virtue of this or any other "Act by the council of the borough, shall be trans-"ferred to the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of the "city acting by the council." So that that would transfer the former duties of the Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen to the Court of Common Council, and they carry out the Act at the present moment?—Is that so? Because that speaks merely "of the powers, "duties, and liabilities of the court of quarter sessions "and justices of the City of London"; was that a duty of the quarter sessions?

368. Are you reading the same section 41?—41, sub-section 1 (a).

369. "Of the powers, duties, and liabilities of the "Court of Quarter Sessions and Justices of the "City of London"?—Such of those powers as would, if the City were a quarter sessions borough with a population exceeding 10,000, be exercised by the Council, shall be transferred to the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of the City acting by the council. Were the powers under the Petroleum Acts powers of the Court of Quarter Sessions and Justices?

370. No; they were powers of the Court of Aldermen, but now transferred under section 41 read in conjunction with section 100?—Then instead of the Lord Mayor and aldermen it should be the commonalty.

371. (Chairman.) And the County Council are the authority for the rest of the metropolis?—Yes.

372. Then the Fire Brigade is one service for the whole of the metropolis?—That is so.

373. And does the City contribute like the rest of the metropolis towards the expense of that?—So far as it is not borne by the insurance companies. I presume it would be borne by the county rate, and as for a general county purpose to which the City would contribute.

374. (Mr. Smith.) Might I ask on that, as a matter of curiosity, how did you come to get that contribution from the insurance offices, was it a matter of bargain? I cannot say. They had before, I believe, kept up a corps—a fire brigade of their own.

375. (Chairman.) The Metropolitan Commons and Open Spaces?—The County Council is the authority as regards any common situated in the metropolis, and may contribute towards the expense of any other metropolitan commons.

376. You distinguish between commons and open spaces?—Yes, the distinction being the open spaces which are dealt with under the Metropolitan Commons Act, which were commons which were subject to the Inclosure Acts, and the other being open spaces, such as the gardens fronting squares and disused burial grounds, and so on, which were not subject to the Inclosure Acts.

377. There would be no commons within the City itself?—I presume there could be no commons in the City when Moorfields ceased to be a common; that would be the last, I suppose. I might add, in regard to commons, that under the later Act the City of London had power to expend money in preserving open spaces in the neighbourhood of London.

378. (Mr. Crawford.) Under section 4 of the Open Spaces Act of 1878 "The Corporation may acquire "by purchase, gift, or otherwise, the freehold and "inheritance of or any other estate or interest in any "common, commonable land, or open space not within "the metropolis as defined by the Metropolis Manage-"ment Act, 1855, but within 25 miles from the part "of the boundary of the City of London which is "nearest to such common."

379. (Chairman.) Under that they acquired Epping Forest?—That did not apply to Epping Forest, that was a separate thing.

380. Burnham Beeches?—Did they acquire Burnham Beeches?

381. (Mr. Crawford.) Burnham Beeches was acquired under this Act, also Coulsdon Commons?—Yes

382. (Chairman.) Any expense which the County Council may incur under the Metropolitan Commons Act is paid by the whole of the metropolis?—Is paid by the whole of the metropolis.

383. Including the City?—Including the City.

384. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) A general rate?—It would be a general county purpose.

385. (Chairman.) Then as regards open spaces, the Corporation is the local authority in the City?—In the City.

386. And outside the City?—The County Council.

387. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) What the City have done in the way of acquiring open spaces inside the City is not held to relieve them from contributing to the common fund for open spaces which the County Council administer?—I think not.

388. (Chairman.) But outside the City in some cases the vestries appear to be the authority?—Outside the City, for certain purposes under the Act of 1881, the vestries and district boards are the authority. Of course the Open Spaces Act relates to spaces of a very different character. Under the Act of 1881 open spaces meant any land unbuilt on and which is laid out as a garden, or is used for the purpose of recreation, or lies waste and unoccupied. Section 2 gives power to the trustees in whom such an open space is vested to transfer it for valuable or nominal consideration or by way of gift to the Metropolitan Board or the vestry or district board of the parish or district, to the end that the same may be preserved for the enjoyment of the public, with certain consents of persons interested.

389. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Do you know that there has been the same struggle in this respect as there is in others as to whether the expenses of certain of these open spaces should be born by the central fund or by the local funds of local bodies?—Quite so.

390. That struggle is still going on?—Yes.

391. (Chairman.) It is altogether voluntary action that is contemplated under that Act?—It is altogether voluntary action.

392. On all sides?—Yes, quite so. And there is a provision in section 7 that in certain cases the Metropolitan Board of Works (now the County Council) or the vestry or district board, may jointly carry out the provisions of the Act, and may enter into agreements for so doing and for defraying the expense.

393. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And that has been acted upon in several cases, has it not?—I suppose it has, but in the City of London that rests with the Corporation of London, the expense to be paid out of the metage on grain.

394. (Chairman.) With respect to Hackney Carriages and Stage Carriages?—Those are licensed throughout the metropolis by the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police.

395. What does "metropolis" mean there?—Inclusive of the City.

396. Would it extend to the police area?—It extends as such to the police area.

397. Yes, but I mean does it extend to the metropolitan police area?—It is the metropolitan police district.

398. And as far as the metropolitan police go they regulate hackney carriages?—There would be some limit, because certainly they do not license hackney carriages throughout the whole metropolitan police district. I presume that probably the order of the Secretary of State under the Act did not extend to the whole of the district; here is the order, the order of the Secretary of State appears to be one in 1871. I cannot answer that question.*

9 June 1893.

399. And do they license persons as well as carriages?—They license drivers and carriages.

400. And the stands for carriages plying for hire?—Those are settled outside the City by the Commissioners of Police, and inside the City with the consent of the Lord Mayor and aldermen.

401. Not the Common Council?—I believe it is the Lord Mayor and aldermen.

402. The Court of Aldermen?—The Court of Aldermen.

403. Have they any other authority inside the City beyond that of appointing the stands?—Not under the Hackney Carriages Acts that I am aware of.

404. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Then it is the commissioner of metropolitan police that licenses them in the City?—Yes. There is no licensing power in the Commissioner of City Police.

405. (Chairman.) The authority under the Tramways Acts?—Is the Common Council in the City.

406. And the County Council?—And the County Council outside the City; the vestries and district boards are road authorities.

407–10. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is there any tramway in the City?——

(Mr. Crawford.) No; it is not allowed; we have never allowed it.

(Chairman.) The Common Council have had nothing to do with tramways so far.

(Mr. Crawford.) Except in opposing; that is a great deal, because they have been successful.

411. (Chairman.) These authorities of the County Council and of district and vestry authorities in respect of tramways, do they overlap?—No, I do not think they do. Of course, the vestries and district boards having the control of the roads generally, a certain control over the construction and repair of tramways is vested in them.

412. The terms of construction have to be agreed with the vestries?—They would have to approve the method of the construction of the roads, and so on; but the local authority that can apply for the making of tramways in the metropolis is the County Council.

413. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And for purchasing tramways?—For purchasing tramways, the authority is the County Council, not the vestries and district boards.

414. (Chairman.) But conditions are settled between the tramway projectors and the vestries as to the terms upon which lines may be laid down?—Yes; the Tramway Acts make certain provisions as to the consent of the road authority being required for certain purposes; and each order under the Tramway Acts, if I remember rightly, makes provision as to the responsibility for the repair of part of the road.

415. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Very elaborate provision as to the way in which the expense of repairing and maintaining the road is to be borne?—Yes.

416. And I think, as to making the tramways, the road authority's consent is required, with an appeal to the Board of Trade, is it not?—I think that is so.

417–21. (Mr. Smith.) May I ask on tramways whether it is the practice in London for the County Council or for the tramway company to become the promoter of the order?——

(Sir Thomas Farrer.) The County Council have never promoted an order.†

(Mr. Crawford.) It is always private companies that promote.

(Chairman.) The City, as a matter of fact, have had nothing to do with tramways hitherto?

(Mr. Crawford.) Except to oppose them on the ground of the gross interference with the traffic of the City.

422. (Chairman.) Public Libraries?—There, in the City, the Common Council would be the library authority.

423. Could the Libraries Act be adopted in the City by any parish?—I do not think it could. If it were adopted in the City at all, it would have to be adopted in the City as a whole. The Act, if I remember right, contains some provisions as to the Lord Mayor ascertaining the assent of the people.

424. (Mr. Crawford.) You may take it from me that the Common Council are really the authority under the Act; but it has never been put in force, for the simple reason that the Corporation have erected their own library, and manage it.

425–6. (Chairman.) The Guildhall Library is so good that the machinery has never been used?——

(Mr Crawford.) Only they have a right to levy a rate exceeding 1*d.* in the £.

427. (Mr Holt.) It says here that there is no limit to the rate?—No, the rate is not limited; in the City there is no rate.

428. (Chairman.) In the City?—In the City.

429. (Mr. Crawford.) Outside it is 1*d.*?—Yes, outside.

430. (Mr. Smith.) It is unlimited in Birmingham?—Indeed.

431. (Chairman.) Outside the city in the rest of the metropolis?—It may be adopted either by a parish or by a district; in each case the body to carry the Act into execution being commissioners appointed by the vestry or by the district board.

432. Has there been any contradiction between parishes and districts?—I am not aware that there has. I rather think that in all the cases in which the Act has been adopted in the metropolis it has been adopted by parishes. The power of districts to adopt the Act arises under one of the later Acts, and I think the adoption has been entirely, or for the most part, by parishes.

433. The County Council has nothing to say to it?—The County Council has nothing to say to it in any case.

434. Markets?—The County Council has no power as to markets.

435. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Except to spend money upon inquiry?—Quite so; yes. Practically the City has provided the markets for London. With the exception of Covent Garden and Spitalfields, practically all the great markets of London are provided by the city.

436. (Mr. Smith.) Those are both private?—Those are both private under charters or Acts. These city markets are not only in the City, but are, some of them, outside the City, as the cattle market at Islington, and the Deptford Cattle Market, and part, I believe, of the Metropolitan Meat Market is outside the City.

437. (Chairman.) Part of Smithfield?—Part of Smithfield.

438. (Mr. Crawford.) It is within the district of the Holborn Board of Works—part of it?—Yes.

439. (Chairman.) But it is provided by the City?—Provided by the City under special Acts authorising the City to borrow.

440. That means the Common Council?—That means the Common Council, not the Commissioners of Sewers.

441. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) This is one of the few cases in which the City is still the general authority for the whole of London?—It is such a case.

442. What was the status of Hungerford Market when it existed?—Hungerford Market was a private market, I think.

443. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, it was promoted by a private company, with the assent of the Corporation?—Yes, of course the Corporation had charter rights of preventing any other market being set up within the seven miles; but I suppose they have given their consent to the Acts, of which there have been a good many at different times setting up private markets.

444. (Chairman.) Covent Garden Market exists under charter?—I believe under charter; and also under Acts. I should think that very probably it arose originally from the old convent. In many cases markets arose in the precincts of religious houses.

* The power of the Commissioner extends over the whole of the Metropolitan Police District and over the City too, see Appendix G.

† But see Dickinson, 1160.

445. With respect to Lunatics?—With respect to lunatics practically the City may be said to be in the position of a county. It provides its own lunatic asylum, and it also pays for such lunatics as a county would pay for; that is to say, if non-settled lunatics are taken to the asylum from the City; but it receives from the county of London the payment under section 24 (2) (g) of the Local Government Act, 1888 in respect of such lunatics 4*s.* a head weekly.

446. The county of London is merely the conduit through which that grant comes?—Quite so. It distributes it just as a county makes the same grant to boards of guardians in respect of lunatics which are chargeable to the union

447. (Secretary.) Are there boards of guardians in the City?—Yes.

448. How is it that the payment under that section from the Exchequer contribution account is not made to them?—Payment would be made to the board of guardians in the city in respect of lunatics who are chargeable to the union, but not in respect of lunatics who are non-settled and who are chargeable to the county.

449. (Chairman.) And for the rest of the metropolis?—The County Council are the local authority.

450. Have they any asylum of their own, or any authority over any asylum?—The County Council have three or four asylums.

451. For lunatics?—For lunatics. There have been some transfers lately, so I cannot say how many.

452. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) They have built one new one, and they are going to build another?—Yes.

453. (Mr. Smith.) Where is the city asylum?——(Mr. Crawford.) Near Dartford in Kent, a place called Stone.

454. (Chairman.) Which are the County Council asylums?—Hanwell, Claybury, and Colney Hatch.*

455. The last subject that you are prepared to speak at present about is Cemeteries?—As to those, the Commissioners of Sewers are the burial board for the City, and outside the City each vestry appoints the burial board for the parish, the Secretary of State being the central authority, and in the cases outside the City the Treasury approving the loan.†

456. Each vestry has got a burial board of its own?—Each vestry has, or may have, I presume, a burial board of its own.‡

457. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is it each vestry or the district boards?—It is each vestry, I think, not only the sole vestries but the grouped vestries.

458. (Chairman.) Within the City you give some authority to vestries?—Well, there is a provision under the City of London Burial Act of 1837 which requires the assent of the majority of the vestries under the Burial Act. In general the amount of expenditure of the burial board has to be approved, I think, by the vestry, and in that case at all events the approval of the vestry is therefore required to the acts of the commissioners. In the City of London the approval of a majority of the vestries is sufficient. I presume that it was found that to get the assent of all the vestries in such a large number of parishes as the City is composed of was impracticable, and that, therefore, the approval of the majority of them was made sufficient.

459. What cemeteries have the Commissioners of Sewers provided?—I do not know what they are, but there is the City of London cemetery.

460. (Mr. Crawford.) At Ilford?—At Ilford, yes. The cemeteries, of course, provided by the parishes outside are very numerous.

461. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The County Council has nothing to do with cemeteries?—The County Council has nothing whatever to do with them.

462. (Chairman.) The Mortuaries, are they provided in the same way by parishes?—I am not aware that there is any other provision in regard to the City, but the Commissioners of Sewers would have power to provide, and would, I suppose, be under obligation to provide mortuaries, as one of the authorities under the Public Health Act, 1891, and similarly vestries and district boards would be.

463. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And the County Council have also power to provide mortuaries in connexion with coroners?—There is some provision, that is to say, places for post-mortem and for coroners' courts.

464. And to arrange with the district boards or vestries for the provision of mortuaries?—That is to say, they may unite to provide with the consent of the County Council. The provisions of the Act are rather peculiar, some cases evidently requiring two authorities to join in providing one building.

465. (Mr. Crawford.) But the City has its own mortuary provided by the Commissioners of Sewers?—Quite so. I presume under some earlier Act, not under this Act; at all events they would have the power under this Act.

* Also Banstead, and Cane Hill, and a sixth in contemplation. See Dickinson, 1162.

SECOND DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 23rd June 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

SIR THOMAS HENRY FARRER, Bart.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. J. F. ROTTON, Q.C., Legal Adviser to the Local Government Board, called in and further examined.

466. (Chairman.) Have you any corrections to make on anything that you said last week?—There are a few additions and corrections. There were one or two questions which I was not then able to answer which I am now able to answer. For instance, 130.

467. What is that apropos of?—It is in regard to the area and population of the Metropolitan Police District and the district of the County Council and the City. The total acreage of the county of London is 75,442, and the population 4,232,118. That is, according to the last census. The acreage of the City is 671, and the population 37,705.*

468. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the night population?—That is the census population.

469. Could you give us the day population, because there is such an enormous difference?—I have merely got the numbers from the Census, which, of course, merely gives you the night population—the resident population.

470. That is very deceptive?—Yes, certainly. All the county, exclusive of the City, has an acreage of 74,771, and a population of 4,194,413. The Metropolitan Police District, exclusive of the metropolis outside the City, has an acreage of 367,979, and a population of 1,401,688. The entire metropolitan district, that is to say, inclusive of the county of London without the City ——*

471. The Metropolitan Police District?—The Metropolitan Police District. The area is 442,750 acres, and the population 5,596,101.*

472. (Chairman.) We asked, I remember, whether the police courts were coterminous with the police district?—I think I answered that.

473. You said you did not think they were?—No; certainly they are not. The district for the police courts is not the same as the Metropolitan Police District.

474. Have you anything else to add?—There was a question—number 159—asked by Sir Thomas Farrer as to whether the limit of the police rate had been removed for the purpose of police superannuation. That is so. That is right, as to the rate for the Metropolitan Police.

475. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) So that the rate can be raised to any amount that is necessary, in order to give the pensions authorised by the Act?—Quite so. Then there was a question (255) as to whether, when the County Council of London declared a sewer, which has been constructed by a vestry or district board, to be a main sewer, there was any provision in the Act as to their paying any part of the debt which still remains due arising out of the construction of the sewer. I do not find that there is any such provision.

476. They take the future expenses, but not the past expenses?—They take the future expenses, but not the past expenses. At 313 there was a question as to whether there had been any appeals to the Local Government Board with regard to main roads in the county of London, and with regard to whether they should be main roads, or what amount should be paid by the County Council for the expense of maintenance. I find there has been an appeal on the second question with regard to St. John's, Hampstead. That is the only one that I can find.

477. (Chairman.) Well now, with respect to Street Improvements, what authority is there in the City?—The authority in the City is the Commissioners of Sewers under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act principally.

478. What are they able to do?—They can set back buildings newly built, or rebuilt, and require the removal of projections into the street, and they have also under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act general powers of improving and regulating streets, and of acquiring land for that purpose.

479. "Newly built or rebuilt"—do you mean by "newly built," built for the first time?—That is what is meant. Section 153 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, says:—"And be it enacted, that "if any building which shall in any part thereof "project beyond the regular line of the street in "which the same may be situate, or beyond the "front of the building wall, or railing on either "side thereof, shall at any time be taken down to be "rebuilt or altered, it shall be lawful for the Com-"missioners to require the same to be set backwards "to such a line and in such a manner as the Com-"missioners shall direct for the improvement of such "street, the Commissioners making full compensation "to the owner of such building for any damage "which he may sustain thereby."

480. That refers entirely to rebuilding?—That applies to rebuilding. I do not know that there is anything under this Act. There might be under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act. I presume it is under that Act that the other power arose.

481. Your memorandum says under that Act?—I am not quite sure that that is correct.

482. (Mr. Smith.) I think a new building is defined by general statute. I think there is a general statute giving a definition of a new building under the Public Health Act?—Yes, the Public Health Act. I believe there is such a definition in the Metropolitan Building Acts.

483. (Chairman.) That would not apply to the City?—Yes, the Metropolitan Building Acts apply to the City.

484. They give the Commissioners of Sewers this power?—No, the powers under the Metropolitan Building Acts are in the County Council.

485. There are over-lapping powers in the City?—In regard to the regulation of new buildings.

486. You are not able to refer us apparently to the powers of the Commissioners of Sewers with respect to new buildings?—No, I cannot; that may be wrong.

487. Have they any power to look after the widening of the streets?—Yes, they have powers under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, under section 80. And then there are further provisions enabling incapacitated persons to sell, and also to empanel a jury where the owner objects to sell, and upon the verdict of the jury, and upon payment of the compensation awarded, to enter into possession of the land.

488. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) There is power to take by compulsion as well as by agreement?—Power to take by compulsion as well as by agreement.

489. (Mr. Crawford.) And section 153 of the Act of 1848 really extends that power with regard to compelling the setting back? Under section 153 of the Sewers Act of 1848 there is an extension of these powers?—Yes.

490. (Chairman.) Now the London City Improvement Act of 1847 affect this question?—The London City Improvement Act of 1847 was an Act which was passed to enable the City to effect the great improvements in Cannon Street. It gave them powers of compulsory purchase,—it gave them borrowing powers, and that Act became the model for subsequent Acts in the City in regard to street improvements. It was a private Act, and related simply to that particular improvement, scheduling the premises that had to be taken, but it became,—it was called—the model Act, and it has determined the form of a good many since.

491. A case arose under it which has been a governing case?—Yes. "Galloway v. Mayor and Commonalty of London," which has been a governing case. That was a case with regard to their power to take land which was not required immediately for the purpose of the improvement, but which, in fact, had been contracted to be sold.

492. Were the powers of that Act given to the Corporation?—The powers of that Act were given to the Common Council, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, not to the Commissioners of Sewers.

493. But was it worked by the Commissioners of Sewers?—No, that Act was not worked through the Commissioners of Sewers, and generally I think the great street improvements which have been made in the City have not been done through the Commissioners of Sewers, but by the Common Council.

494. Well, there have been co-ordinate powers in the City occasionally with respect to street improvements possessed by both the Common Council and the Commissioners of Sewers?—No doubt some of the improvements which have been made by the Common Council might, to a certain extent, have been made under the general Acts, but I suppose they were very much larger improvements than could be made under the City of London Sewers Act, or under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, and they gave compulsory powers for taking land — larger powers than the general Acts gave, and at the same time provided for borrowing powers.

* See also Dickinson, 1173.

495. You know the Commissioners of Sewers have powers to divert roads, to make new roads in substitution for others?—I think the terms that I read from Michael Angelo Taylor's Act gave them that power.

496. Does the exercise of that power require confirmation by any authority?—No, it does not under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act require any confirmation at all.

497. Not by justices in quarter sessions?—I believe not.

498. (Mr. Crawford.) That is only when you are going to stop up a passage or right of way; then you do require the assent of quarter sessions?—Under the general law.

499. (Chairman.) But that would be done by the Commissioners of Sewers—the initial step would be taken by them, and confirmed by justices in quarter sessions?—Yes.

500. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) That is a power that extends to all vestries, does it not—the power under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act?—It does apply now to the vestries and district boards, but the Act was originally intended to give power to the Commissioners and other bodies that had control over the streets.

501. Yes, other bodies, but that did include vestries, did it not?—Well, I do not know whether it extended to them; I really cannot say who were the road authorities before the Metropolis Management Act.

502. (Mr. Smith.) But now the road authorities are the vestries and the district boards? — Now the authorities are the vestries and the district boards.

503. There is a similar power given by the old Highways Act, is there not—to the highway authority? —Yes, and that requires the consent of the justices.

504. It is a common power all over the country to highway authorities?—Quite so.

505. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) But in this case under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act the consent of the justices is not required?—Well, they have power to make new streets; whether they have power to shut up old streets without the consent of the justices I could not say. I understood Mr. Crawford to say they had not that power. To close a public highway they require to go to the justices and get an order.*

506. (Mr. Crawford.) If they are seeking to close a passage or right of way, then they must get an order from the justices?—Yes.

507. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) But they may make new streets and enlarge old streets without going to anyone else?—Quite so.

508. (Chairman.) Then, going outside the City, what authority has the County Council with respect to these matters? — The County Council has powers under section 144 of the Metropolis Local Management Act:—"The Metropolitan Board of "Works shall have power to make, widen, or "improve any streets, roads, or ways, for facilitating "the passage and traffic between different parts of "the Metropolis, or to contribute and join with any "persons in any such improvements as aforesaid, and "to take by agreement or by gift, any land, rights in "land, or property, for the purposes aforesaid (or "otherwise) for the improvement of the metropolis, "on such terms and conditions as they may think "fit, and such board, where it appears to them that "further powers are required for the purpose of any "work for the improvement of the metropolis or "public benefit of the inhabitants thereof may make "application to Parliament for that purpose, and the "expenses of such application may be defrayed as "other expenses of the said board. Provided always, "that before the Metropolitan Board of Works commences any such works the estimated expense "whereof shall exceed fifty thousand pounds, the "plan of such works, together with an estimate of "the cost of carrying the same into execution, shall "be submitted by such board to the Commissioners of "Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and no "such plan shall be carried into effect until the same "has been approved by such Commissioners; and no "such work shall be commenced in cases where the "estimated expense thereof shall exceed the sum of "one hundred thousand pounds, without the previous "sanction of Parliament."*

509. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) They did not act under that power; they always got private Acts, did they not, for their great street improvements?—I do not think that under the Metropolis Management Act they had any power of taking land compulsorily except for the purpose of sewage and sewerage disposal. They had not power to take land compulsorily for street improvements, except so far as the vestries and district boards might have certain powers under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, but I am not sure whether the Metropolitan Board of Works, and now the County Council, is an authority under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act; I am not sure that they are.†

510. I asked the question because I think I remember on one occasion an improvement could be made by the vestry under their powers, which the County Council could not make?—Yes, quite so.

511. (Chairman.) Well, the vestries and district boards have concurrent powers with the County Council with respect to some of these things?—Yes, they have concurrent powers under the Metropolis Management Act, but with the consent of the Metropolitan Board of Works, that is to say, of the County Council.

512. Even though the County Council may not be contributory?—Even though the County Council may not be contributory. I cannot find the section now giving the power to vestries and district boards under the Metropolis Management Act, but I know they have the power, with the consent of the County Council.‡

513. But that is not a compulsory power given to the vestries and district boards?—That is not a compulsory power.

514. The County Council, however, you think have a compulsory power possibly under the Local Government Act?—No, the County Council have no compulsory power more than the vestries have under the Metropolis Management Act.

515. I said under the Local Government Act?—Under the Local Government Act the County Council have a general power of purchasing land for any of their purposes, and, I presume, that that power might now be used for the purposes of their powers as successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works. Section 65:—"A county council may, from time to "time, for the purpose of any of their powers and "duties, including those which are to be executed "through the standing joint committee, acquire, "purchase, or take on lease, or exchange any lands "or any easements or rights over or in land, whether "situate within or without the county, and may "acquire, hire, erect, and furnish such halls, buildings, "and offices as they may from time to time require, "whether within or without their county. (2.) For "the purpose of the purchase, taking on lease, or "exchange of such lands, sections one hundred and "seventy-six, one hundred and seventy-seven, and "one hundred and seventy-eight of the Public "Health Act, 1875, shall apply as if they were "herein re-enacted, and in terms made applicable to "the county council."§

516. (Mr. Crawford.) Those purposes are restricted, are they not, very considerably restricted by section 30 of the Act?—We will come to that in one minute. For the purpose of the purchase, the sections of the Public Health Act, which enable them to obtain compulsory powers under a Provisional Order, are to apply.

23 June 1893.

517. I draw your attention to section 30 simply for this purpose, you read out the words under section 65 "A county council may from time to time, for the "purpose of any of their powers and duties, including "those which are to be executed through the standing "joint committee, &c.," then you have to look at what are their powers and duties, and under section 30, I think you get them pretty well defined, do you not?—Section 30 merely determines the powers of the standing joint committee.

518. You draw a distinction between the two, you say section 65 includes something more than the ordinary powers referred to under section 30?—What I meant was this: I think that section 65 in the case of the London County Council would apply to the land required for the purpose of their powers and duties, as successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works, not merely the powers and duties which they possess in common with other county councils under this Act.

519. (Chairman.) That is a point which has never been determined?—That is a point which has never been determined, but I think that those powers and duties are powers and duties of the County Council.

520. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Do you think, for instance, that if the County Council require land for, say a station for the fire brigade, they have power to take it compulsorily?—I should think so. "A "county council may, for the purpose of any of their "powers and duties," well, one of the powers which the London County Council has, is to provide a fire brigade station.

521. I asked the question, because, at present, there is a proposal which, I think, is now in the hands of the Parliamentary Committee to ask for special powers to take land for the purpose of a fire brigade station, because the Fire Brigade Committee have been unable to get some land which they wanted to take compulsorily?—Yes.

522. And in the Council, that resolution, as it was first proposed by the Fire Brigade Committee, was altered so as to enable them to take land compulsorily for any purposes whatever?—I see.

523. I do not know that that has been brought before Parliament yet?—Is that in their General Powers Bill of 1893?

524. I cannot say?—I rather think that it is so, and that there is a clause in the General Powers Bill of this year with regard to taking land compulsorily, and I confess, when I was reading this, I did not see the necessity of the clause, because this seems to me to cover it.

525. (Chairman.) That section comes before the application of the general machinery of the Act to the Metropolitan Board of Works, does it not?—No, this is section 65; the sections which specially provide for the case of the county of London are sections 40, 41, and 42.

526. And the powers of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act apply to vestries and district boards?—Apply to vestries and district boards.

527. As successors to the authorities which were empowered originally under that Act?—It was specially provided by a section of the Metropolis Management Act of 1862, section 73:—"The powers "of improving and regulating streets, and for the "suppression of nuisances contained in the Act of "the fifty-seventh year of the reign of His Majesty "King George the Third, chapter twenty-nine, local "and personal, intituled 'An Act for better paving, "'improving, and regulating the Streets of the "'Metropolis, and removing and preventing Nui-"'sances and Obstructions therein,' shall, so far as "the same is in force, and is not inconsistent with "the provisions of the recited Acts and this Act, "extend and apply to the metropolis, as defined in "the firstly-recited Act and in this Act, including "any unpaved streets, and notwithstanding any "exceptions therein contained."

528. (Mr. Crawford.) You referred just now to what is called the model Act, the City of London Improvement Act; the difference between proceeding under that Act and under the Sewers Acts is principally this, is it not, that the cost of improvements under the City of London Improvement Act comes out of the Corporation funds, whereas under the Sewers Acts it would come out of rates?—Yes, quite so.

529. (Chairman.) The next subject is the bridges. What are the authorities in respect to the bridges over the Thames?—The City is the authority with regard to London Bridge, and Blackfriars, Southwark, and the new Tower Bridges. The other bridges are now under the County Council, that is to say, the other public bridges.

530. Southwark Bridge was originally the property of a company, was it not?—It belonged originally to a company, and it was purchased and freed of tolls by the City.

531. Blackfriars Bridge, what is the history of that?—Blackfriars Bridge was built by the City, I believe, originally—the present bridge.

532. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The old bridge was built by the City, was it not?—I think the old bridge was built by the City.

533. (Chairman.) Was it ever a toll bridge?—No, I do not think it was ever a toll bridge; I believe it was never a toll bridge.

534. And the Corporation has considerable estates devoted to the purposes of these bridges?—The Corporation has considerable estates; that is to say, the Corporation is trustee of very considerable estates; they are kept separate from the other funds of the Corporation. The Bridge House estates were originally the estates given and acquired for the maintenance of London Bridge, and have since that been used also as the security for moneys required for the other bridges which the Corporation provide and maintain.

535. We shall probably get it from the City; but do you know how those estates were originally obtained? Were they annexed, as it were, to the bridges; were they adjacent to the ends of the bridges?—Many of these estates are very ancient. I have brought down a book here, which is perhaps not an authority, but a book which contains a great deal of information, "The Chronicles of London Bridge," and it appears that in the 10th of Edward I. there were Letters Patent from the King authorising the mayor and commonalty of the City to take possession of certain waste places in the City, and to build on them and rent them for the support of the bridge. Then there were at different times considerable bequests to the mayor and commonalty of tenements in the City and elsewhere for the support of the bridge. Here is one mentioned in 1436:—"A tenement with a shop "and garden in the parish of St. Augustine Pappey "—that is to say, in St. Mary-at-Axe—between the "tenement and lands of the bridge of the City of "London on the east, &c. To have to the mayor and "commonalty of London, ad usum et sustentationem "operis pontis prædicti in perpetuum—for the use "and support of the work of the aforesaid bridge for "ever." Another in 1442, and a great many others. And I presume that at the same time, when the funds for the Bridge House estates were not all required for the purpose, they were accumulated by purchase of properties to be devoted to the same uses.

536. And Southwark Bridge has been purchased, in fact, out of those estates?—Southwark Bridge was purchased out of those estates. Those estates were the security for the money raised for the construction of London Bridge, and for the repayment to the Crown of the moneys advanced; and for moneys borrowed under the Tower Bridge Act, in the same way, the money is to be borrowed on the credit of the Bridge House estates, and of the estates and revenues of the Corporation, subject to previous charges. All the surplus rents and profits of the Bridge House estates are to be applied, first, in the maintenance of London, Blackfriars, and Southwark Bridges; secondly, in payment of interest on prior charges on the Bridge House estates; thirdly, in payment of expenses in maintaining, &c. the Tower Bridge and approaches; fourthly, in payment of interest on money borrowed under that Act; fifthly, in payment of subsisting (prior) charges on Bridge House estates; sixthly, in discharge of principal money borrowed under that Act. So that generally you may say that for the purposes of the bridge works of the City, the Bridge House estates form the property upon which they are in the first place charged.

537. The endowment, in fact, of the bridges of the City?—Yes.

538. You do not know whether the endowment is sufficient to meet the charges or no, I suppose? Is there any supplementary fund?—Here is the account of the Bridge House estates. This will show how much they are. There seems to be a balance in hand after paying off considerable loans.

539. (Mr. Crawford.) Which account are you referring to there?—I was looking at No. 14.

540. For which year?—This is 1891.

541. It may mislead you, because of course we have had to pay heavy compensation in connexion with the Tower Bridge which is now being built. I am afraid there will not be such a favourable balance in the later accounts; therefore that is apt to mislead you?—Yes.

542. (Chairman.) That would be a capital expenditure?—Yes.

543. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly all the information in connexion with that will be supplied?—Yes.

544. (Chairman.) Now in the county of Lonon outside this City, are the bridges maintained by the County Council?—The bridges are maintained by the County Council.

545. Some of them have been bought, and some of them have been made by the County Council or their predecessors?—Yes, and Westminster Bridge was transferred from the Office of Works—Her Majesty's Office of Works.

546. Westminster Bridge was, in fact, an imperial creation?—Yes.

547. With an imperial endowment to some extent?—Yes. But it was transferred by an Act of 1887.

548. On a general rearrangement between the Crown and the County Council?—Quite so.

549. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) What is the highest bridge upon the Thames that belongs to the County Council, up the river?—I should suppose the highest that belongs to the County Council would be Hammersmith, would it not?

550. Kew?—No, I do not think Kew belongs to the Council. I am not quite sure.* There was a special arrangement by which Kew and one or two other bridges were freed from toll by the application of part of the coal dues.

551. The coal dues were continued for a year longer in order to provide a fund, or rather, the last year of the coal dues was mortgaged to secure a fund, for freeing Kew Bridge and some other bridges from toll, and that of course was partly done under the authority of the Metropolitan Board of Works; there was a sort of Joint Bridges Committee between the Metropolitan Board of Works, I think, and the county of Surrey, or the county of Middlesex.

552. (Mr. Crawford.) No, the Corporation. There was a joint committee called the Kew and other bridges joint committee, composed of members of the Metropolitan Board of Works and members of the Corporation?—Oh, members of the Corporation.

553. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And that continued under the Council for some time?—That continued under the Council for some time.

554. (Mr. Crawford.) Until the Coal Duties Abolition Act put an end to the coal dues with the exception of 4*d.* for one year, which was continued in order to enable the Corporation to in part discharge the Holborn Valley improvement debt?—Yes.

555. (Chairman.) In whom is Kew Bridge now vested?—I suppose Kew Bridge would belong half to the county of Middlesex and half to the county of Surrey. But I do not know. It has become a county bridge.

556. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Hammersmith Bridge is certainly a council bridge?—Yes; Hammersmith Bridge is certainly a council bridge.

557. Is there a bridge at Barnes?—No, there is no bridge at Barnes. It is only a railway bridge. There is no bridge between Kew and Hammersmith, no public bridge.

558. (Chairman.) There is no special bridge account maintained by the County Council?—No, it is part of the general charge on the county fund.

559. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) There are other bridges, I think, belonging to the Council besides those over the Thames?—I suppose there would be some bridges which they would have as ancient county bridges. I think at Bow there are some bridges.

560. Some of which they share with the county of Essex, I think?—Yes, I think so.

561. (Mr. Crawford.) Simply so as to have it correct upon the notes, I think that I am right in saying that there were Kew, Kingston-on-Thames, Hampton Court, Walton-on-Thames, and Staines Bridges on the Thames, and also Chillingford and Tottenham Mills Bridges on the Lea; all of them practically freed under the powers of this Joint Committee, and with the aid of the coal dues?—Yes.

562. There is one question arising in connexion with the Bridge House Estates that I should like to ask you. I do not understand you to say that there is any special trust except in connexion with London Bridge other than that which may have come into existence by the voluntary act of the Corporation in promoting Bills for special bridges?—That is so; that the Bridge House estates were simply for the purposes of London Bridge.

563. Of London Bridge?—And that these purposes have been extended simply by the special Acts which the Corporation have promoted.

564. In every instance?—In every instance.

565. Promoted voluntarily by the Corporation?—I believe so.

566. Including the Tower Bridge?—Yes, I should suppose so.

567. So that the cost of the Tower Bridge comes out of the funds of the Bridge House estates, and in no way falls upon the ratepayers?—In no way falls upon the ratepayers. It would fall, suppose the Bridge House estates were insufficient, on the general estates and revenues of the Corporation.

568. That is to say, that all bondholders who lend their money under the provisions of that Act would have a secondary security upon the estates and revenues of the Corporation?—That is so, quite so—and not upon any rate at all.

569. (Mr. Smith.) Just one question. It arises upon the last question. I was curious to know how the money is raised; I know the security—is it raised by loans or is it raised by bonds; what is the form?—I believe it is a fact that the money is raised by bonds.

570. That would be by mortgage?—Mortgage. I think we shall come to that afterwards, as to the way in which the money was raised.

571. (Chairman.) You are not, of course, giving any opinion as to the possibility of an ultimate trust or want of trust on the part of the Bridge House estate in consequence of this action of the Corporation in including other bridges besides London bridge?—I of course could express no opinion upon that.

572. The question might suggest that it was a purely gratuitous action on their part, assuming upon those estates the duty of maintaining other bridges

* It does not—see Dickinson, 1203.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

23 June 1893.

when they might have had a balance disposable:—you can give no opinion?—I can express no opinion upon whether there would be any trust in the Bridge House estates, supposing they were not required for London Bridge purposes, and were not by these Acts charged for the purpose of other bridges.

573. (Mr. Crawford.) But the preamble in every one of these Acts recognises the trust as a trust really for London Bridge?—I should suppose they do.

574. In every Act you will find that the preamble recites the fact of its being a trust in respect of London Bridge?—Yes.

575. (Chairman.) With respect to gas, Mr. Rotton, that is the next subject?—Well, under the Acts in regard to gas, the Metropolitan Gas Act of 1860 and the City of London Gas Act of 1868. But then there were Acts promoted by the Gas Companies—the Commercial Gas Act of 1875, and the Gas Light and Coke Company's Act of 1876; and I presume that the two latter Acts take in pretty nearly the whole of the metropolis, those being the great companies which had absorbed all the smaller ones.

576. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) There are three companies, I think now—three great companies:* the Chartered Company on the north of the river; the South Metropolitan on the south of the river; and the Commercial, with a comparatively small district, on the north of the river?—Yes. Under those Acts there are gas referees appointed by the Board of Trade; there are gas examiners appointed by the Corporation in the City of London and by the County Council in the rest of London; and there is a chief examiner to whom differences can be referred appointed by the Board of Trade, and an auditor, also appointed by the Board of Trade.

577. (Chairman.) What are the functions first of all of the referees?—The referees have, I believe, to examine into the method of manufacture, ascertain as far as possible that the manufacture was conducted in such a way as to prevent there being sulphur or injurious constituents in the gas.

578. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is it not this—I am speaking now from memory—that the referees have the power of determining what quantity of impurity shall be allowed, and that the business of the examiners is to ascertain whether that quantity of impurity is exceeded or not?—Perhaps that was so.

579. (Mr. Crawford.) It is section 29 of the London Gas Act of 1868?—I have not got that here.

580. "The Board of Trade shall, as soon as may "be after the passing of this Act, appoint three "competent and impartial persons, one at least of "them having practical knowledge and experience in "the manufacture and supply of gas, who shall be "called the gas referees (and who are in this Act "referred to as the gas referees), and in case of a "vacancy happening among them by death, resig- "nation, or otherwise, shall appoint a competent "and impartial person to fill the vacancy, one at "least of the three being always qualified as afore- "said," and you will find that under the Act of 1876, sections 27 to 39, their duties have been somewhat altered.

581. (Chairman.) Will you tell us the distinction between the functions of the referees and the examiners?—The gas referees determine the method of testing to be used by the gas examiners with regard to the illuminating power and pressure and purity of the gas, and determine what amount of certain impurities shall be permitted. On the other hand, the gas examiners make daily examinations into the gas at the several testing houses as to its illuminating power, and as to its purity, and as to its pressure as well, I presume.

582. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The ordinary gas examiners are appointed by the City and by the County Council?—And by the County Council.

583. And there is a head examiner?—One head examiner.

584. Appointed by the Board of Trade, to whom in case of difference between the company and the City or the Council, the difficulty may be submitted?—Yes.

585. (Mr. Crawford.) And his certificate is final?—Yes.

586. And you can proceed for penalties upon his certificate?—Yes.

587. (The Secretary.) May I ask how the gas referees are paid, and the chief examiner? Is it by the Board of Trade?—I do not remember whether they are paid by the companies or by the Board of Trade.

588. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) I think they are paid by the gas companies on the order of the Board of Trade. The Board of Trade fix what their salaries shall be?—Yes, I think that is so.

589. (Chairman.) The company which supplies gas in the City, also supplies a considerable portion outside the City?—I believe so.

590. How many gas examiners are there?—I really do not know how many gas examiners there are; there must be a considerable number, of course.

591. The Corporation appoints one or more, and the County Council?—Must appoint many.

592. (Mr. Crawford.) There are four in the City?—Four.

593. (Chairman.) The vestries and district boards, have they any share in the appointment of the examiners?—No, I think not; I do not think so.*

594. You say they may appoint or join in appointing?—That is incorrect.

595. I suppose the vestries and district boards have something to do with the street illumination?—The vestries, of course, would pay for the street illumination; they light the streets.

596. And they would look after the character of the street illumination?—Certainly.

597. Do they go straight to the gas company in case of defective street illumination?—I presume, if they found the gas was defective for the purpose of street illumination, they would go to the gas examiner, but of course they might object to the companies.

598. Might they go to the Board of Trade? Have you the Act of 1860 there?—The Act of 1860?

599. The Metropolis Gas Act of 1860, 23 and 24 Victoria, chapter 125.

600. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) They go to the Board of Trade, any of these bodies, if it is thought desirable to alter the mode of testing, or to alter the standards?—Yes, quite so.

601. (Chairman.) Yes, but have they the power of going there in respect of insufficiency of illumination?—Well, that I cannot say.

602. Have you got the Act?—Yes.

603. The Act of 1860?—Yes.

604. Section 7?—It is rather dangerous to go upon this Act; it has rather been altered by the gas companies' Acts since. This is on the question of complaint:—"If at any time complaints as to the quantity "or quality of the gas supplied by any company be "made to the said Secretary of State by memorial in "writing, from the Metropolitan Board of Works, or "any vestry or district board of works, signed by "their clerks respectively, or not less than 20 in- "habitant householders paying rates for and supplied "with gas by any such company, it shall be lawful "for the said Secretary, at any time within one month "after the receipt of such complaint, to appoint a "competent person as inspector to inquire into and "concerning the grounds of such complaint, and to "report to the said Secretary thereon." I think that is gone.

605. (Mr. Crawford.) It has all been superseded by the Act of 1868?—Yes, I think so.

606. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) You know the great controversy in old days was always about the charge for gas?—Yes.

* There are also four small companies. Putney and Wandsworth, Mitcham and Wimbledon, Crystal Palace District, and Brentford, as to which the vestries and district boards are local authorities. See Dickinson, 1206.

* See also Dickinson, 1213.

607. Can you explain how that is settled now?—Well, the Act of 1876 determined that—taking 3*s*. 9*d*. a thousand feet as the standard price.

608. That is in the case of the chartered company?—That is in the case of the Gas Light and Coke Company.

609. That is the chartered company?—Yes, taking 3*s*. 9*d*. as the standard price, and a dividend of 10 per cent.

610. The dividend having been up to 10 per cent. before?—Yes, "For every penny or part of a "penny charged in excess or in diminution of such "standard price, in any year the standard rate of "dividend, except as herein-after specially provided, "shall for such year be reduced or increased by five "shillings in the hundred pounds per annum."

611. A sliding scale?—Yes, a sliding scale.

612. And there is a similar provision with regard to the South Metropolitan Company only that the initial price is 3*s*. 6*d*. instead of 3*s*. 9*d*.?—Yes.

613. (Chairman.) And there are auction clauses in respect of the new capital?—In regard to new shares.

614. We now come to the question of the acquisition of land; what are the powers of the City in that respect?—The City apparently have unlimited powers of acquiring land—of course, I mean by agreement. In acquiring and disposing of land, they are not restricted by any of the limitations which the Municipal Corporations Act imposes upon other corporations in regard to such matters.

615. Were they never under any restriction—a statute of mortmain of any kind?—I think not.

616. They got a licence from the Crown, presumably, originally to deal with land indefinitely?—Yes, I think so.

617. They are not capable now of receiving devises of land?—I should suppose they are; I do not know.

618. Are they exempt from the Statute of Mortmain?—I should think they were always exempt from the Statute of Mortmain; I do not know; it is not a point upon which I can speak.

619. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find that the right or power of acquiring land originated in the Charter of Edward IV., and really was purchased by the Corporation of that day.

620. (Chairman.) It would appear that de facto the City, in order to make themselves safe, do apply for licences in mortmain?—Yes, quite so.

621. And with respect to devises—gifts—that is a totally different question?

622. (Mr. Crawford.) Totally different?—Yes, I should prefer not to answer that question; I cannot give you the information.

623. (Chairman.) And the Commissioners of Sewers?—They have the power of taking land under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act; I am not aware that they have any other power except under the special Acts, of course, of which there have been some, in regard to the Commissioners of Sewers, and many in regard to the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty.

624. You do not know whether they hold any land?—I do not know whether the Commissioners of Sewers hold any land.

625. How is the transfer of their property effected when a new Commission is issued?—I think the Commissioners of Sewers are a Corporation.

626. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, they are a Corporation?—And when a new Commission is issued the Corporation remains, although the individuals are changed.

627. (Chairman.) And the County Council, what power has it with respect to the acquisition of land?—Well, it has the powers which I have already referred to under section 65 of the Local Government Act of 1888, which is the clause giving county councils generally a power to acquire land; "to "acquire, purchase, take on lease, or exchange "any lands or easements or rights over any land for "the purpose of any of their powers and duties "including those which are to be executed by the "Standing Joint Committee."

628. They have a general power to get lands for any of their statutory purposes?—"Any of their powers and duties."

629. Which are all statutory?—Which are all statutory—well, I would not say which are all statutory, because the County Council, of course, has certain powers with regard to county bridges, which, perhaps are scarcely statutory, which may be said to be common law powers.

630. In general the purposes for which they obtain land, would be defined purposes by statute?—Would in general certainly be so.

631. They have no power to obtain land for any park or recreation ground, or any similar purpose except under statute?—Except under statute, general or special.

632. Then under the Metropolis Management Act of 1855, the County Council have certain powers as successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works?—They have so; they have power of obtaining land by agreement for the purposes of that Act, and they have power with the approval of the Secretary of State to obtain land required for sewerage or sewage disposal purposes.

633. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Compulsorily?—The County Council as such under the Local Government Act, 1888, if they require to take land compulsorily would have to come for a Provisional Order.

634. (Chairman.) But for sewage disposal?—They take it compulsorily.

635. The consent of the Secretary of State is enough?—The consent of the Secretary of State is sufficient. The great works of sewerage which were done by the Metropolitan Board of Works were done under special Acts for the most part.* Whether they have in some cases supplemented them by this general power I do not know.

636. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The sewers are generally under the streets?—The sewers, of course, are generally under the streets, but of course there was a long conduit down to the sewage works which required the taking of considerable land.

637. (Chairman.) Vestries and district boards, what are their powers?—They have power under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act of taking land for the purpose of the widening and improvement of streets compulsorily. They have not, I think, any other power of taking land compulsorily. They may take land by agreement for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Acts.

638. They have no power of laying out new streets?—I cannot find the section. [See section 72 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862.]

639. The special Commissioners of Baths, Washhouses, and Public Libraries?—They have not any power in the metropolis of taking land otherwise than by agreement.

640. But by agreement they have unlimited power for the purposes for which they are constituted?—By agreement, I believe, they have unlimited power, limited of course as to their expenditure in the case of public libraries, and in both cases the consent of the vestry would be required to the expenditure.

641. (Mr. Smith.) These powers, whatever they are, are gathered together, I suppose, in the Public Health (London) Act 1891, to a great extent, are they not?—No, the Public Health (London) Act deals simply with sanitary matters, it does not deal at all with public improvements or with sewers. But I believe that, by reference, it gives power to acquire land for the purpose of that Act, that would be for the purpose of hospitals, mortuaries, and so on.

642. But you have to go back to the original Acts for this other purpose?—You have to go back to the original Acts for this other purpose.

643. I know it is not nearly so comprehensive as the Public Health Act of 1875?—No, the Public Health Act, 1875, was a public health Act and a public

* They were mostly carried out under the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. sec. 152, land being purchased under that Act. See Dickinson, 1215.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

23 June 1893.

improvement Act; this 1891 Act is simply as to nuisances, hospitals, byelaws, and so on.

644. (Mr. Crawford.) May I take it generally, Mr. Rotton, that the Commissioners of Sewers have far more extensive powers than the ordinary vestries or district boards?—They have all the additional powers which are given by the City of London Sewers Acts, 1848 and 1851. They have the same powers as the vestries under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act and under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. They have the powers therefore of their own Acts in addition.

645. What I more particularly refer to is this, that whereas to a certain extent the vestries and district boards are controlled in some instances by the County Council, and in other instances by the Local Government Board, the Commissioners of Sewers are not so controlled in those matters?—They are not controlled, I think I may say, in any case by the County Council; they are controlled only by the Local Government Board in the case of a complaint of default under the Act of 1891.*

646. (Chairman.) Now as regards rates, what is the basis of rating?—Well, the basis of rating throughout the administrative county of London is the valuation made under the Valuation of Property (Metropolis) Act, 1869.

647. How often is that made?—That is a valuation made every five years, but subject to alteration in the meantime by supplementary lists and by provisional lists.

648. Who makes it?—Under the provisions of the Union Assessment Act, the overseers have to make the list; in the first place, it goes to the Assessment Committee, and is finally, in case of appeal, decided now by the quarter sessions, not by the special assessment sessions, but by the quarter sessions.

649. And do the overseers of the several parishes of the metropolis make out the first list?—They make the list in the first place. The provisions generally of the Union Assessment Acts apply to the first stages of the formation of this list.

650. Then it proceeds from the overseers of the several parishes to the Assessment Committee?—Yes.

651. How is that constituted in the metropolis?—I do not know exactly how it is constituted. It goes to the Assessment Committee of each union. There is an Assessment Committee appointed by each union in the first place. I have not got the Act here.

652. Then if there is any question as to want of uniformity in the assessments of the several unions it would go to quarter sessions?—Yes.

653. The quarter sessions for the administrative county of London?—Yes.

654. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) There is no administrative body which has the control of the assessment, is there; it is done by appeal to quarter sessions?—It is done by appeal to quarter sessions.

655. There is no superior assessment committee of any kind?—No, but I will look over this matter again.†

656. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it was the Local Government Act that really created the new appellate body—the court of quarter sessions?—Quite so.

657. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) It did away with the special assessment sessions?—The special assessment sessions, and provided that quarter sessions should be the body, and provided at the same time for quarter sessions being reinforced by some justices appointed by the City.

658. (Mr. Crawford.) In City appeals there should always be two aldermen privileged to attend?—Quite so. "The quarter sessions for the county of "London shall be substituted for the general "assessment sessions under the Valuation (Metro-"polis) Act, 1869, and have all the jurisdiction "vested in those sessions, and shall exercise the same "within the same area. Upon the hearing of any "appeals in relation to property in the City of "London, such two members of the court of quarter "sessions of the City of London as may be appointed "by that court for the purpose, shall be entitled to "attend and sit as members of the quarter sessions "for the county of London."

659. (Chairman.) What are the rates levied within the City?—The rates levied within the City are, in the first place, the rates levied by the Commissioners of Sewers under the Act of 1848, the sewers rate and the consolidated rate.

660. How do they proceed to levy them?—They are made on the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers by the alderman or his deputy, and the major part of the common councilmen of each ward.

661. Is there a meeting of the representatives of the ward?—There is; I presume it is a wardmote.

662. A wardmote to carry out the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers?—No, it would not be a wardmote; it is the major part of the common councilmen of the ward, not a wardmote.

663. But they meet for that purpose?—They meet for that purpose.

664. Is there any action, anything more than ministerial?—Well, no, it cannot be very much more than ministerial; of course, they are determined as to the amount of the rate by the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers, and they are determined as to the valuation upon which it is to be assessed by the valuation list.

665. (Mr. Smith.) Not determined by the amount of the rate, except parochially; it is a precept, is it not?—I do not know; I do not think that the terms of the Sewers Act say whether there shall be a precept giving the amount which they are to pay in, or whether it is a precept as to the amount of rate which they are to raise, and I do not know, in fact, which of the two it is.

666. (Chairman.) It would be simpler to say the amount of the rate to be raised, rather than leave each ward to work that out as an arithmetical question?—Yes, no doubt, but there might possibly be certain small ward expenses which they might themselves have to provide for.

667. (Mr. Smith.) There is always the expense of levying the rate, for collection, and so on, which the central body would hardly be able to ascertain?—Certainly, but I do not know which form of precept is adopted.

668. (Chairman.) Then the rate, however got at, the rate so levied is levied upon every person?—Who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, or possess or enjoy any land or building, within the ward, of course it would be, or within the City generally. The owners pay half-rate for empty houses; there are provisions in regard to rating owners when the houses are under 25*l.* in value, or are let in lodgings to weekly or monthly tenants, or the rent is payable at shorter intervals than quarterly, and churches and public buildings and vacant spaces are rated at so much a yard, not more than 3*d.* per square yard.

669. And who pays the rate in that case?—The owner pays the rate.

670. What do you mean by the owner of a church?—I suppose the owner of the church is the vicar, the person who has the freehold.

671. Not of the chancel, if he is only a vicar?—No, not of the chancel, that is unless he is rector.

672–3. Is that peculiar to the City, the rating of churches?—I believe it is peculiar to the City; I am not aware of any other instance.

674. "And other public buildings." What would be the definition of a public building in that regard?—I suppose it meant, in fact, to take in everything

* See also Blake, 1732–46.

† Under the Union Assessment Acts assessment committees were appointed only in unions, not for separate parishes. As there are many such parishes in the metropolis, in applying these Acts to the metropolis provision had to be made for the appointment of assessment committees by the guardians where they had power under any local Act to make or assess the rates, and elsewhere by the vestry.

that was not taken in as "an occupied house or land."

675. (Mr. Crawford.) Section 262 is the definition clause? "The word 'building' shall extend to and "comprise houses, warehouses, manufactories, and all "buildings of what nature or kind soever, and every "part thereof"?—That is the definition, yes, quite so.

676. (Chairman.) That does not define what a public building is?

677. (Mr. Crawford.) Section 187 is one which deals with the rating of churches and public buildings? "And, forasmuch as it is reasonable that all churches, "chapels, churchyards, burial grounds, meeting "houses, prisons, hospitals for sick persons, and "public buildings, and all vacant spaces of ground, "should be rated in a due proportion to the rates "hereby authorized to be made, be it enacted, that "it shall be lawful for the Alderman or his deputy "and the major part of the Common Councilmen of "each ward, and they are hereby required at such "time as the rates herein-before directed to be made "by them shall from time to time be made, to rate "all parish and other churches, chapels, churchyards, "burial grounds, meeting houses, prisons, hospitals "for sick persons, and public buildings whatsoever, "and all vacant spaces of ground, situate, lying, "and being within the City (other than and except "the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, and the "churchyards and ground within the iron rails en-"compassing the said Cathedral Church) at such "rate as the Commissioners shall order and direct for "every square yard of such public buildings and vacant "spaces of ground, not exceeding the rate of nine-"pence per square yard towards the sewer rate, and "three-pence per square yard towards the consoli-"dated rate"?—That was altered so as to bring them all to 3*d.*

678. Altered under the Act of 1851?—Yes, "and "every such rate so to be from time to time made "upon any parish or other church, chapel, churchyard, "burial ground, meeting house, prison, hospital, or "public building as aforesaid, or upon any vacant space "of ground, shall be paid by the owner thereof, and "in case of a parish church or church-yard or burial "ground, by the overseers of such parish, out of the "rates incidental to the poor; and in case the owner "of any such vacant space of ground shall not be "known or cannot be found, then the said rate to be "thereon made shall be advanced by the Chamberlain "out of the cash of the said city in his hands, and "the said ground shall be and remain a security to "the said Chamberlain and his successors for repay-"ment of all rates so to be by him advanced; Provided "always, that meeting houses not licensed, and "meeting houses used for any other purpose than "divine worship, shall be rated and assessed in the "same manner as other public buildings."

679. The chamberlain being the treasurer?—The chamberlain being the treasurer.

680. (Chairman.) Other public buildings?—As other public buildings; that means to say that meeting houses not licensed or used for other purposes shall not escape the rate by reason of not being licensed or being so used.

681. Public buildings appear to embrace places of religious worship and hospitals for the sick?—And prisons.

682. And prisons and things of that kind?—Yes.

683. It would not extend to a parish hall and things of that sort?

684. (Mr. Crawford.) Unless you could call a parish hall a meeting house.

685. (Chairman.) That is peculiar to the City?—That, I think, is peculiar to the City; I do not remember any other instances of churches being rated, of course prisons would usually come under the exception of the Crown, but hospitals and such places are generally rated.

686. (Mr. Smith.) There is no exception in favour of the property of the Commissioners, is there, as there is in many of the Public Health Acts?—I do not think there is any exception in favour of the property of the Commissioners, I do not remember it.

687. (Chairman.) With respect to the rating of the churches it appears to be taken out of one pocket and put into the other?—Well it is taking it out of the pocket of the overseers, out of the poor rate, and handing it to the Commissioners of Sewers; it is a different body that pays it.

688. To the ultimate actual ratepayer it comes to the same thing, whether it is paid or not?—Yes.

689. (Mr. Smith.) No, is it not in the nature of a church rate? A man is a Particular Baptist, and his overseer pays for the support of the Established Church; it is not the same thing to him as if the rate was paid by the owner for the time being.

690. (Chairman.) I mean if there was no such rate, suppose there was no rate on a church, a church was exempt?

691. (Mr. Crawford.) The rate would be higher.

692. (Chairman.) But it would not make any difference, suppose a church was half the value of the property of the parish, and a rate of 6*d.* in the £ was sufficient, and you took the church out altogether and it was 1*s.* in the £ it would come to the same thing?—The only case in which it would not be the same thing would be supposing the district which paid the rate was not coterminous with the district to which the rate was paid, and that might be in many cases the fact, because these rates are made in wards irrespective of parishes and the poor rate would be levied on the parish.

693. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Can you tell me, is there a separate collector, and separate books kept, for each ward?—I do not know.

694. (Mr. Crawford.) They are all appointed by the Commissioners under section 25 of the Act?—Then they would not necessarily be separate.

695. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Is it a reality, this going through the wards, or is the business really done by the Commissioners of Sewers?—That is a practical question which I really could not answer.

696. (Chairman.) Now the police rate in the City?—The police rate is levied on the direction of the Common Council, also in the wards, and the method of its levying is apparently much the same as in the case of the rates levied on the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers.

697. You mean there is the same rating of unoccupied houses?—I believe that the provisions are the same.

698. And churches and what not?—Yes.

699. That extends to three-fourths of the cost?—That extends to three-fourths of the cost of the police.

700. There is also a limitation as to the amount of the rate?—That rate is limited to 8*d.* and I do not see that that limit has been removed, because the Act which removes that limit for the purposes of superannuation in the case of the metropolitan police does not extend to the City.

701. Then the City is obliged to keep down its police expenditure to the amount that could be raised by rate, or to a proportion of the amount that could be raised by rate?—Well, I do not know, the limit of the rate is 8*d.*

702. That is three-fourths of the expenditure?—That is three-fourths of the expenditure. Well the City has to pay one-fourth of the expenditure; they may levy a rate of 8*d.*, and not more, to pay for the three-fourths. I do not know that there is anything to prevent the City keeping up the police, or paying police superannuation and so on, and paying for it out of their revenues in addition to the one-fourth which they are bound to pay.

703. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Do you know if they raise the whole 8*d.*?—I do not know.

704. (Mr. Crawford.) No, they do not. You will find there is a difference with regard to the question of public buildings, a slight difference under the City Police Act, section 70; there the limit is 4*d.* per square yard instead of 3*d.* under the Sewers Act?—4*d.* quite so.

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

23 June 1893.

705. (Chairman.) Then outside the City; what are the rates levied there?—Outside the City, in the first place, there are the rate levied by the County Council which is the county rate.

706. That is levied through—— ?—Through the overseers.*

707. The County Council prescribes the amount of the rate?—The County Council prescribes the amount of the rate.

708. And the overseers collect it for the County Council?—Yes, the overseers pay it; it is paid out of the poor rate; it is not levied separately; it is paid out of the poor rate.

709. Then those levies are for general or for special purposes?—They are. The payments generally of the costs incurred by the County Council as successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, are to be a general county purpose, but where the Metropolitan Board of Works or the Quarter Sessions were authorised to incur expenses to which the Common Council of the City were not liable to contribute, then the parishes of City are not to contribute. There are provisions also which have been mentioned before in regard to the expenses under the Housing of the Working Classes Act; some of those by that Act are made special county purposes.

710. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Are the overseers for this purpose officers of the vestries or of the district boards where there are district boards?—Oh no, they are not officers of the district boards. It is scarcely possible to make a general statement in regard to the overseers, because so many of the London parishes have local Acts, which in some cases, practically hand over a large part of the duties of the overseers to the vestry.

711. Quite so, that is what I wanted to get at?—Yes, but those were old Acts before the Metropolis Management Act. Their powers under those Acts of course have gone over to the vestries under the Metropolis Management Act for the most part, except with regard to church rates and a few other matters.

712. Practically the County Council deal with the vestries?—Practically they do so in a very large number of cases, no doubt because the vestries really in many cases act as overseers.†

713. You have not mentioned the school board rate as a general rate, that is also levied by precept in the same way, is it not?—It is not in the case of the City. I suppose it is so generally, it is levied no doubt by the vestries in general, the overseers practically.†

714. In the same way as the County rate?—Yes, I believe so, but in the City I think it is paid by the Commissioners of Sewers.†

715. (Mr. Crawford.) The school board rate in the City is paid through the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes the school board rate.†

716. (Chairman.) That is not paid as the County rate is?—I do not know how it is raised by the Commissioners of Sewers, I think it is raised by their consolidated rate.*

717. I mean outside the City the school board rate is not collected as part of the poor rate?—It is collected as part of the poor rate.†

718. (Mr. Crawford.) In the City it is collected with the consolidated rate.

719. (Chairman.) Collected simultaneously, but as a separate rate outside the City?—The vestry in most parishes would send you in one application for the rate. On the back of it is stated the different purposes for which it is required, it would include the sewers rate, the sewers and lighting and general rates for the vestry themselves, and it would include the poor rate, it would include the school board rate and it would include the County rate; but it would be different in different parishes.*†

720. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And the police rate?—And the police rate.

721. Those are specified separately upon the demand papers, are they not?—Those are specified separately upon the demand papers. I do not think that they are obliged to state the amount of the county rate. They do in fact state the amount of the county rate, but I do not think they are obliged to state it. That would be included in the rate for the relief of the poor and the other purposes chargeable to the poor rate.

722. They are generally very glad to state it, are they not?—They are generally very glad to state it; they wish to show how much money they have themselves to deal with, and how much they have to pay over to others.

723. (Chairman.) The county rate and the other rate, for the purpose of baths and wash-houses and libraries, are in fact in the poor rate?—The phrases are a little different I think in the case of the baths and wash-houses. I do not think I have that here, but some of these are directed to be paid out of the poor rate, and some of them are directed to be levied as part of the poor rate, or by a rate to be collected with the poor rate.

724. (Mr. Holt.) Then, I gather, the rates may vary in all the parishes in the County Council district, they may be different in all the parishes, they need not be similar, neither the school board rate nor any other rate, they may vary may they not?—No, they cannot vary.*

725. It is the same rate that applies to all the parishes?—The amount of the rate would be the same on the valuation. You mean the amount or the mode of stating it.

726. I mean the amount of rate levied, the assessment might differ, might it not?—No.

727. Because in some vestries the amount required might be less than in others?—No, the school board rate would be the same everywhere.†

728. And the same rate is levied over the whole of the London school district?—The same rate is levied over the whole of the London school district.†

729. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The local rate of each parish differs, but not general rates?—Yes, there was a question in regard to the libraries rate. The libraries rate in some cases, although it is levied with the poor rate, is levied with a different allowance, that is to say it is levied only on one-third of land used as market gardens and orchards and so on.

730. (Chairman.) The power of rating for public buildings and empty spaces outside the City, is that the same as inside the City?—I do not think there is any such power. It would entirely depend upon the valuation list. If a property is put into the valuation list as valuable, as of a certain value, that would be rated. There is no special provision in regard to the rating of public buildings outside the City for the purpose of the Metropolis Management or other Acts.

731. I was not aware of it, what is this reference to section 162. Under the heading sewers, lighting, and general rates of vestries and district boards you describe section 163, "Sewers rate to be assessed on "only ¼ value of land used as arable, pasture, &c., "and (section 164) existing exemptions as regards "sewers rate and lighting rate are to continue. On "the other hand (section 162) public buildings, walls, "and void spaces then rateable to any rate for paving "or for paving and other purposes are with certain "exceptions to be rated for the like purposes. The "expenses of a vestry or district board under the "Public Health (London) Act, 1891, are to be paid "out of the general rate." ?—That is in regard to the paving rates by the vestries and district boards, that is a special provision.

732. (Mr. Smith.) That is similar to the general district rate throughout the country, I suppose, that one that you last spoke of one-fourth exemption?

* But see also Dickinson, 1227-8.
† But see also Dickinson, 1243.

* But see also Dickinson, 1227-8.
† But see also Dickinson, 1243.

—Quite so, that only relates to the sewers rate by vestries, the same as the general district rate under the Public Health Act.

733. (Chairman.) We will proceed to the question of borrowing; what are the powers within the City?—Well, the City have an original power to raise money on the security of their estates, property, and revenues, but their present bonded debt is entirely, I believe, under special Acts, or under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, or for the purpose of lunatic asylums.

734. This is the Corporation debt?—This is the Corporation debt, but that really includes the debt of the Commissioners of Sewers. City bonds are charged on the same securities for the most part, I believe. I presume that the debt of the Commissioners of Sewers would also be charged on the rates, but I do not know as to that.

735. You do not mean that the Commissioners of Sewers have general powers of borrowing. The City has a general power of borrowing, but the Commissioners of Sewers have not the same?—The Commissioners of Sewers of course have only the statutory powers of borrowing.

736. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Have the Corporation power to alienate their property without the consent of any other authority?—Yes, there is no consent required, they do not require the consent of the Treasury or the Local Government Board.

737. (Mr. Crawford.) I understand you to mean by that, of course, that the borrowing powers of the two bodies are perfectly distinct?—Yes, quite distinct.

738. Quite distinct?—I do not know whether the loans by the Commissioners of Sewers are secured on the revenues of the Corporation as well as on the rates leviable by the Commissioners of Sewers.

739. Obviously, you see the Commissioners of Sewers may not necessarily be members of the Corporation?—No.

740. And asCommissioners apart from the Corporation, although nominated by the Court of Common Council, they would have no power to charge the revenue of the Court of Common Council?—Unless they have statutory power, but I may take it that they have no power.

741. I am not aware of any statutory power, I should be surprised to find one?—Yes, the provision in regard to borrowing is 207 and 208 of the Act of 1848 in regard to the Commissioners of Sewers, enabling them to borrow on the security of the sewers rate, and on the security of the consolidated rate.

742. (Chairman.) The City, I suppose, has the same freedom of leasing or demising its property as of alienating it?—That is so.

743. Outside the City what powers of borrowing have the Metropolitan Board of Works or its successor?—The present borrowing powers of the County Council as successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and under the Local Government Act (which makes special provision with regard to the borrowing powers of the County Council of London), are determined by the Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1869, and the subsequent Acts on the same subject. The provision in the Local Government Act in regard to the borrowing powers of the London County Council is that they shall borrow in the same way as under the Metropolis Management Act. Section 40, sub-section 9, says: "If the London "County Council borrow for the purposes of this Act "they shall borrow in accordance with the provisions "of the Acts relating to the Metropolitan Board of "Works, but save as aforesaid Part 4 of this Act "shall apply to the London County Council when "acting as successors of the Metropolitan Board of "Works, and the costs incurred when so acting shall "be paid out of the county fund, and the payment "thereof shall be a general county purpose."

744. That is under the Local Government Act?—That is the Local Government Act, section 40, sub-section 9.

745. What peculiar restrictions were imposed upon the Metropolitan Board of Works with respect to its borrowing?—The Act of 1869 provided that the Board should not, except for such temporary period not exceeding six months as the Treasury should sanction, raise money otherwise than in conformity with that Act, and with the sanction of the Treasury; it provided for the creation of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock subject to the approval of the Treasury as to the amount and manner of issue, as to price and time of issue, the conditions of issue and the dividends to be paid, and the times and conditions of redemption. It also provided that certain moneys, such as the produce of the sale of surplus lands and other funds, were to be paid to a Consolidated Loan Fund, and that the Treasury were to determine what other sum should be annually paid into that fund in order to pay dividends on Consolidated Stock, and to provide for its redemption within 60 years. That Act limited the amount to be raised to 10,000,000*l.*

746. You say that that Act enabled the board to create terminable annuities instead of stock?—It enabled them also to create terminable annuities instead of stock.

747. Do you know whether that has ever been done?—I do not know.

748. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) I think not?—I am not aware that it has. It also enabled the Metropolitan Board of Works to raise money to lend to the Metropolitan Asylums Board. By the Act of 1871 their powers of borrowing for the purpose of lending were increased; and trustees were enabled to invest in metropolitan consolidated stock unless forbidden to do so.

749. They were enabled, were they not, to lend what they accumulate as a sinking fund, and do not use for the purchase of stock, to other authorities in the metropolis?—That came later, in 1881.

750. But that, at any rate, is the present practice, is it not?—That is the present practice. In 1885 they were further empowered to spend their sinking fund on objects of capital expenditure, i.e., to lend it to themselves.

751. So that the London County Council is the great borrower for the whole metropolis?—That is so.

752. (Chairman.) It borrows for vestries, district boards, and the school board?—Yes.

753. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And the asylums board?—Yes.

754. (Chairman.) Then we come to the Act of 1875?—The Act of 1869 commenced that. It enabled them to lend to the Metropolitan Asylums Board. Then the Act of 1871 enabled them to lend to vestries and district boards in addition to the Metropolitan Asylums Board.

755. The Act of 1870 provided for school boards, I think?—And increased the amount which they could lend to the Metropolitan Asylums Board. I do not see any references in this to the school board. Then the Act of 1875 is the next important one. This is the recital:—"Whereas it is expedient that the raising of "money by the Metropolitan Board of Works for the "following purposes: (a) Expenditure by them for "general improvements and contributions; (b) Fire "brigade purposes; (c) Loans to vestries and district "boards and boards of guardians and some other bodies "be regulated, and that provision be made requiring "that the borrowing powers granted to the Board by "Parliament should for the future be limited both in "time and in amount, and that in some other respects "powers and provisions of and relating to the Board "be extended or modified: Be it therefore enacted," &c.

"2. The Board may from time to time up to the "31st day of December, one thousand eight hundred "and seventy-six, expend under section one hundred "and forty-four of the Metropolis Management Act, "1855, and section seventy-two of the Metropolis "Management Amendment Act, 1862, such money "as they think fit, as follows:—

Then follow sections stating the purposes for which money may be expended, and the amounts, and each section provides that "The Board, in order to raise "money for purposes of this section, may from time "to time create Consolidated Stock."

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

23 June 1893.

It further provides that "The Board shall, from time "to time, carry to the Consolidated Loans Fund such "sums as the Treasury approve as being, in their "opinion, sufficient to redeem, within thirty years "from the date of the creation of stock for purposes "of this section, an amount of consolidated stock "equal to that so created." It then gave power to lend to vestries and district boards, and limited the aggregate amount to be lent under that section to 100,000*l.*, and so on; and in the case of each such power it authorised the Board to create consolidated stock for raising that amount of money.

756. It went through the wants of the year, authorising the raising of the money necessary to meet those wants, and the creation of stock for that purpose?—That was it.

757. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) With a provision that all those debts so incurred were to be paid off within the time within which the stock borrowed by the Metropolitan Board of Works was to be paid off?—That is in regard to——

758. Loans to other bodies?—Yes, money lent by the Board. For instance, if we take the Board of Guardians:—"Money lent by the Board under this "section shall, notwithstanding anything in any other "Act, be repaid to them, with interest, within such "time after the borrowing as the Board and the "borrowers, with the approval of the Treasury, "agree, not exceeding thirty years. The Board "shall from time to time carry to the Consolidated "Loan Fund such sums as the Treasury approve "as being, in their opinion, sufficient to redeem, "within the period for which the loan is made, not "exceeding thirty years from the date of the creation "of stock for purposes of this section, an amount of "consolidated stock equal to that so created." Acts followed in the same tenour up to 1892.

759. (Chairman.) Did not that Act lay down some provisions as to subsequent Acts?—The Act of 1875, yes, it did so. Section 12:—"Where the Board are "desirous of obtaining a further Act empowering "them to raise money, they shall cause the Bill for "the same, as proposed to be submitted to Parliament, to be accompanied with tables, giving such "information as the Treasury require for the purpose "of enabling a comparison to be made between the "rateable value of the metropolis and the liabilities "of the Board." And it also required annual returns to the Treasury, showing:—

"I. All money raised by the Board under this or "any further Act for purposes mentioned in this "Act;

"II. In relation to every parish, district, union, "or place in respect whereof a loan is obtained from "the Board under this Act or any further Act;

"(1.) The annual rateable value of the property "therein;

"(2.) As nearly as may be, the actual indebtedness "of each parish, district, union, or place in "respect of loans previously contracted.

"The Treasury shall cause every such return to "be laid before both Houses of Parliament."

760. It made the Treasury the financial guardian of the Board?—It made the Treasury the financial guardian of the Board, determining the conditions of issue of the stock, and the sufficiency of the provision to be made for the redemption of the stock.

761. And the form in which new proposals should be introduced?—And the form in which these proposals should be introduced.

762. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) And is it not the case that these Acts always contained the period for which each loan was to be made; did they not state it?—They stated in regard to each sum the borrowing of which was authorised, that provision was to be made for the repayment of an equivalent amount of consolidated stock within so many years.*

763. Quite so, depending on the thing?—On the thing and the purpose, none being in excess of 60 years.

764. And all the loans having to be repaid within the period for which the metropolitan stock out of which they were paid was to last?—That is to say, the loans to other bodies; yes. The Act of 1877 also authorised the Board to issue metropolitan bills, which they could afterwards redeem by the creation of consolidated stock.

765. (Chairman.) That was a temporary method of raising money?—That was a temporary method of raising money.

766. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Have they ever exercised that, do you know?—I do not know, but I think they have.*

767. They borrow from their bankers now?—Yes.

768. (Chairman.) It was meant to give the Metropolitan Board of Works similar power to that which the Treasury possesses of raising money upon three months and six months bills?—Quite so.

769. That procedure was followed for many years?—That procedure was followed regularly, year after year, for many years. An alteration to a certain extent was made in 1892. The Standing Orders in that year provided that "All Bills promoted by the "London County Council, containing powers to "raise money, shall be introduced as public Bills; but "after being read a second time by the House, shall "be referred to a Select Committee to be nominated "by the Committee of Selection, in like manner as "private Bills. But this order shall not apply to a "Bill promoted by the London County Council for "the borrowing of money, which complies with the "following conditions:—If it authorises the borrowing and expenditure for the purposes mentioned in "the Bill of the sums shown by the estimates recited "in the preamble to be required for each such purpose, that purpose being the execution of a power "conferred or extended either by the Bill, or by some "public, local, or personal Act: Provided that the "Bill may authorise the borrowing and expenditure "for any purpose for which estimates are not recited "in the preamble, if it fixes a maximum aggregate "sum to be so borrowed, and requires every such "borrowing to be sanctioned by the Local Government Board. If it is so framed as not to authorise "the borrowing and expenditure of any money after "the financial period, that is to say, the period ending "on the 30th day of September next, after the expiration of the then current financial year of the "Council. If it is so framed as to provide for the "money borrowed being repaid, whether by the "creation of a sinking fund, or the redemption of "stock, or otherwise, within the period fixed by the "Bill, or if the borrowing is sanctioned by the Local "Government Board, fixed by that Board, and the "Committee or Board in fixing the period for the "repayment of money borrowed for any work shall "not fix any period which is in their opinion disproportionate to the duration of such work, and shall "in no case fix a period exceeding that prescribed "by any public Act relating thereto, or if no "period is so prescribed, exceeding sixty years; "if in the case of any Bill conferring or extending "any power involving the expenditure of money "after the financial period, the recited estimates "show the total amount of money, required for the "execution of the power, as well as the particular "amount to be borrowed and expended during the "financial period." In such cases the Bill is to be introduced and dealt with throughout as a private Bill, but is privileged as regards the dates of notices.

770. (Chairman.) It is a privilege to introduce a Bill as a public Bill, and that Standing Order prescribes the conditions under which that privilege, or the privilege you have spoken of as regards the dates of notices, can be enjoyed?—Quite so.

771. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The Treasury no longer introduces it as a public Bill, as they did

* See also Dickinson, 1245.

* They have not. See Dickinson, 1267.

previously?—The Treasury no longer introduces it as a public Bill, which they did.

772. And do you know, can you tell us what the control of the Treasury is still over these Money Bills; they do exercise some control?—Oh, the control of the Treasury is just about the same as it was. This, for instance, is the Money Bill of this year, and this is practically in the same form:—"Whereas estimates "have been prepared by the various Committees of "the Council of the Expenditure on Capital Account "which will or may be required in the execution of "the powers and duties respectively delegated to "them for the financial year ending the thirty-first "day of March, one thousand eight hundred and "ninety-four, and also for the following six months, "ending the thirtieth day of September, one thousand "eight hundred and ninety-four (which periods "collectively are herein-after referred to as 'the "financial period'), and all those estimates have "been considered and approved by the Finance "Committee of the Council in accordance with the "provisions of the Local Government Act, 1888, and "the estimates as so approved have been adopted "by the Council: And whereas the various purposes "for which money is required to be expended on "capital account during the financial period, and the "sums estimated to be required in respect of each "such purpose are set out in the Schedule to this "Act (Part I.), and such sums amount in the aggre-"gate to three million seven hundred and eighty-"three thousand five hundred and fifty-four pounds: "And whereas the Council are promoting a Bill in "Parliament in the present Session, under the title "of the London County Council (General Powers) "Bill, by which powers are sought (inter alia) to "provide an electric lighting installation for the "Victoria Embankment and certain bridges, and it "is estimated that it will or may be necessary to "expend on capital account in the execution of the "powers to be conferred by the said Bill (if the same "be passed into an Act during the present Session) "during the financial period a sum of fifteen thousand "pounds: And whereas the Council are promoting a "Bill in Parliament in the present Session under the "title of the London Improvements Bill by which "powers are sought to make sundry improvements "therein described, and referred in Part II. of the "Schedule to this Act, and it is estimated that it will "or may be necessary to expend on capital account "in the execution of the powers to be conferred by "the said Bill (if the same be passed into an Act "during the present Session) during the financial "period a sum of one hundred and thirty-four "thousand four hundred pounds," and so on. As to the different sums which are required for the different purposes, the Bill provides that the Council may, during the financial year and the following six months respectively, expend on capital account such sums as they may think fit, not exceeding the amounts therein-after mentioned in relation to such purposes for the said periods, giving the amounts which are to be expended during the financial year and the following six months for the purpose of providing station-houses and sites, buildings, hydrants, and permanent plant, and all the other things, open spaces, and so on.

773. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Where does the control of the Treasury come in there?—All those are specifically stated. Then there are the powers of lending to district boards, boards of guardians, asylum board, and school board. "In order to raise the money for "the several purposes for which the Council are by "this Act authorised to expend or lend money, the "Council may from time to time create consolidated "stock and the following provisions shall have "effect:—Where the Council under the authority "of this Act create consolidated stock to raise money "to enable them to make a loan repayable within a "period not exceeding thirty years from the date of "such loan the Council shall from time to time carry "to the Consolidated Loans Fund such sums as the "Treasury approve as being in their opinion sufficient "to redeem within the period of thirty years from "the date of the creation of such stock or within any "less period for which any such loan may be made, "an amount of consolidated stock equal to that so "created; money borrowed from and lent by the "Council under the provision of this Act may be "made repayable either in one sum or by instalments "or by a series of equal annual or other instalments "to include both principal and interest or otherwise "as may be agreed between the Council and the "borrowers. Where the Council are by this Act "authorised to make a loan the Council instead of "raising money for any such loan by the creation of "consolidated stock may use for any such loan any "money for the time being forming part of the "Consolidated Loans Fund and not required for the "payment of the dividends on consolidated stock. "Provided that no such money shall be used for any "loan repayable at a date later than the date at "which the consolidated stock redeemable by means "of the money so used is required to be redeemed." That is the provision about which you spoke.

774. That is the provision that I referred to, but what I wanted to refer to was about that provision with respect to the Treasury. Supposing the Council wanted to apply a part of their borrowed money to, we will say, the building of a new fire brigade station, or to any other purpose; have the Treasury the control of the period within which that money is to be repaid, that is to say, of the amount of the sinking fund, and the length of the time during which the debt may be outstanding?—I thought that was determined by the Act itself.

775. That is just the point I want to get at, whether the control is in Parliament or whether it is in the Treasury?—Section 5, which gives them the different sums which they are to borrow for different purposes, has this following proviso:—"Provided also that any "monies expended upon the authority of this Act for "the purposes of 'The London County Council' "(General Powers) Bill, 1893 (if it becomes law) "shall be repayable within such term not exceeding "in any case 60 years, as the Council with the consent "of the Treasury may determine."

776. So that the Council have still to go to the Treasury in order to determine the length of the loan?—Quite so. This is the first print of the Bill, and it may have been altered since.

777. (Mr. Smith.) In the same way as ordinary municipalities have to obtain the consent of the Local Government Board?—Quite so.

778. (Chairman.) And does the London County Council send an annual statement of its sinking fund to the Treasury just as an ordinary municipality does to the Local Government Board?—I presume the provisions of the Act of 1875, I think it was, still continue, but I am not quite sure as to that. When this Bill is brought in of course they have to give a table stating their total indebtedness and their assets. This is the table, for instance, which was for the Bill of 1893.

779. Who signs it?—This is signed by the assistant comptroller of the County Council, Mr. Doggett. Table I., money raised and applied since 1856 and nett indebtedness of the Council on 31st of March 1893, and the nett liabilities; the second table, unexhausted borrowing powers on 31st of March 1893; table 3, sums authorised by the Treasury to be expended up to the 31st March 1893 for the purposes for which the amounts provided by the previous Act were found to be insufficient; fourth, rating of the County of London up to 1889, and by the County Council since that year, rating of the County of London to 31st of March 1894 in respect of debt; table 6, redemption of debt since the passing of the Loan Act of 1869. A full statement of their financial condition is submitted at the same time that the Bill is introduced.

780. Now with respect to the metropolitan vestries and district boards, their powers of borrowing have been explained to some extent with relation to the

23 June 1893.

County Council?—Yes, they have power of borrowing under section 183 of the Metropolis Management Act. They borrow on mortgage of the rates with the consent of the London County Council (formerly the Metropolitan Board of Works).

781. And do they have several debts, or is it the County Council that borrows the money and they are indebted to the County Council?—They can have separate debts, but in fact now, I believe, they almost entirely borrow from the London County Council. Of course at the time that this Act was passed, and after this Act, for a long time they had separate debts.

782. But a metropolitan vestry or district board never now goes into the market to borrow?—I should think not; I could not state that as an absolute rule, but I should think not.*

783. (Mr. Crawford.) They have the power, but they find it cheaper to go to the London County Council?—There is no provision requiring that all these sums which the County Council are authorised to lend should be borrowed from them.

784. (Chairman.) It is more economical?—It is simply more economical.

785. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) The Council have the power to lend and the vestries to borrow from the Council?—Of course, it is a trustee security.

786. (Chairman.) And so the borrowing powers of the Commissioners of Baths and Washhouses and Library authorities?—They have power to borrow with consent. The Commissioners of Baths and Washhouses require for borrowing the consent of the vestry and the Library authorities, the consent of the vestry or district board, (supposing it is a library authority for a district, and) in both cases they require the consent of the Local Government Board. The provisions in the case of the public libraries are rather peculiar; they are the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, which in no other respect apply to the Metropolis.

787. (The Secretary.) Would you mind saying something about the borrowing powers of burial boards?—Burial boards, if I remember right, may borrow with the consent of the Treasury still; I think that is so.

788. (Mr. Smith.) From the review you have given us of the government of London, it would seem that the present government of London outside the City is based upon county government rather than upon municipal government; in other words, there is really no municipal government in London in a general way?—I do not quite understand those terms.

789. Municipal functions, such as are discharged by municipal corporations throughout the country towns, do not exist in London?—Well, I should have said that all the things which a municipality does, for instance, in Birmingham, are done in London, but they are done by a variety of bodies, so that you cannot say that any one of those bodies is the municipality. Part of the sanitary duties which are done in Birmingham by the municipality, the sewerage and such matters, are done in London by the County Council—the main sewerage; other parts of those very functions in regard to the sewers are done by the district boards, the general duties of sanitary administration are done by the district boards, and the district boards also do the highways.

790. Yes, I follow all that?—On the other hand, the municipal functions in regard to the police are not in the hands of either. Then, of course, in London gas and water are at present provided not by any one of the municipal authorities but by private companies. Then you have, of course, even the authorities of the City doing work for the rest of London to a very large extent with reference to markets, and with reference to the Conservancy of the Thames.

791. (Mr. Crawford.) Not the Conservancy of the Thames?—Not the Conservancy; that is a separate body.

792. But with regard to the port sanitary duties?—With regard to the port sanitary duties in the Thames, the Conservators of the Thames are a different body.

793. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) Then, within the City itself there is the division between the City proper and the Commissioners of Sewers?—That is so, and there are certain powers, of course, of the County Council within the City, and certain powers of the Metropolitan Police within the City, with regard to registration of hackney carriages, so that I think we may say certainly that there is not one body can be called the municipality, but that all the things which a municipality does get done somehow.

794. As in the case of a county with its different sanitary authorities, within a county all the work is done somehow, but no one body is responsible for it.

795. (Mr. Smith.) I only wanted to elicit from you an opinion that the present government of London was more county government than municipal government, but your answer is that the municipal government is done, as you say, somehow?—Yes, and to take it in this way: surely the condition of a municipality, as compared with the condition of a place outside a municipality, is that there is very much greater concentration of powers in the hands of one authority. You compare a municipality, for instance, with the rural district which is outside it. You have there in the municipality practically the whole of the sanitary duties, the control of the police, and the control of the roads in the hands of one authority, whereas in the district just outside it, you have one authority—a sanitary authority; if it is a rural sanitary authority it has not the roads; they are in the hands of another authority; you have the police under a different authority.

796. You have the charming illustration of one authority owning the sewer under the road and another owning the surface?—Yes, quite so; and, no doubt, as regards the dispersion of powers, the part of London outside the City is more like the rural districts than it is the municipal district.

797. (Mr. Crawford.) There is only one matter I wanted to clear up, Mr. Rotton. Did I understand you to exhaust the borrowing and rating powers of the Commissioners of Sewers? I think you only made reference to their borrowing powers under the Sewers Act. Am I not correct in saying that they have very large powers under the Elementary Education Act and the Housing of the Poor Act?—Yes, they have very large powers under the Housing of the Poor Act, but I did not know that they had under the Elementary Education Act. I do not remember that.

798. In this way, that you see under the Sewers Act their rate is limited?—Yes.

799. But to obviate the difficulty under the Elementary Education Act they are at liberty to increase the rate?—I see. Then, of course, they have large borrowing powers under the Housing of the Working Classes Act. And they very probably may have some powers under special Acts. I could not say as to that.

800. I only want to get it from you that you do not say that you have exhausted all information in regard to that?—No, certainly not.

801. Then will you tell me generally what is the difference between the borrowing powers of the London County Council and the ordinary borrowing powers of a county council under the Local Government Act?—The ordinary powers of a county council under the Local Government Act are powers given by the Local Government Act, that is to say, a power to borrow for any of the purposes of their duties, with the consent of the Local Government Board, charged on the county rate, whereas, as has been explained, the London County Council has each year practically to get a statutory authority for power to issue metropolitan consolidated stock on terms which the Treasury determine.

* They sometimes go into the market to borrow. See Dickinson, 1268.

802. The powers are more restricted then?—Are very much more restricted. The powers of ordinary county councils are very wide.

803. (Sir Thomas Farrer.) More restricted in detail, but much more extensive in application?—In one particular, of course, the powers of the London County Council are much wider. Under their annual Acts they have power to lend to a good many other bodies, whereas the county councils have no power to lend to any other bodies except in one particular—for the purpose of emigration. The section giving borrowing powers to county councils generally is the 69th: "The county council may from time "to time, with the consent of the Local Government "Board, borrow on the security of the county fund, "and of any revenues of the council, or on either "such fund or revenues, or any part of the revenues, "such sums as may be required for the following "purposes, or any of them, that is to say, for "consolidating the debts of the county, and for "purchasing any land or building, any building "which the council are authorised by any Act to "purchase or build, and for any permanent work or "other thing which the county council are autho-"rised to execute or do, and the cost of which ought, "in the opinion of the Local Government Board, to "be spread over a term of years, and for making "advances (which they are hereby authorised to "make) to any persons or bodies of persons, corporate "or unincorporate, in aid of the emigration or "colonisation of inhabitants of the county, with a "guarantee for repayment of such advances from any "local authority in the county, or the Government of "any colony, and for any purpose for which quarter "sessions or the county council are authorised by "any act to borrow."

Mr. J. F. Rotton, Q.C.

23 June 1893.

804. But naturally in the towns there are a good many more purposes arising from the concentration of inhabitants for which common funds are needed, than there are in the county?—A very great many more; in fact, with the exception of providing police stations and providing lunatic asylums, there are but few things for which a county council has to borrow. Those are the two main things. Debts in respect of lunatic asylums are by far the largest part of the debts of county councils, I should think.

805. (Mr. Crawford.) With regard to the question of lunatic asylums, the City being a county of itself has a power, has it not, to levy a county rate for that purpose?—I suppose so. I believe they are a local authority under the Lunacy Acts.

806. They do not exercise the powers, as a matter of fact, because they provide an asylum out of their own funds?—Yes.

807. The same with the police courts?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 7th July 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

MR. CHARLES HARRISON, Vice-Chairman of the London County Council; and Mr. WILLOUGHBY HYETT DICKINSON, Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, called in and examined.

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

808. (Chairman.) Perhaps you had better begin by telling us who you are?—(Mr. Harrison) I am the Vice-Chairman of the London County Council.

809. And have you any relation to the special committee appointed with respect to our work?—I am chairman of the special committee which has been appointed to represent the Council before this Commission. I have also been chairman from the formation of the Council of the Parliamentary Committee. I am a member of the Finance Committee, of the Local Government and Taxation Committee, and as Vice-Chairman, I am of course ex-officio member of every committee; and to other committees than those mentioned I give my attention.

810. And you?—(Mr. Dickinson.) My name is Willoughby Hyett Dickinson, and I am the Deputy Chairman of the London County Council.

811. You are both members of the special committee appointed by the Council in relation to this Commission?—(Mr. Harrison.) We are.

812. What authority has that committee, can you tell us? Can you tell us what the number of the committee is?—It consists of the Chairman of the Council, the Vice-Chairman, the Deputy Chairman; Mr. Costelloe, the chairman of the Local Government and Taxation Committee of the Council; Mr. Sidney Webb, the Vice-Chairman of that committee; Mr. McKinnon Wood, the Vice-Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee; and Mr J Williams Benn, M.P., chairman of the General Purposes Committee of the Council.

813. This committee, we assume, has the authority to represent the Council before us?—Absolutely—we have formal resolutions to that effect as regards all matters before the Commission.

814. (Mr. Crawford.) Without any confirmation by the Council?—Without any confirmation by the Council. The Committee, of course, reports, like all other committees, to the Council, just as with the Special Water Committee.

815. But you have authority to pledge the Council through this special committee?—Certainly.

816. (Chairman.) That is to say, you have the authority to express the mind of the Council?—To express the mind of the Council.

817. Scarcely to pledge them to future action?—No, of course a corporation must speak through some voice. We are authorised to represent the Council before this Commission in the same way that the Parliamentary Committee represents the Council in parliamentary matters before a House of Commons Committee.

M. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

818. (Mr. Smith.) With full delegation of powers?—With full delegation of powers.

The following is a copy of the reference to our committee.

The recommendations which the Council adopted were:—

"(a.) That a Special Committee be formed to watch the Council's interests and conduct the Council's case before the Royal Commission appointed to consider the conditions under which an amalgamation of the city and county of London can be effected.

"(b.) That the Chairman of the General Purposes Committee, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Local Government Committee, and the Vice-Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee, together with the Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Deputy Chairman of the Council, be appointed members of this committee.

"(c.) That all matters relating to or connected with and arising out of the Royal Commission, be referred to and dealt with by such Special Committee; with power to represent the Council before the Commission, and to employ counsel and witnesses as such committee may be advised.

"(d.) That, if necessary, the Council be represented by counsel before the Royal Commission."

818*a*. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a general delegation?—It is a general delegation to present you with all the information we can on behalf of the Council.

819. (Lord Farrer.) You would, I suppose, if there was a point of difficulty, feel yourselves justified in reserving it, and taking the opinion of the Council upon it?—Certainly; that is what I meant by saying that this Special Committee reports to the Council as all other committees do, and in making these reports the report would wind up with some recommendation "that the course adopted is approved" or otherwise; and it was quite understood that the committee—which was to be an open committee to the whole of the Council, as far as the attendance is concerned—should report from time to time

820. Any member of the Council can attend your meetings?—And they do attend.

821. (Mr. Smith.) Is that the case with your ordinary committees of the Council?—Yes.

822. (Chairman.) Do they take any part beyond attendance? Do they assist in your deliberations?—At times, and it is perfectly open to them to speak. They are not entitled technically to vote if there is a division; but what is done is done in general consultation.

823. (Lord Farrer.) It very often happens that a member who attends has some special knowledge of or some special interest in that subject, and then the Committee are always willing to hear him. It amounts to that, does it not?—Certainly.

824. Without the leave of the Committee, of course, they never vote; but they may speak with the leave of the Committee?—(Mr. Harrison.) Oh, yes.

825. (Mr. Smith.) They attend as amici curiæ—Yes; we know pretty well what their knowledge is on certain points. Of course, at present, very little has arisen, because the statements that we have been engaged upon have been confined to our duties and powers, and we are all, with the officers of the Council, perfectly familiar with those.

826. (Chairman.) You have put in two papers?—Yes, sir. The first, No. 1, is a return showing the powers and expenses which run throughout the administrative County of London, and those which do not extend to the City.

827. And the second?—The second, No. 2, is the present powers and duties of the London County Council.

828. You have received from us copies of the evidence given by Mr. Rotton, of the Local Government Board?—Yes, we have only yesterday received more than one copy. We have not had time yet to consider it in detail.

829. After consideration, you will be able to represent to us if there is anything that you think requires correction or supplementing in Mr. Rotton's evidence?—Certainly.

830. At present you are naturally not prepared?—We are not prepared at this moment to formulate it. There are all the materials for anybody who has a knowledge of these two papers to answer all those questions.

831. This first paper that you put in, the title refers to the administrative County of London?—Yes.

832. That includes the City of London?—That includes the City of London, where the City of London is subject to the administrative provisions of the County of London.

833. The Administrative County of London may be said to contain two counties, the County of London and the County of the City of London?—That is so.

834. There is such a thing as the County of London apart from the Administrative County of London?—Oh, yes.

835. What is the territorial distinction?—The territorial distinction is the City boundary and its liberties.

836. Then, would it not be true to say that, territorially, at all events, the Administrative County of London contains within it the County of London and the City of London, which I venture to call the County of the City?—Yes; if "City" is used in the geographical sense, yes.

837. (Mr. Crawford.) The County of London beyond that is what Mr. Harrison is thinking about. There is the Administrative County of London, and the County of London and the County of the City of London?—If you would refer to the second paper, No. 2, the preliminary observation expresses the position accurately, to the extent that in the City area there is the County of the City of London, which is totally exceptional. When the City area is reached it is not only subject to the Administrative County of London, but there also exists co-ordinately the County of the City of London. That is totally exceptional. It is County Government inside.

838. (Mr. Smith.) It is a county within a county?—It is a county within a county.

839. (Chairman.) To put it again shortly; is it not true that the Administrative County of London contains within it two counties, the one the City, and the other the County of London?—Yes, for non-administrative business.

840. And do you understand the object of this Commission, to be to endeavour to fuse those two counties into one, so that the Administrative County of London and the County of London should be coterminous?—Yes.

841. That is, that the County of London will absorb the county of the City of London?—We thought it would extend to the consideration also of the County of the City of London extending its area.

842. That is what I endeavoured to put to you?—Yes.

843. Do you understand the object of this Commission to be to make the County of London and the County of the City one county?—For all purposes.

844. Co-equal and coterminous with the administrative county?—Yes, for all purposes.

845. The City may still remain a district of that county just as any parish or district without the City?—Certainly.

846. And may have functions separately administered by some body having a name of its own, a district board, or a vestry, or whatever it may be, having functions of its own, but no county functions?—Yes, certainly.

847. That is the object of the Commission?—Yes.

848. (Mr. Crawford.) May I take the liberty of saying I do not quite admit that. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I thought the object of the Commission was to inquire how it was possible to bring about such an effect; I am afraid it is putting it a little stronger than I would put it.

849. (Chairman.) Only that is what the witness understands is the thing that is aimed at by the County Council?—Yes.

850. And that is what the County Council desires?—Yes, and not the mere union of the two administrative bodies, but the union of the City for all purposes.

851. (Mr. Crawford.) Might it not be convenient, if Mr. Harrison tells us, as obviously is in his mind at the present moment, what is it that the County Council suggests should be done?—We have made no suggestion at present; we are not in a position to make any suggestion at the present moment. What I was dealing with was the Chairman's question as a matter of fact and of information. And there is not merely an administrative county running throughout the whole area, but there is in addition to that a county administration of the City of London which is limited to the area of the City, and does not extend outside that particular area.

852. (Chairman.) To put it in a different way: there are now exercised within the city a multiplicity of functions, some of which might be called county functions, and others district functions?—Yes.

853. Your statement No. 1 gives us an account of the functions of the County Council, which do not run into the City?—Yes, stated by way of comparison

854. You are able to enter upon that part of the subject?—Certainly.

855. Although you might not be able to enter upon the question of the functions of the City which do not now run into the county, but which you might desire to run into the county?—Certainly. Papers Nos. 1 and 2 have been very carefully prepared. If I may direct the attention of the Commission to statement No. 1, you will find not only what was the expenditure when the Act of 1888 had to a certain extent unified the City area, but the statement continues in Table No. 2 to show how the administrative business was dealt with by the Act of 1888, to what extent it transferred some of those powers, what balance of powers is now in county justices, and what is left in City justices as being the county of the City. This has been very carefully prepared, and has been verified by our legal advisers, and may be taken as being accurate. Then there is, at page 10, a note showing the way in which the administrative business of the justices has been dealt with in both areas by the Act of 1888, and you can see under the words "left untransferred," in column No. 4, what are the powers left still outstanding as regards the City. For instance, the "Contagious Diseases Foreign Animals." This subject raises a very essential point, because the Corporation is the local authority for the City area, and had the establishment of Deptford Market. Deptford Market results in a surplus income of 21,000*l.* per annum now, over and above the payment of the debt and interest and sinking fund; and the consumer of the metropolitan area outside the City has, of course, to pay that sum—a form of taxation in the form of dues upon meat. Then you will find also the expenditure in the metropolitan area in the City is dealt with in No. 5 return, and you will find there the expenditure which runs throughout the whole administrative county, including debt and the management of the stock, to all which the City contributes. You will find all the details at page 22. The administrative expenditure is 152,000*l.* a year. Then you will find in the next column—the outer column—the debt raised for works, all the different classes of works, to all of which the City contributes, and grants made to local authorities. Then there is a very useful table, if I may venture to say so, which commences at No. 7. It gives a detail of every power that is exercised under the present administrative Acts, and shows in the body of the returns which particular power is stopped at the City area, and in whom the correlative power is vested. For instance, by way of illustration, which is as fair as any of them, take No. 1, relating to the various powers under the Building Act, 1855, Except the duty as to dangerous structures, all the duties under this Act devolve on the County Council, but, as regards dangerous structures in the City, the power is vested in the Commissioners of Sewers.

856. (Mr. Smith.) That is not the case with district boards outside?—That is not the case with district boards, and the explanation and reason of it may be found in this—that the City formerly had its City government. It supplemented that government by three or more statutes of George. Those statutes related to all powers, including central powers. The City consolidated those powers under one Act in 1848, which was called under the title—almost a misnomer—City Commissioners of Sewers Act, 1848. The Act of 1848 embraces not merely an ordinary Commission of Sewers, but relates to general City government as well.

857. Not delegated to the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes; and clauses from the previous Acts relating to City government are incorporated into those provisions of the Act of 1848. And the Act of 1848 was amended again in 1851 by a further Act, and those powers are now extant.

858. In point of fact, the City of London has done exactly the converse of what the large towns have done, they have usually absorbed Commissioners of Sewers; the City of London has delegated its powers to them?—Certainly; and the City Commissioners of Sewers are not simply Commissioners of Sewers, such as the seven Commissions were outside the City before 1848. There existed then seven commissions, and these were all rolled up into one Commission under the Commissioners of Sewers Act, 1848.

859. (Lord Farrer.) Within the City?—No, seven commissions outside. All those were converted from seven commissions into one; and in the same year the City consolidated their civic powers and the powers of the Commissioners of Sewers into one Act, so that in the year 1848 there were two Commissioners of Sewers in the metropolis, viz., the Metropolitan Commissioners of 1848 and the City Commissioners of Sewers of 1848. Then the City Act was amended in 1851, and then the Metropolis Management Act of 1855 abolished the Metropolitan Commissioners in the area outside the City and established the Board of Works with its powers, and other powers besides, but left the City Commission of Sewers extant; and it is alive and in practice to this day.

860. (Mr. Crawford.) That was the outcome of the Commission of 1854, was it not?—The Act of 1855 operated.

861. No; the Act passed was the outcome of the Commission of 1854, was it not?—I cannot tell you.

862. The Royal Commission of 1854?—I cannot tell you.

863. (Mr. Smith.) The Metropolitan Board and the Act of 1855 were both, I think, the result of the Royal Commission?—Yes.

864. (Lord Farrer.) Then that Act gave the main drainage within the jurisdiction of the City Commissioners of Sewers to the Metropolitan Board of Works?—Yes, in that way it modified to a certain extent their powers as regards main drainage only; but it left other central powers, which had come through the Statutes of George, still vested in the Commissioners of Sewers under the Act of 1848, of which the regulation of dangerous structures was only one.

865. (Mr. Smith.) It left them in the hands of the Commissioners of Sewers, notwithstanding there was in the City a municipal corporation?—A municipal corporation.

866. Well, not municipal by the general statute, but of a municipal kind?—Well, not municipal.

867. But a corporation; but the powers were left in the Commissioners of Sewers?—There is no doubt I have examined the matter carefully, and practically the civic government has drifted from the Corporation into statutory bodies in nearly all cases, but that has not touched the county government which is in the City; that is still extant.

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

868. In point of fact, they exercise judicial functions to a larger extent than municipal?—Much larger. For instance, lunacy is now carried on by the City justices as county justices; but that portion of business outside the City was transferred by the Act of 1888 from the county justices, as part of the administrative county business, and is now vested in the London County Council.

869. (Mr. Crawford.) Are you quite accurate there, Mr. Harrison?—Yes.

870. Do you mean to say that the Lunacy Act has not, in conjunction with the Local Government Act, constituted the visiting committee as appointed by the Common Council, and not the justices?—No; you will find—and I am speaking accurately on this—I think you will find that the Common Council do not rate for lunacy, but the justices do.

871. The Common Council have the power of rating for lunacy?—I think not.

872. I take the liberty of differing with you?—I think not. It is entering into a highly technical point, and it is not worth while.

873. Well, it is worth while, because the work of the asylum does not rest with the justices. That is all. I wanted to correct you there.

874. (Lord Farrer.) That is one of the points which we should clear up when we get the City statement?—Then the Commission will find—if may revert back from what has been rather a divergence—in statement No. 1, on pages 28, 29, the money expenditure of the two bodies. For instance, the cost of the central body to the metropolitan ratepayer to administer the provisions of the Building Act is 1,714*l.* In the City they administer the "dangerous structures" provisions and minor points of that description under the Building Act, and there is a profit of 16*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* It is a minus mark. The receipts mean profit, that is to say, fees in the City result in a profit, so that whilst the metropolitan ratepayers pay 1,714*l.* for the administering of the Central Act, the City make a profit on the fees for administering the "dangerous structures" portion.*

875. (Mr. Crawford.) And the City would contribute their portion, I presume—$\frac{1}{8}$th I think, Mr. Harrison—if it comes out of the rates?—No, because the rate does not run into the City; it is stopped with regard to the "dangerous structures."

876. (Lord Farrer.) Are you accurate there, Mr. Harrison?—This is not a matter for which the London County Council can rate the City. (Mr. Dickinson.) That only shows the importance of considering these two statements. We have gone very carefully into that, as far as we can, because it is rather doubtful what powers are in the City and what are not; but in that statement, which is numbered II., there the actual position has been carefully noted. For instance, page 3 of Statement II., at the bottom of that note you will find three notes:—"(a.) These powers are exercised over the whole "Administrative County. (b.) These powers are not "exercised by the Council within the City, nor does "the City contribute. (c.) These powers are not "exercised by the Council within the City, but the "City does contribute."

877. There are certain cases where the City contributes?—Where the City contributes for the work not done in the City

878. Though there is no work done by the Council in the City still they have to contribute?—Yes, that is quite so. (Mr. Dickinson.) In the appendix to the general statement all the work is put under headings with the Act of Parliament under which the work is done. Take page 17, for instance, Building Act, there you see the first heading is "applicable to the whole metropolitan area." Then you will notice that there are certain things which are not carried out in the City, but only in the county outside the City, and these appear under the heading "not applicable to the City," and the work of every committee is treated in that way.

879. (Mr. Smith.) Taking the illustration of dangerous structures, I suppose the expenses are mainly for administration, the officers' salaries and so on, because you recover from the owner of property, do you not, the principal expenditure?—A portion, of course.

880. The City of London would not pay for the shoring up of the Athenæum Club, which I observed had been done pretty extensively.

881. (Mr. Crawford.) Except there was a loss; you do not always get through the magistrate all that you are entitled to?—(Mr. Dickinson.) On that point of dangerous structures you will see at page 18 of Statement II. "B. Not applicable to the City. To "enforce the law relating to dangerous structures "within the metropolis, exclusive of the City (Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, Part II., amended by "the Metropolitan Building Act, 1869). In the City "these duties and powers are imposed upon the "Commissioners of Sewers." And then we go on structures, dilapadated and neglected. "A. Applicable "to the whole metropolitan area. To proceed against "owners or occupiers of all buildings which have "become ruinous or so dilapidated as to be unfit for "use or occupation, or are, from neglect or otherwise, "in a structural condition prejudicial to the property "in or the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. Note—"It is to be observed that this power extending over "the City, the County Council have jurisdiction over "dilapidated buildings, but not over dangerous "structures in the City." I believe a case has arisen in which we enforced our right to deal with a neglected structure in the City, but this complication goes through the whole of the work, and you will see that is the reason why we have in this Statement No. II. attempted as far as possible to give you a note of each of the duties and powers.

882. (Mr. Crawford.) Do you not have similar difficulty with some of the the vestries and district boards; have they not certain powers still subsisting which clash to a certain extent with some of yours?—No, none, because that was all regulated by the Metropolis Management and Building Acts of 1855, and care was then taken that whatever was given to the Metropolitan Board of Works should not be given to the vestries, and the same system has been proceeded upon; but of course the City being left out of the question, that is how the complications arose, the City being not dealt with in the same way. (Mr. Harrison.) You may take it that the keynote of these exceptions results from the provisions of the City Commissioners of Sewers Act, 1848, dealing with those subjects, not having being operated upon by the Act of 1855. If you take the Act of 1848 and read it you will find an immense number of little details there which are still left with the City. Rating is quite exceptional. For instance, void spaces, empties, vacant grounds are all assessed under the Act of 1848. Outside there is no such power, although such power existed under the local Acts previously to 1855. Then, if I may refer to page 28 of Statement I., there are powers which are left extant in the City. For instance, the very strong point of the Artizans Dwellings Act. Now the City has got to that state, in regard to building and everything else, that practically, I may say, in that area there is very little, if any, to use the ordinary phrase, "slum property."

883. (Mr. Smith.) Not an insanitary area?—Not an insanitary area. Land is too valuable.

884. Too valuable to be condemned?—Too valuable to be allowed to be used in that way. The owners take good care to eject if they possibly can, or else the leases fall in, and the property is immediately converted into large buildings.

885. That is a very common error; the Artizans' Dwellings Act is a misnomer; it is not an Act to build artizans' dwellings, as people might suppose;

* But see also Blake, 1961.

it is an Act to clear unhealthy areas?—To clear unhealthy areas.

886. Unless the Local Government Act particularly require you, you are not bound to rebuild workmen's dwellings on the site, if the operation of the Act itself has rendered the building of such houses unnecessary. You entirely alter the character of a neighbourhood when you pull down a slum, and if you have bought it at an immense price you generally build a totally different class of property; the Act does not require that that class of property shall be rebuilt on the site?—We are clearing slums in Bethnal Green, within a short distance of the City area, at a net expense of 300,000*l.*; the City do not contribute.

887. No, I quite follow that. I have had a pretty large experience of the Artizans' Dwellings Act; we spent 1,500,000*l.* under it in Birmingham, so I know something about it?—That table points out the provisions which do not operate in the City, and it gives the expenditure of the outside body, and the correlative expenditure by the Commissioners of Sewers. And a singular thing this table illustrates, when we came to examine it, namely, that certain expenditure is not even paid by the ratepayer in the City, but is paid out of the Corporate funds, although the ratepayer gets the value of it, without being a member of the Corporation, by simply living in the geographical area of the City.

888. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that a matter of complaint by the ratepayer inside the City or outside the City?—That may be of both, because I think the money ought to be applied otherwise, and the ratepayers ought to pay their share instead of coming upon the Corporate assets, which may be wanted for other purposes. This table contains full information upon that question. Then there is a summary at page 58, showing the correlative expenditure of the two authorities, and grouped under heads "(A.)" and "(B.)." "(A.) Expenditure incurred by the Council under "Acts applicable to both the county and the City, "without any corresponding expenditure in the "City." There are five Acts. It is true the expenditure paid by county ratepayers under County Council levy is 988*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, and the City ratepayers have no corresponding expenditure; and there is nothing paid by the Corporation in respect of those Acts. "(B.) Expenditure incurred by the "three bodies, the Council, the Commissioners of "Sewers, and the City Corporation, for the same "purposes."

889. (Chairman.) Is not the City rated in respect of that expenditure?—No, they contribute nothing under the Infant Life Protection Act, and under other Acts there mentioned.

890. (Mr. Crawford.) Do you mean to say that they do not contribute towards militia barracks. Take one of your sub-headings, sub-heading 5; are you not acquainted with what is called the trophy tax in the City?—No; I think you will find that this is accurate.

891. (Lord Farrer.) Those are cases in which the City have the same jurisdiction within their area that the County Council have without it, but in which the City do not find it necessary to spend any money or to do anything?—Exactly; there is no expenditure appearing on the rate expenditure or out of the corporate funds.

892. (Mr. Smith.) Are those payments that you make yourselves for such things as county bridges or militia barracks, or are they for things that you paid for to the remaining portions of Surrey, Kent, and other counties?—Well, they have not been; I do not think the case has arisen since 1888, but it is a power.

893. That is, you have tabulated the whole thing at 988*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, but you do not think there were any payments for those?—No.

894. You may have commuted them in your capital adjustment?—No, these are de facto expenditures. (Mr. Dickinson.) As to the point that is raised with regard to the City, probably no expenditure was made in the year in regard to the militia barracks; there would probably be no trophy tax raised.

895. (Mr. Crawford.) Excuse me one minute. Is not this rather misleading; you put here, "Expendi- "ture incurred by the Council under Acts applicable "to both the county and the City, without any "corresponding expenditure in the City." I see you put down "bridges." You are perfectly well aware, of course, that three of the bridges are specially maintained by the City?—They are not county bridges. This only refers to county bridges.

896. Yes; but do you not think it would be desirable to explain that there is an expenditure in respect of bridges, but that there are no county bridges within the area of the City?—We could not possibly suggest that all our Thames bridges should be maintained by 988*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; it refers only to county bridges.

897. (Mr. Smith.) There are county bridges within the administrative county of London that are maintained by you?—Certainly. (Mr. Harrison.) We have had to build a new bridge over the Lea at considerable expense. You will find that the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878, 1879 came under B. "Ex- "penditure incurred by the three bodies, the Council, "the Commissioners of Sewers, and the City Cor- "poration, for the same purposes." Our expenditure is 5,043*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* The City ratepayers pay 459*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, but in addition to that, the City Corporation out of its fees make a profit of 559*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*

898. (Mr. Crawford.) Do you know how that profit is applied?—I do not know how that is applied; we shall see that from the accounts when the Corporation supplies them.

899. Do you happen to know that it is applied in relief of the ratepayers?—No.

900. I think it would be better if you would confine your remarks to the County Council, and not to the City?—The expenditure results in a profit to the City Corporation of 559*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*

901. (Chairman.) That may be so, but you do not know how much money is spent by that body, although it is more than recouped by fees?—I cannot tell you at the moment without reference to the books.

(Mr. Crawford.) Obviously, you have not the accurate information in regard to the City.

(Lord Farrer.) That rather shows that we are in a difficulty from the want of the City information. The Council has given us the best information they can.

902–4. (Mr. Crawford.) They ought not to be quoted as examples to the detriment of the City?—Mr. Dickinson will explain Statement No. II., because he is the head of the staff which attends more particularly to the business of the Council.

905. (Chairman.) Speaking generally, the functions which the County Council exercises, which do not reach into the City, the City does not pay for?—No; except some of them.

906. (Lord Farrer.) Some of them it does; it is not much?—Some of them it does.

907. (Chairman.) What is the character of the exceptions where the County Council does something not affecting the City, not extending within the City and yet the City contributes?—As I mentioned just now, they are very few, very few indeed. My Statement C. only applies to four or five outside. It is accidental really, that is what it comes to. Parks are mentioned, and they contribute; of course that is a large item.

908. As a rule, where the County Council does work which extends within the City, the City pays—contributes its quota—is rated?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Oh, yes, where it does work which extends into the City.

909. Where the County Council does work which does not reach into the City the City is not rated?—As a general rule. (Mr. Harrison.) Which is not geographically situated within the City.

910. That work may be done or may not require to be done within the City, but if it is done within the City it is paid for and managed by the City itself?—Yes, out of various funds, of course, but it is managed and paid for by the City itself.

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

911. If the work that is done by the Council not extending to the City were carried into the City, the City would be rated presumably in respect of that work as it is at present rated with respect to work which runs into the City?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Quite so.

912. You go through and give us in Paper No. 1 illustrations of the work which does not run into the City?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes.

913. The lunatic asylums to which you have already referred?—Yes. Industrial schools; housing of the working classes.

914. Lunatic asylums, reformatory and industrial schools, and county bridges?—Yes.

915. Those are on page 6 of Statement I. The lunatic asylums is a case of work which the County Council has taken over from the justices of what was the county of London?—Justices of the adjoining counties.

916. But the corresponding work within the City is county work, and remains with the sessions of the City?—No, it was transferred to the Common Council by the Lunacy Act, 1890.

917. It ceased to be county work and became City work?—Well, county work of the county of the City of London.

918. (Lord Farrer.) Transferred to the Council instead of being in the hands of the justices?—Instead of being in the hands of the aldermen, who are justices for the City; every alderman is a justice for the City.

919. (Mr. Smith.) It is a municipal function in Birmingham. We have our own lunatic asylums. We do not have them by virtue of being a county, but we are the authority for lunatic asylums under the Lunacy Act?—Yes, but in London it was taken away from the county surrounding the metropolis and vested by the Local Government Act of 1888 in the County Council.

920. And in the City, in the same way, it was transferred from the aldermen who were the justices in the City to the Common Council, who are the municipal authority in the City?—Exactly. (Mr. Dickinson.) The Lunacy Act was passed after the Local Government Act.

921. What I meant to point out was that it did not follow that previous to the Consolidating Lunacy Act a municipality could not have its own lunatic asylums; it was quite competent for them to have them apart from the county in which it was situated?—Yes.

922. (Chairman.) Under a privilege of its own?—Yes. Until 1888 everything outside the City area was under county government practically.

923. (Mr. Smith.) What were known as the home counties?—(Mr. Harrison.) The home counties you may say, and they had an administration as justices of lunacy, and that portion of their powers plus the industrial schools have come over as part of the administrative business of the county of London, and the remaining business still rests in the county justices.

924. (Chairman.) Does your paper show the relative expenditure in regard to lunacy?—Yes. You will find it at pages 46 and 47 of Statement No. I.—"Provision "for and enlargement and management of asylums "for pauper lunatics and pauper lunatics without "settlement (not being pauper lunatics without settle- "ment in the City of London), including portion of "debt taken over from late county justices." That is 96,836*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.*

925. And you make out that 3,000*l.* is paid out of the corporate funds?—3,272*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* is paid out of the funds of the City of London Corporation, not by the City ratepayer.

926. There is nothing paid by the ratepayers?—There is nothing paid by the ratepayers in the City.

927. That, according to your information, is the total cost of the City lunatic asylums?—Not of the City lunatic asylums, but that part which forms the county. There are only 40 lunatics who are without settlement and chargeable to the City of London, but the City of London has established at Stone, Dartford, a lunatic asylum which takes in from the City parishes their lunatics having settlements within those parishes, and of course they are paid for them by the parishes.

928. (Mr. Smith.) They are properly City lunatics?—They are properly City lunatics, and they are paid for by the City parishes, but the City pauper lunatics do not exceed 37.

929. (Mr. Crawford.) Simply wandering lunatics?—Simply wandering lunatics.

930. (Chairman.) And that corresponds to your expenditure of 96,838*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.*?—Yes.

931. What is the relative rateable value of the City and the county?—The rateable value of the City of London as on the 1st of June 1893 was 4,124,227*l.*

932. One-eighth roughly?—The total, including the City, is 33,625,861*l.*

933. But excluding the City would be the proper thing to compare?—Yes. You have to take the one from the other; it is about one-eighth. Just over one-eighth. (Mr. Dickinson.) 29,501,634*l.* against 4,124,227*l.*

934. Rather more than seven to one, seven-and-a-quarter to one?—Yes.

935. The actual expenditure is about 30 to 1 on this particular item, and so also with respect to industrial schools, the expenditure is enormous in the county compared with the City?—(Mr. Harrison.) We took over these together with the debt. The number of lunatics under the care of the Council is 10,835.

936. (Mr. Smith.) Settled and nonsettled?—Yes, settled and nonsettled. We have some boarding out now.

937. (Lord Farrer.) There is no room for them in the asylums?—There is no room for them; we are just getting Claybury Asylum, near Woodford in Essex, ready.

938. Does that expense include the boarding out?—(Mr. Dickinson.) No, I am afraid it does not; it says so here, where it is given in my statement Statement No. II. What we say is:—"In the year "ended 31st March 1892 the Council expended on "capital account 100,157*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.*, and on rate "account 58,199*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, for the provision and "maintenance of asylums during the preceding year "the Asylums Committee expended 252,048*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* "for the maintenance of lunatics. This sum does "not include any expenditure in respect of the 1,539 "patients in licensed houses and other asylums under "arrangement with guardians."

939. That is an additional expense?—An additional expense still.

940. (Mr. Smith.) You recover the greatest amount, I suppose, from the guardians?—Yes, I think we recover it all.

941. It is the expense of the interest and sinking fund on the asylums?—That is what it is. (Mr. Harrison.) Claybury Asylum has just been completed, at a cost of half a million of money. We have reduced the cost of the asylums very considerably by centralizing.

942. (Chairman.) The further functions which run into the City are stated at pages 8 and 9 of Statement No. I. I think we have got them; highways and locomotives, weights and measures?—They are summarized at pages 24 to 26 of Statement No. I. "Powers of the London County Council exercised in "the county but stayed in respect of the area of the "City."

943. I thought myself that your tabulated statement was clearer than the other?—It requires an examination of the particular power, which again requires an immense deal of reference to the Acts and the different sections. You will find it all detailed in a summary, giving the powers in fuller terms, on pages 24 to 28 of Statement No. I., and you will see it winds up in nearly every case, "local "authority other than the Council outside the City "means any vestry or district board. Local authority "for the City is the Commissioners of Sewers"; and it goes through each Act and states each provision which is stopped by the jurisdiction of the City.

944. The highways and locomotives expenditure, the relative expenditure, is that ascertainable?—It is, at page 40 of Statement No. I.

945. It appears to be nominal, if that is true?—We have only eight miles of highways, main roads; it is nominal at present.

946. In the City it is a blank?—In the City it is a blank. (Mr. Dickinson.) This is not the payment for main roads, because we pay a certain sum for main roads. (Mr. Harrison.) This is simply as to the expense of locomotives.

947. (Lord Farrer.) The province of the County Council is to make byelaws, is it not; nothing more?—To make byelaws. (Mr. Dickinson.) Yes, the City contributes to the main roads; that is why it is not here; there is always that difficulty.

948. (Chairman.) The City does contribute towards it?—We have only 11 miles of main roads to which they contribute under the Local Government Act.

949. (Lord Farrer.) There is no main road inside the City, is there?—(Mr. Harrison.) No. I think they could, under the powers of the Act, declare roads to be main roads. The King's Road, Chelsea, is a main road. (Mr. Dickinson.) The Edgware Road is the principal one.

950. There are one or two roads where turnpikes remained to a very late period?—(Mr. Harrison.) That is what it was.

951. (Chairman.) With respect to weights and measures, you have no information as to the actual sum expended by the City in relation to that; you only make out that they can make a profit out of it?—We can give the detail of that account of weights and measures. (Mr. Dickinson.) This table only applies to the net amount which falls on ratepayers.

952. The City makes a profit. One wanted to know what was the amount raised in fees?—(Mr. Harrison.) The total amount raised was 1,126*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*

953. And the expenditure about one half?—656*l* 9*s.* 5*d.*

954. The expenditure was about half the fees?—Yes.

955. The actual expenditure on weights and measures in the City would be rather in excess, apparently, of the proportion shown by rateable value. It would appear that the actual sum expended upon those would be about 1,500*l.*?—I should not think the rateable value was a test at all.

956. I was only seeing what the effect would be?—Yes.

957. In some cases the City would be—?—I think I could supply you with that if you desired it. What would be the practical operation of making the expenditure in common, what alteration it will have upon the City ratepayer. Subject always to this question that at present some portion of the expenditure is paid out of the corporate funds; it is not paid by the ratepayer.

958. The expenditure is heavier in a shop-keeping locality?—Yes. (Mr. Dickinson.) Our 5,043*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* is a balance also. (Mr. Harrison.) There has been a very considerable receipt by the Council, in consequence of the enforcement of the Act.

959. (Lord Farrer.) That 5,043*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* is the excess of payment over receipt?—(Mr. Dickinson.) I understand so.

960. (Chairman.) The receipt would be considerable?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes.

961. (Mr. Crawford.) You are aware that the Corporation has charter rights in connection with weights and measures, are you not; they have for centuries applied to their own purposes profits made in connection with that?—Historically; I have no personal information.

962. Until the last Act they had the right, had they not, to compel every measure used to be stamped by the City, and of course that was a profit to the citizens of London?—I believe that was so. (Mr. Dickinson.) It is 9,700*l.* our total expenditure under that Act, not 5,043*l.* The balance, 4,000*l.* odd, has been received. (Mr. Harrison.) These are all net expenditure after giving credit for receipts in aid or anything.

963. (Chairman.) Does it often happen that there are receipts in aid?—(Mr. Dickinson.) There are 4,000*l.* in that case.

964. In that case, no doubt, but is that a frequent item?—No, I think not. In the Artizans' Dwellings there would be no receipts. (Mr. Harrison.) I think it is noticed in the accounts later on.

965. Coroners is the next considerable case of functions which are distinct?—Yes. We now appoint the coroners, except for the City; we have got 11 coroners.

966. What is the expenditure in that case?—10,000*l.* It is at page 60 of Statement No. I., amongst the staff, 11 coroners cost 10,228*l.* 4*s.* On that page we have attempted to group somewhat similar correlative offices.

967. In the City expenditure under that head you put down at 1,035*l.*, the salary of the City Coroner?—Yes, that is taken from the Corporation accounts.

968. (Mr. Crawford.) Perhaps you will kindly do the town clerk the justice of making one correction. You give him a salary of 5,000*l.* a year, no doubt he would be delighted to have his salary at your figure, but as a matter of fact his salary is 3,500*l.?—The town clerk, we will be delighted to make the correction. We do not pay our committees; in the City every committee is paid.

969. Committees are not paid. Moneys are paid to the account of the committee for the purpose of what they are doing.

970. (Chairman.) Is there a separate coroner for Southwark?

971. (Mr. Crawford.) There is a power in the City to appoint the coroner for Southwark; that is an ancient office created by charter. The duties of the coroner of Southwark are performed by the same man who performs the duties of the coroner for the City of London.

972. (Chairman.) This salary covers both?

973. (Mr. Crawford.) I think the County Council have to pay something in connexion with the coroner of Southwark?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Yes, we pay the salary and expenses of the coroner of Southwark.

974. (Chairman.) That is included amongst the 11 coroners that you have down?—We pay the salaries of all the coroners, except the City. In Southwark we pay the salary of the coroner. (Mr. Harrison.) Our duty is to appoint and pay coroners; to divide the county into districts, and to assign such districts. The Statement No. II. contains this note:—"The appointment in the City and the borough "and liberty of Southwark are in the Common "Council. In Westminster the Dean and Chapter "appoint; in the liberty of the Tower the Constable "of the Tower; and in the Duchy of Lancaster "the Chancellor of the Duchy. In all these cases "the Council pay the salaries and expenses, except in "the City."

975. (Mr. Smith.) And you assign the salary; although the appointment is in other persons, you assign the amount to be paid?—(Mr. Dickinson.) In that case we have not got the power. (Mr. Harrison.) We only acquired that under the Local Government Act, 1888.

976. (Chairman.) These offices outside the City, in Westminster, and the Savoy, and elsewhere, would they be filled by your appointments when vacated?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Yes, all coroners now. (Mr. Harrison.) Everywhere, when vacated.

* See also Payne, 7053–8.

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

977. Mr. Crawford.) Not in Southwark.

978. Chairman.) Then this note at page 33 of Statement No. II. is not quite complete. "NOTE.—"The appointment in the City, and the borough and "liberty of Southwark, are in the Common Council. "In Westminster the Dean and Chapter appoint; in "the liberty of the Tower the Constable of the "Tower, and in the Duchy of Lancaster the Chan- "cellor of the Duchy. In all these cases the Council "pay the salaries and expenses, except in the City"? —(Mr. Dickinson.) I am not quite sure; I would have to see to that.

979. (Mr. Smith.) Might it not be that some of these gentlemen who hold freehold offices are still paid by fees?—(Mr. Harrison.) My belief is this that we have power to alter or commute it upon compensating them for any loss of office. We have had that in Surrey under the Standing Joint Committee.

980. With an appeal to the Treasury?—With an appeal to the Treasury. I think there is a question now pending.

981. (Mr. Crawford.) It is under the Local Government Act, section 3, sub-section 11?—Yes, it is under the Local Government Act. The section is:—"The salary can be revised . . . provided "also, that after the lapse of every successive period "of every five years it shall be lawful for any such "justices and such coroner, as aforesaid, to revise "and thereby increase or diminish such salary, having "regard to the average number of inquests held by "such coroner in the five years immediately pro- "ceeding, and subject, in case of their disagreement, "to such appeal to the Home Secretary as before "mentioned; Provided always that nothing herein "contained shall in any manner take away, alter, or "deprive any such coroner of the right to be repaid out "of the County rate the expenses and disbursements "which may have been made or paid by him on the "holding of any inquest as provided by the Act First "Victoria, chapter sixty-eight. The local authority "for a county or borough from time to time may "make, and, when made, may alter and vary any "schedule of fees, allowances, and disbursements "which on the holding of an inquest may lawfully be "paid and made by the coroner holding such inquest "(other than the fees payable to medical witnesses in "pursuance of this Act), and the local authority shall "cause a copy of every such schedule to be deposited "with the clerk of the peace of the county, or with "the town clerk of the borough, and one other copy "thereof to be delivered to every coroner concerned." (Mr. Dickinson.) In answer to your question, looking at it closely I am afraid the County Council will not have the appointment of the coroner in the City. The words of the Local Government Act are as follows:—"After the appointed day a coroner "for a county shall not be elected by the freeholders "of the county, and on any vacancy occurring in "the office of coroner for a county, who is elected "to that office in pursuance of a writ de coronatore "eligendo, a like writ for the election of a successor "shall be directed to the County Council of the "county, instead of to the sheriff, and the County "Council shall thereupon appoint a fit person, not "being a county alderman or a county councillor, "to fill such office, and in the case of a county "divided into coroners' districts shall assign him "a district, and any person so appointed shall have "like powers and duties, and be entitled to like "renumeration, as if he had been elected coroner "for the county by the freeholders thereof." This does not apply to franchise coroners. In the City of London the Lord Mayor is chief coroner, but the officiating coroner for the City of London and the borough of Southwark is elected by the City Common Council; the coroner for the City of Westminster is appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. They are franchise coroners not affected by the Act. (Mr. Harrison.) I say we have got one case of compensation paid to Mr. Carter for loss of office, and the Surrey County Council paid a portion.

982. There is only one point I should like to mention; it is not in the shape of a question. I do not know whether Mr. Harrison or Mr. Dickinson is under the impression that this statement has gone to the Corporation. The Corporation have not seen this statement of yours, Statement No. I. It has not gone to the Corporation, so I do not know whether you have any objection to their being furnished with it in order to check your information?—(Mr. Dickinson.) We presumed that the statements would come in contemporaneously, and that one statement would not be an answer to the other statement. We rather had the impression that the Commission was going to have a statement from us and a statement from the City contemporaneously, and the two would stand on their own merits.

983. (Chairman.) Applications were made contemporaneously, but one authority was more forward than the other apparently. Now the question is whether you have any objection to the communication of these statements?—(Mr. Harrison.) No I do not think we have.

984–5. There is no objection to these statements being communicated, is there? — (Mr. Harrison.) I do not see the objection, unless it is taken to absolve or release the City from the obligation to produce its statement of facts, or to delay its production, merely whilst it is replying to this. I think then there would be objection, but if they only want to see it and want to make comments upon it, or answers to it, supplementary to their own statement there is not the slightest objection. (Mr. Dickinson.) Everybody may have this. There is no doubt there are things in this—there must be, because it is very complicated — in which the City Corporation may show we are wrong. If they restrict themselves to showing we are wrong, instead of giving their own statement, we should be rather inclined to object.

986. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you may take it from me that the City would not adopt that attitude of merely saying you were wrong without showing how you are wrong?—We merely wanted your statement to come first. (Mr. Harrison.) If it is to be regarded as a claim, and certain statements are to be replied to by the City, and they are to take time to do that, and are not in the meantime to supply a statement of their powers and duties, I think that is not right.

987. (Lord Farrer.) This is a statement of facts? —(Mr. Dickinson.) It is a statement of facts and law, and the law may be wrong in some places.

988. (Chairman.) It is no great injury to your character and position if you are found defective.

989. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it would be a great saving of time. You have adopted a particular form for supplying this general information which appears to have been very carefully considered, and it might be one which the City would like to follow?—(Mr. Harrison.) If the City would supply us with a statement of their powers we would begin to check it at once. I am quite sure that on matters of law we are pretty accurate. Each committee is attended by its own legal adviser, and in our department we know very fairly what our legal powers are.

990. (Mr. Smith.) I read Statement No. I., and it struck me as a simple statement of law and powers. It does not seem to me to be a controversial document? —It was not so intended.

991. (Mr. Crawford.) It gives figures; I cannot possibly carry those figures in my head, and if the figures are to be corrected, if it is necessary to correct them, obviously the statement must be furnished at some time or other to the City Chamberlain, and I do not see anything myself in the document which the County Council can possibly object to being made known to the City.

992. (Chairman.) Apparently the representatives of the County Council would have no objection whatever to the communication to the City of these, which are public facts, only wanting a little industry for anybody to get out, but they are a little afraid lest that indication of view delayed the production of the City statement?—(Mr. Dickinson.) That is it.

993. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not see how it is likely to occasion delay.

994. (Mr. Smith.) You would not object, of course, to the rectification of that one item, the Town Clerk's salary. It had better be printed in another form?—Mr. Harrison.) Oh, certainly; it is not done with any object or view to make any invidious comparison between the salary of the Town Clerk and the salary of the Clerk to the County Council.

995. I thought, perhaps, it was prophetic of what you were to pay the future Town Clerk.

996. (Mr. Crawford.) You put down 180*l.* for your housekeeper, and the hallkeeper in the City at 550*l.* I assume your housekeeper probably has nothing whatever to do with summoning committees or attending committees, or anything of that kind, whereas our hallkeeper has. I understand your housekeeper is an ordinary housekeeper, therefore I only point it out to you. It would look a ridiculous thing for a corporation to pay 550*l.* to a mere hallkeeper which from your point of view is a housekeeper. The corporation hallkeeper is an official who has to attend upon committees, summon all committees, attend Courts of Common Council, &c.

997. (Mr. Smith.) He is talked of as Mr. Hallkeeper

998. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a very ancient office.

999. (Chairman.) I interrupted you when you were going to make some general statement about the second paper, Statement No. II. We have not seen it, so it would not be prudent to enter into detail. If you have any explanatory remarks to make we shall be glad to hear them?—I would suggest that Mr. Dickinson, the Deputy Chairman of the Council, might give a sketch of the purport of the paper that might get on the notes.

(Mr. Dickinson.) In the first place, the first two pages are simply stating what our view is of the present position of affairs; as to what the administrative County of London is, and with a note calling your attention to the fact to which you have already referred, namely, that there are two non-administrative counties. I pass from that to a statement of the work of the Council. This statement is on pages 3 to 14. That must be taken as a very general statement because the actual work will be found in the Appendix with the section of the Act of Parliament under which we carry on that work in each case put against it, so that it is a question of turning to the various committees that carry on the work, and then you will see exactly what the detail of the work is. I have treated the work of the Council in four divisions; I thought it was well to state, first of all, the administrative work which, as you will see, includes such things as main drainage, bridges, management of the fire brigade, parks and lunatic asylums, the provision of artizans' dwellings, and so forth, being, properly speaking, work of an executive character that we carry on ourselves. Then I have placed under the second head what I call work of a supervisory nature, which constitutes a great portion of our duties, and divided that, again, into sub-heads. First of all, I put shortly our powers over the actions of the local authorities. These are to be found on pages 4 and 5, and constitute some of our most important duties, because it is in this respect that we are brought into relation with the vestries and the sanitary authorities in London. I have pointed out that the course of legislation recently has been to put us in the position of being able to take action in default where work is badly carried on, but practically to leave the work in the hands of the sanitary authorities as long as it is well carried on. That includes taking action in default, making byelaws, which we have done to a certain extent, and being the body to which any individuals appeal if they think themselves injured by the action of the sanitary authorities. Then we are in communication with the medical officers of health since the Local Government Act of 1888 gave us power to pay half the salary of any medical officer appointed after that date. A great number have since been appointed with a view of getting half the salary paid, and we are enabled to oblige them to send reports. It would be a very judicious thing if this provision could be extended to all officers, whether appointed before or afterwards, because we find that gives us an amount of information as to the sanitary condition of London, which is very valuable. Then in regard to infectious diseases, we have notification of what infectious diseases are taking place, and we have certain powers in regard to the requiring sanitary authorities to make post-mortem rooms. Then we have very considerable powers over local sewers, and with regard to infectious diseases, we have a power of stating that a certain disease should be classified as an infectious disease, and therefore subject to the provisions of requiring notification, and so forth.

1000. (Mr. Smith.) That is your power, not that of the sanitary authority?—It is a power, I believe, that is in them also. Then, with regard to local sewers, we have considerable powers over their formation. No sewer can be made by any sanitary authority in London, with the exception of the City, without the Council's approval. We have to approve of the plans of the sewers, and we make byelaws for their construction. That is a power we had from the Metropolitan Board of Works. It is a very wide power, and gives to the County Council practically supreme authority in regard to the whole of the proper drainage of London. Then, paragraph 8, is the question of loans. The Metropolitan Board of Works had this power also; that all borrowing by vestries or district boards is to be done subject to our consent, and they come to us with their proposals. We see the number of years that they propose to extend the repayment over, and we give our consent or withhold our consent.

1001. Do you take the place of the Local Government Board in that respect?—We take the place of the Local Government Board in that respect with district boards and vestries.

1002. You settle the period of the loan?—We settle the period of the loan; we settle everything, subject, of course, to the period not exceeding the term for which the law allows the local body to borrow.

1003. Without any superior authority?—Without any superior authority except that we cannot lend to them, except under the powers of our own Act of Parliament; but as regards their facilities for borrowing money, they have no one to consult but ourselves, because we can consent to their borrowing, and then they can go and borrow outside.

1004. They are not obliged to borrow from you, but they find it more convenient, so as not to compete in the same market?—They get it cheaper from us. Practically we are the lending authority for the whole of London. Then, as regards rating and assessments, of course, we have rather a peculiar position. In the first place, we have a power under the Local Government Board of making the assessment for the county rate, and that would run all over the county, had it not been that in 1869 there was an Act passed which regulated the assessing of property in London by means of Assessment Committees, but that did not take the same area as the County of London. It only applied it to those unions, of which the greater portion were in the County of London. Now, there was a union, the Union of Croydon, of which there was a small portion, namely, Penge, in the county of London as well as in the county of Surrey. That Act did not apply in regard to Penge. In regard to Penge, we have to appoint every year a county Rate Committee under the County Rate Act. The County Council appoint this Committee which acts for the purpose of assessing the value of property in Penge. Then, as regards all the other places, the Assessment Committees act independently of us entirely, but when the assessment is once made they all have to send their lists to us for the purpose of preparing the list of totals, and we have a right of appeal to the Quarter Sessions against the totals, if we think the totals are unjust. We have done this in certain cases, and the appeals are still pending.

1005. Uniformity as between parish and parish or union and union?—That is the only means of bringing about uniformity as between union and union.

1006. (Chairman.) And that is the Quarter Sessions of the non-administrative County of London?—The Quarter Sessions of the non-administrative County of London.

1007. How about assessments within the City?—Appeals against assessments within the City go to the same Court; only two aldermen are entitled to sit to hear such appeals. There was an appeal against the City valuation which has not yet come on.

1008. (Mr. Smith.) For the purpose of making your own rate do you use that assessment?—For the purpose of making our own rate, yes; we have to use that assessment entirely. Then we have also some powers with regard to dividing parishes into wards. That is under the Metropolis Management Act. Then the Council deals with such things as declaring that a road through the middle of which runs the boundary of the parish shall be dealt with as if in one parish; and closing streets, this has to be done subject to our control; and then the Overhead Wires Act, that gives us power of making byelaws, regulating the construction of the wires, and so forth, and these byelaws have to be enforced by the local authorities; but in this case if a sanitary authority outside the City neglects to enforce the byelaws which we have made, we can step in and do it, but in the City we cannot do that. The City kept that in their own hands by appearing when the Bill was before a Committee of the House of Commons.

1009. Exercising their municipal functions in that respect?—Oh, yes. I will do the City the justice to say that they try to get as many functions as they can. Then all the streets are named by the Council, and we can compel the local authorities to execute its orders.

1010. (Chairman.) In the City?—All streets in the City are named by us. You will see that the street-naming paragraph has got "(a)" against it. That refers to a note at the bottom: "These powers "are exercised over the whole administrative "county," which means in the City. The second sub-head is "Powers of Licensing and Registration." That includes the very large question of the licensing of theatres and music halls, and racecourses, of which latter there are none, slaughter-houses and cow-houses, and the carrying out of the law with regard to the licensing of stores for keeping explosives or petroleum. (Mr. Harrison.) The Petroleum Act is an extraordinary one, because the City being the Port Authority, they have the execution of the Act when the petroleum is afloat on the river. Once the petroleum is landed it comes under our jurisdiction. (Mr. Dickinson.) We cannot get at it till it is on shore.

1011. You have got a note to that paragraph about petroleum that the power is not exercised within the City?—Not within the City.

1012. (Mr. Crawford.) In all the county?—We do not exercise it in the City at all; but even outside the City as long as petroleum is on the river we have nothing to do with it, because the City appoints the Port Sanitary Authority.

1013. Excuse me. You do not mean to say that the Port Sanitary Authority has any power whatever under the Petroleum Acts. The Thames Conservancy surely is the Harbour Authority?—(Mr. Harrison.) No.

1014. I think you had better not shake your head too soon, Mr. Harrison. I think you will find that the Thames Conservancy has some power?—(Mr. Dickinson.) At all events it is not within the Council's jurisdiction; we do not get at it till it comes on the land. The third sub-head states the Council's "Powers of giving or refusing consent." Although this does not appear at great length, yet it constitutes a large portion of our work, because we have to consent to all the electric companies laying their mains; and also under the Building Act the power of consent and non-consent is very great indeed, and very varied. Practically, everything that is not in accordance with the building law of London has to come under the consideration of the Building Act Committee of the County Council; they regulate all the questions of projections beyond the line of frontage, and so forth.

1015. (Mr. Smith.) Going back for a moment to electric lighting, I presume the vestry have power over their own streets to some extent; they have to consent also, have they not?—I think they do; I am not perfectly certain about it. It depends very much upon the Order. For instance, in Chelsea, we do not consent, because the old Order defined the Chelsea vestry as the consenting body.

1016. It would strike me as a sensible thing that whatever body it may be that it would be desirable to delegate the street functions to, should have the control of that street, and it would naturally be the vestry?—Yes. (Mr. Harrison.) It is not a question of the locality merely, because the whole of the metropolis is divided out into electrical areas, and as they want a central administration they very often run into one borough.

1017. You want to have uniformity?—We want to have uniformity.

1018. (Lord Farrer.) And the Council have no similar jurisdiction whatever over gas or water?—Over gas, as regards quality.

1019. But opening the streets?—(Mr. Harrison.) No, none; that is left entirely to the local authority.

1020. And is dependent, of course, on the terms of the Companies Acts?—Entirely; it was in existence before 1855.

1021. I was at the Board of Trade when the Electric Lighting Act was passed, and it was thought desirable, as electric lighting would be a central affair in London, and not merely a local affair, that power should be given to the central authority as well as to the local authority?—That is it.

1022. That is my recollection of the Electric Lighting Act?—At present it is entrusted by the Board of Trade to the central authority. (Mr. Dickinson.) Under the Building Act the Council makes byelaws regulating the formation of streets, as to the foundations and sites of buildings, and as to the building materials to be used. It licenses sky-signs and can remove unauthorised sky-signs.

1023. (Mr. Crawford.) The Commissioners of Sewers are the authority with regard to foundations in the City?—Yes. (Mr. Harrison.) That is under the Act of 1848.

1024. You have no power to make byelaws in regard to foundations in the City; the Commissioners of Sewers have that power?—(Mr. Dickinson.) No, you are quite right; the power to make byelaws in regard to foundations and sites of buildings does not run into the City; that is why I put the references "a" and "b" in the footnotes. Some powers do and some do not run into the City, but you will find in the appendix whether they do or do not. The fourth sub-head relates to the Council's "Powers of inspection." We inspect all the dairies, and we inspect the gas with the view of ascertaining whether it is below proper lighting power or the quality is not good. And the same as regards electric lighting; we have to inspect their meters, and so forth. With regard to the weights and measures and the sale of coal, there we employ a large staff of inspectors. Since that Act was passed we have been doing a good deal of work, especially in regard to the sale of coal. Then under the recent Act as to the employment of young persons in shops, limiting the number of hours, we are the authority to enforce that.

1025. (Lord Farrer.) Has that come into operation yet?—It has come into operation, and we have already had several prosecutions.

1026. (Mr. Smith.) You have not appointed any inspectors yet?—Yes, we have our inspectors.

1027. (Mr. Crawford.) And the City, too?—I do not know. In regard to factories we can require that all factories shall be safe from fire. We are carrying it out as fast as we can, but it is a very big question in London. As to the prevention of floods the Council can compel owners of riverside property to embank the river so as to protect the adjoining land, and with regard to the pollution of rivers we are made the authority by the Local Government Act. Practically, that does not apply to the Thames or Lea because the Conservancy Boards exist over these.

1028. (Lord Farrer.) In fact, the jurisdiction of the county extends to the river; it stops at the river, does it not?—(Mr. Harrison.) There is a clause in the Local Government Act that it is to be subject to the Conservancy Acts. (Mr. Dickinson.) It says subject to other Acts. I should not like to say we have no power; we have power, but it is nominal.

1029. (Mr. Smith.) You would have power over any undiscovered river?—Yes. The fifth sub-head refers to "Byelaws." Our power with regard to making byelaws is one that has been growing within the last few years. I have put these separately, because I think it is rather an important branch of our work. To begin with, by the Local Government Act the Municipal Corporations Act was incorporated, and there is a section of this Act under which we have power to make byelaws for the good rule and government of the county. That is very vague, and we have been advised that it is not wise to act much upon that.

1030–1. I think it has been found a dead letter; it has been confined, I think, in most municipalities to controlling the order of their own proceedings?—Yes. Then the byelaws with regard to buildings, new streets, drains and pipes, communication with sewers, and others I have spoken of—these are all to be made by the Council, and we make byelaws with respect to offensive businesses; also we regulate the construction of theatres by regulations, not byelaws but regulations, and then we make byelaws as to overhead wires. Of course we make byelaws for our own work, parks and bridges and so forth, carrying out the Weights and Measures Acts, the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts, and under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1889, we can make byelaws regulating the hours during which children may sing in public places. Under the Public Health Act we are making byelaws—they practically have been made—which will regulate the whole of the question of the removal of refuse by the vestries and by sanitary authorities. The byelaws we have made are very important indeed, and we hope that they will meet one of the very greatest evils in London.

1032. The removal of dry rubbish, and so on?—And how it is removed. Our byelaws enact that it must be removed, I think, once a week. We began with twice a week; I am not sure what form that has taken ultimately, but I think it is once a week. In many places they are not removed once a fortnight.

1033. That brings in the question of destructors?—That might. We should be pleased to let you see the byelaws that we have made in that respect.

1034. (The Secretary.) What is the difference between regulations and byelaws?—We issue regulations where we have not a statutory power to make byelaws.

1035. (Mr. Smith.) A regulation does not usually carry any fine with it, and a byelaw does?—Yes. As I say, of course, all these byelaws have to be confirmed; some by the Local Government Board, and some by the Home Office. Then as the third head of the work I have put the "duties of watching generally over the public interests." This includes our work with respect to charities. We have representatives on the governing body of the City of London Parochial Charities, and we are constantly asked to appoint representatives for the various charities that the Charity Commissioners are regulating. Every scheme that comes before the Charity Commissioners is sent on to us for our consideration, and a committee reports about it, and we make recommendations to the Charity Commissioners.

1036. (The Secretary.) Over what area does that extend?—That would be over the whole of the administrative county.

1037. Including the City?—That would be at the discretion of the Charity Commissioners.

1038. (Mr. Smith.) Is that statutory, or is it matter of grace on the part of the Charity Commissioners?—I do not think it is statutory. Then, of course, as to taxation we naturally interested ourselves in that question, and have obtained figures as to the expenditure of the various local bodies in London; also the parliamentary work, although it is very shortly stated here, is the most important. You will see as to opposing Bills that we had 184 Bills to oppose in the last four years. Practically, during the whole of the parliamentary session we are engaged in opposing or promoting Bills. And, with regard to promoting Bills, we have power as the successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, but there has been rather a doubt whether that extends to the promotion of Bills for general purposes, although we are advised that it may. At any rate all our Bills that we have promoted have been held to be properly promoted. We have had no question raised about them.

1039. Do you find section 80 is a difficult section to work?—The less we say about section 80 the better. I do not think that it was intended to mean what it says. The last heading is that of "Finance." I thought it better to keep the finance of the council separate, and I have put as shortly as I can the position as regards finance. Of course, as you know, we have a grant from the Exchequer contributions, and then we have rents, fees and fines, and then the great balance of our income is made up by the county rate. That county rate, as you are probably aware, has to be divided. There is the general county rate, which runs into the City, and then there is the special county rate, which is raised to meet the cost of the work which is not to be charged to the City; that is about $2\frac{3}{4}d.$ The total rate for this year, for the whole, that is to say for the general county purposes and special county purposes, is $12\frac{1}{2}d.$, of which only $10\frac{1}{10}d.$ is collected in the City. The amounts thus received were, in the year ended March 1893, as follows:—

Balance of produce for the year 1891–2	201,902	7	6
On account of the year 1892–3	411,149	0	0
				613,051	7	6
(2.) Rents, fees, fines, &c.:
General county purposes	67,735	8	1
Special county purposes	27,743	12	1
				95,479	0	2
(3.) Rates:
General county purposes	1,400,904	4	3

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

7 July 1893.

1040. Does that involve a great amount of book-keeping—the separation?—It is a very complicated thing, not only book-keeping, but really when we first came into office we did not know what to charge to each account. We had several difficult questions with the City. We charged for lunatics first of all. We took advice and the City took advice, and the result was that we had to exempt the City.—(Mr. Harrison.) Of course it is not suggested that $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ is the difference when you are rating over the whole thing.

1041. The necessity for the separation is that there is $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ charged for the whole body which is not charged in the City?—Yes.

1042. (Chairman.) If it were one what would it be?—(Mr. Dickinson.) If we added their expenditure I do not think that we could possibly say at this moment what it would be.

1043. Would it go over 11*d.* all through?—(Mr. Harrison.) We can hardly tell you that because a portion of the rate is paid for out of the corporation funds. If you take that into account it is not paid by the City ratepayer but by the corporation, and if we take their correlative duties and put that in it would increase the city ratepayer by so much and would relieve the metropolitan ratepayer by so much.

1044. (Lord Farrer.) Have you any idea what, if any, amount is raised by rate in the City, what rate corresponding to this $2\frac{2}{5}d.$?—Yes, that is perfectly given in the statement.

1045. Yes, but I mean what rate the City ratepayers have to pay in respect of these services which are represented by this $2\frac{2}{5}$d.?—(Mr. Dickinson.) I think it would be better before saying that to have the statement of the City as to what they do pay. Our figures are prepared upon the best information we have.

1047. (Mr. Smith.) If some of these are paid out of the City funds it would be very difficult to make out the rate?—Very difficult.

1048. (Mr. Crawford.) Then you would also have to consider in order to be fair the question of the police?—(Mr. Harrison.) That is quite separate from the 233,673*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*, paid by the metropolitan ratepayers. I see that 12,052*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* was repaid by the Commissioners of Sewers for that year, and 22,147*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* paid out of the corporation estates.

1049. What figures are you quoting from now?—Page 59, Statement I.—(Mr. Dickinson.) Then I was just saying that the income of the council amounts to 2,401,081*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* There are certain payments we have to make out of that under the Local Government Act: "Out of the receipts from the "Exchequer contributions certain payments have to "be made in the first instance. They were as "follows:—

"Teachers in poor law schools -	12,981	15	9
"Public vaccinators - -	3,012	16	0
"Pauper lunatics - -	84,806	17	9
"Poor Law medical expenses -	36,732	19	11
"Registrars of Births and Deaths - -	581	16	11
"Salaries of poor law union officers - - -	1,268	16	5
"Sanitary officers - -	1,343	16	0
"Technical education - -	472	17	4
	£141,201	16	1"

And then we also have to make payments to the guardians of the poor, which in 1892–3 amounted to 326,808*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* As I pointed out, that is merely a system of equalization, because the result is that it is collected from the rich unions and paid to the poor unions. That is practically not an expenditure by our hand, although it comes into our accounts.

1050. (Lord Farrer.) With regard to the whole of these sums which we are now treating of, you are merely the hand to transfer them; you have no sort of control over them?—Yes; and of course we have no sort of control over the sum payable to the Metropolitan Police, because that is handed over without even coming to us. As I state in a note at the bottom of the page: "The amount received by the Council "from the Exchequer contributions is the balance of "the total sum allocated to the county after deducting "the sum payable to the Metropolitan Police and the "cost of the revising barristers. The total sum "allocated in 1891–92 was 1,097,668*l.*, and the "above-mentioned deductions amounted to 474,771*l.*" The balance of that coming to us and then having to be dealt with as I have said.

1051. (Mr. Smith.) That does not reach you?—That does not reach us at all; the rest of it reaches us and then we have to pay out of it the payments I have mentioned, and then we have to deal with a very small balance—it is really a very small balance compared with other counties. Then I give you, under the general heads of the expenses, the expenditure of the year, amounting in all to 1,874,392*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* I put in two columns the expenditure for general county purposes and the expenditure for special county purposes. Then as regards the capital expenditure of the Council, that, of course, is very great. I have put it as shortly as possible. We have to borrow under our Acts of Parliament, which are passed every year. Under these Acts we obtain power to expend capital money and to borrow money up to the end of the year, or rather up to the end of the six months after that, and if in the meantime we have not got a new Act of Parliament, giving us power to expend on capital account and to borrow the money, we should have no powers at all till the following year. That is under the Act of 1869. The unexhausted powers are renewed every year, so that it is practically the Money Act that gives us the power every year. Consolidated stock has been issued by the Metropolitan Board of Works and by the Council; of this there are three classes, a $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., a 3 per cent., and a $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., which is the present stock which we are now issuing. The average prices vary according to the class of the stock; the $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. varied in different years from 94*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* to 102*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*; the 3 per cent. varied from 94*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* to 100*l.* 9*s.*; and the present price at which we have just issued a $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is 90*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* That was last Tuesday. Mr. Harrison tells me that that works out 2*l.* 18*s.* per cent. to the investors. We borrow at 2*l.* 18*s.*

1052. (Chairman.) That is exclusive of the bonus on redemption?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes. (Mr. Dickinson.) I think we had better get that calculated out properly.

1053. It makes a very material difference?—I cannot say at this moment, but the figures on my paper are correct. Then I have stated what the position of the outstanding debt of the Council is. The total debt outstanding amounts to 31,421,323*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, against that, of course, we have 10,297,695*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* of loans advanced to local authorities, and surplus land and property estimated at 2,274,885*l.* 6*s.*, which brings out a total, with a few other items, of 13,378,572*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, which leaves our net liabilities at 31st of March last at 18,042,751*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*

1054. (Mr. Smith.) You lend to the School Board, do you not?—We lend to the School Board and the Asylums Board.

1055. And all the local authorities?—And all the local authorities now. The consolidated loan fund is a system that was inaugurated in 1869, under which we have to pay into a fund a certain amount every year raised from rate, which amount is subject to the sanction of the Treasury; we have to pay in what the Treasury thinks is necessary to enable us to redeem the whole of the stock within what we call 60 years from the date of its issue, which really means a certain period generally slightly under 60 years; for during about 10 years we issue the same stock, therefore, what in one year we issue at 60 years the next year we should only be able to issue at 59 years, the next at 58, and so on until we got to an issue very often which we could only spread over about 50 years, and then we have to go in for a new stock.

That is really one of our difficulties in regard to our finance.

1056. That has no reference to the length of the particular loan?—(Mr. Dickinson.) It affects our annual payment; we have to spend the same amount for 50 years which ought to be spread over 60 years.

1057. (The Secretary.) Do you mean that your money is borrowed for 50 years, but you pay on the 60?—Whatever we do with money in the consolidated loans fund, must be done in such a way that the money is repaid before it is wanted for the redemption; that is what the Treasury sanction is practically wanted for.

1058. (Lord Farrer.) You have never come to the period of paying off a loan, have you?—The first time will be in 1929.

1059. Has it been at all considered what is to be done then?—The finance committee have been considering that question; I have no doubt we shall have to bring some proposal before the Council shortly.

1060. (Mr. Smith.) Do you borrow any money temporarily on mortgage?—We borrow constantly temporarily from the Bank.

1061. (Chairman.) You have power to issue bills?—We have power to issue bills, but we have never exercised that power, it has never been considered so useful.

1062. (Mr. Smith.) You borrow from the Bank pending the issue of stock?—Yes.

1063. You can apply money put aside for your sinking fund?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes, provided we bring it back within the time. (Mr. Dickinson.) We can borrow temporarily from the consolidated loans fund. The position of the consolidated loans fund is very shortly put before you at page 12. It is a little difficult to explain this table, because if you will notice we have had to put in the receipts 4,115,635*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.*, which is repayment of money which has been lent out from the consolidated Loans Fund, and this must be borne in mind in considering the payments which have been made out of the Consolidated Loans Fund, viz., "Loaned to local bodies, 7,738,560*l.* 2*l.* 2*d.*" These two figures have to be taken in conjunction. There has been received into the Consolidated Loans Fund, 13,528,118*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, and there has been practically used out of it 13,491,768*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, all of which will have to come in, and will come in before it is required for the redemption of stock, leaving the small balance at the present moment of 36,349*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*, which is in the Consolidated Loans Fund. Then I have given a short page about the Council's business that you may see how it is conducted. We meet every week regularly, every Tuesday except in the recesses. The Committees are meeting every day and every week. I have given you the numbers of Committee meetings, that you may see how far the work extends. All the work of the Committees is defined by a code of references and Standing Orders, which we can present to you. And then I have given, for your information, a statement as to the staff, and I have had made up—we can, of course, only estimate it—the amount of money which we pay in the year in salaries and wages, amounting in all to 413,752*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* That includes everything, all the county asylums, coroners, and everybody. Then, as I say, the control of the staff is delegated to the Committees as a rule, but nobody can be employed, or discharged, or their pay changed, without the Council really knowing of it. I ought to have made this exception though: that rule does not apply to the Asylums Committee, which stands in a statutory position.

1064. (Mr. Crawford.) A statutory committee appoints the officers. I presume?—A statutory committee appoints the officers. The Asylums Committee practically appoints all its officers; it carries on its own work. (Mr. Harrison.) We have to honour their cheques; we cannot question anything. (Mr. Dickinson.) It is not quite correct to say that; all capital expenditure, the building of a new asylum comes before the Council.

1065. The question of repairs is done by the Committee?—Yes, it is called the Visiting Committee.

1066. (Mr. Smith.) It is a statutory committee in the same way that the Watch Committee is a statutory committee?—Yes; I also mention the Joint Committee, but it has little work to do in London, because it has not got the police as in other counties. It consists of nine members of the Council, and nine of the justices of the county of London, and the expenditure of that committee is charged over the whole county, including the City.

1067. Does that joint committee appoint its officers?—That joint committee appoints a clerk of the peace and other officers. And I thought we ought not to omit the Technical Education Board. The Commission know that the Council has appointed a Technical Education Board under the Technical Instruction Acts, 1889–91, and the Local Taxation (Customs and Excise) Act, 1890, to which it has delegated its powers of technical education. The Council has devoted for the purposes of the board 30,000*l.* last year, and 57,000*l.* in the present year. The board consists of 35 members, of whom 20 are selected from members of the Council itself, 13 nominated by other bodies, and two chosen by the Council from outside its own membership.

1068. (Lord Farrer.) Practically that board will have the control of the funds which the Council give to it?—The Council appoints that board annually. The Council votes a certain amount, and the board deals with it.

1069. (Mr. Smith.) It brings up an estimate of a certain sum, and it has to keep within it?—Yes.

1070–1. (Lord Farrer.) The Council does not go into the details of the expenditure?—We have not done it. Then I just call your attention to the appendix, in order that you may know how to consider it. It is rather difficult to divide our work, but we have divided it among the various committees, and under the various committees you will find everything that is stated in the preamble referred to in detail, with the Acts of Parliament in the margin which refer to it. It has been a matter, I may say, of very great difficulty to tabulate it; that is really the reason why we have had rather a delay in delivering this statement, because everything had to be checked, and every Act of Parliament had to be turned up. This is really a resumé of our powers, in a form in which it has never been attempted before. May I just say that as regards statement No. II. there may be a few errors in it, and I should like, if possible, to send you another copy.

1072. (Mr. Crawford.) Has there been an answer given to the suggestion which I made, as to whether these statements may be supplied to the City. The form is so good that I think it would be very useful?

1073. (Chairman.) You have no objection?—We have no objection.

1074. You would like it to be accompanied with a caution that it is not to be made a reason of hindrance?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes.

1075. (Mr. Crawford.) May I go a step further, and ask whether you would kindly let the City have a dozen copies?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Certainly we will.

1076. It affects certain departments?—(Mr. Harrison.) It will be understood, of course, that you will not communicate those beyond your own offices.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 28th July 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. R. D. HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. C. Harrison and Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

28 July 1893.

MR. CHARLES HARRISON, Vice-Chairman of the London County Council; and MR. W. H. DICKINSON, Deputy-Chairman of the London County Council, called in and further examined.

1077. (Chairman.) You have had before you the evidence which Mr. Rotton, of the Local Government Board, gave us at two of our sittings? — (Mr. Dickinson.) Yes.

1078. You have had opportunities of examining that?—Yes.

1079. And you are prepared to supplement it where it may be deficient, or to correct any mis-statements that he may have fallen into?—Yes, we have prepared our remarks upon his statement.

1080. Your evidence will be highly valuable as to facts within your own knowledge, but you may possibly have some corrections with respect to the City, which we should primarily look to the City authorities to correct?—Yes, we have first noted on this statement which we have handed to you certain questions with regard to information respecting the City which we think require some correction; and then we have gone on to information on the next page, that we ourselves can vouch for.

1081. We asked Mr. Rotton to describe what was the early organization outside the City, and he told us, in question 60, there was nothing but country parishes?—That was rather a general observation. They were more than country parishes; they were a collection of townships, of manors, of extra-parochial places and parishes.

1082. With respect to commissions outside the City, you have to say that there were some commissions?—Yes, there were some commissions.

1083. You are enabled to tell us what is the maximum number of a vestry?—Yes, it is 120; no vestry can have more than 120 members.

1084. Is that reached in many cases?—Oh, yes, in several.

1085. Is there any question as to enlargement at any time beyond that?—No, they cannot be enlarged beyond that. They vary up to that number, 12 for each thousand, as Mr. Rotton states.

1086. Any desire?—Oh, no; in my own opinion 120 is too many.

1087. Then as to questions 70 and 74?—We there draw your attention merely to the wording. Mr. Rotton states that it was the smaller and the bigger parishes which were taken into consideration in dividing the metropolis into parishes and district boards.

1088. That the smaller parishes were grouped and the larger parishes were left to themselves?—Well it was not the smaller parishes, the parishes that were smaller in respect of size only, but those that were smaller in respect of rateable value and of population too; they were all divided together, and a calculation made, and upon that calculation they were divided.

1089. (Mr. Smith.) All the important parishes?—Yes, the size does not vary, the population does.

1090. (Chairman.) It is not a question of area, but of importance?—It was a question of population and rateable value and area combined.

1091. (Mr. Crawford.) Was it more rateable value than population?—No, it is a calculation made upon those three data, and then divided accordingly.

1092. (Lord Farrer.) All three data enter?—Yes.

1093. Area, population, and rateable value?—Area, population, and rateable value; yes.

1094. (Chairman.) You cannot give any exact formula?—No, it is a formula which we have to act upon now and then when we divide parishes into wards.

1095. You have to pay regard to all these three, but the exact value you attach to each one of them you do not say?—We refer to the Statistical Officer to make a calculation, and he says according to this calculation what should be the exact number of members to each ward; and then we exercise our discretion, and divide it more or less approximately.

1096. (Lord Farrer.) Has he any formula to guide him?—Yes, he makes a formula, and he combines these three figures.

1097. The different cases he combines according to some given rule, does he not?—Yes.

1098. When he makes his report to the Local Government Committee?—He makes his report with mathematical accuracy.

1099. And he combines area, population, and rateable value, according to fixed rules in his department?—Yes. Mr. Gomme, of the Statistical Department, will explain the process more accurately than I can.

The witnesses withdrew.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

MR. GEORGE LAURENCE GOMME, Statistical Officer of the London County Council, called in and examined.

1100-4. (Chairman.) Perhaps you would tell us first who you are?—I am the statistical officer of the Council.

1105. How do you make up these elements in considering the division into wards?—We take the number of rated householders from the last rate made. Supposing we were calculating now at the present time, we should take the April rating, and we should take from the rate books the exact number of householders who paid rates or who were liable to pay rates. That is to say, supposing a man had three houses, he would count as one rated householder; on the other hand, supposing a house were occupied by five different people in different tenements, that would count as five rated householders.

1106. (Lord Farrer.) If they paid rates themselves? — Well, whether they paid rates or not, it they were liable to pay rates, they are still rated householders.

1107. (Chairman.) Is it a question of their being personally liable, or there being a liability to be rated in respect of these occupations?—If the landlord actually pays, still the tenants are taken as the rated householders, because the rate is included in their rent, that is the rule in the parishes.

1108. (Mr. Smith.) And they are on the rate book?—They are on the rate book; there is a column where the names of these people come in.

1109. (Chairman.) Yes, but they are not, strictly speaking, the persons who pay rates themselves?—They are not the ratepayers, they are the rated householders in the technical sense of the term.

1110. What formula do you use in giving the valuation of these sub-tenants?—Having ascertained the number of vestrymen properly to be apportioned to the parish on the lines laid down in the Act of 1855, we first apportion the number according to rated householders, and then, according to rateable value, we then take the mean of the two, and that brings out a certain figure, and then the nearest figure that is divisible by three is taken as the proper apportionment of the vestrymen upon each ward.

1111. Let us understand what you mean by saying "we take the mean of the two." I will give you an illustration, supposing you had got two districts, one of which has got double the number of population of the other?—Are you dealing now with the vestry or the district board? There are slightly different calculations in either case. For a vestry we only take the rated householders and the rateable value; for the district board we take the rated householders, the population, and the rateable value.

1112. Take the case where you only consider the two elements of rated householders and rateable value, and you have got two districts, this having double the number of rated householders of its neighbour, but the same rateable value. What is the relation of representation?—It would scarcely be two districts; it would be two wards of one parish.

28 July 1893.

1113. Very well. These districts, in a technical sense—I mean two contiguous areas?—Supposing the total number of vestrymen to be allotted to your parish were 60, you would apportion that 60 in the same proportion as the number of rated householders in the two contiguous areas; therefore, one would have double the other according to rated householders. Then, if you came to rateable values, and they were equal, they would have the same,—that is to say, 30 each. Then you would add these two together, and take the mean result to find the number that each ward should have.

1114. According to one system it would be 40 and 20?—Yes.

1115. According to the other, 30 and 30?—30 and 30.

1116. Therefore you would add 40 and 30, making 70—taking the half, 35; and add 20 and 30 = 50, and take the half, 25?—That is so; only that, having got your 35 and 25, you would then take the nearest figure that was divisible by three—because the elected vestrymen have to go out one-third each year, and you must have a figure divisible by three.

1117. So that you would take 36 and 24?—36 and 24.

1118. And if you had three elements to take into consideration, you would, in the same way, take the mean of the three?—Exactly in the same way.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. Charles Harrison recalled and further examined.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. C. Harrison.

1119. (Lord Farrer.) Mr. Dickinson, what is the exact power of the Council in dividing wards? Can they divide any parish on the application of the parish?—They can divide any parish into wards on the application of the parish; but when that is once done they cannot divide it again.

1120. They are functi officio?—Yes, their power becomes defunct; and we are bringing in a Bill this year to enable us to re-divide.

1121. There have been applications, I think?—There have been several applications for varying the divisions afterwards.

1122. (Chairman.) You have to make a correction as to the number of vestries and district boards in the metropolis?—Yes, the real numbers are 26 vestries and 13 district boards, and one local board, the Local Board of Woolwich.*

1123. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that a recent alteration in number?—Well, I presume Mr. Rotton's mistake was owing to the fact that there has been an alteration three years ago. Westminster was altered, and Battersea and Wandsworth were altered, and Hammersmith and Fulham. The present result is 26 vestries, 13 district boards, and one local board. That makes 40 altogether; and then, in addition, there are eight small extra-parochial places, and then, in addition to that, of course the Commissioners of Sewers in the City.

1124. (Lord Farrer.) The Council have no power to alter the divisions of parishes, have they—to alter the areas of parishes?—No, not to alter the boundaries of parishes; they can define wards.

1125. Within parishes?—Within parishes.

1126. (Mr. Smith.) The Divided Parishes Act does not apply to the metropolis?—I cannot say; I do not think it does apply to the metropolis at all.

1127. (Lord Farrer.) Is there not power under the Act to take a case before the Local Government Board—to bring a case of boundary of a parish before the Local Government Board?—Yes, there is. We can do that in every case. We have stated that on page 29. We can "represent to the "Local Government Board the desirability of the "alteration of boundary; of the union of county "boroughs with the county; of the union of any "counties or boroughs or the division of the county; "of the alteration of boundaries of electoral divisions, "or of the number of county councillors and "electoral divisions; of the alteration of any area "of local government partly situate in the county."

1128. (Mr. Crawford.) That is under the Local Government Act?—That is under the Local Government Act.

1129. (Chairman.) That is a general power of all county councils?—That is a general power of all county councils—to represent to the Local Government Board; but I understood Lord Farrer's question was whether the London Council could do this by itself.

1130. Take such a case as this, which might be dealt with under the Divided Parishes Act. Have you any power of making a representation in regard to the part of Chelsea, which is wholly detached—Kensal Green?—Oh, yes, under this, I think, we should.

1131. Under those words?—We are at the present moment making an application for an alteration of the boundary of Hornsey.

1132. Does that deal with a totally separate part?—That is a separate part; that is outside London. There is a portion of Hornsey which is geographically inside London, and we wish to put it inside London for all purposes, and there is a portion of London geographically in Middlesex which we want to put into Middlesex for all purposes.

1133. That is an alignment of an existing boundary?—That is an alteration.

1134. Here is a detached portion of a parish, wholly detached—the one I submitted to you—the outlying part of Chelsea?—I think it would come under a section of the Local Government Act.

* See Rotton, 89.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. C. Harrison.

28 July 1893.

1135. Which sections are you dwelling upon?—Section 54 and section 57. "Whenever it is represented by the council of any county to the Local Government Board, that the alteration of any area of local government partly situated in their county is desirable, the Local Government Board shall, unless for special reasons they think that the representation ought not to be entertained, cause to be made a local inquiry, and may make an order for the proposal contained in such representation or for such other proposal as they may deem expedient, or may refuse such order, and if they make the order may by such order divide or alter any electoral division."

1136. (Mr. Smith.) I think the words of the Divided Parishes Act are not precise; they deal with distinct parts of parishes, outlaying parts of parishes, I think—that Act that I am alluding to?—Section 57 is: "Whenever a county council is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out as respects any parish, for a proposal for all or any of the following things, that is to say:—(a) the alteration or definition of the boundary thereof, (b) the division thereof or the union thereof, with any other parish or parishes, or the transfer of part of a parish to another parish" and so on "the County Council may cause such inquiry to be made in the locality, and such notice to be given, both in the locality and to the Local Government Board, Educational Department, or other government department as may be prescribed, and such other inquiry and notices (if any) as they think fit, and if satisfied that such proposal is desirable, may make an order for the same accordingly."

1137. (Mr. Crawford.) The order has to be confirmed in every instance, has it not, by the Local Government Board?—Oh, yes, that order has to be confirmed.

1138. (Chairman.) By a provisional order?—By a provisional order.

1139. (Lord Farrer.) And that extends to boundaries of the counties themselves, does it not?—The boundaries of the counties come under section 54, when the alteration of the boundary of any county is desirable—54 is the future alterations of counties, and 57 is the future alterations of districts and parishes and wards.

1140. (Mr. Crawford.) And then you will find a saving power to the Local Government Board, under sub-section 7 of section 57?—Yes. "This section shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of any power of the Local Government Board in respect of the union or division or alteration of parishes."

1141. (The Secretary.) That provisional order would have to be confirmed by Parliament?—Yes.

1142. (Chairman.) Next, in Questions 124, 125, 126, we understood from Mr. Rotton that the administrative county of London never went outside the metropolitan police area?—The police district is not a circle of 15 miles.

1143. It is an irregular line?—It is an irregular line varying with boundaries of certain parishes within 15 miles, and we can let you have a map showing the police area if you desire it.

1144. But the important question was, whether the administrative county ran at any points beyond the police area?—Oh, at no place, no.

1145. (Mr. Smith.) I think Mr. Rotton, in answer to a question by me (Question 134), explained:—(Q.) "Fifteen miles regulated by the parish boundary?—(A.) Yes." ?—Yes, just so.

1146. (Chairman.) The question was raised as to whether certain powers to make bye-laws had been exercised (Question 225), Mr. Rotton said, "whether the bye-laws have been sealed or not, I do not remember, but they have been exercised, or are being exercised"?—They have been actually sealed, on the 28th of June, 1893. We have a copy which I shall supply.

1147. Mr. Rotton gave evidence on the 9th of June, 1893?—In Question 220 there is a verbal alteration I would point out to you; it is an omission of the word "not."

1148. "In matters relating to sewers," instead of "in matters not relating to sewers"?—Yes.

1149. Question 229—what have you about it?—I only wish to remove a possible misapprehension. The question is, "And have they been appealed to on the ground of default?" Mr. Rotton says, "I believe not." As a matter of fact, we have taken action in one case, in regard to Rotherhithe, though I do not think we shall have to take any farther action in the matter, because what have been done has been sufficient We have carried out the provisions of this Act to a very great extent already.

1150. (Lord Farrer.) The mere fact of the knowledge that the power exists is very often sufficient to get the thing done?—Yes; that is practically where our strength lies in this matter. We have succeeded in obtaining action. From the 1st January 1892 to the 30th June 1893 we have dealt with 1,068 cases of complaints which have all been rectified without taking any further action.

1151. Those are since the Act, are they?—Yes; that is since the Act; the possibility of taking action in cases of default that has been given to us under the Public Health Act, places us in such a position that our requisitions are almost invariably carried out.

1152. (Chairman.) Question 308, in answer to an inquiry by Mr. Smith, as to the road authorities, Mr. Rotton said, "I do not know whether there were any separate road commissions; it is just possible." Have you exact information on that?—No, I am afraid we cannot go further than to say that there are still some existing. If you would like to have the information, no doubt we could get it.

1153. But you know that there are existing commissions?—Yes.

1154. Mr. Rotton stated that there might be one in Regent Street. Do you know anything about that?—Regent Street stands in a peculiar position, I believe, altogether. I cannot give any information personally about that.

1155. (Lord Farrer.) That is a matter that concerns the vestries more than the Council?—Yes. Regent Street was made by the Crown Commissioners.

1156. And paving is no business of the Council excepting in their own streets?—That is so.

1157. (Chairman.) Question 355. That is with respect to water supply, apparently—that question?—Yes; section 116 of the Metropolis Management Act does undoubtedly give power to the vestries to sink wells for the water that they require for their own purposes, and it is rather doubtful whether the statement of Mr. Rotton is right. Section 116 is as follows:—"Every vestry and district board shall have full power and authority to cause all or any of the streets in their parish or district to be watered as often as they think fit, and also to cause any wells to be dug and sunk in such public places as they think proper, and also to erect and fix any pumps in any public places for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the parish or district." But then there is a proviso in section 150: "Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorise the said metropolitan board, or any district board or vestry, to use or permit to be used any such works for the purpose of carrying water by supply pipes into any house or factory for domestic, manufacturing, or commercial purposes." I thought it right to draw your attention to that, because, in Mr. Rotton's evidence rather, there is a doubt on the point.

1158. (Lord Farrer.) They may set up a parish pump to be used gratuitously?—Yes, they may do that.

1159. (Chairman.) But they could not convey the water from the pump, apparently, to the houses?—They may get the water for their own purposes, and for gratuitous purposes.

1160. Have you anything to say about Baths and Wash-houses?—I think Mr. Rotton was in error in saying that they were in the hands of the Commissioners of Sewers in the City. As I read the Acts the authority to adopt them in the City would be the vestries of the several parishes, but, as a matter of fact, I believe the Acts have not been adopted at all in the City.

1160*a*. Then as to Question 417?—Yes. What I desire to do is rather a correction of Lord Farrer's remark that the County Council never promoted an Order; they did promote a Bill for the tramway over Westminster Bridge.

1161. (Lord Farrer.) That was where the bridge belonged to the Council?—Yes; where the Embankment belonged to us.

1162. (Chairman.) Question 454, that is, the county asylums. Mr. Rotton gave Hanwell, Claybury, and Colney Hatch?—There are five asylums, really, Banstead and Cane Hill in addition to the three he mentioned.

1163. (Lord Farrer.) And it is proposed to make another?—Yes, there is a proposal to make another one.

1164. (Chairman.) Then the next question is, what vestries have done in respect of appointing burial boards? Mr. Rotton said that outside the City each vestry appoints the burial board for the parish?—He stated in 456: "Each vestry has, or "may have, I presume, a burial board of its own." It varies very much in different parts of the metropolis. They have not all got burial boards.

1165. (Mr. Crawford.) But have they the power to have a burial board?—Yes, they can appoint burial boards.

1166. I mean to say the answer would be correct "has, or may have"?—Yes.

1167. (Chairman.) But in Question 455, I think the impression you would have in reading it was that they did it?—Yes, that is so.

1168. The answer to Question 455 says: "The "Commissioners of Sewers are the burial board for "the City, and outside the City, each vestry appoints "the burial board for the parish." More strictly it has the power to do so?—It has the power to do so.

1169. But they have not all exercised it?—They have not all exercised it; and in each case it varies.

1170. (Mr. Smith.) That is, power to appoint a board, not to be themselves the burial board?—No; to appoint a board. The burial board is a separate body almost.

1171. We are so accustomed to merge them in municipalities in large towns?—Yes.

1172. (The Secretary.) Are they appointed by resolution?—They are appointed by the vestry; elected by the vestry, by resolution.

1173. (Chairman.) In the second day, Questions 467 to 471?—Well, we thought that perhaps on these questions of population and acreage it would be well if we handed you a table which gives the areas of all these different parishes, especially as figures seem always to vary. For instance, we have discovered that the area of London according to the census was 20 acres less in 1891 than it was in 1881. It has rather alarmed us, so we should like to check it. We have written to the census authorities to find out how it is.

1174. What London is that?—That is the Administrative County of London, and in Mr. Rotton's answer he talks of the county of London, but, of course he means the Administrative County of London. I thought, if you would allow us, we would hand you that table, and when it is printed perhaps you will allow us to correct it, because that point requires looking into, and we should send you in the accurate figures.

1175. You hand in a table giving the area, rateable value, inhabited houses, and population, according to the last census of the City, the County, the Administrative County, and the extra London Metropolitan Police District?—Yes, compiled from the Census tables of 1891.

	City of London.	County of London.	Administrative County of London.	Extra London Metropolitan Police.						Total City and Metropolitan Police.
				Middlesex.	Surrey.	Kent.	Essex.	Hertford.	Total.
Area (in acres) - -	671	74,771	75,442	149,046	80,058	42,516	60,466	35,893	367,979	443,421
Rateable Value (1891)	4,100,798	28,998,515	33,099,313	3,259,672	2,022,627	656,465	1,655,035	237,696	7,831,495	40,930,808
Inhabited Houses -	5,340	542,975	548,315	95,088	53,005	17,625	68,448	6,927	241,093	789,408
Population (1891) -	37,705	4,194,413	4,232,118	560,012	295,759	96,716	413,679	35,492	1,401,683	5,633,806

1176. (Mr. Crawford.) I suppose that that table does not deal with the day population of the City?—It deals simply with what the census deals with.

1177. (Lord Farrer.) Do the county and the Administrative County differ in this respect that the City is included in the Administrative County?—There is the City first, and then we put the County of London outside the City; we add those two together, and that makes the Administrative County.

1178. Quite so?—Mr. Rotton, I fancy, has fallen into error in excluding Penge from the County of London; he says that Penge is not included in the Administrative County of London; he is mistaken. I do not know whether you would like to have maps; we could let you have a map of the police district and maps of the county.

1179. (Chairman.) Have you prepared maps for yourselves?—Yes, we have prepared a map of the Metropolitan Police District; we could let you have a copy of it.

1180. We have such maps already?—Oh, you have.

1181. You will put in that map?—Yes, and we will supply you with some copies of it. It shows the Administrative County of London, the area of the Metropolitan Police, and the Central Criminal Court; they all vary. (Map put in.)

1182. At Question 508 we were examining Mr. Rotton as to the powers of the County Council outside the City in respect of street frontages and of buildings?—Generally speaking that is accurate, only he omits that we have a power under 25 & 26 Victoria, chapter 102, section 74, under which we can set back buildings projecting beyond the general line when they have been taken down to an extent exceeding one half.

1183. What do those last words mean, "on being "taken down to an extent exceeding one half," when half the house is down?—When half the house is down we can require them to set it back on paying compensation.

1184. What is half the house down—half the base?

1185. (Mr. Smith.) Pulled down to half its height, I suppose you mean?—Yes.

1186. (Chairman.) You do not mean that, surely—pulled down to half its height?—The words of the Act are as follow:—"In case any build-"ing, situated within any of the parishes, dis-"tricts, or places comprised in the schedules of "the firstly-recited Act, which shall in any part "thereof project beyond the general line of the "street in which the same may be situate, or "beyond the front of the building, wall, or railing "on either side thereof, shall at any time be taken

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. C. Harrison.

28 July 1893.

" down to an extent exceeding one half of such " building, such half to be measured in cubic feet, " or shall be destroyed by fire or other casualty, or " demolished, pulled down, or removed from any " other cause to the extent aforesaid, it shall be " lawful for the Metropolitan Board of Works to " require the same to be set back to such a line " and in such a manner for the improvement of any " street as the said Board shall direct; provided that " the said Board shall make compensation to the owners " of such building for any damage and expenses " which he may sustain and incur thereby: Pro- " vided also that this section shall not apply to any " building in the places mentioned in Schedule C. " to the Metropolis Local Management Act, which " does not abut upon any public street or place."

1187. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a slight extension of the City Sewers Act of 1848?—Yes.

1188. (Chairman.) It is very extraordinary that if a man cut off the top of a house he might be required to put it back?—We could compel him to pull down the whole.

(Mr. Smith.) You could hardly take away the bottom.

(Chairman.) It might be cut down vertically.

1189-91. (Mr. Smith.) If the back of it is pulled down to the extent of one-half, you may set back the front?—Yes. I suppose that stands to reason; it is the front that we want to get rid of.

1192. (The Secretary.) How would you do that, taking a house between two houses?—It is only when that projects; you cannot attack a house that does not project.

1193. Supposing there were three houses projecting, and one was cut down?—It would be a question whether it did project, a question for the courts as to whether it did project.

1194. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not know whether you would care to have the section relating to the City, I can give you that; section 153 of the City of London Sewers Act of 1848.

1195. (Chairman.) The corresponding section?

1196. (Mr. Crawford.) It does not go quite to the extent of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862?—Does it not, I thought it did; they certainly have the very best powers in the City.

1197. The section is 153, "And be it enacted, " that if any building which shall in any part thereof " project beyond the regular line of the street in " which the same may be situate, or beyond the front " of the building, wall, or railing on either side " thereof, shall at any time be taken down to be " rebuilt or altered, it shall be lawful for the Com- " missioners to require the same to be set backwards " to such a line and in such a manner as the Commis- " sioners shall direct for the improvement of such " street, the Commissioners making full compen- " sation to the owner of such building for any damage " which he may sustain thereby."

1198. (Chairman.) The next is Question 505?—In Question 505, Mr. Rotton states: "but in this " case, under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, the " consent of the justices is not required"?—We have no powers under that Act.

1199. (Mr. Crawford.) The powers are in the vestry, really?—The powers are in the vestries and district boards.

1200. (Lord Farrer.) And the vestries have considerably stronger powers in taking land than the Council has?—They have in that respect, certainly.

1201. (Chairman.) Question 515?—That question and those that follow have relation to a suggestion that Mr. Rotton made that we could take land compulsorily under the Public Health Act, 1875, as incorporated under the Local Government Act. Well, I think there is no doubt that we could, if we chose to go through that procedure, but we have never done so, and I do not think we ever should do so, because our procedure is to introduce an Act of Parliament every year for our improvements. I dare say you know that the procedure under that Act would be very cumbersome indeed; we should have to get a provisional order from the Local Government Board, and go through other preliminaries, and then ultimately have to get an Act of Parliament to approve of that.

1202. You have many of these things every year to undertake, you go for one Bill for all?—Practically every year we bring in a General Powers Bill for our improvements.

1203. In question 550 a question is raised a propos of bridges as to whether you had any right of property in Kew Bridge?—Kew Bridge does not belong to us.

1204. (Lord Farrer.) Whom does Kew Bridge belong to now?—The counties of Middlesex and Surrey; it was freed out of the coal dues.

1205. Freed out of the coal dues, but maintained by these two counties?—It is maintained by these two counties.

1206. (Chairman.) Question 576 is a question by Sir Thomas Farrer as to the gas supply?—The answer to that question would rather lead the Commission to understand that the Council appoints all the gas examiners in London, with the exception of the Corporation, of course; but there are four other smaller gas companies, there is the Putney and Wandsworth, the Mitcham Gas Company, the Crystal Palace, and the Brentford.

1207. (Lord Farrer.) Those are not subject to the London Gas Acts, are they?—The examination of the gas is undertaken by men who are appointed by the vestries and the district boards.

1208. Quite so, it is with regard to these three companies, is it not, the Chartered, the South Metropolitan, and the Commercial, that the system of gas referees and gas examiners applies?—That is so; it is correct as far as it goes, but it does not quite complete the subject.

1209. (Chairman.) You have to say there are four other small companies with respect to which the vestry is the local authority to test the gas?—Yes, those are companies that supply both in the county and outside the county as well; they are on the boundary of the county rather.

1210. And do you know whether they do exercise the power?—Oh, yes, they do; at least in the one case that I am practically acquainted with, the Wandsworth Company, the gas inspector always reports once a fortnight to the district board.

1211. To the company; being appointed by the vestry?—He is appointed by, and he reports to, the district board.

1212. (Lord Farrer.) Those companies are not included in the London District Acts and the other Acts which we generally know as the London Gas Acts?—(Mr. Harrison.) The clauses were in the Gas Acts of those particular companies; it is not a general Act; they were provisions inserted on the opposition of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

1213. (Chairman.) Then in Question 593 the same point arises?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Yes, and is subject to the same qualification.

1214. There is no correction in fact to be made?—(Mr. Harrison.) No.

1215. Question 635 is your next?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Mr. Rotton states there, "The great works of " sewerage which were done by the Metropolitan " Board of Works, were done under special Acts for " the most part." That was not so, they were done under the Act of 1855, the Metropolis Management Act, which gave them authority, and the Act which succeeded it too, to carry out the works which were necessary for freeing the Thames from all sewage; to prevent all sewage running into the Thames.

1216. (Lord Farrer.) Without specifying the particular works?—Without specifying the particular works at all, without any plans or estimates at all; they had simply to get rid of the sewage in the best way that they could, and had power to take land compulsorily with the authority of the Secretary of State, and that is a power which we still exercise.

1217. (Mr. Crawford.) And had not the Metropolitan Board of Works special Acts besides that general Act?—With regard to sewage?

1218. Yes?—No, I do not think they thought it necessary to get a special Act.

1219. (Lord Farrer.) The Council are now making two large new main sewers, one on the north and one on the south of the Thames?—Yes, plans are being got out for them.

1220. That will be done under those powers?—That will be done under those powers.

1221. Without going to Parliament for any special powers?—Without going to Parliament for any special powers.

1222. Except for the purpose of borrowing?—Except for the purpose of obtaining the money in the ordinary way every year. I would read you the clause: "Provided always, that the provisions of "the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 'with "'respect to the purchase and taking of lands other-"'wise than by agreement,' shall not be incorporated "with this Act, save for enabling the Metropolitan "Board of Works to take land or any right or ease-"ment in or over land, for the purpose of making "any sewers or works, for preventing the sewage or "any part of the sewage within the metropolis from "passing into the Thames, in or near the metropolis, "or otherwise for the purpose of the sewage or "drainage of the metropolis: Provided also that no "land, or right, or easement in or over land, for the "purposes aforesaid shall be taken compulsorily by "the said Board without the previous consent in "writing of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries "of State." That lays down a procedure which we still adopt in the Council for main drainage works.

1223. (Mr. Smith.) It gives you all the powers of the Lands Clauses Act?—Yes.

1224. (Mr. Crawford.) Were you reading from the Act of 1855?—Section 152 of the Metropolis Management Act of 1855.

1225. Did not the Metropolitan Board of Works get some additional powers by the Main Drainage Act of 1858?—Yes, the next year they got further powers, but I do not think it affected this point.

1226. Mr. Rotton may have been referring to those two Acts probably, the 1858 and 1862 Acts?—Yes, probably.

1227. (Chairman.) Then your next observation refers to several questions as to the power and operation of a rate?—Yes, on Question 706.

1228. Between the county and the parishes?—Mr. Rotton first makes the statement that the county rate outside the City is levied through the overseers. Well, that is a general statement which is both correct and incorrect. Of course, the county rate is levied by us through the guardians, and then they levy it through the overseers, although the overseers vary in the different parts. Perhaps, if I may just read a note that I have made on this, it would state fairly what the accurate position of affairs with regard to the county rate is, because that affects all these Questions, 706 to 724. The county rate, as made upon the parishes, does not vary, but as empty property and property in respect of which overseers compound for the payment of rates, vary considerably in the different parishes, it results that, to meet a central rate of 1*s.* in the £, it may be necessary to levy a rate of 1*s.* 2*d.*, or more, or less. Therefore to this extent there may be local variations in regard to the central rate. That is in answer to the statement that the county rate does not vary. Of course, the rate which we make does not vary, but when it is collected it does vary in different parts of London. The Council do not deal with the overseers, but with the guardians of the poor, and it is the guardians who send down their contribution orders not only for their own expenses but for the parish contribution to the County Council expenses to the overseers of each parish. The overseers, or the body equivalent to them, are the ultimate rating authority in all London, but the Council have no connexion with the overseers in respect of their precepts unless default occurs in payment. The answer to question 712, therefore, is inaccurate. [A list of the bodies to whom the Council's precepts are sent is attached]:—

TABLE showing the Local Authorities in London through and by whom the Council's levy of the County Rate is collected:—

Bodies on whom the Council's Precepts are served, and who pay the Precepts. (1.)	Bodies who collect the Amount of the Precepts, paying them over to the Bodies in Col. 1. (2.)

28 July 1893.

Bodies on whom the Council's Precepts are served, and who pay the Precepts. (1.)	Bodies who collect the Amount of the Precepts, paying them over to the Bodies in Col. 1. (2.)
Guardians of Stepney Union -	Overseers of Limehouse. Churchwardens, Overseers, and Trustees of Ratcliffe (Hamlet). Overseers of Shadwell. Overseers of Wapping.
Guardians of Strand Union -	Overseers of Liberty of the Rolls. Overseers of St. Clement Danes. Overseers of St. Martin in the Field. Overseers of St. Mary-le-Strand. Overseers of St. Paul, Covent Garden. Overseers of Precinct of the Savoy.
Guardians of Wandsworth and Clapham Union.	Overseers of Battersea. Overseers of Clapham. Overseers of Putney. Overseers of Streatham. Overseers of Tooting Graveney. Overseers of Wandsworth.
Guardians of Westminster Union.	Overseers of St. Anne. Vestry of St. James.
Guardians of Whitechapel Union.	Overseers of Aldgate. Overseers of Christchurch. Overseers of Mile End New Town. Overseers of Minories. Overseers and Trustees of Norton Folgate. Overseers of Old Artillery Ground. Overseers of Old Tower. Overseers of St. Katherine. Trustees of Whitechapel.
Guardians of Woolwich Union	Overseers of Charlton. Overseers of Kidbrook. Overseers of Plumstead. Local Board of Woolwich.
The Treasurer and the Overseers of Gray's Inn.	The Steward of Gray's Inn.
The Treasurer and the Overseers of Lincoln's Inn.	The Treasurer of Lincoln's Inn.
Guardians of Holborn Union -	Guardians of Clerkenwell. Overseers of the Charterhouse. Overseers of Saffron Hill. Governors and Directors of St. Andrew and St. George. Vestry of St. Luke. Overseers of St. Sepulchre. [The owners of Staple Inn pay all rates. The owner of Furnival's Inn pays all rates.]
Guardians of the City of London Union.	Overseers of Glasshouse Yard. [The owner of Furnival's Inn pays all rates.] Overseers of the several parishes in the City of London.
The Treasurer and the Overseers of the Inner Temple.	[No rates are levied in the Inner Temple, being all paid by the Society.]
The Treasurer and the Overseers of the Middle Temple.	[No rates are levied in the Middle Temple, being all paid by the Society.]

1229. You hand in that list?—We hand in that list. That shows you exactly the local authorities in London through and by whom the Council's levy of the county rate is collected.

1230. You address your orders to the guardians of the several unions and to the treasurer and overseers of the extra-parochial areas of Gray's Inn and Lincoln's Inn?—That is so, yes.

1231. The Inner and Middle Temples? — That is so.

1232. And then it passes through these guardians to the overseers or vestries of particular districts?—Yes, it passes through the persons or corporations who are the overseers, and these vary very greatly indeed. You will see, for instance, the persons who collect the rates in Bethnal Green are the overseers of Bethnal Green, and also in Camberwell; but in Chelsea it is the guardians, and in Hampstead it is the vestry, and in Islington it is the vestry, and in Kensington it is the vestry.

1233. St. George's in the East certain trustees?—Certain trustees.

1234. St. Pancras, directors of the poor?—Directors of the poor of St. Pancras.

1235. All those are under local Acts?—They are generally under local Acts.

1236. Then you come to these legal islands; they are the treasurers or the stewards?—Yes. Before the Local Government Act was passed the Metropolitan Board of Works used to collect their money from the district boards, and therefore it made a great change in the collection of rates, because we have to collect it through the guardians.. And, as Mr. Harrison reminds me, it had a very important effect on the incidence, because originally the Metropolitan Board of Works' rate was called a sewers rate, and was subject to deduction by the landlord, and now it is no longer a sewers rate at all; it is a poor rate, and subject to no deduction of any kind.

1237. (Mr. Smith.) Like a borough rate?—Yes.

1238. (Lord Farrer.) Was there actually, in the time of the Metropolitan Board of Works, a deduction made? — (Mr. Harrison.) Oh, yes; the metropolitan consolidated rate was required by the statute to be made in three portions: the general rate, the sewers rate, and the fire brigade rate; and it was required to be satisfied in these proportions. The fire brigade rate was limited in the amount which could be levied, and the certificates were given by vestries, and were bound to be given by vestries to tenants who applied, for the purpose of certifying how much was deducted from the rate for the sewers rate, so that they could deduct it afterwards from the landlord.

1239. So that they could deduct it? — Oh, yes; and in an immense number of cases; 7,000 certificates were granted per annum. Then the Act abolished the rate levied by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and converted it into a county rate, altering the incidence of the rate, because it was levied as a poor rate.

1240. There has been some talk about that in the House of Commons? — Yes. Mr. Ritchie had promised to introduce a Bill.

1241. That Bill was never introduced?—Never.

1242. (Mr. Smith.) It is a common covenant in London leases that the tenant should pay all rates, including sewers rate?—Yes, no doubt; but there is a great number of three-years' agreements which do not follow that form; and not only that, but if the occupying lease has not been granted in modern days, it does not contain that, as a rule, particularly in the old ground leases. London was not built up in a day. The old ground leases expressly used to run in that form: land tax, sewers rate, and tithe always excepted.

1243. (Chairman.) You have something to say also about the School Board rate?—(Mr. Dickinson.) There also seems to be some inaccuracy in the answers as to the School Board rate, which is levied by precepts upon the vestries and district boards under the schedules of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and on the Commissioners of Sewers in the City. The vestries and district boards include the amount of the precept in their own contribution orders upon the overseers, and thus the overseers are again the ultimate authority for rating. In this respect some curious anomalies exist, as, for instance, in some small portions of the parishes of Whitechapel and Shoreditch, and in Ely Place, where houses locally situated in these parishes are drained into the City sewers, and rated accordingly. The School Board rate, falling on the vestries and district boards, in these cases do not include these houses, which are, so far as the rate is concerned, included in the City Commissioners of Sewers' levy.*

1244. Those would be minute variations, I suppose?—Yes, those are only minute variations.

1245. Then question 762?—That was with regard to the period for which the Metropolitan Board of Works, and now the Council, could borrow. Mr. Rotton states that the Acts "stated in regard to "each sum, the borrowing of which was authorised, "that provision was to be made for the payment of "an equivalent amount of consolidated stock within "so many years." The Act only states the maximum term of 60 years for the payment of all the consolidated stock in respect of which we borrow.

1246. There is some limitation to secure that certain sums shall be paid?—(Mr. Harrison.) Only in the form of the sinking fund, which is an annually revised amount to be fixed each year by the Treasury—to be fixed by the Council, with the consent of the Treasury—and they are the guardians annually for examining the Consolidated Loans Fund, and seeing that it is being accumulated at a proper rate.

1247. (Lord Farrer.) And that each loan that is made out of that fund is repaid within whatever is determined on as the proper period?—(Mr. Dickinson.) Within 60 years.

1248. It being always within 60 years?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes. But some few years ago, in 1881, when the Consolidated Loans Fund began to accumulate to a very large sum, authority was given by the Money Act to employ, with the consent of the Treasury, cash on that Consolidated Loans Fund Account in the form of loans to any of the bodies that we were authorised to lend borrowed capital to, provided that the money so taken out of the Consolidated Loans Fund was brought back within the period of years to which the fund belonged.

1249. Quite so; but within that period there is always a limit put on each loan that is made to a local body with reference to restricting the period for which it is borrowed?—(Mr. Dickinson.) In regard to the local authorities, it stands on rather a different footing, because the local authorities are only enabled to borrow for 60 years for the purchase of land, and for 30 years for erecting buildings: therefore, when we borrow money in order to lend it to them for 60 years, they have to make provision for its repayment in 60 years, both from themselves and into our consolidated loans fund; and when we lend them for 30 years we have to do the same thing—make provision for their repaying to us the money in 30 years, and also providing in the Consolidated Loans Fund the same amount of money in 30 years.

1250. And you also, beyond that, impose a limit, having reference to the particular purpose for which the sum is borrowed?—We, ourselves, very often lend for less than 30 years.

1251. If it is for paving, for instance, you limit it to five years or seven years?—Yes, we exercise our discretion. (Mr. Harrison.) They may not borrow without our consent; and in exercising our consent we have regard to the life of the work, and if a parish applies for a loan for paving or other purposes we have, as a finance committee, before us the report of the engineer and of the valuer as to the life of the particular work, and we fix the period of loan with reference to that.

1252. Is the control entirely with the Council?—Absolutely.

1253. Or do the Local Government Board have any voice in that?—It depends; in some authorities they have to get the previous consent of the Local Government Board before they come to us; still, notwithstanding the consent of the Local Government Board, we exercise a supervision.

1254. You always exercise it: but in some cases the consent of the Local Government Board is required, too, for the term?—Yes, it depends upon the particular authority that is borrowing.

1255. (Mr. Smith.) Then they come to you with the Local Government Board's sanction in those cases?—They bring us, in those cases, the consent of the Local Government Board.

1256. In others you determine for yourselves, where you have the power?—In other cases we have absolute control.

1257. It is a repayment within a repayment really; the minor repayment you settle in a general way, and sometimes the Local Government Board, too; then you are all governed by a Consolidated Loans Fund limit of 60 years?—Yes, that is so. Of course, the Consolidated Loans Fund is only for the repayment of the capital borrowed by the Council.

1258. I quite understand?—

1259. You were talking of your power to use money out of the Consolidated Loans Fund for the purpose of lending to local authorities. I think the Act to which you refer also gives you power to apply that money to loans which you require for your own work, does it not?

1260. (The Secretary.) I think that was a later Act, of 1885?—Yes.

1261. (Mr. Smith.) You have the power?—Yes, there is such a power.

1262. I know, because I appropriated it?—

1263. (Lord Farrer.) Then you treat advances for your own purposes in much the same way as you treat loans to other bodies?—Internally we do.

(Mr. Dickinson.) Would it be any use if I ran shortly through the last Money Act? We first obtain power that the County Council may during the financial year and six months afterwards spend certain sums of money on capital account which are all specified for particular objects, and then at the end of that section there is a provision that money expended under the authority of this section should be repayable within such term, not exceeding in any case 60 years, as the Council, with the consent of the Treasury, may determine. Then there are similar sections with regard to other expenditure for works authorised during the session, and then there is a section which gives us power to lend money, specific sums, to the various public bodies; first to lend to a vestry or district boards, or commissioners, or burial boards, last year 420,000*l.* And then the commissioners of public libraries, and boards of guardians, and the managers of the Metropolitan Asylums District, and the London School Board. In each case the amount of money which we may lend to them in the course of the year is stated. Then in such instances in which the approval of the Local Government Board or the Treasury is necessary it is stated that "money borrowed from or lent by "the Council under this section shall be repaid to "the Council with interest within such time after "the borrowing as the borrowers, with the consent of "the Local Government Board, and the Council, with "the approval of the Treasury, shall agree, not "exceeding 30 years." Then there is a similar provision with regard to the boards of guardians, namely, that it is to be paid back, and the time approved of by the Local Government Board, and in no case to exceed 30 years. And with respect to the School Board it must be paid back within 50 years, "such time after the borrowing not exceeding 50 "years as the School Board, with the sanction (as the "case may require) of the Education Department or "of a Secretary of State, and the Council, with the "approval of the Treasury, shall agree."

1264. (Mr. Crawford.) Must the School Board borrow through you?—They are not obliged to, but they do, of course, very largely. The next section is that in order to raise the money to provide for all these payments, the Council may create a consolidated stock and the following provisions shall have effect: "Where the Council, under the authority of this Act "create consolidated stock to raise money to enable "them to make a loan repayable within a period not "exceeding 30 years from the date of such loan, the "Council shall from time to time carry to the "Consolidated Loans Fund such sums as the "Treasury approve as being in their opinion sufficient "to redeem within the period of 30 years from the "date of the creation of such stock, or within any "less period for which any such loan may be made, "an amount of consolidated stock equal to that so "created. Where the Council under the authority "of this Act create consolidated stock to raise money "for the purpose of the Fire Brigade Act, 1865, the "Council shall from time to time carry to the "Consolidated Loans Fund such sums as the "Treasury approve as being in their opinion sufficient "to redeem within the period of 30 years from "the date of the creation of such stock, or within "any less period for which any such loan may be "made, an amount of consolidated stock equal to "that so created." That this year we have obtained the consent of Parliament to enlarge. Then comes the clause: "Where the Council are by this Act "authorised to make a loan, the Council, instead of "raising money for any such loan by the creation of "consolidated stock, may use for any such loan any "money for the time being forming part of the "Consolidated Loans Fund, and not required for the "payment of the dividends on consolidated stock. "Provided that no such money shall be used for "any loan repayable at a date later than the date "at which the consolidated stock redeemable by "means of the money so used is required to be "redeemed." That is the power that enables us to use money of the Consolidated Loans Fund, and then it goes on: "Where the Council are authorised by "this Act to raise money for any purpose, the "Council, instead of raising such money by the "creation of consolidated stock may, with the ap- "proval of the Treasury, use for such purpose any "money for the time being forming part of the "Consolidated Loans Fund, and not required for "the payment of the dividends on consolidated "stock. Provided that no such money shall be so "used unless provision shall be made in such manner "as the Treasury approve for repaying the same to "the Consolidated Loans Fund at or before the date "at which consolidated stock redeemable by means "of such money is required to be redeemed, and in "every such case the Council shall raise, as part of the "county rate, such sums as the Treasury approve as "being in their opinion sufficient for the repayment "at or before the date aforesaid of the money used "for such purpose and for the payment of the "interest on the money so used, and such sums shall "be carried by the Council to the Consolidated Loans "Fund." Then there are some minor provisions, and then the only important clause after that is: "During the financial period the Council "shall not (except for such temporary period "not exceeding six months, as the Treasury may "sanction) raise otherwise than in conformity with "and to the extent mentioned in this Act any money "under any powers of borrowing conferred upon the "Council either by this Act or any other Act "whatsoever," so that that limits us to raising money under this Act only.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. Harrison.

28 July 1893.

1265. (Chairman.) Mr. Rotton's answer to question 762 appears to have been quite correct, though not going into so much detail as you have done?—What number?

1266. Question 762; all this is apropos of that?—Yes, I do not think Mr. Rotton is inaccurate; it was in pursuance of this conversation that I put that before you. Our other point in that is really that the Council has not issued Metropolitan Bills.

1267. As to question 766, you tell us that the Council has never issued bills?—No, we never have; the Metropolitan Board of Works never did.

1268. Then, in question 782, there was raised the question as to the usage of these sub-authorities to borrow money for themselves, and Mr. Rotton tells us he thought they did not borrow money for themselves. He could not state that as an absolute rule, but he thought not?—Well, they do. The only reason for them to come to us is because they can get it cheaper; that they cannot get it cheaper outside or on better terms.

1269. Is there any characteristic of the terms when they borrow for themselves?—(Mr. Harrison.) No; they borrow chiefly on account of the rate of interest and of the mode of repayment. Many of these applicants require to borrow money on the annuity principle, and the Treasury has refused its consent, and in consequence they have gone elsewhere and borrowed it from an insurance office, and the practical result is that we have been losing customers for the employment of our Consolidated Loans Fund, and the matter is now under the consideration of the Treasury as to whether some other system cannot be adopted to entice these local authorities back again as our customers.

1270. Is it a new practice their going and borrowing for themselves?—Yes, the last two or three years.

1271. Before that power existed, and was not exercised?—No; practically no.

1272. (Mr. Crawford.) Can you give us a reference to any authorities, Mr. Harrison?—Oh, yes; St. Pancras, a 60,000*l.* loan either last year or the year before that for electric lighting purposes. We gave the authority sanction to borrow, and they obtained the money from the Prudential Insurance Office. Other instances: we have another loan for 42,000*l.* from St. Pancras now under consideration, in regard to which they say that unless we consent to their terms they are in a position to borrow the money elsewhere, and they will do so.

1273. (Lord Farrer.) I think the converse happened with the School Board, did it not; that they insisted on borrowing on the instalment principle. We tried to make them borrow on the annuity principle, and they would not have it?—Yes; at present our practice is not to impose one system or the other; we take whatever system they apply for; we want customers for our Consolidated Loans Fund.

1274. (The Secretary.) What is the difference of interest?—The difference of interest I do not really know myself. I have lent largely, professionally, for insurance offices. We have lent a great deal on rates outside London at 3¼ per cent. The School Board of Brighton has a large loan. We lent it at 3¼; but the Prudential and other insurance offices are now very anxious to get hold of these loans, and will lend the money at 3¼ per cent.

1275. (Chairman.) They underbid you?—They underbid us.

1276. Quite apart from the question of the mode of repayment?—From both questions. Of course in an insurance office they do not care a straw which system; they would rather prefer the annuity system.

1277. But a quarter per cent overshadows the importance of the difference between the annuity and the instalment mode of repayment?—It would not be calculated in that way. You see one of the great difficulties is this, half our Consolidated Loans Fund is payable in 1929, which is a very short time, the other half in 1941. It is of great importance to get our capital out, our principal out for the whole term as a balance of that loan, particularly as in a few years it will be so short a period that we do not have customers enough to take it up in short loans, and therefore the annuity principle keeps out the principal so much longer, and we know therefore that this money which has been borrowed at 3½ per cent. on the old lines ought to accumulate on the 3¼ per cent. the longer it is lent out the more security there should be of employing that fund.

1278. (Lord Farrer.) Has there not been a suggestion on the part of the Treasury that if the annuity principle is adopted the time for the currency of the loan should be shortened?—We are in negotiation with the Treasury now on the subject. They have consented to the annuity principle up to 50 years. We have no money applicable for loan purposes longer than 56 years, and application is now being made to extend that time from 50 up to 56 years. It is really a very slight sum in amount, the difference between an annuity of 50 years at 3 per cent., and 56 years at the same rate; it is only 83*l.* a year, and it is nothing, but the principle of objecting to the annuity principle by offering a premium to take it for 56 years on the instalment, produces the friction with the local authority.

1279. The Treasury being inclined always to the instalment principle, the Local Government Board rather lean to the annuity principle, do they not?—All money lent by the Local Government Board is practically on the annuity principle, the millions outside London. Inside London our sinking fund has been always upon the instalment principle; our sinking fund, our loans to bodies other than guardians (which have been on the 30 years' principle, have been always annuity) have been on the instalment principle. But now the bulk of the applications are on the annuity principle for all loans.

1280. (Chairman.) Your memorandum ends with calling attention to what you consider omissions on the part of Mr. Rotton?—We noticed that Mr. Rotton has given no evidence whatever on the branch of the question which relates to the county government outside the city, and as this must form a very important section of the inquiry before the Commission, we think it right to draw the Commissioners' attention to this omission. We have prepared another statement.

1281. This last statement you hand in has a bearing upon that part of the inquiry?—Yes. Mr. Kemp, who has been working for us, prepared that; he will be prepared to present it to you, and to give evidence upon it.

1282. (Lord Farrer.) I see it is stated in the agenda paper of the Council for this week that you have been, and are still, collecting further information, some of which relates to the City, and other parts of which, probably, relate to other parts of the subject. I suppose in due time you will be quite willing to give us that?—Oh, yes; as I said last time, whenever the Commission think it would be useful for us to give them the information we have got, we shall be prepared to give it to the whole extent that we possess it.

1283. (Chairman.) Have you got your second statement there?—Yes.

1284. There are certain portions of your administrative work in respect of which Mr. Rotton gave us little or no information. Perhaps you could tell us something about it. Page 3, with respect to the embankments and highways, prevention of floods?—With regard to the embankments, our duty now is restricted to their maintenance, as the embankments have been constructed along the Thames. Of course, if the embankments have to be extended, the construction of further embankments will fall to us to carry out. These embankments are the Victoria Embankment, the Albert Embankment, and the Chelsea Embankment.

1285. You have made some alterations in respect of portions of the embankments. You have altered some parts of the Chelsea Embankment, have you not?—That was in connexion with Battersea Bridge. A slight alteration has been made, but nothing of much moment.

1286. Have you not, nearer Pimlico?—Yes, in connexion with new Battersea Bridge. We had to build up a portion of the embankment close to that bridge; but I do not remember that we have made any important structural alteration in that since we have been in power.

1287. You have altered the character of the frontage opposite Chelsea Gardens?—That would be at Battersea Bridge, would it not?

1288. No, it is lower down; it has no connexion with Battersea Bridge?—Perhaps I am wrong; we did make some alterations.

1289. And at Millbank, fronting Grosvenor Road; are you doing anything there?—Not at present.

1290. That is now in your hands?—Yes, that will be in our hands, the whole of that.

1291. If you had to do anything there, it would be something more than maintenance?—Oh, yes. We should have to do everything in connexion with the embankments. I only wished to say that the embankments have been constructed in those portions, and therefore their repairs and alterations fell to us chiefly in regard to them. Then that comes under the question of the prevention of floods. That is the power which we execute upon private individuals. We can compel private individuals whose property is liable to floods so to protect that property that their property and the neighbouring property shall not be flooded by high tides. When we first came into existence, we caused a very elaborate survey to be made of the whole of the banks—40 miles—of the Thames; and upon that survey we have served notices on practically all of those private individuals, and they are now being carried out. Notices, of course, have also been served on vestries in some cases where a vestry has property abutting on the river. They have to make the necessary provision against floods, and then they have a special power by which they can charge that expenditure on a portion of the parish which is benefited by it.

1292. But you have the power of setting them in motion?—Yes, we set them in motion.

1293. If they are laggard, you call upon them to do the work?—Yes, we treat them exactly as a private individual, and compel them to do it.

1294. In fact, you are the exclusive authority with respect to the riverside?—We are the exclusive authority as regards the floods, yes. There ought to be an amended reference to that point—the prevention of floods. It is not to Appendix, page 24; it should be Appendix, page 17—Appendix, page 24 and page 17.

1295. Now with respect to parks; we have not much information with respect to your authority over parks?—I think, if you turn to page 30, you will see there is a list of all the parks, the Acts of Parliament under which we hold them, the acreage of the parks.

1296. And your powers over the parks which are under your control?—Yes.

1297. Have those been extended of late?—We have the powers under the General Act, the Public Act, the Open Spaces Act. Under that Act we can purchase any land for open spaces, but most of these large open spaces have been purchased under special Acts or special schemes, and at the present moment we generally take advantage of our annual General Powers Bill to insert in it any provisions we wish in purchasing open spaces. For instance, this year in purchasing Hackney Marshes we could not carry that out without an Act of Parliament, because there were a great many varying interests in it, that could only be really satisfied by an Act of Parliament, and therefore we put that into our General Powers Bill this year, and under that Act we have power to purchase the Hackney Marshes, and under that Act Hackney Marshes vests in us should there be any question of title there.

1298. (Mr. Crawford.) The expenses in connexion with open spaces all come out of the county rate?—Yes, the expenses all come out of the county rate.

1299. And the City contributes?—And the City contributes, yes.

1300. (Chairman.) Have you obtained any additional powers with respect to the management of parks of late?—I do not think we want any additional powers with regard to the management of parks. There was a legal question raised once, whether we had a right to put up small buildings for refreshment-houses and conveniences. We had that set at rest by a clause in our Act of Parliament. As regards the maintenance, practically the Acts of Parliament are sufficient to give us full powers for maintenance; we have full powers of making byelaws to any extent.

28 July 1892.

1301. (Mr. Smith.) You have special powers as to bands, too?—Yes, that really had nothing to with parks?—It was more a power to spend money on bands if we wanted; we obtained that power. You will find at page 30 that we have power to maintain, and subsidise bands and provide music.

1302. (Mr. Crawford.) That is under a recent Act?—That is under one of our own Acts. We have now power to provide them everywhere.

1303. (Chairman.) But is that confined to their employment in parks and open spaces?—Under the original Act it was confined to parks and open spaces in the possession of the Council. We found that was not fair to the vestries who maintain their own open spaces, and were not able to have any music there, so we got powers then, enabling us to provide music in all places in the county, so that our power is unlimited.

1304. At the corner of a street, for instance, could it be done there?—My recollection of the clause is, that it would include that, but I have not got the Bill before me at this moment.

1305. (Mr. Smith.) It surely would not enable you to employ perambulating street bands, would it?—I have not got the Bill before me, but my recollection of it is that we went for general powers, and we got them.

1306. (Lord Farrer.) Practically they are bands which play in places to which people resort in the afternoon and evening?—Yes.

1307. That is the object, and that is what is done?—That is what is done: they only play practically on Saturdays in the parks; in the Embankment Gardens now and then.

1308. (Chairman.) And all those expenses are met out of a rate running throughout the county?—All the expenses in regard to the parks are met out of the General County Rate.

1309. The next item is, industrial and reformatory schools; you have the maintenance of a couple?—(Mr. Harrison.) Yes. (Mr. Dickinson.) Page 4 of Statement No. II., reference to page 28. With regard to the industrial and reformatory schools, we have the maintenance and management of two industrial schools, one at Feltham and the other at Mayford. Feltham Industrial School was taken over by the Council from the Middlesex County Council.

1310. And Mayford?—Mayford is an industrial school established and maintained in accordance with the Industrial Schools Act, 1866.

1311. Those are powers which you have taken over from the Middlesex County Justices?—You will find the details at page 28 of Statement No. II. They both came to us under the Local Government Act.

1312. (Lord Farrer.) Was Mayford School taken over from Quarter Sessions?—Yes.

1313. (Chairman.) That is not so much the point as this; the Quarter Sessions might have taken it over, and you got the power from them to take it?—Yes.

1314. Whether they have taken it over or not, the power that you have is the same power as they had; the only power you have is what they had?—Yes.

1315. Those powers do not apply to the City?—Those powers do not apply to the City; no, in the City the Common Council exercises the same powers.

1316. Not the Quarter Sessions of the City?—Under the Local Government Act I think it is the Common Council.

1317. And does your rate in reference to these run in the City?—Our rate does not run in the City.

1318. (Lord Farrer.) Are there any other industrial and reformatory schools in the Administrative County of London?—Yes. The School Board has got an industrial school, and the Metropolitan Asylums Board, again, has got a training ship. They practically are very much the same.

1319. (Chairman.) You would have power to take over these if you thought it desirable, and if the authorities having charge of them desired it?—I do not think we should have power under the Local Government Act, without an Act of Parliament to take over the School Board one or the Metropolitan Asylums School.

1320. The Quarter Sessions had not power before?—Well they had power to take over private ones, but I should doubt whether they had power to take over the Metropolitan Asylums School.

1321. (Mr. Crawford.) You could establish your own or take over private ones?—Oh, yes, we could establish any we liked ourselves.

1322. (Lord Farrer.) Does the training ship down the river belong to the Metropolitan Asylums Board?—Yes.

1323. (Chairman.) And one to the School Board?—One belonging to the School Board. They are both together; close together.

1324. There is one belonging to a separate society?—Yes, there is one.

1325. We had some evidence from you as to the appointment of coroners, I think?—Yes. I stated about that, that we paid the salaries of all the coroners.

1326. The Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts; what do you do with reference to those Acts?—That does not apply to the City. You will find that at page 33 of Statement No. II.: "We have to appoint "inspectors; we have the power of declaring a place "to be infected with pleuro-pneumonia or foot-and-"mouth disease. To declare the infected place to "be free. To dispose of the slaughtered cattle, and "to pay balance of amount received, exceeding com-"pensation to the owner. To bury the slaughtered "animal on the owner's premises, or (with the consent "of the Privy Council) in any common or unenclosed "land. To keep a record relative to slaughter. To "withhold compensation from persons guilty of "offences under the Act. To provide landing, "slaughter, &c. places, for animals other than foreign "animals, fodder, dung, &c., and to make byelaws "relating thereto. To acquire land for wharves, or "for the burial of carcases, and to dispose of such "land as is not required. To make returns to Board "of Agriculture. To generally enforce the Act and "the Orders thereunder. To appoint inspectors and "veterinary inspectors."

1327. And the establishment of the Board of Agriculture has rather altered your action?—Yes, it has. The provisions of the Act relating to foreign animals have to be enforced by the Corporation of the City throughout the metropolis; but with regard to other animals we are the authority.

1328. (Mr. Crawford.) Under what Act do you claim that, Mr. Dickinson?—They are rather complicated, the two Acts; but the first Act, which refers to foreign animals, refers to the City. The second Act, which refers to other animals, does not refer to the City, so there is a very nice question of law involved. Those are the two Acts, 41 & 42 Victoria, chapter 24, and 53 & 54 Victoria, chapter 14; 49 & 50 Victoria, chapter 52. My recollection of those Acts is, that the first Act stated that certain matters were done by a local authority, and as regards foreign animals the local authority was to be the City Corporation; but this later Act came and gave further powers with regard to other animals than foreign animals, and established the Metropolitan Board of Works or the County Council as the local authority. In that Act there was no reference whatever to the City Corporation, so that I think the City Corporation's duties are limited to foreign animals.

1329. (Chairman.) Does that arise out of the establishment of the City Market?—Yes, Deptford Market.

1330. Deptford Market was the reason of it?—Deptford Market was the reason of it, because they undertook to establish Deptford Market.

1331. As long as Deptford Market is there it would be most convenient for them to exercise the powers over foreign animals?—That is so, and that was the reason for it.

1332. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find that the City also claim the power in regard to other animals?—I have no doubt they do.

1333. (Lord Farrer.) This states that the local authority for the City is the Corporation?—Yes; I state so there.

1334. (Mr. Crawford.) I think if you take the second schedule in conjunction with section 9 of the Act 41 & 42 Vict. c. 74?—I have not got the Act.

1335. (Chairman.) Your expenses in connexion with that subject are defrayed out of what?—Our expenses in relation to that subject are defrayed out of the special county rate, which does not run into the city.

1336. (Lord Farrer.) Is that so? You say here, "The City contributes to the County Council fund "for the purposes of the Act"?—(Mr. Dickinson.) I should like to correct my last answer. The City does contribute to this expense.

1337. The City does contribute?—Yes.

1338. (Chairman.) The Small Holdings Act; have you taken any action over that?—Have we taken any action?

1339. Yes?—We have let some land of our own at Abbey Mills, and we are at present taking some more in Poplar and Plumstead.

1340. (Lord Farrer.) There is a large area there?—A very large area, indeed.

1341. (Chairman.) Did you take that action being moved thereto by representations?—There have been representations. I think I might say we did it on our own motion.

1342. No official motion?—The Act says we must appoint a committee for the purpose of recommending the Council to adopt the Act. That was done at once; then that committee recommended that we should take action.

1343. Do you know what you have done at Poplar and Plumstead?—We are renting land at Poplar, and are in communication with the War Office in regard to taking land at Plumstead.

1344. How have you taken it, under what tenure; have you taken it in fee or are you tenants?—We have not purchased any.

1345. With the object, if you have purchased it, of selling it again or of letting it?—We are letting now; we are letting largely.

1346. (Mr. Crawford.) When was the committee appointed, do you know?—Last year, I think.

1347. At page 38 you say it has held four meetings; it must be a recent appointment?—Yes, quite a recent appointment. The Act was last year's, and then we first of all had to appoint the committee to bring up the resolution to us I have told the Commission of, namely, that we should adopt the Act. And then we appointed this Standing Committee and that was done this year; that is only quite recent.

1348. The committee had to consider whether you were justified in adopting it?—The first committee had to consider whether we should adopt the Act.

1349. (Chairman.) That you are bound to do?—That we are bound to do, and we did adopt the Act.

1350. Formally you adopted it, and you have acquired in some fashion some land which you are letting on yearly tenancies?—That is so.

1351. I believe you are bound to let at such terms as to save the County Council from cost?—That is so. "The council must not acquire land unless in "their opinion all expenses will be recouped them, "and must not charge the county rate with a sum "likely to exceed, in any one year, an amount pro- "duced by a rate of a penny in the £." We state that on page 38 of Statement No. II., and that is the position of affairs with regard to that subject.

1352. So far have you had any appreciable cost thrown on the rate or otherwise?—Thrown on the rate, no.

1353. It may be temporarily thrown on the rate, it must come back?—You see it is so very recent; I do not think we commenced letting land much before the beginning of the summer.

1354. Have you made an alteration of late in respect of your works, taking them into your own hand, doing your work for yourselves?—Yes, on page 38 I have referred to the Works Committee. The council has been advised that it has power to execute its own works, and it now carries out sewer work, building work, &c., by means of its own staff. The committee was appointed in November 1892, and since then it has been very fully occupied with various works that we have ordered them to carry out.

1355. They have provided stores and they have employed men?—Yes. We have provided a large central yard at Belvedere Road on the other side of the river, opposite Westminster, and we have what we call the manager, the head of the department, and he employs the men.

1357. Would that last number be liable to much variation?—According to the works that we are undertaking, yes, but I think at the present moment it has been varying in the shape of increasing.

1358. (Lord Farrer.) Constantly increasing?—Constantly increasing, yes.

1359. (Chairman.) Are they treated at all in a different way, the men employed by you; have you any permanent men and casual men?—In this department most of these men would be appointed just for the week in the ordinary way in which a builder would appoint his labourers, but in all our other departments they are practically permanent men although they receive weekly wages. For instance, park employés, they go on for years there, the gardeners, and the constables, but in this department they will be more or less temporary.

1360. It will depend upon the works which are in hand?—It will depend upon the works which are in hand. It is left to the manager to arrange that himself.

1361. If these are seasonal works you would have men discharged?—That would be so.

1362. And re-engaged as the works came again into operation?—Yes, that would be so.

1363. (Mr. Crawford.) May I interpose to ask the character of the works? For instance, if the Council were going to build a new asylum, is that a kind of work you would undertake yourselves?—In the first place, we commenced by making a large sewer in York Road, then a relief sewer at Hampstead, and we are constructing now some stables and outhouses in connexion with the new Claybury Asylum. That has been the character of it. At the present moment it is practically sewer work and building work. There are also two or three fire brigade stations being constructed and other minor works.

1364. (Chairman.) Perhaps it is too early to ask what is ultimately contemplated as the development of this matter; whether it is to be only subsidiary work?—I think that will depend upon our experience and success. At the present moment I think it is working very well.

1365. (Lord Farrer.) It is rather too early to draw any conclusions yet?—Oh, yes, I think it is.

1366. (Mr. Smith.) It is not to develop into a municipal workshop?—I cannot say what it will develop into.

1367. (Chairman.) At present workmen are only employed to do work that is wanted?—Oh, certainly.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. C. Harrison.

28 July 1893.

1368. (Lord Farrer.) Has there been any experience yet of having to dismiss men?—Yes, I think so, certainly.

1369. Of getting rid of men because they were not wanted?—Oh, yes.

1370. (Mr. Crawford.) Have you an instance where, for example, you have undertaken sewerage works, and first of all you have put up the work to tender, and then, no tender being satisfactory, you have done the work yourselves?—That was the origin of the Works Committee. We put up some works to tender and we got such very extravagant tenders that we resolved to do them ourselves. We entrusted a sewer to the Engineers' Department, and the building of schools for Crossness to the Architects' Department, and then we commenced to develop this new system. Many of the vestries in London do their own works, too, to a great extent. The schools for Crossness were a very great financial success. They were completed within the estimate.

1371. Have you ceased to invite tenders for work?—Oh, no.

1372. (Lord Farrer.) Will there be any means in future of comparing what the expense would be if done under contract, with the expense if done in this way?—Well, upon the new system, the architect makes his estimate for the Council, and he makes it really without knowing whether it is going out to tender or to be done by the Council, therefore, that estimate is a good estimate. Then the Works Department take it up as a builder would take it up for that money. If they say they can do it for that money they go on with the work. They have to keep their accounts separate to see the cost of that work. There would always be that criterion. There would also at the same time be a great number of works going on in the ordinary way.

1373. (Chairman.) The expenditure by this department covers the whole of the administrative county?—Yes; at least it would depend; for instance, what we are building at the asylums we should not be able to charge the City with.

1374. (Lord Farrer.) Sewers you would be able to charge them with?—Oh, yes.

1375. (Mr. Smith.) A certain portion of the administrative charges?—That would go all over the county, yes.

1376. (Chairman) With respect to your sanitary powers, what are your relations towards medical officers of health?—Under the Local Government Act and the Public Health Act we pay half the salary of any medical officer of health appointed after that date or re-appointed after that date. I have a little plan got out just to show you what medical officers of health have been appointed. In all the parishes which are coloured we pay one half of the salary, and we have a right to reports from them, and, of course, as time goes on, the parishes which are uncoloured will also fall into the same category. This is a very useful provision; the only disadvantage to it is that it has not been extended all over London at once, instead of waiting until the re-appointments.

1377. (Lord Farrer.) What is the red and blue?—The blue are districts in which the Council pays, or is liable to pay, a moiety of the salary of the medical officer of health, and the red is where the appointment is pending. The number of medical officers of health in the Administrative County of London is 49. The number to whose salary the Council is at present liable to contribute a moiety is 20; the number to whose salary the Council has already contributed is 12; and then there are eight appointments pending. That entitles us to all reports that are sent to the Local Government Board; they have to be sent to us, and we can enforce that.

1378. (Mr. Smith.) You would like that to be uniform to be of any use?—It would be very useful if it were uniform.

1379. (Chairman.) What power have you over these officers?—We have very little actual power beyond what I say. We have the power to require them to send us reports, and to refuse to pay half the salary if we are not satisfied, if we do not get them, and that is all the power we have over an individual medical officer. Of course, the ultimate powers over the sanitary authorities that we have really give us some strength. Our powers might be made stronger.

1380. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose that the medical officer generally wishes the thing to be done?—As a rule, yes.

1381. And he is very glad to be supported by the Council and the medical officer of the Council?—I think that is generally the case. We appointed one first of all, Dr. Shirley Murphy, and we have since appointed two assistants, and there is a large and growing staff. They have very constant work now.

1382. They are in friendly communication?—With most of them; not only the ones that are appointed, but the ones all over London, or very nearly all over London. Our medical officer of health can generally get the information he desires, but we have no power to enforce it. There are certain portions of London which do not send us information, thus rendering our information incomplete.

1383. (Mr. Smith.) Are there any parts of London where the medical officer is a gentleman in private practice?—Oh, yes, very many. It depends entirely upon the discretion of the vestry or district board, subject to this, that the new appointments have to be made in accordance with the regulations of the Local Government Board.

1384. You favour the election of an officer for a large district at a distinct salary apart from private practice?—That is my own view, certainly; I think that is the view of the Local Government Board at the present moment, too.

1385. (Chairman.) Have you absolute power to withhold the half salary?—The Act states that "If a "medical officer of health fails to send such copy of "that report the County Council may refuse to pay "any contribution which otherwise the Council "would in pursuance of this Act pay towards the "salary of such medical officer."

1386. According to what you read just now, have you absolute power to withhold half the salary?—If they do not send us the reports.

1387. If they fulfil the duty of sending the report?—Then we must pay.

1388. Although it may appear unsatisfactory to you?—Yes.

1389. You are bound to pay?—Yes, they are the reports which they have to send to the Local Government Board, so that I presume the quality of the report must be good; it must be a valid report, otherwise the Local Government Board would not be satisfied with it.

1390. You spoke rather as if you had absolute power to withhold half the salary, only on a condition which may be really a nominal condition?—It might be.

1391. As far as your will is concerned?—It might be.

1392. You have no discretion in the matter?—No, we have no discretion in the matter.

1393. (Lord Farrer.) Have the Local Government Board any discretion in the matter; can they say that a given report is not a proper report?—The Local Government Board have power to make regulations, and they have made elaborate regulations which would, I think, enable them to get a valid report.

1394. (Mr. Crawford.) Under the Act the condition of your payment of the half salary is receiving the report that they send to you?—Yes.

1395. If the report, in the opinion of the Council, is unsatisfactory, you make a representation to that effect to the Local Government Board, and they take action?—Yes.

1396. (Chairman.) If so advised?—Yes.

1397. You can do nothing yourselves?—We can do nothing ourselves, no.

1398. Infectious diseases; you have power to declare diseases to be infectious diseases?—Yes; they are not very large, those powers, they are set out on page 36 of Statement No. II.

1399. It is with respect to notification, apparently, is it not?—Yes. Originally the notification of any infectious disease had to be sent to the Metropolitan Asylums Board; then the Local Government Act enacted that the Metropolitan Asylums Board were to send them on to us, therefore we get the notification in the same way that they do; it would be better if it came direct to us.

1400. But you have power to inquire with respect to any disease that shall be notified?—Yes, we have power to do that.

1401. Are your functions in this respect largely exercised?—I think that we have exercised them once. Yes, we have power to add to the number of infectious diseases.

1402. That is the purport of my question?—Yes.

1403. (Mr. Smith.) As to the number that shall be considered as infectious diseases?—As to the number that shall be considered as infectious diseases liable to notification.

1404. (Chairman.) Overhead wires; you have power to make byelaws respecting these?—We make them under a special Act that we promoted ourselves, the Overhead Wires Act.

1405. Have you largely exercised these powers?—Yes, we have made the byelaws, and the various bodies are carrying them out. As I point out here, if they are not carried out by the vestries or the district boards we can step in and carry them out: if they are not carried out by the City, then, I think there is no remedy for that.

1406. You have power to make the byelaws over all the area?—Over all the area.

1407. You have only power to carry them out outside the City?—We asked power to administer them all over the area, but the Committee of the House of Commons saw fit to leave the administration of it in the hands of the local bodies, but they still give us the power to make the byelaws.

1408. Have you made many byelaws?—You mean upon general subjects?

1409. No, upon this matter of overhead wires?—Those are the byelaws we have made, regulating the strength chiefly.

1410. Some 18 apparently?—Yes.

1411. Regulating the distance from one point of suspension to another point of suspension, and the strength?—That is what it comes to; it also extends, as you see, to obliging the companies to give us notification of all the wires.

1412. As to the naming of streets; that is another of your authorities?—In that matter we are supreme.

1413. In that matter you are now exclusive and supreme?—We are supreme all over the administrative county. In the City and elsewhere we name the street and can oblige them to carry it out, to put up the names.

1414. (Mr. Crawford.) Is it not more correct to say that you have the approval of the names. I think you do the various bodies the courtesy of allowing them to suggest names to you?—Yes, certainly; as a rule, we ask the local authorities to suggest names.

1415. (Chairman.) You have large powers as to theatres and music halls?—We have a duplicate power, or rather two classes of powers, in regard to that; the powers which we inherited from the Metropolitan Board of Works, which had to do with the construction—safety entirely, and the powers which we have inherited from the justices which have to do with licensing. Of course the position of the Metropolitan Board of Works was very much weaker in regard to that question than that ours is now, because we have the ultimate power of licensing or not licensing in our hands. But, at the same time, the law with regard to theatres in London is very inadequate, and we are proposing a Bill this year to amend that.

1416. Licensing in respect to music halls is exercised through a committee?—The Council has retained the ultimate voice in its own hands. The Committee sit to hear all applications at Clerkenwell and Newington, and then they report on each application, and then we have a special meeting, perhaps two special meetings, of the Council, to receive this report and approve or disapprove of the recommendations, and if any one appeals from or disagrees with the recommendation of the Committee, he is entitled to be heard by counsel before the whole Council.

1417. Any person affected or any member of the Council?—Yes.

1418. It is decided as it used to be by the Middlesex magistrates, by a multitudinous vote?—Entirely, yes, but the magistrate had no committee, even. We, at any rate, sift the matter thoroughly.

1419. You granted as many as 190 licenses in 1892?—Yes, a very large number.

1420. You have inherited from the magistrates certain duties as to racecourses?—Well, there are no racecourses within the area. The area is that within 10 miles from Charing Cross, and, as regards our jurisdiction, within the county. There is no racecourse within our county. Outside the county they would be licensed by the County Council of Middlesex, I suppose.

1421. But they used to be licensed by the justices?—Licensed by the justices.

1422. And were there no race grounds within that area?—Not within the metropolis. I think there was one at Streatham, formerly.

1423. (Mr. Crawford.) Norbury Park?—I believe there was one at Streatham, but that has ceased.

1424. (Chairman.) Kingsbury, near Willesden, would that be outside?—That would be outside. In connexion with theatres and music halls, the only difficulty we find is the want of a power to administer an oath, which the magistrates had.

1425. (Mr. Crawford.) And that applies to all licensing matters?—To all licensing matters, yes.

1426. (Chairman.) You have power with respect to slaughter-houses?—Yes, we license all slaughter-houses; we delegate that to a committee.

1427. And cow-houses?—Yes, the slaughtering of cattle, and the keeping of cow-houses. Those have all to be licensed by the Council, and are licensed by the Public Health Committee. The number of slaughter-houses has been decreasing year by year, because we require them to be put into proper sanitary condition before they are licensed.

1428. These powers do not appear to run into the City?—No.

1429. (Mr. Crawford.) The Commissioners of Sewers are the licensing authority, if you look at page 36 of Statement No. II.?—Yes, the Commissioners of Sewers execute the powers with regard to offensive trades in the City, and pay expenses out of their consolidated rate. The Commissioners of Sewers are the licensing authority to license cow-houses and slaughter-houses in the City.

1430. (Chairman.) Then there is baby farming?—Yes, we have to license all houses kept for the reception of more than two infants nursing, and we appoint inspectors who are constantly inspecting these. That is not exercised in the City or chargeable to the City.

1431. In connexion with your cow-keeping places, and also with dairies, you have a power as to inspection of milk?—Yes, we inspect all dairies and cow-sheds. That is under the Order of the Local Government Board.

1432. You look after the purity of milk?—Yes, in order to obtain purity of milk, but there, again, we want some amendment of the law, I believe.

1433. What is the weakness you feel?—We have a difficulty with regard to milk that comes from the country. Of course we can only inspect these places to see that they are kept clean and proper in London.

1434. Electric lighting. You have various powers?—Yes, those are under the Electric Lighting Acts themselves.

1435. Those do not extend into the City?—Those do not extend into the City, no; the Corporation is the authority, I think, in the City.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson and Mr. T. Harrison.

3 July 1893.

1436. The Commissioners of Sewers, presumably?—The Commissioners of Sewers. Page 24 of Statement No. II. sets out rather fully the work in relation to electric lighting:—"To obtain licence or Provisional Order from the Board of Trade to supply "electricity. To consent to a company or private "person being so authorised. To make and vary "byelaws for securing safety of the public where the "council is the local authority. To defray expenses "out of the special county rate. To do generally all "things necessary and incidental to the supply. To "contract with others for the execution and maintenance of the necessary works, or for the supply "of electricity. To purchase an undertaking which "affects any part of the metropolis which the "council is authorised to light. This power may be "exercised within six months after the expiration of "a period of 42 years (or shorter if fixed) from the "passing of the Act authorising the undertaking, and "within six months from the expiration of every "subsequent period of 10 years (unless shorter period "be fixed). All the above powers are open to a "'local authority,' such authority being, in the City, "the Commissioners of Sewers, in other parishes and "districts the vestry and district board, and in those "parts of the metropolis which the council are "authorised to light, the Council. Under the various "Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation Acts which "affect the metropolis and empower the undertakers "to light their prescribed areas by electricity, "numerous powers (which are practically the same "in all the Acts), are granted to the Council, among "which the following are the principal:—To make "representations to the Board of Trade—(a.) If "undertakers fail to deposit the necessary security. "(b.) If undertakers seek to be relieved from keeping "separate accounts of the undertaking. (c.) If "undertakers, by reason of insolvency, or otherwise, "fail to lay down mains or execute works. (d.) When "the Council considers mains or lines defective or "dangerous. (e.) Should the method of charge or "price at the expiration of seven years from "26th August 1889, require alteration. (f.) Before "any order is revoked. To give their consent (which "is compulsory) for the placing of electric wires "above ground, along, over, or across any street or "public place. Any wires so placed before the "passing of the Act are to be removed in two years. "To prescribe the hours during which street boxes "may be opened in any street repairable by the "Council. To receive from undertakers notices and "plans of works in streets before the commencement "of any works, and within one month to approve "the same as served, or subject to conditions, or to "disapprove the same. Appeal from the Council's "decision lies to the Board of Trade. The Council "has agreed to accept four days' notice instead of a "month in the case of laying service lines from mains "already laid. To require electric lines to be laid "in existing subways which are vested in the "Council, and to charge a reasonable rent for the "same to be settled by agreement or arbitration. "Scales of charges are now settled. To receive "notice from undertakers before commencing to "supply energy of the method by which they propose "to charge for it, and no alteration in method can "be made without one month's notice to the Council. "To appoint and pay (if appointed by them) electric "inspectors for the purpose of inspecting and testing "electric lines, works, and the supply of energy; and "certifying and examining meters, and for the purpose of other duties in connexion with the undertaking. To require undertakers to establish and "maintain a reasonable number of testing stations, "with proper instruments for testing the currents "in the mains. The cost of such places is borne by "the undertakers. To give notice to undertakers "of their desire to execute all or part of the powers "and duties of the undertakers as to breaking-up, "and making good, &c., any streets, bridges, sewers, "subways, tunnels, or other works vested in or under "the control of the Council, and to amend or revoke "such notice by another notice. To receive notice "(14 days') from undertakers of their intention "to dig or trench for laying or constructing new "lines (other than service lines) near to any sewer, "drain, watercourse, defence, or work which is under "the jurisdiction or control of the Council. To "require plans of work affecting bridges to be "submitted to them for approval or otherwise. To "consent in writing, on terms and conditions if "advisable, to the interference by undertakers with "the Council's embankments, parks, or open spaces "(except where they form parts of streets), tunnels, "sewers, or subways."

1437. You will have some authority in connexion with vestries in respect of electric lighting, I suppose?—When they undertake it themselves.

1438. Yes, and also powers of permission to lay it down. Would the vestries have the power with respect to the underground wires?—Yes.

1439. (Mr. Smith.) Are not these powers common both to you and the local authorities?—They are, as stated on page 24 of Statement No. II.

1440. As the Electric Lighting Act gives no monopoly to a local authority or a company, you might establish, if you liked, an electric supply in the parish of St. Pancras?—The parish of St. Pancras has established its electric lighting supply under an Order which it obtained.

1441. But that does not give it a monopoly?—It gives no monopoly. There would be nothing to prevent, for instance, our obtaining an Order to supply the whole of London, so far as that goes.

1442. It is a curious instance of two public bodies having the same powers?—That is so.

1443. You are joint local authorities almost under that Act?—As I stated in page 24 of Statement No. II., all the above powers are open to a "local authority." such authority being, in the City, the Commissioners of Sewers, in other parishes and districts the vestry or district board.

1444. That is a peculiarity to London, because in other places the local authority is clearly defined as one authority?—Precisely so.

1445. (Chairman.) You have a staff of inspectors looking after weights and measures, and the sale of coal?—Yes, that is entirely in the hands of the Council; the Weights and Measures Act, and the sale of coal.

1446. (Lord Farrer.) Not within the City?—Not within the City; Oh, no.

1447. (Chairman.) And you are the authority under the Shop Hours Act?—Yes, we are taking very active measures under that Act now. We have had several prosecutions, but we find that the Act is not sufficient. The Act does not include laundries and similar places.

1448. You have some authority with respect to the pollution of rivers?—Well, it stands like this; every County Council is an authority under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, and therefore we are, but the Local Government Act says that it should be subject to any other Act affecting the question, and there being the Lea Conservancy and the Thames Conservancy in existence, it is doubtful what powers we should have.

1449. (Mr. Crawford.) Are they not specially exempt?—They are not specially mentioned in the Local Government Act; the two bodies are not specially mentioned.

1450. Under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act?—In the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act they are specially mentioned, but that would not affect the point that we have some authority under the Local Government Act.

1451. (Lord Farrer.) You would have no power outside the County of London which would enable you to take steps to purify the Upper Thames?—Oh, no.

1452. (Chairman.) You have a general power of making byelaws with respect to all these objects, and you have made a considerable number?—Yes, we have made a considerable number of byelaws. I have got out a list of the byelaws that we have made.

1453. (Lord Farrer.) Would you put in that list?—The byelaws we have actually made?

1454. Not the actual byelaws, but a list of the byelaws?—Yes.

1455. (Chairman.) All these byelaws have to be approved by the several departments with which they have connexion?—Yes, either the Local Government Board, or the Home Office, as a rule.

1456. You put in this summary of the byelaws?—Yes.

Byelaws referred to in paragraph 5 of Statement.	Act authorising making of Byelaws.	Whether Byelaws have been made or not.
For the good rule and government of the county, and for the prevention and suppression of nuisances.	Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and Local Government Act, 1888.	No.
For regulating foundations and sites of buildings, and the materials and quality of plaster used.	Metropolis Management and Building Acts Amendment Act, 1878, and London Council (General Powers) Act, 1890.	Yes. Yes.
For regulating the formation of new streets, level width, &c.	Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1855.	—
The construction of pipes and drains, communication of sewers, and for the guidance of the vestries and district boards in the exercise of their powers in relation to sewage.	Metropolis Management Act, 1855	A byelaw has been made as to the construction of new sewers, and another byelaw has been made as to the laying of house drains into main sewers, and the form of notice to be given by vestries and district boards, and the branching of sewers into main sewers.
For the regulation of the conduct of offensive businesses, and the structure of buildings for that purpose.	Slaughter-houses, &c., Metropolis Act, 1874, and the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.	Yes.
For the regulation of the construction of theatres with a view to protection from fire.	Metropolis Management and Building Acts Amendment Act, 1878.	Regulations have been made.
For the regulation of persons frequenting parks, gardens, and open spaces.	London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1890.	Yes.
As to bridges - - - - -	Metropolitan Board of Works (Various Powers) Act, 1882.	Yes.
As to embankments - - - - -	Byelaws as to county bridges are made under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1892.	Yes.
As to main roads - - - - -	Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878.	No.
As to subways - - - - - -	Metropolitan Subways Act, 1868 -	Yes.
As to lodging-houses - - - - -	Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890.	No. (The Council's Lodging-house has only recently been established.)
Use of locomotives - - - - - -	Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878.	Yes.
As to sale of coal - - - - -	Weights and Measures Act, 1889	Yes.
As to inspection and verification of weights, measures, and weighing instruments.
Regulation as to movement of animals and carcases, and for cleansing and disinfecting.	Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878. Board of Agriculture Act, 1889.	These are regulations made under the Glanders and Farcy Order of 1892, issued by the Board of Agriculture.
As to tramways - - - - -	Tramways Act, 1870 - -	Yes.
For regulating electric lighting companies (where the Council is the local authority).	Electric Lighting Act, 1882, sec. 6	No.
For the regulation of the hours during which children may sing in certain public places; and	Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1889.	No.
For declaring a place of safety for the reception of children.		Yes.
For compelling local sanitary authorities to remove rubbish, and for regulating the construction of closets, the closing of cesspools, and the condition under which offensive matter is to be removed.	Public Health (London) Act, 1891.	Yes.
For regulating companies and persons in the fixing of overhead wires, and the posts, supports, &c. connected therewith.	The London Overhead Wires Act, 1891.	Yes.
For regulating the mode and materials with which any excavation outside the site of a building is to be filled up; the duties and fees of the district surveyors, deposit of plans and sections, description and quality of the substances of walls.	London Council (General Powers) Act, 1890.	Yes.

FIFTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 26th October 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. H. H. Bridgman, Mr. H. Blake, Dr. W. S. Saunders, Mr. E. A. Baylis, Mr. D. J. Ross.

26 Oct. 1893.

MR. HENRY HEWITT BRIDGMAN, Chairman of the existing Commission of Sewers for the City of London; MR. HENRY BLAKE, Principal Clerk; Dr. WILLIAM SEDGWICK SAUNDERS, Medical Officer of Health; MR. EDGAR ALEXANDER BAYLIS, Solicitor; MR. DAVID JAMES ROSS, Assistant Engineer, called in and examined.

1457. (Chairman.) How long have you held the post of Chairman of the Commission of Sewers?—(Mr. Bridgman.) I was appointed in February last—on the 7th.

1458. It is an annual appointment?—It is an annual appointment.

1459. You had not served it before?—I had not.

1460. And these gentlemen are your chief officers?—Yes, sir. I hand in a statement of the powers and duties of the commission, which has been prepared under the supervision and by the authority of the Commission of Sewers. There are the words "private and confidential" printed on it, which should have been omitted; that was merely put there for our own purpose. The witnesses tendered on behalf of the commission are Mr. Blake, the principal clerk to the commission; Mr. E. A. Baylis, the solicitor to the commission; Dr. Sedgwick Saunders, the medical officer of health for the City, and we had hoped that the engineer would have been here too, but he is so very unwell that I have just received a telegram from him to say that he will come immediately his doctor has left him; but I am almost disposed to think that he may possibly be too unwell after all, because for the first time on Tuesday he appeared after two months' very serious illness. But his chief assistant, Mr. Ross, is present, and he will be able to answer any question probably, if Mr. Blake, the principal clerk, cannot do so. Mr. Blake will be able to answer any question upon the statement from page 1 to page 15, the engineer from page 16 to page 26, and the medical officer page 26 to 27, and the solicitor on any matter relating to the various Acts of Parliament, should there be any question arise for inquiry or explanation in the course of the examination. I am authorised by the commission to say, that they wish to give every possible facility to this commission to aid them in their inquiry.

1461. You wish the examination on these first pages to be directed to the chief clerk?—If you please.

1462. The Commission of Sewers originated in the reign of Charles II., I believe?—(Mr. Blake.) It did.

1463. You have no evidence of any prior existence?—No, in fact the Act indicates the contrary. They are first named there after the great fire of London, to regulate the rebuilding of London, the rebuilding of the City, as to sewers and drains and all that.

1464. What would you understand to be referred to by the phrase of that section of that Act which forbids all other commissioners from interfering or intermeddling?—I take it that probably there were other local associations for different purposes prior to that time, and they were extinguished by that enactment; I take that to be the meaning.

1465. And there may have been some prior commissions having power to deal with this and certain matters of this kind within the City?—There might have been locally.

1466. However, it is sufficient for our purpose to say that you date from the time of Charles II.?—That is so.

1467. And the rebuilding after the fire?—That is so.

1468. And although that was a temporary Act it has been renewed and made perpetual, and there has been a continuity of existence from that time to this?—There has been.

1469. There may have been certain variations in your numbers?—Oh, yes, from time to time.

1470. But you have always been elected on the same principle?—Yes.

1471. Will you explain to us how you are chosen?—How the commissioners are chosen?

1472. Yes?—It is set forth here on page 6; the Act of Parliament lays down certain rules, but as to the absolute mode of appointment, page 8, perhaps, would be sufficient for your purpose. The last clause, "It is, and for many years has been, the practice at the "beginning of the year, for the members of the Com- "mon Council in the several Wards to arrange, "amongst themselves, which of their Members shall "represent the Ward in the Court of Sewers for the "ensuing year. The names are brought together at "what is called a Previous Meeting, the day before the "first Court of Common Council in January, and at "the first court, subject to any alterations that may "be agreed to, the said Members are nominated to "form the Commission of Sewers, and at the next "Court of Common Council the deed is sealed "appointing them to form the Commission, which "usually continues till about the same time in the "following year."

1473. The common councillors are elected on St. Thomas's day?—Yes.

1474. That is the 21st December?—That is the 21st December.

1475. And then the first meeting of the Common Council is in January?—Yes.

1476–9. And between the election and the meeting these persons are chosen to serve on the Commission of Sewers?—Yes.

(Mr. Crawford.) That is all fixed by statute, the sixth section of the Sewers Act, 1848.

(Chairman.) The mode of doing it.

(Mr. Crawford.) Yes, as to the actual appointment.

1480. (Chairman.) That is to say, they seal them on that day, but of course the thing is done between?—They nominate them on the first day and seal them at the second court.

1481. The Court of Common Council may reject the names so chosen?—They may, and they do sometimes.

1482 That is sometimes done?—Yes.

1483. On what principle do the councilmen for particular wards select those they present; what is the usual principle?—I can scarcely tell you that for certain, except that I believe they go in rotation from seniority downwards; the first man has the choice, and then, if he does not care about it, the next man in the ward. I have heard that that is the case. (Mr. Bridgman.) Special qualification oftentimes.

1484. It may possibly vary in different wards?—(Mr. Blake.) I have no doubt it does, and it would rest partly on what other committees certain members of the ward served.

1485. What proportion, as a rule, do these commissioners for the several wards bear to the number of councilmen for the wards?—That is set forth at page 8.

1486. No, that gives us the number; what proportion does that bear, as a rule, to the number of councillors?—(Mr. Bridgman.) In the ward of Cheap there are eight members in the Common Council, but three only of them constitute members of the commission, so that the proportion is about one-third or one-fourth.

1487. Three-eighths is more than one-third, very much more than one-fourth?—Nearly one-half. (Mr. Blake.) 92 members out of 232.

1488. It is more than one-third, as a rule?—Yes.

1489. And they get as near as that in the same wards?—It is the same proportion every year. (Mr. Baylis.) The same numbers every year for the wards.

1490. But that number is arranged, I suppose, to be as near as possible to the proportion?—(Mr. Blake.) I am not prepared to say how it is done. (Mr. Baylis.) Each ward is fixed.

1491. Has it varied from time to time, the number from the several wards?—(Mr. Blake.) It varied up to 1866.

1492. The total number I know has varied, but the distribution of that number among the different wards, does that vary from time to time?—I cannot tell you; very likely.

1493. It is in the power of the Common Council to make a fresh distribution?—Entirely.

1494. As far as you know they may; but you do not know that they do?—I do not know that they do.

1495. (Lord Farrer.) Do I understand that as a general rule if A.B. has been the commissioner for a particular ward in the year 1893, the probability is that C.D., who comes next to him on the list, will be the man selected in 1894?—They do not make that variation; if a man is put on the commission he generally stays on the commission for several years.

1496. That is what I wanted to get at?—Yes.

1497. You used the word "rotation"; I think you meant this, that the oldest member of the Common Council is asked first whether he will serve?—In some wards.

1498. In some wards; and if he declines then the next one, and so on?—Yes; I do not think that takes place every year in the ward. In the different wards they have their own arrangements, and there are certain committees in the Corporation considered vacant, and if they have got down to a certain place on the list they begin again from there; they do not begin again de novo, I think, from the head of the list, and let the senior have his choice there again. They get down to a certain place, and they go to the man serving below that to give the other members a choice. (Mr. Bridgman.) I have been on the commission for 10 years since I have been on the court; I suppose that is due to the fact of my practical knowledge, because I am an architect. No doubt, if anyone else, as an architect, wished to go on in my place I should be willing to give way to him, but as a rule those who have served well, and have a practical acquaintance with the business, are allowed to remain on.

1499. (Chairman.) You say there are three members in the ward of Cheap out of eight?—Out of eight, yes.

1500. Have the eight been pretty constantly re-elected of late years?—I am the senior member of the commission from my ward.

1501. Have the eight common councilmen?—No, they have not all been on the commission since I have been on.

1502. Have the eight common councilmen been re-elected as common councilmen every year?—Oh, yes, certainly; as common councilmen we are elected every year.

1503. As a matter of experience have the same eight been for some time re-elected, or is there much change in the composition of the eight?—Oh, there is not much change; they change very seldom.

1504. Very seldom a change?—Very seldom a change.

1505. And if the same eight are re-elected would the same three be chosen out of the eight?—Not necessarily, but probably they would be; they have been for three years past at any rate.

1506. And there would be some special reason to make a change?—There would be some special reason; either a member could not give the necessary time or he felt that the duties were not such as were congenial to him, not having sufficient practical knowledge, because, of course, it does require practical knowledge, the construction of roads and sewers.

1507. Those are reasons which would rest apparently with the member?—Yes.

1508. To retire?—Yes.

1509. Apart from his disposition, would there be any change likely to happen?—I think not; a member retired for me to go on just as you have suggested.

1510. And if the same councillors were re-elected on St. Thomas' Day, the same commissioners would be chosen, unless one of the commissioners desired to retire?—Yes, or there was a special desire on the part of any member in the ward to go on the commission.

1511. Can you give any explanation, Mr. Blake, of the original cause of making this commission; why was it that the court of Common Council passed on to the commission these duties?—(Mr. Blake.) It seems to be called for by the Act itself that they should appoint certain members to form this commission—the original one.

1512. Parliament did not do that, I suppose, without desire on the part of the City, or some reason for it?—No; but I imagine that in great measure it arises from this, that the Corporation in those days were much richer in comparison than they are now, as compared with any amount to be raised by the rates, and the commissions for a good many years were very insignificant by themselves compared with the Corporation. I daresay they did not wish it to be mixed up with their own corporate arrangements and property. That has always struck me as the principal cause why they delegated those duties to an outside body.

1513. It is a very big body?—The commission?

1514. Well, it always has been a big body, has it not?—Not till 1848, I should say.

1515. What was the original number?—Oh, as regards numbers?

1516. Yes?—Oh, it has always been a big body as regards number, comprising nearly 100.

1517. About one-third of the Common Council?—Yes.

1518. Always?—Yes.

1519. It did not get any reduction from a large manageable body to a small compact body?—No; but it was made a small body for this reason, that all the aldermen and all the deputies were, ex officio, nominated on the commission, so that it did not make a very large body of members irrespective of those ex officio members.

1520. Ordinary councillors?—Ordinary councillors, because there were about 26 aldermen and 26 deputies; that made 52 members that went on ex officio at once.

1521. Out of the 93?—Out of the 92 or 93. Well, it was only 83 at that time. Now, deputies only come on in the same way as ordinary members would, and there are only six aldermen nominated now.

Mr. H. H. Bridgman, Mr. H. Blake, Dr. W. S. Saunders, Mr. E. A. Baylis, Mr. D. J. Ross.

26 Oct. 1893.

1522. On the other hand, the Recorder is now a member, is he not?—From a very early period you will find that the Recorder and the Common Serjeant were nominated by Act of Parliament as ex officio members.

1523. (Lord Farrer.) Is it absolutely necessary for the Common Council to select common councillors?—Not at all.

1524. They might go outside?—They might select outsiders if they liked, but, as far as I know, they have not done so.

1525. (Chairman.) Do the Commissioners of Sewers divide themselves into committees?—Three principal committees—the Finance and Improvement Committee, the Streets Committee, and the Sanitary Committee. That is mentioned on page 15 of the statement, and they form an Audit Committee from their own members, five from each of these committees.

1526. How often does the commission meet as a body?—Fortnightly.

1527. What is the average attendance?—I should think about 60.

1528. Two-thirds?—Yes.

1529. How long is the sitting as a rule?—I think the sittings average about two hours.

1530. Two hours?—Sometimes not more than one; sometimes it is three, three and a half, or four.

1531. And the committees sit oftener?—Yes, but not very much oftener. As a rule we do with each committee sitting between the sittings of the court once a fortnight. There is generally a good deal of business to be done, and it takes all the afternoon.

1532. Then there is one sitting a week for each member?—Oh, there is more than that.

1533. Well, one a fortnight?—Oh, there are four committees and the court in the fortnight; there are nearly two.

1534. Yes, quite so; but does the same member sit on more than one committee?—Only the audit; the audit and one of the others and the court. In that sense, the same member generally, except the chairman and the late chairman, who are ex officio members of all committees.

1535. And these committees average how many?—About 30; a little over 30.

1536. And what is the ordinary attendance on a committee?—I should think it would average 20.

1537. Again two-thirds?—Quite 20, yes.

1538. Then apparently, judging from the attendance, there is full work for the whole commission?—Yes, they consider so.

1539. Has there been any disposition to show that the commission is too small?—Yes, in 1866 the Court of Common Council increased the number because they thought it was too small.

1540. From 80?—From 83 to 92. It was a little more then, because there were three members of the Metropolitan Board of Works who were put on, ex officio, and that increased it to 95.

1541. Was that because the commission was too small for its work, or because it was necessary to give larger representation to some growing wards?—I think it was the desire to give larger representation. The commission was growing in importance, and so many members thought they should be placed on the commission. I think that that was the principal reason.

1542. That scarcely proves that they were overworked?—There is a great difference of opinion as to whether the committees should be 13 or 30, or 3 or 30 The work has increased very much of late years, enormously increased; but a small body of men can do better work sometimes than a large body of men.

1543. Perhaps this is a question which the chairman could answer better than you. Do you, looking at it as a working problem, conceive the Commission to be over-manned, or that it is adequately manned?—(Mr. Bridgman.) I think there are sufficient, sir, but I think if there was a less number they would have rather too much to do. I think the work now is fairly equally divided. As far as the chairman is concerned, I can say that it is hard work. (Mr. Blake.) It is bound to be, because he is on everything. (Mr. Bridgman.) On everything, because it is necessary that one holding that position should know everything that transpires on the board. As to the number in attendance, I have here a paper of business of 1890 as I thought this was a particular matter that would be required here. That shows the business done on that particular day, when 66 members were present.

1544. Was there any important business on that day?—I do not know that there was anything very special.

1545. Now, on the election of common councilmen; does the question of the way in which a common councilman has discharged his duties as commissioner of sewers ever arise at the hustings?—Well, frequent questions arise and are put to the representatives, and the representatives, as a rule, make a full statement of the various duties that they have been attending to during the year. There is always a great eagerness to know what is being done in different matters both as regards the Corporation and the commission.

1546. And it is a possible element in the mind of an elector, the way in which a common councilman has been acting as a commissioner of sewers?—Oh, certainly, and new members have frequently been put on when some have not sufficiently done their duty. (Mr. Blake.) Have not attended sufficiently? (Mr. Bridgman.) Have not attended sufficiently; I mean that, of course.

1547. Then it might almost be said that the electors have a voice in the choosing of the commission?—Oh, certainly.

1548. Although it is removed one stage from them they still do affect the ultimate composition of this commission?—Yes. Oh, they show great interest in the work of the commission and of the Corporation.

1549. (Lord Farrer.) The work is just as public as that of the Common Council?—Oh, yes, all the commission fortnightly meetings are held in public, and reporters are always present. (Mr. Blake.) They are fully reported. (Mr. Bridgman.) All their work is always reported.

1550. (Chairman.) It would not be a matter, therefore, of great difficulty, from the point of view of machinery, to have the election of the commissioners in the hands of the electors themselves?—I do not know that it would be.

1551. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any similar case in any other town in the country of a body selected by the municipal council to do a very large part of the municipal work?—(Mr. Blake.) I do not know of any.

1552. It is a peculiar case?—Yes.

1553. (Chairman.) It is still obscure to me why such a commission was originally appointed unless you suggest that the Common Council was too multitudinous?—(Mr. Bridgman.) I do not know whether I may be able to suggest a correct solution to the question when I say that immediately after the fire there was a commission or committee appointed—a committee of judges—12 judges in conjunction with the City Lands Committee of the Corporation, with the view of reconstructing London upon either the old lines or on improved lines—I know some streets were improved—and to settle any differences as to ownership, I suppose, and boundaries of property. That commission existed for some years, until the rebuilding—until London was rebuilt. I believe that the outcome of that was the constitution of the Commissioners of Sewers to look after henceforward all questions as to State government and drainage. I believe that that was the reason of the constitution of the Commissioners of Sewers.

1554. That does not answer the question of why the Common Council should not have done it themselves?—Well, the whole of the work of the City is divided into committees. I suppose it was thought that a commission—this is designated a commission instead of a committee—that this committee or commission should have that part of the work of the City, whilst of course there is the control of the markets and numerous other matters committed to the care of other committees.

1555. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know whether in that period of English history the work of other towns was done by special commissions, or whether the municipal body did it themselves?—I do not know. In London, surrounding the City, were numerous commissions, such as the Bloomsbury Estate Commission, and the Southampton Estate Commission; in fact, I think myself that that was one of the great reasons why the Corporation of London was not extended further, because of the objections that were raised by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and by the owners of those various properties thinking that their estates could be administered more economically than if the control of the Corporation were extended. I know that that is true in some instances, even when the vestries were appointed in 1855. I think that they absorbed all these commissions, because in St. Pancras, my own parish, and a very large parish, I know that there were numerous commissions—I happened to be a vestryman—and all these were absorbed in the new vestries which were constituted.

1556. Either the vestries or the Metropolitan Board of Works?—Either the vestries or the Metropolitan Board of Works; but as a rule these commissions were incorporated by the vestries.

1557. Not the main sewers?—That continued, the Greek Street offices controlling the sewers of the metropolis continued for some time afterwards until they were taken over by the Metropolitan Board of Works, but the sewers in the various localities themselves were controlled by the vestries.

1558. (Mr. Smith.) If you leave out the markets that you mentioned, the Commissioners of Sewers are doing a great part of what we should call the municipal work of the City of London?—Yes, certainly.

1559. (Lord Farrer.) When once elected in this way the Common Council cease to have any power over the Commissioners of Sewers?—During the continuance of the commission.

1560. There is no appeal from the commissioners?—No, there never has been any appeal.

1561. (Mr. Crawford.) They can supersede the commission at any moment?—Yes.

1562. Which is an effectual control?—They may create a new commission any day, and so supersede the existing one.

1563. That is a most effective control?—Yes.

1564. (Chairman.) But there must be a commission?—Yes, there must be a commission.

1565. The members may get sent about their business?—Certainly.

1566. But only by the appointment of a fresh commission?—Yes.

1567. (Lord Farrer.) Anything that is done by the commissioners cannot be undone by the council?—Cannot be undone excepting by the constitution of a new commission.

1568. Nor have the ratepayers any control, except the indirect control you have mentioned?—That is so.

1569. (Chairman.) Well now, many authorities have been given by Parliament to this commission?—Yes.

1570. Directly?—Directly.

1571. And this commission is distinguished from the council in having a rating power?—Yes; it is the rating authority of the City.

1572. With a limitation for ordinary purposes in the amount of the rates?—Yes.

1873. That limitation has not been reached in late years?—It has never been reached; I believe there is a considerable margin.

1574. (Lord Farrer.) Can you state whether there is any principle which distinguishes the powers and functions of the commissioners from those of the Common Council, because, according to this paper, in various matters they seem to be mixed up?—There are numerous Acts here in the Appendix which give power solely to the commission.

1575. I can quite see what the different powers are under the Acts, but I wanted to know if there was any guiding principle which runs through these Acts, and which distinguishes the functions of the municipal corporation—the Common Council as such—from those of the Commissioners of Sewers?—These Acts give power to the commission of controlling streets, and lighting and sewers and cleansing, and sanitary matters and construction.

1576. Yes, but when you come to particular things, such, for instance, as improvements, the City, I think, are the authority; the Common Council undertook the Holborn improvement, I think?—Only by special Act of Parliament.

1577. (Chairman.) Apart from special Act of Parliament, it might almost be said that the Common Council is denuded of its functions?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes; they have no powers as to improvements, certainly.

1578. (Mr. Smith.) You are the urban sanitary authority?—(Mr. Bridgman.) We are.

1579. That particular title carries the whole functions of urban government?——

1580. (Chairman.) I observe you say that the commissioners watch all Bills introduced into Parliament likely to affect the city of London, does not the Common Council do the same?—Yes. (Mr. Blake.) Yes, the same officer acts for both.

1581. The Remembrancer?—Yes.

1582. Does he report to each body?—Yes.

1583. (Lord Farrer.) Have the commissioners any jurisdiction outside the city area; do they exercise any functions at all outside that area?—No, only as regards the liberties.

1584. Those little bits?—Yes.

1585. But I mean they have no functions similar to those which the City exercises in regard to markets and bridges?—None at all; they have got a cemetery.

1586. Outside the city?—Outside the city.

1587. (Chairman.) That is to say, they bought the land and the cemetery is outside, but their functions as a burial board are confined to matters arising within the City?—Except that they are not limited to burying citizens, the cemetery is open to bury anybody who chooses to go there, and it is largely used for the purpose.

1588. (Mr. Smith.) On payment?—On payment, yes.

1589. But a preferential payment for outsiders?—No, it is the reverse; a preferential payment to insiders.

1590. You charge more for outsiders?—Yes.

1591-2. (Lord Farrer.) Then the distinction between inside and outside areas does form one principle of distinction; the whole of the functions of the City Commissioners of Sewers are inside the City area, whilst those of the City do for various purposes extend beyond the City area?—(Mr. Bridgman.) That is so.

1593. (Chairman.) You give us an account of the expenditure and receipts, perhaps it is as well that you should state the details of it and of your debt. Your income is for the past year—up to Michaelmas you make your account—page 11?—(Mr. Blake.) I have a copy of the accounts with me.

1594. Your income is 465,000*l.* odd?—That would be about it. I hand in the last printed copy of the accounts, that is up to September 1892. The receipts for the year 1892 were 465,652*l.*, and the expenditure 465,564*l.* They come very close.

1595. Is it generally so close as that?—No, I think you might go a hundred years without finding it so close as that; it is a curiosity, I consider.

1596. As a rule you have a better balance?—Well, sometimes it might be the wrong way, but usually there are a few thousands in balance.

1597. Out of this income by far the larger part is raised by rates?—Yes, by far.

Mr. H. H. Bridgman, M. H. Blake, Dr. W. S. Saunders, Mr. E. A. Baylis, Mr. D. J. Ross.

26 Oct. 1893.

1598. The rest is almost insignificant?—Yes.

1599. (Lord Farrer.) The Commissioners of Sewers have no property, have they, except the artisans' dwellings?—Only temporarily, where they take property for improvements until they are able to dispose of the surplus.

1600. You have no estates?—Well, we have got a wharf, we have got a depôt in Thames Street, freeholds, and we have got a depôt in Stoney Lane, a small one.

1601. That is for the purpose of working?—That is for the purpose of working. We have got a mortuary, that is freehold; the wharf is on lease, and the stone-yard is on lease. Dwellings we have got, but we have only got them temporarily; we are not allowed by the Act of Parliament to hold them unless the Secretary of State gives us permission.

1602. (Chairman.) You have no lands the rents of which swell your income?—No.

1603. Nothing of that kind?—No.

1604. What property you hold is for your special purposes in discharging your functions?—Yes.

1605. Except these artisans' dwellings?—Except the surplus of improvements which must be sold in so many years.

1606. And the amount of your debt?—1,620,624*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*

1607. That is the net debt?—That is the net debt, yes.

1608. And that has been incurred in carrying out improvements?—Yes, and including the artisans' dwellings.

1609. (Lord Farrer.) Your powers of borrowing are conferred by statute, are they not?—Yes.

1610. Entirely?—Yes.

1611. And limited by statute?—No, they are not limited so far as regards artisans' dwellings. I do not know if there is anything else.

1612. And in those statutes is there always some provision made for paying off debt; are you under the same condition under which the vestries and the Metropolitan Board of Works and other bodies are, of being bound to pay off debt by a certain time?—Yes, except under one Act, as long as we do not owe more than half a million under it. At no time can we have more than half a million under one Act, and as we pay off one part we can re-borrow to the extent of half a million; but otherwise there is no provision in that Act that you must pay off within certain years.

1613. There is no provision compelling you to pay off within a certain number of years?—No.

1614. (Chairman.) Which Act is that?—That is the City of London (Commissioners of Sewers) Artisans' Dwellings Act, 1881, page 73, the bottom clause, 45 & 46 Vict. chapter 89.

1615. Have you got the Act itself there?—Yes, I have got a copy of it. (Act put in.)

1616. (Lord Farrer.) What I wanted to find out was whether the Commissioners of Sewers are under the same obligations that almost every other municipal body is to pay off any existing debt within a given time?—No doubt of it.

1617. They are under their different Acts?—Yes.

1618. I mean, under a parliamentary obligation?—Yes, at different times; under the Sewers Act it is within 20 years.

1619. Then I understood you to say just now that there was some Act under which they have the power to borrow half a million?—That is the Act we have just been speaking of.

1620. And that when they repay they have the power to re-borrow under that Act to the extent of half a million?—Yes, that is so.

1621. Without reference to the purposes for which it is borrowed?—It is either for artisans' dwellings or improvements.

1622. (Chairman.) But the point which Lord Farrer has is this: if the Commissioners of Sewers borrow money for any purpose, must it or must it not be repaid within a definite time, and your answer is that it must be repaid under a parliamentary obligation within a definite time?—Yes.

1623. But with respect to this half a million; if I understand you rightly, they may have fresh projects for artisans' dwellings?—Yes.

1624. And, although they have repaid sums borrowed for a certain purpose, if they have new purposes of the same character to carry out, they may go on borrowing up to the extent of half a million?—Yes.

1625. (Lord Farrer.) Without going to Parliament again for fresh powers?—Yes.

1626. They are not bound then to go to Parliament for fresh powers?—Yes.

1627. But they may go on?—Yes.

1628. Because they have power to re-borrow?—Yes.

1629. (Chairman.) Then, in respect to that, is there not some limitation of their schemes; must not the Home Secretary sanction their schemes?—Yes, the Home Secretary has a great deal to say to them, but beyond that there is no limit as to their powers.

1630. You have not in this paper given us any balance-sheet of your assets and liabilities?—I have handed in the accounts, which gave the balance-sheet for the year; but I have here a statement of the assets and liabilities which is prepared every year to start with to enable the commission to ascertain what amount of rate should be made—an estimate. That was the last one—made for this year. (Statement put in.)

1631. You have given a list of your loans in this paper, and they are borrowed under different Acts; do they limit you in the expenditure of the money to special purposes, or do you get a general borrowing power for any purpose for which you have power to spend money?—Except the Act which has been referred to, I think they are all for general purposes; except for the artisans' dwelling purposes, they are all for general purposes.

1632. Are you under any limitation as to parting with the capital of property; if you have property, are you bound to get the consent of the Treasury to its letting or sale?—No, we are bound by Act of Parliament to let or sell the remainder.

1633. And may you spend the capital; supposing you sell a site that you have which comes into your capital account, may you spend that money for purposes of revenue. I am not saying whether you do; I am asking only about the legal power?—No doubt about it; but it goes in the same direction for improvements again.

1634. I am only asking you about the legal power?—We have no capital account really, because we work at a loss; we do not make any profit.

1635. If you derive anything from the sale of surplus lands, you are under strict obligations as to the application of the money?—I do not think for any specific purpose we do; as a matter of fact, it all goes to the improvement account.

1636. Does not the produce of surplus lands go to the sinking fund account, or some purpose of that kind?—It goes to the improvement account; the sinking fund is paid out of rates direct.

1637. (Lord Farrer.) Would you spend it the next year in annual expenditure?—Oh, no, certainly not; it would go to the improvement fund account until it was wanted for similar purposes.

1638. But that is a sort of capital account, is it not?—It is what you call the reserve account for improvements really. I have put a note to say we do not make any improvements out of rates in the present day, but in the first instance they are all paid out of borrowed money, and it is only the interest of the borrowed money, and the repayment of the annual proportion which is charged to the rates.

1639. Then if you sell surplus land it would go to the same account, and be treated in the same manner as capital money which you have borrowed?—Yes, really.

1640. (Mr. Crawford.) I see that the Sewers Act of 1848 provides for the creation of a sinking fund?—Yes.

1641. Sections 221 and 222?—It is the repayment of a loan.

1642. (Chairman.) Your improvement account is capital expenditure and capital receipts?—You may take it as such; we very seldom have any capital to speak of.

1643. Well, it consists of money spent in purchasing premises that you are about to pull down, apparently, on the one side, and recoupments by parts of the sites which you are able to sell?—Yes.

1644. That is the whole of the account?—That is the whole of the account.

1645. You are a corporation in yourselves, are you not?—We are not held to be so.

1646. Is not the commission a corporation?—No.

1647. Have you not a seal?—Only as a burial board.

1648. You have a large staff, necessarily?—A large staff, if you take in workers of all descriptions.

1649. Well, you have a fairly large clerical staff?—No, I think not.

1650. I do not mean to say an inordinate?—Some eight or ten, I think, in my department; considering the constant examination of the books of the rate collectors it is none too large; they are all very busy.

1651. I was thinking of the whole staff, clerical and engineering?—Oh, I cannot speak of the engineering and sanitary.

1652. (Lord Farrer.) Do you do all your clerical work with eight or ten?—Yes.

1653. (Chairman.) There is a large staff?—Yes, necessarily, appointed for the work of the commission.

1654. Appointed by the commission?—Appointed by the commission.

1655. Not by the Common Council?—Not by the Common Council.

1656. And holding office thereunder?—Re-elected every year.

1657. Every officer?—Every officer comes before the commission for re-election every year.

1658. The commission itself being a body coming into existence every year, the officers come in under it?—Yes.

1659. And their tenure is theoretically insecure?—So long as they do their duty, I think, perform their work well. (Mr. Blake.) I have been there 42 years.

1660. (Lord Farrer.) Have you a pension system for them?—No, there is no system. We are entirely dependent upon the good will of the commissioners, but they always pay very well to those who have served them properly.

1661. Is the staff altogether separate from that of the City?—Entirely. (Mr. Bridgman.) And the Corporation.

1662. From that of the Corporation?—Yes.

1663. Entirely separate?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes.

1664. There must be some duties which are very much in common, are there not?—There are certain appointments made by the Common Council in which we are the parties to pay out of the consolidated rate; that is the only control we have over those purposes at all; they are appointed and directed by the Court of Common Council, and we merely pay their salaries quarterly, that is all.

1665. Now, for instance, in the case of the Infant Life Protection Act and the Diseases of Animals Act, the expenses are charged upon the sewers rate?—Yes.

1666. That is done by you, is it?—We merely pay, nothing more.

1667. You do not appoint the officers?—No; nothing except pay.

1668. You have nothing to do with the administration of these Acts?—No, it would be certified by the commitee of the Corporattion that has the management, and we pay.

1669. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation would be the local authority, but the rate would be the sewers rate?—Yes.

1670. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so. Then, both the Corporation and the Commissioners must have an engineer, must they not?—The Corporation have a surveyor; formerly an architect; it is a surveyor now, and we have an engineer and surveyor in one man.

1671. But, for instance, the Holborn Valley improvement; Colonel Haywood occupied the position of an engineer and architect or surveyor, that was not done by your officers at all?—Yes, it was done by our officer, who was permitted to act for the Corporation and paid by the Corporation specially for that work.

1672. (Mr. Crawford.) All the property was taken by the Corporation, and the surveyor's work, architect's work, and work of that character, was done by the officers of the Corporation, but in that particular instance the engineering work was entrusted to the engineer of the Sewers, and he was paid in exactly the same way as if the Corporation had called in an outside engineer; with the permission of the Commissioners of Sewers he was allowed to be employed?—Yes.

1673. (Lord Farrer.) He was paid extra for it?

1674. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly. (Mr. Bridgman.) There are practically no engineering works done by the Corporation. It is chiefly surveyor's work—the superintending of property and buildings, the control of the markets, and not necessarily engineering work.

1675. (Mr. Crawford.) Any engineering work would be done by an outside expert?—Yes. But the Commissioners of Sewers construct the sewers; necessarily an engineer has control of them.

1676. (Lord Farrer.) And in a case where the City undertake work of that description they might come to you, as they would to an outsider, to lend them an officer?—Certainly.

1677. Do they pay him as they would an outsider?—They did, I think, in the case of the Holborn Viaduct. (Mr. Blake.) They paid him, but whether it was the same as for an outsider, I do not know. (Mr. Bridgman.) I said no engineering work is done by the Corporation, excepting the construction of works, such as the Tower Bridge, that is now going forward, which is outside work.

1678. That is done by an outside engineer?—That is done by an outside engineer—engineer and contractor.

1680. (Mr. Smith.) The building of a market is an engineering work and an architect's?—Yes; but nothing more than an architect can control and manage.

1681. (Mr. Crawford.) It is all done by the City surveyor—all the markets.

1682. (Chairman.) You, Mr. Bridgman, are you now a vestryman of St. Pancras?—I am, sir.

1683. You are both a vestryman of St. Pancras and the Chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers?—I am.

1684. What would you say was the main distinction between the work of the vestry of St. Pancras and the Commissioners of Sewers?—Well, I should say they are practically the same.

1685. The Commissioners of Sewers for the City perform the functions that the vestry do for St. Pancras?—Yes; with the exception of the larger improvements that are carried out in the City. I think the vestries have no power to carry out improvements except by obtaining money from the County Council now; I believe they have no authority for carrying out an improvement; they must go to the County Council for consent and receive a contribution; as a rule they do so.

1686. (Mr. Crawford.) They do not have to obtain the consent; they generally go to the County Council for the money?—For the money.

1687. (Lord Farrer.) They go for the consent of the County Council for borrowing?—The vestry has full power—I was thinking for the moment of the guardians.

1688. (Chairman.) They may borrow without going to the County Council, though it is more economical and convenient to do so; they may borrow outside?—They have done so, I know, in order to extinguish the old commissioners' debts, to consolidate them. They have done that; but whether they had to apply for consent I really cannot say.

1689. (Lord Farrer.) Have they no other option than to come to the County Council for leave to borrow?—I was thinking in my own mind whether they would not have to get some consent to borrow.

1690. All these bodies when they want to borrow have to go either to the County Council, or to the Local Government Board, or to the Treasury, I think?—I think there must be some consent.

1691. (Mr. Smith.) The County Council, I think, in some respects, take the position formerly occupied by the Local Government Board?

(Mr. Dickinson, Deputy-Chairman of the London County Council.) That is so in regard to vestries.

1692–3. You take the place of the Local Government Board in those matters?—We have the same functions as the Local Government Board; we cannot say we have taken the place of it, because the Local Government Board never had those duties in respect of the vestries. But we do practically with respect to the vestries what the Local Government Board does with respect to the guardians—we give the permission to borrow.

1694. (Chairman.) Then to go back to the parallelism between the two—how would you state it; what is the distinction?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Well, I should think the chief distinction would be that the City carry out more important improvements. Certainly, they do; there is no question about that—very extensive improvements. They have some in contemplation now.

1695. Larger in degree?—Much larger in degree.

1696. Does that make a difference in essence between the two bodies?—I think materially there is no great difference.

1697. (Lord Farrer.) Can you tell us on what principle the Metropolitan Board of Works have acted, and on what principle the County Council have acted, in assisting the City in making any improvements in great thoroughfares?—Well, we were rather freely assisted by the Metropolitan Board of Works. In later years, I think, the City received a contribution of some 30,000*l.* a year towards the improvements that were being carried out by the City; and, I think, in anticipation of that arrangement continuing the Commissioners of Sewers entered upon numerous improvements that they probably otherwise would not have done. So that I believe we might say, speaking so, that the old Metropolitan Board of Works, if it existed now, would be in our debt to the extent of some 200,000*l.* or 230,000*l.*

1698. (Mr. Crawford.) Have you been assisted by the County Council?—I think the only assistance by the County Council is a moiety of an improvement that is about to be carried out in Bloomfield Street, Finsbury. I believe that is the only contribution.

1699. Take the Ludgate Hill improvement; have you had any assistance there?—Not a penny from the County Council. We strongly hoped that we should have had a contribution. In fact, I know that there are improvements now waiting, because we do not see our way to commence them. There is one very important one at the end of Cheapside, near the Post Office, where the traffic is so congested that there is very considerable delay, and numerous accidents occurring there daily; but we really do not see our way to go forward with that improvement. But I believe we shall do so, whether we get assistance or not, because it is an improvement that is imperative.

1700. (Chairman.) Perhaps if you assumed towards the County Council the same relation that the vestry does you might get similar treatment?—Well, sir the improvements in the City cost so very much more, and they are so much more urgently needed. To speak of comparing St. Pancras with the City, there is no comparison at all. The improvements in St. Pancras are comparatively nil, when we take the City into consideration. (Mr. Blake.) There is a great drawback with regard to observing certain of the rules of the County Council, especially for the City, in applying for assistance in improvements; it involves publicity, which enhances the cost, which is great at any time, in carrying out an improvement.

1701. You think you can do your work more quietly by yourselves?—Yes, and it is of importance that we should have advanced a certain stage, given certain notices, before any publicity is given to it, and if application is made in the first instance, "we think "of making such and such an improvement if you "approve," it is taken out of our hands.

1702. (Mr. Crawford.) The compensation goes up?—Yes.

1703. (Mr. Smith.) But that publicity obtains more or less in every municipality in the country, does it not; and we manage to get over it somehow or other?—But the immense value of property in the City makes it more intense there.

1704. No doubt it intensifies the difficulty. I wanted to carry that comparison of the vestry of St. Pancras and the City of London a little further. Could you tell me the rateable value of the vestry of St. Pancras?—(Mr. Bridgman.) I cannot from memory.

1705. The rateable value of the City is a little over 4,000,000*l.*, I think?—4,000,000*l.* It is about one-eighth of the entire metropolis. The rateable value of St. Pancras is one-and-a-half million and 17,000*l.* beyond.

1706. (Lord Farrer.) And of the City?—4,000,000*l.*

1707. Have either the Metropolitan Board of Works or the London County Council carried out any metropolitan improvements within the area of the City?—Yes, Queen Victoria Street was carried out some 20 years ago by the Metropolitan Board of Works.

1708. Was that carried out at the expense of the common fund of the metropolis, or did the City contribute? They contributed as ratepayers, of course?—As ratepayers only; they did not contribute otherwise.

1709. The Holborn Viaduct was partly carried out at the expense of the Coal and Wine Dues?—I believe solely.

1710. (Mr. Crawford.) Not solely; there is a debt still remaining unpaid?—Oh, yes; I was coming to that. I believe there is a debt still remaining of three-quarters of a million.

1711. (Mr. Smith.) Was Cannon Street done in the same way?—(Mr. Blake.) No, by the City alone, under a special Act.

(Lord Farrer.) That was not done by the Commissioners of Sewers?

(Mr. Crawford.) No, that was done by the Corporation under the Act of 1847.

(Mr. Smith.) It was done before the Metropolitan Board of Works was in existence?

1712–5. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Then we constructed Arthur Street East at a cost of half a million to get a better approach to the market. The Commissioners of Sewers did that solely. Then the Commissioners of Sewers contributed a quarter of a million to the Eastcheap improvement.

1716. (Lord Farrer.) What are the improvements which you spoke of which you think the Metropolitan Board of Works would have contributed to, and which the County Council have not?—Principally Ludgate Hill. Then the Commissioners of Sewers are always carrying out improvements in the City. In every narrow street, where there is any rebuilding, the engineer has a plan with the lines laid down of prospective widening, so that when buildings are taken down, as they are constantly in the City, we always take good care to set back so many feet as may prove practicable for the whole street.

1717. Paying compensation?—Paying compensation; buying freehold.

1718. Is that under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act?—It is under that Act that we proceed.

1719–20. (Mr. Smith.) You would rather hold that as a model up to the vestries to do the same thing where it is necessary?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes; except that the City of London being the old part, it is more needed there. (Mr. Bridgman.) I suppose there is no street in the City which has not been widened in this way; but many of them have taken years to do.

1721. That is what we are accustomed to in all boroughs and municipalities; every city surveyor has a plan such as you describe, and he rounds off corners and purchases property at auctions where it is convenient?—Yes; but I think there are few towns of such importance as the City, where the streets are so very narrow—many of them were; but now they are practically doubled in width to what they used to be.

1722. (Lord Farrer.) Then, is there not this distinction between the Commissioners of Sewers and the vestry, that they either have a fund in hand or they have a power of borrowing and using the funds, and the vestry must, in order to carry out an improvement, get a special loan for the purpose?—Yes, there is that difference.

1723. Is there not that distinction?—Yes, there is that difference.

1724. That is a very material distinction, is it not? It would be.

1725. The vestries have just the same power under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act as the Commissioners of Sewers have?—To carry out improvements, certainly.

1726. You give, on page 17, a list of the main streets that are widened wholly or in part?—Yes, those are the main streets that have been done. Then there is a long list from page 75, Appendix B., practically, I suppose, embracing, as I said just now, every street in the City, and some of which are being carried out now. It is impossible to complete an improvement in the City, it would be impossible, I mean, considering the cost, to carry out a complete street improvement in the City, because we have to buy the businesses, and there are several interests to purchase; besides the freeholds, the freeholders' and the leaseholders' interests, there are the traders' interests; they have reached such an enormous amount that it is impracticable to do it.

1727. (Chairman.) It must be done bit by bit?—Bit by bit.

1728. You would not undertake Ludgate Hill, as you have widened it, from top to bottom, at one stroke?—Well, we could have done it at less cost, perhaps, than the entire improvement has come to. But there are difficulties in the way, the cost to begin with is so great.

1729. The cost of the "bit by bit" work must be enormous?—Yes, it is enormous.

1730. (Lord Farrer.) And you get the inconvenient condition of things pending completion?—There is no doubt in the narrow streets in the City we carry out our improvements very much cheaper doing it piecemeal than we should doing a street right off, because we embrace the opportunities when buildings—many of them being old—are rebuilt, to buy and set back, and then do so again next door as those buildings should be erected.

(Mr. Blake.) And in some of the narrow streets to purchase property merely for a "lay-by" is almost as good as the improvement for a through traffic, because it is letting a waggon pass: it is not like Cheapside or Ludgate Hill where you want to provide for the general traffic.

1731. (Chairman.) In the case of the narrow streets running parallel, you use one for going in one direction and another for going in another direction?—Yes, that is a police arrangement.

1732. (Mr. Crawford.) I see Mr. Rotton, in his evidence with regard to vestries and the Commissioners of Sewers, says this in answer to a question put by me:—"(Q.) May I take it generally, Mr. Rotton, "that the Commissioners of Sewers have far more "extensive powers than the ordinary vestries or "district boards?—(A.) They have all the additional "powers which are given by the City of London "Sewers Acts, 1848 and 1851, they have the same "powers as the vestries under Michael Angelo "Taylor's Act, and under the Public Health (London) "Act, 1891. They have the powers therefore of "their own Acts in addition. (Q.) What I more "particularly refer to is this, that whereas to a "certain extent the vestries and district boards are "controlled in some instances by the County Council "and in other instances by the Local Government "Board, the Commissioners of Sewers are not so con-"trolled in those matters?—(A.) They are not to be "controlled, I think I may say, in any case by the "County Council; they are controlled only by the "Local Government Board in the case of a complaint "of default under the Act of 1891."*

1733. (Lord Farrer.) That was the point I was coming to. I was going to ask whether another very leading distinction between the Commissioners of Sewers and the vestries is, that there is a certain control over the vestries by the County Council which there is not over the Commissioners of Sewers?—That is so.

1734. Can you give the cases in which that occurs? They are given in a paper that has been put in by the County Council, and it would save time if you could look at that and tell us whether the law is correctly stated. It is headed "Return showing Powers and Expenses which run throughout the Administrative County of London, and those which do not extend to the City of London," and the part I refer to is from page 24 to the end. There are statements in that return showing how far the powers run in the rest of London—powers which do not run in the City—and we should be much obliged to you if you would check that and see whether it is, in your opinion, accurate. I do not mean accurate as to any observations that are made, or inferences drawn, but whether the statement of the law is accurate or not?—Yes.

1735. (Mr. Crawford.) You see that statement mixes up matters which are controlled by the Corporation apart from the Commissioners altogether. I see various matters are referred to—tramways, petroleum, weights and measures, &c.

1736. (Lord Farrer.) We can get at it in that way merely as regards the Commissioners of Sewers. I made out from that, that under the following Acts the powers are exercised by the Commissioners of Sewers independently and without any control by the Council which in other parts are to a certain extent exercised under the control of the councils. Building Acts, 1855 to 1882 (p. 24); Sky Signs Act, 1891 (p. 24); Overhead Wires, 1891 (p. 24); Housing Working Classes, 1890 (p. 24); Offensive Businesses and Health, 1891 (p. 25)?—(Mr. Blake.) In the main that is quite correct.

1737. That is as regards the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes, quite so.

1738. The City is separate?—Yes.

1739. (Chairman.) In respect of paving and lighting your powers exactly correspond to those of the vestry, do they not?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Yes, they do.

* See Rotton, 644–5.

Mr. H. H. Bridgman,
Mr. H. Blake,
Dr. W. S. Saunders,
Mr. E. A. Baylis,
Mr. D. J. Ross.

26 Oct. 1893.

(Mr. Blake.) I expect they do, and I expect the Act of 1855 was in a great measure copied from the Sewers Act of 1848, judging from the language.

1740. (Mr. Smith.) That is the Metropolitan Management Act?—Yes.

1741. (Lord Farrer.) And I wish you would, in looking through that return, tell us, if you can, what you think the financial effect of withdrawing the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Sewers from the control of the council is, because with regard to the things which the Commissioners of Sewers can do without the council they do not contribute to the metropolitan rate. You know we have a special county fund and a general county fund?—Yes.

1742. I wanted, if you could tell us, what the financial effect of the exemption of the City is—certain expenses attend all this administration?—Yes.

1743. Well, the expense of administration in the City is borne by the City?—Yes.

1744. And they do not contribute to the expense of the administration outside?—Well, only as ratepayers.

1745. No, not even as ratepayers. The effect would be, would it not, that, if the expense in the City is as large in proportion as it is outside, the City pays as much now as it would do if it formed part of the general system. If, on the other hand, the expense of administration is small it is withdrawing a very rich area from contribution towards the metropolitan expenses?—I suppose the explanation is this, that at the present time the expense is comparatively small in the City; but you must take into account the original large outlay of establishing, which is lost sight of; and if you take that into account the outlay in the City would be considerably more than an eighth of the whole.

1746. We shall be very glad if you will give us your view of the financial effect?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Certainly, my Lord.

1747. Might I ask you how your audit is managed?—(Mr. Blake.) There are three auditors appointed by the Court of Common Council, and paid by them to audit our accounts.

1748. (Mr. Crawford.) Three professional auditors?—Three professional auditors.

1749. (Lord Farrer.) There is no audit by independent officers such as is the case with the London County Council by the Local Government Board?—No. The Court of Common Council are totally distinct from us, and their auditors are distinct.

1750. (Chairman.) It is an internal audit really within the City?—Within the City, but outside our body.

1751. So far as the Corporation is outside you?—Yes—(Mr. Bridgman.) By a professional auditor.

1752. But there is a matter of discretion, I suppose?—(Mr. Blake.) They are sworn auditors.

1753. (Mr. Crawford.) If you look at section 46 of the Sewers Act of 1848 you will find that you are bound to have auditors appointed by the Court of Common Council, and they are bound to make a declaration as to the accuracy of their audit before a magistrate.

1754. (Chairman.) That may be; but that does not peremptorily mean professional auditors.

1755. (Mr. Crawford.) Not necessarily professional; but you may take it, on no occasion has any auditor been appointed except he has been a professional accountant?—Yes.

1756. And they are always persons appointed outside the Common Council?—Yes.

1757. They cannot be Commissioners, it distinctly states in the statute?—Yes.

1758. (Chairman.) With respect to the water supply, I see that you are the authority for supplying water for street purposes, and you have also incurred some expense in sinking an artesian well?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Yes.

1759. (Mr. Crawford.) Before you leave the question of the audit, may I take the liberty of drawing your attention to the fact that there is power given to appeal from the auditors. The auditors may disapprove certain accounts, if they choose. There is power given to appeal to quarter sessions; so there is something more than a mere internal audit.

1760. (Lord Farrer.) Who can appeal?

1761. (Mr. Crawford,) Any person can appeal.

1762. (Mr. Smith.) That is against surcharge?

1763. (Mr. Crawford.) Against surcharge.

1764. (Mr. Smith.) Is it an appeal against the surcharge—that is important—is it a right of appeal given to persons surcharged, or is it a right of appeal given to the public?

1765. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it would be better to give the exact section: "And be it enacted, that "the auditors so appointed as aforesaid shall forthwith, or at the time appointed for that purpose, "attend at the office of the Commissioners, or at some "other convenient place to be appointed by the "Commissioners, and from time to time shall, in the "presence of the clerk in case he shall desire to be "present, proceed to audit the accounts of the Commissioners for the year preceding the appointment "of such auditors, and the Commissioners shall by "their clerk produce and lay before such auditors at "every such meeting the statement and account "herein-after mentioned, accompanied with proper "vouchers in support of the same, and all books, "papers, or writings in their custody or power "relating thereto; and if the said account shall be "found to be correct, such auditors shall sign the same, "and if such auditors shall think that there is just "cause to disapprove of any part of the said accounts, "it shall be lawful for such auditors, or any other "persons interested in the said accounts, to appeal "against any such part of the said accounts as shall "be so disapproved of to one of the two then next "general quarter sessions; notice in writing of such "appeal being given to the clerk fourteen days, "at the least, prior to the hearing of such appeal." Clearly, under that a ratepayer would have a right of appeal, he would be a person interested in the accounts.

1766. (Mr. Smith.) It is something more than a check and voucher audit.

1767. (Mr. Crawford.) It is something more than an internal audit.

1768. (Lord Farrer.) Has that ever been acted upon?——

1769. (Mr. Crawford.) I am afraid I am too young an officer to be able to say?—(Mr. Blake.) I do not remember a case in the 42 years I have been connected with the Commissioners of Sewers.

1770. (Chairman.) I was going to ask you a question as to the range of your authority in respect of water?—(Mr. Bridgman.) We supply the water for street purposes and for the artizans' dwellings ourselves direct now from our well, and previously the water was supplied by the New River Company.

1771. The well supplies the artizans' dwellings?—Yes.

1772. You have got more than one block of artizans' dwellings?—Oh, yes; there are five blocks.

1773. Does one well supply the whole?—One well supplies the whole. The object primarily was, I think, to see whether good water could be obtained in the City, and we find we can get most excellent water.

1774. (Lord Farrer.) Can you get a large quantity?—We can get a large quantity, and we are now considering the question whether or not it is possible to water the streets from the same source.

1775. I suppose it is very good water you get from the artesian wells?—The full particulars are contained in page 25.

1776. (Chairman.) That was an expenditure on capital account; do you consider that you have got power without limit to go to an expenditure of that kind?—To water the streets?

1777. No, to sink the well?—Oh, yes, under the Sewers Act. (Mr. Blake.) We had power to sink the well.

1778. (Lord Farrer.) Would the auditor take any notice whether the money was expended on capital account or revenue account?—He does not consider we have got any capital account.

1779. (Chairman.) At all events he would discriminate as to whether you charged it to your rates, or charged it to your improvement fund?—Oh, no doubt of that; there is an improvement account.

1780. Would he allow such an item of charge as that to go into your improvement fund?—No, he would take it out at once, as being irregularly placed.

1781. He would consider that it must be charged to your annual expenditure?—Yes.

1782. And met by rates?—Yes.

1783. It has been so charged as a matter of fact?—Yes.

1784. And the only limit to this expenditure is that probably you would not be able to stand it out of the rates, since it is treated as an annual expenditure?—(Mr. Bridgman.) That is so.

1785. (Lord Farrer.) What I wanted to get at was, would he allow, for instance, money that you have borrowed, capital money that you have been borrowing, to be applied to the making of the artesian well?—As the case has never occurred, I cannot tell, of course, what he would do; but we are very particular.

1786. You never tried to do it?—No.

1787. You would not think yourself authorised to do it?—No.

1788. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find you have got a special power under your Act of 1848, which is rather an exceptional power, section 147: "And be it enacted, that the Commissioners shall "have full power and authority to cause the streets "to be watered as often as they shall think fit, and "also to cause any wells to be dug and sunk in such "places as they shall think proper, and also to erect "and fix any pumps in any public places for the "more effectual supply of water to the inhabitants of "the City," so that it does contemplate the supply of water to inhabitants; therefore I take it that an auditor would somewhat hesitate before treating this as an improper expenditure.

1789. (Lord Farrer.) No, but the question is whether in the clauses that relate to the borrowing of money there is power to spend the capital that you borrow for that purpose. That is the point that I wanted to get at. To turn to another point, do you think, so far as you can judge, that if you had power to supply the inhabitants with water, there would be sufficient water from these wells to do it?—I think there can be no doubt that we can get sufficient water under the City of London to supply the City.

1790. And you say you cannot compete with the New River Company?—No, we cannot; I suppose it would be a question whether we could charge; we cannot lay pipes.

1791. There would be a great practical difficulty?—Yes.

1792. Legal difficulty or not, you think if these restrictions were removed you could get a sufficient supply of water under the City to supply the City?—Yes.

1793. (Mr. Smith.) Do you go through the chalk into the greensand?—We do.

1794. You do not reach the greensand?—(Mr. Ross.) Not the lower greensand.

1795. You go through the London clay?—Through the London clay, and the Woolwich beds.

1796. You find it in the water-bearing strata of chalk?—In the fissures.

1797. You have only one well?—(Mr. Blake.) Only one.

1798. You have had the good luck to alight on a fissure?—We have a plentiful supply of water of excellent quality.

1799. You have laid on your water to your dwellings?—Yes; it has been worked for a year and a half or two years.

1800. What do you consider would be the cost of supplying that water—a similar supply—if you got it from the New River Company?—I think our supply costs more than the New River Company would charge, because we have had the cost of sinking the well. We could supply a larger, a much larger, quantity of water by the same machinery that we have now, but of course at the present moment we are only supplying the artisans' dwellings.

1801. (Lord Farrer.) So that if you extended your area the expense per head would be less?—A great deal less, of course.

1802. (Chairman.) And in estimating the cost, do you take in the total cost of sinking the well, or the annual interest of sinking it?—We are obliged in comparing the cost of the water of the well to take into consideration the first cost of construction, and I think it comes to twice the amount that the New River Company would charge.

1803. (Lord Farrer.) To what depth does the well go?—(Mr. Ross.) 512 feet.

1804. (Mr. Smith.) Can you tell me as a matter of curiosity how far you imagine you are from the bottom of the chalk there?—I could not tell you, but the chalk at that depth assumed a different character, it became sticky and plastic.

1805. (Lord Farrer.) I see one of the functions you speak of is watching Bills in Parliament; what power have you of spending money upon either promoting or opposing Bills; can you promote or can you oppose?—(Mr. Bridgman.) There is all power under the Sewers Act of doing both.

1806. You have power to do both?—Yes.

1807. Have you power of promoting Bills and spending money for the purpose?—(Mr. Baylis.) We have never done such a thing.

1808. It is all done by the Corporation?—Yes, entirely.

1809. You never appear to oppose a Bill as Commissioners of Sewers?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes, we do, if we think the citizens are injured by it.

1810. Without going through the agency of the Corporation?—Yes, it so happens that the same officer acts for the Corporation and the Commissioners of Sewers.

1811. (Mr. Crawford.) Take the Public Health Bill, opposed by the Corporation and the Commissioners of Sewers?—(Mr. Baylis.) Yes, and railway Bills and all such like.

1812. (Lord Farrer.) I see in one of your lists here of expenses, certains sums of money for watching and opposing Bills. Can you tell us to what Bills those relate?—(Mr. Blake.) No, I cannot tell you now.

1813. Legal and parliamentary expenses, 2,452*l.*, page 12, I think?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Underground railways we have had a good deal to do with.

1814. Has any of it been in opposing the London County Council?—(Mr. Blake.) There might be a trifle.

1815. There was some difference between them and you on the subject of overhead wires, and of sky signs there. I suppose you were opposed to the Council; or would the City do it?—(Mr. Baylis.) Oh, no, we only appeared on it, and there was no expense incurred on that Bill.

1816. (Mr. Crawford.) I may say that the statement which is going to be put in by the Corporation contains full details of the whole of the Parliamentary work of the Corporation, including the Commissioners of Sewers, since 1881.

1817. (Lord Farrer.) What I wanted to get at—what was the distinction. There are charges here in the accounts of the Commissioners of Sewers; I wanted to find out what were the functions of the City and the Commissioners of Sewers respectively in opposing Bills.

1818. (Mr Crawford.) Anything which directly affects the ratepayers, as apart from the Corporation, would be opposed on behalf of the Commissioners of Sewers. In that case the City Remembrancer, assuming that he had to incur the expense of counsel's fees, would charge the Commissioners of Sewers with the actual disbursements for counsel's fees, but his own time and the time of his staff in all instances would be paid for by the Corporation.

1819. (Mr. Smith.) I think it is a matter of general law rather—this. The inability to expend money on the part of corporate bodies generally, with regard to parliamentary proceedings, arises under statute. It arises under what is known as the Borough Funds Act, which is a special Act, which we are all acquainted with. Then it also arises to some extent under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1888, but you know the Borough Funds Act was a good deal broken into in the matter of opposing Bills by the case of the Attorney-General v. the Mayor of Brecon, where it was held, notwithstanding any provision in the Borough Funds Act, that a corporate body, implying by that all corporations, all local boards, and so on, were justified in taking parliamentary steps and appearing before Parliament in defence of any of their interests. And that was a very material hole in that Act of Parliament, and we always act in Birmingham upon that and we should appear in any case where we thought we had a right to.

1820. (Mr. Crawford.) That was distinctly reported upon to Parliament, and with regard to that—— 1821. (Lord Farrer.) There is no doubt whatever that both the Corporation and the Commissioners of Sewers have power to spend money upon parliamentary proceedings affecting the ratepayers—affecting the inhabitants of the City.

1822. (Mr. Crawford.) There is no doubt.

1823. (Lord Farrer.) I mean, is that the fact?—(Mr. Bridgman.) I understand it to be so. (Mr. Baylis.) That is so.

1824. (Mr. Crawford.) I should not dispute the proposition, Lord Farrer, having regard to the decision to which Mr. Smith has alluded.

1825. (Lord Farrer.) I put it in another way; are the City and the Commissioners of Sewers bound by anything in the Borough Funds Act?

1826. (Mr. Crawford.) No, but you see this: so far as the Commissioners of Sewers are concerned they have to come within the four corners of any particular statutes that affect them, but the Corporation are not so tied, and, therefore, if the Commissioners wish either to promote or oppose anything which does not fall within their particular powers they do it by going to the Corporation, and the Corporation helps them.

1827. (Lord Farrer.) There is a question about which there has been a good deal of talk lately, about which I wanted to ask you. Your sewers rate is half of it chargeable upon the owner; do you actually charge that rate upon the owner?—(Mr. Blake.) The owners at the present day get rid of that liability on the terms of letting their property. It is really, in effect, paid by the occupier.

1828. (Mr. Smith.) It is a common clause in leases, I think?—I have no doubt.

1829. Including the sewers rate?—Yes.

1830. (Lord Farrer.) I think the Metropolitan Board of Works has contributed somewhere about half-a-million — nearly 600,000*l.*—towards improvements in the City?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Yes, I think more than that altogether; I think some 591,000*l.* out of a total cost of improvements, 3,026,000*l.*—the net cost.

1831. And how much of that 3,000,000*l.* was paid out of rates in the City and how much out of coal dues and other sources?—Nothing out of coal dues and other sources; the Commissioners of Sewers have had no control whatever over the coal dues.

1832. Has that been entirely out of rates, the rest of the 3,000,000*l.*?—(Mr. Bridgman.) This is the net amount, this 3,000,000*l.*, less 591,000*l.*

1833. The whole of that has been paid out of rates?—The whole of that has been paid out of rates.

1834. That is over and above everything that the City has done in the way of improvements out of the coal dues?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Yes, that is quite distinct.

1835. I think at page 17, you say, "In addition to "this special outlay the ratepayers of the City have "contributed annually about one-eighth of the cost of "the improvements made in the Metropolis outside "the City." How do you arrive at that?—That is in the shape of rates paid by the citizens you know. (Mr. Blake.) One-eighth of any expenditure by the Metropolitan Board of Works or by the County Council in all districts, yes.

1836. Not one-eighth of the improvements made by the Metropolitan Board of Works or by the London County Council?— To all improvements effected or paid for by the London County Council or the Metropolitan Board of Works the City contribute, we consider, one-eighth of the whole.

1837. That is to say, the proportion of the rate of these improvements paid by the City ratepayers has been one-eighth of the whole sum paid by the ratepayers of London?—Yes.

1838. I do not think you give us here, do you, anything like a statement of the cost and recoupments in respect of what you have done for artizans' dwellings; is it in your paper?—(Mr. Bridgman.) The entire cost is stated here at 236,604*l.*

1839. How far has it paid you, or how far has it been a loss?—(Mr. Blake.) There has been a considerable loss. (Mr. Bridgman) The total cost has been 236,604*l.*

1840. (Chairman.) That is the clearing, is it not; that is not the erection?—That is the cost of clearing; the cost of the building was 80,389*l.*

1841. (Lord Farrer.) They cleared two sites apparently for 236,604*l.*?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes, in consideration of the Commissioners building on the one site the Secretary of State excused the Commissioners from building on the other, liberating the other site from being devoted to artizans' dwellings purposes.

1842. Did they sell that site?—They have not sold it yet; it is for sale.

1843. They erected dwellings on the other site?—They erected dwellings on the other site.

1844. Have you ascertained how far these dwellings have paid?—We reckon they pay us about one and a half per cent. of the outlay for the site.

1845. That is including the cost of the site and of the clearing off of the buildings?—Yes, I take it so.

1846. (Chairman.) The outlay is about 200,000*l.*?—Yes.

1847. And they pay you about 3,000*l.* a year?—Yes, or rather more than that.

1848. (Lord Farrer.) That is not after deducting outgoings?—Yes.

1849. Are they occupied?—Yes.

1850. Fully occupied?—Yes, fully occupied.

1851. The City, I think, does not contribute anything towards the schemes under the recent Acts, under Part I. nor under Part III. of the Act of 1890, do they? There again they are separate, they undertake their own business within their own area with regard to that?—Yes.

1852. Then the City, not being a great place of residence for artizans, that is an exemption to the City from the expense towards the crowded areas outside?—If you take the cost incurred by the City it represents more than one-eighth of the whole of the similar expenditure for London.

1853. What they have already done you mean?—Yes, under the Artizans' Dwellings Act.

1854. (Mr. Crawford.) And in addition to that the Corporation itself has erected artizans' dwellings.

1855. (Lord Farrer.) They have, independently of the Commissioners of Sewers?

1856. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh yes, certainly.

1857. (Chairman.) The amount you received from the Petticoat Lane buildings seems to be larger than you suggested, if this account is to be trusted. Number 4, page 44, on the left hand side the amount received was 5,500*l.*?—(Mr. Blake.) That is merely the chamberlain's cash account.

1858. You have got the interest on the land for the two sites; one site you will sell, and repay probably a good deal of it; the other site costs in round figures 200,000*l.*?—(Mr. Blake.) Independently of the interest, if you take the rates and taxes and outgoings from the rents received, it comes to very near the figure stated.

1859. Rates and taxes 1,000*l.*?—Yes. It might be convenient to the Commission if I hand in the parliamentary return of 1888, which shows exactly the amount of the artizans' dwellings expenditure by the County Council and by the Commissioners of Sewers.

1859*a*. (Lord Farrer.) What class of people use your artizans' dwellings, are they the higher class of artizans?—I can scarcely tell you that, except that I think there are very few real artizans amongst them.

1860. Not artizans?—I do not think so.

1861. What are they, clerks?—People employed in all sorts of ways, but I cannot say whether they are clerks or not. (Mr. Bridgman.) I think they are labourers and artizans. I always understood so. I do not think that there are any clerks there (Mr. Blake.) No, I do not say that they are clerks, but they are all sorts and descriptions of people. (Mr. Ross.) There are a good many Jews there. (Dr. Saunders.) There are a good many Jews there, but they have turned out a good many Jews. They have been very troublesome, I think. (Mr. Blake.) It is a very troublesome locality, I think—Middlesex Street—it is a very troublesome locality.

1862. (Chairman.) The Metropolitan Board of Works have a block close by, have they not?—I think they had, in Wentworth Street.

1863. In Wentworth Street, Whitechapel, close by your block?—Yes.

1864. (Lord Farrer.) Have you in contemplation any more work of that kind?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Not at the moment.

1865. (Chairman.) You have not a large population of that kind to be provided for?—Well, there is a great number of poor people in this particular locality, in that particular part. (Dr. Saunders.) It runs through a colony of Jews, foreign and English Jews, a very dirty class of people, and it was most difficult to replace them in that building; they took the place, but we had to eliminate them, I think; they were too dirty.

1866. (Lord Farrer.) Is Houndsditch within the limits of the City. (Mr. Bridgman.) Oh, yes, we extend much beyond Houndsditch. Middlesex Street is considerably east of that.

1867. (Chairman.) Going back to this for one moment; according to this account the rents received were 5,589*l.*, the rates, taxes, and repairs were 1,640*l.*, making 3,900*l.*, nearly 4,000*l.*?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes. The City rates are not charged—our own rates the consolidated and sewers—which they would be if they were in the hands of any other people.

1868. With that deduction you think it would bring it down to about 1½ per cent. on the original capital?—To 1½ per cent., I think.

1869. The original outlay being 200,000*l.*?—Yes.

1870. That is quite irrespective of any sinking fund?—Yes.

1871. (Mr. Smith.) Just bearing on that, I suppose you would agree with me that there could hardly be a worse place for the development of artizans' dwellings than the City of London, the enormous cost of it would render it almost prohibitory?—(Mr. Bridgman.) It would, no doubt.

1872. And apparently from what you have told us the need was not very great, not in the City?—Well, seeing that the buildings are quite full, I think that would go to show that there was a necessity for them.

1873. But your population for the square mile—your night population—is not large?—Not the night population; no.

1874. Compared with the enormous rateable value, and the immense importance of the area for other reasons—I am speaking from analogy of other towns—we find that it does not pay to build artizans' dwellings in the centre of our towns?—Oh, no, it does not pay; it is sure to be a loss. (Mr. Ross.) The price of the land is always prohibitory.

1875. And that would point to a rather larger area, of course.

1876. (Chairman.) This is on the eastern fringe of the City?—(Mr. Baylis.) Yes.

1877. Would those people be much incommoded if they went outside that city area to live, just on the other side?—(Mr. Blake.) It is very difficult for me to give an answer to such a question.

1878. Is their work inside or outside the City?—Partly in and partly out, I think. (Mr. Bridgman.) The character of the people in the streets on just both sides of the border is almost the same, you can scarcely distinguish between the two.

1879. (Mr. Smith.) Not knowing the district very well, I should have selected Houndsditch as the one difficulty that you have to contend with. That is a peculiar locality where you would have to build—you would be compelled by law to build—but there would be no great hardship in sending them a little further?—Not very much further. They might just as well have been built in Whitechapel, so far as convenience is concerned.

1880. It is a historic settlement, and you feel bound to respect it to some extent.

1881. (Lord Farrer.) Just to recur to the question of borrowing. You have no sinking funds?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes we have, under one Act in regard to one loan.

1882. I wanted to get the difference of working—it is the same thing. You borrow upon bonds which are drawn and paid off?—Some of them, but in this case the sinking fund will accumulate until the end of the time, I suppose.

1883. There is in one case—which case is that?—The half-million loan. (Mr. Bridgman.) The 500,000*l.*, at the bottom of page 10, the last paragraph.

1884. And all the others are temporary bonds which are drawn and paid off from time to time?—(Mr. Blake.) In the case of the first one there is 150,000*l.*, which was borrowed in 1876 from the London Life Association, extending over 60 years, and repayable by half-yearly payments.

1885. (Chairman.) That is the same thing. You pay them back a certain sum every half-year?—Every half-year.

1886. In this and the other cases you draw bonds every year or half-year, but in the case of the half million loan you accumulate a sinking fund to provide for the repayment of the loan?—At the end of the time.

1887. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any allowance made to the Commissioners of Sewers for attendance?—(Mr. Bridgman.) None.

1888. They are quite unpaid?—They are quite unpaid.

1889. (Mr. Crawford.) Am I correct in saying that in fixing the number of commissioners for the several wards regard was had to the rateable value and the number of freemen occupiers?—I cannot answer that question.

1890. Mr. Blake may recollect that in 1866 there was a special inquiry by the Court of Common Council, and a report presented and the number fixed, having regard to the rateable value and the number of freemen occupiers, and the persons rated?—(Mr. Blake.) I am not aware of that.

1891. As a matter of fact, you know that in 1866 they altered the Commission?—They altered the Commission.

1892. And that it was superseded by the issue of a fresh commission?—The previous commission then existing was substituted by another.

1893. Although the prior commission had been sealed about two or three months previously?—Sealed about two or three months previously.

1894. And under the new commission the number was added to?—The number was added to.

1895. Mr. Bridgman, with your experience, do you find it to be of advantage that a corporator should be a commissioner of sewers?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. H. H. Bridgman, Mr. H. Blake, Dr. W. S. Saunders, Mr. E. A. Baylis, Mr. D. J. Ross.

26 Oct. 1893.

1896. (Chairman.) Will you explain that, what you mean by that?—There are, I think, several matters which come to the knowledge of a common councilman, and which are useful to him as a commissioner of sewers.

1897. Could you illustrate it?—Well, by being on the markets committee one knows the nature of the work that ought to be done by the sanitary authority, for instance, by the Commissioners of Sewers, such as paving work, or the repair of floors, in connexion with the markets. That is one instance. They seem to be very much bound up, the one with the other.

1898. (Mr. Crawford.) Then again, in connexion with improvements—— ?—The same with regard to the bridges and the bridges committee. There are works carried out there by the bridges committee, such as paving works, and the Commissioners of Sewers have the cleansing.

1899. I was going to ask you, in regard to the markets, is it not a fact that, although some of the streets immediately adjoining are really the private property of the Corporation, yet the sewering and scavenging are handed over to the Commissioners of Sewers?—It is all done by the Commissioners of Sewers.

1900. And in many instances members who are on the markets committee are also Commissioners of Sewers?—Oh, yes.

1901. Take again the approaches to bridges, there again, although the bridge itself is the property of the Corporation, yet arrangements are made with the Commissioners of Sewers with regard to the cleansing?—Oh, yes, it is all done by the Commissioners of Sewers.

1902. And on the bridges committee there would necessarily be members who would also be Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes, I have been so myself.

1903. The Commissioners of Sewers, I believe, have nothing whatever to do with gas, have they?—We control the public lighting.

1904. Yes, but you have no control over the public gas companies?—That is in the hands of the corporation—the county purposes committee.

1905. Take water, apart from the question that you have already alluded to?—That is in the hands of the Corporation.

1906. What is in the hands of the Corporation with respect to water?—The water supply of the City. There used to be a gas and water committee, of which I had the honour of being chairman, for dealing with all questions affecting the supply of water to the City, such as constant supply, and the testing of gas for its quality. All those matters came under the supervision of that committee, and they have now been transferred to the county purposes committee which took the place of the gas and water committee.

1907. Was not the introduction into various Gas and Water Acts of clauses for the protection of the citizens secured by the Corporation and not by the Commissioners of Sewers?—Oh, yes; when I was chairman myself several water companies applied for additional powers and increased capital, and I know of one important case in which there was the introduction of a clause compelling the companies to go to the public for their money, the same as, I believe, the gas and water companies are obliged to do, and they could not, I think, pay more than 4 per cent., they were not allowed to pay more than 4 per cent., and the addition of another 1 per cent. for any incidental charges, the whole of the profits over than 5 per cent. having to go to a sinking fund for the purpose of ultimately buying up the water companies' interests. Well, now, I believe large sums have either been, or are being paid to the chamberlain for the purposes of a sinking fund, he having been appointed treasurer of the fund.

1908. He is trustee?—Yes. I think those are very important clauses, because, supposing the companies were to pay 10 per cent., 5 per cent. would go to the purposes of the company and the other five for the purpose of a sinking fund, and taking the capital at 100,000*l.* it would require I suppose, 30 years purchase to buy them up, which would mean 30 times 5,000*l.* to be paid for the company's undertaking.

1909. Take the Port Sanitary Authority, the Commisssioners of Sewers have nothing to do with them?—Well the Port Sanitary Authority controls the river from its mouth to some considerable distance up the Thames.

1910. And that is under the control of the Corporation?—Entirely under the control of the Corporation. The Commissioners of Sewers' sanitary authority only extends within the borders of the City.

1911. With regard to improvements, has it not happened more than once that, where the Commissioners have been unable to carry out a particular improvement, by reason of not desiring to inflict an unusual burden on the ratepayers, the improvement has been carried out by the Corporation?—Oh, frequently, in order to save the rates to the citizens.

1912. Take Cannon Street, Gracechurch Street, the alteration of Moorgate Street and Prince's Street, have not these been principally done by the Corporation?—Yes; and I see there is a contribution here of 43,000*l.* to certain improvements in the list which was enumerated just now.

1913. I was going to ask you, in addition to the ratepayers paying the expense of these improvements, is it not a fact that the Corporation itself has contributed to the funds of the Commissioners of Sewers in aid of improvements?—Oh, very largely so.

1914. In answer to the Chairman you stated just now that all the officers were appointed by the Commissioners of Sewers; you did not include in that statement, I assume, the treasurer?—Oh, no, the treasurer is the Chamberlain of the City, and he is paid by the Corporation.

1915. Do you happen to know whether you have greater powers as Commissioners of Sewers than the ordinary vestries?—I am hardly able to answer that question, only from recollection, as to the scope of the powers of the vestries.

1916. We were so informed by Mr. Rotton; I only ask you in consequence of an answer which you gave us just now?—Yes.

1917. Have you, as Chairman, or during your experience in connection with the Commissioners of Sewers, found any difficulty, or any clashing of interests by reason of the streets of the City being entirely under the control of the Commissioners of Sewers?—Oh, there has never been any difficulty.

1918. No clashing of interests with the London County Council or its predecessors?—Oh, no. I do not know of any difficulty having arisen; the County Council have control of some of the main sewers running through the City, but I do not think that there has been any difficulty; there has always been the greatest harmony existing, so far as I know, between the two bodies and with the Metropolitan Board of Works previously.

1919. Now in connection with the cleansing of the streets, do you undertake greater works in connection with the cleansing of the streets, than those which are done outside the city?—Well, we remove all dry refuse from warehouses.

1920. Take the street orderlies, for instance?—Yes; they are constructed along the streets about every 200 or 300 feet, and I think we have some 300 boys daily clearing the streets of all filth, and placing it into these boxes which are cleared during the night, so that the streets may be kept in a perfect state of cleanliness.

1921. (Chairman.) Vestries are doing similar work now?—I think those bordering on the City are, but not the outlying ones.

1922. That is not an organic difference of powers, it is a general emulation?—It is in order to keep up our reputation in the City for cleanliness

1923. (Lord Farrer.) Occasionally, in walking through St. Pancras, one could wish to be in the streets of the City?—Yes, frequently, especially in snow times I take it, because while we get our snow away every night it is remaining for days and sometimes weeks elsewhere.

1924. (Mr. Crawford.) And do you find from your experience that you can raise money at a cheaper rate by borrowing by means of the Corporation than by borrowing on your own rates?—We have found that to be so.

1925. (Lord Farrer.) Your average rate, I think, is about 3½ per cent., is it not?—Yes. (Mr. Blake.) But we are able to borrow through the Corporation at 3 per cent., owing to the additional security they give.

1926. That enables you to borrow at 3 per cent.?—Yes.

1927. (Chairman.) It makes a larger stock for investment too, does it not?—Yes.

1928. A better stock for the market?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Ours are small amounts. If you are borrowing 1,000,000*l.*, 2,000,000*l.*, or 3,000,000*l.*, you get the advantage of the lower rate.

1929. (Lord Farrer.) Well the London County Council can borrow on still better terms?—I do not know whether they can borrow on better terms.

1930. They borrow at under 3 per cent., you know?—For large amounts. I was offered only a day or two ago a sum of 200,000*l.* or 300,000*l.* for 3¼ per cent.

1931. (Chairman.) Several of our rural counties are borrowing at 3 per cent., I dare say you could do the same?—This was a gentlemen who simply offered it for 10 years. We had money to put out.

1932. (Mr. Smith.) I think our 3 per cent. stock in Birmingham is over par?—Yes.

1933. There is a popular heresy that the more you owe, the more they are ready to lend you at a cheaper rate?—Yes.

1934. (Chairman.) This advantage, of which you speak of knowledge which you derive as a member of the Corporation in doing your work as a Commissioner of Sewers, springs from the division of the functions between the two bodies?—Yes.

1935. If the markets were brought under the Commissioners of Sewers all the knowledge that you get in respect of the markets as a member of the Corporation would come to you as a Commissioner of Sewers?—It would; but it would materially increase the duties that one would have to perform, if they had to be performed properly. It is extraordinary the amount of work to be done, that is all I know. It is vast. The markets themselves are an institution truly that creates wonder, to think that they can be administered so easily and so perfectly as they are by a small committee.

1936. Do you consider that there is any advantage in having the two bodies occasionally overlapping one another?—I do not suppose that there is any actual advantage, but we do not experience any disadvantage or any difficulty.

1937. It works easily?—Yes, perfectly so. I may say perfectly so.

1938. If you were constructing the thing de novo you would probably not set up two bodies?—Well, probably not.

1939. You have given us a list of your officers, have you not?—Yes, I think we have.

1940. And the salaries?—And the salaries are set out in detail; Yes.

1941. Amounting, the whole staff, to about 60,000*l.* a year?—That includes the whole of the various departments for cleansing, watering, scavenging, every possible item of our expenditure during the year.

1942. But the indoor staff, I think, costs about 13,000*l.* a year—the head office?—There is one item, 634 workers for such work as cleansing the streets, 30,000*l.* which cuts the amount into two at once.

1943. (Mr. Smith.) I take it roughly in this way, perhaps your accountant will tell me if I am right, that your total expenditure was 465,000*l.* in round numbers; of that 179,000*l.* is due to the School Board?—(Mr. Blake.) Yes, I think it is rather more than that.

1944. Leaving 286,000*l.* as what I may call your net expenditure. Of that, 119,000*l.* is for interest and repayment of loans, leaving 167,000*l.*, and of that, 60,000*l.*, I think, goes for salaries and expenses?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Yes, working expenses.

1945. (Mr. Crawford.) What has been the average rate in the £ that you have had to collect for the School Board?—The average rate—(Mr. Blake.) It has been going up from a little over ½*d.* to nearly 11*d.*

1946. Taking the last two or three years about 1*s.*?—(Mr. Bridgman.) 10*d.* or 11*d.* We have only one school, I think, in the City. (Mr. Blake.) Well, there are two just on the borders.

1947. But you have several ward schools?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Oh, yes. I think there is a ward school in almost every ward of the City. (Mr. Blake.) That is independently of the School Board's operations. (Mr. Bridgman.) Quite; the cost of these is defrayed largely by the citizens, and by certain endowments.

1948. (Chairman.) Elementary schools are these?—Elementary schools, yes.

1949. In each ward?—In each ward.

1950. Not parochial schools?—Not parochial, no.

1951. (Lord Farrer.) I see one item in your account, 600*l.* a year for committee allowance. Is that for the expenses of the committee?—Those are the expenses of the committee during the year.

1952. Expenses—travelling or what?—Well, no, they are chiefly expenses in connexion with the work of the committee.

1953. What sort of expenses?—At Guildhall.

1954. (Mr. Crawford.) I know what is being referred to. It is 600*l.* a year which is allowed by the Corporation out of its own funds to the Commissioners of Sewers for expenses; not out of the rates at all?—Oh, no; it is not out of the rates.

1955. (Lord Farrer.) What does it go to?—It is for refreshments, luncheons, and those sort of things, so that nothing should be charged to the rates.

1956. Not a penny goes into the pocket of anybody?—(Mr. Bridgman.) Oh, no. (Mr. Blake.) They are very much out of pocket.

1957. The Commissioners get their luncheons do they?—(Mr. Bridgman.) At times—not every day—not every day they meet.

1958. (Mr. Crawford.) I was going to ask you—you having experience as chairman—as a matter of fact does the chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers, if he does his duty properly, generally find out of his own pocket a considerable sum?—Well, I shall be able to tell you in a few months hence, but I know what it will be up to now; yes.

1959. As a matter of fact it is not any gain?—No, none whatever, but it is a great pleasure.

(Mr. Blake.) There were one or two questions in Mr. Rotton's evidence I was asked to look to that required explanation. "Having read through the first "and second days' evidence given by Mr. Rotton, I "would call the commissioners' attention to one or "two corrections or explanations that should be made. "On page 2, Question 37, the answer to the question, "'Does a ward divide a parish?' is 'Yes.' A ward "may be in more than one parish, and a parish in "more than one ward. On page 5, Question 81, "the explanation is given in the commissioners' state-"ment at page 6. On page 5, Question 85—as to "the number of the commissioners—the answer is 92, "as set forth on page 8 of the commissioners' state-"ment. Page 11, Question 186, where it is suggested "that the Commissioners of Sewers are not in any "way amenable to the Court of Common Council, "the answer is that the commissioners can be super-"seded by the appointment of a new commission at "any time by the Court of Common Council."

1960. (Chairman.) That we have had from you to-day?—"Page 16, Question 263, as to the City's "schemes under the Artizans Dwelling Act, the "answer is, as shown by Parliamentary Return in "1888, copy produced, and as referred to in the "commissioners' statement, page 24."

1961. They have carried out one scheme?—They have carried out one scheme. "Page 23, Question 353, "as to the commissioners' power to supply water. "The commissioners have power, under the 'City of "London Sewers Act, 1848,' section 147, to sink "wells, but they are advised that they have no "power to lay pipes or charge for the supply of water "to the inhabitants. With regard to the evidence "given by Mr. Charles Harrison on the third day, "at page 6, Question 874, he alludes to profit being "made by the City from the administration of the "dangerous structure portion of the Building Act. "The explanation of this is that it may appear in the "accounts of some one year that more has been "received than paid, but taking one year with another "it is impossible that any profit can arise to the City, "because they pay over all moneys received to the "contractors and surveyors, and at times there are "losses from non-recovery of fees and expenses." They cannot, by any possibility, get a profit, because they have to pay all the fees. Some years the balance would be on the other side. There is a small loss upon it, really.

1962. Anything more?—Nothing more.

The witnesses withdrew.

Adjourned.

SIXTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 3rd November 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.

3 Nov. 1893.

SIR DAVID EVANS, K.C.M.G., Alderman, and late Lord Mayor of the City of London, called in and examined.

1963. (Chairman.) You are a past Lord Mayor?—Yes, I am.

1964. And you remain an Alderman of the Ward of Castle Baynard?—Yes.

1965. You are also Chairman of the Special Committee of the Court of Common Council?—I am.

1966. With reference to this inquiry; is that it?—The Special Committee; yes, in reference to this inquiry.

1967. Was it appointed—that committee—after this inquiry?—No, it was appointed before; it is appointed annually.

1968. There is a committee called the Special Committee?—There is a committee called the Special Committee.

1969. Is that appointed to consider new questions that may arise?—To consider any questions affecting the interests of the Corporation.

1970. And the conduct of the case of the Corporation before this Commission was referred to that committee?—To that committee.

1971. By a vote of the Common Council was it?—By the vote of the Common Council.

1972. You are also a member of other committees; will you tell us what?—Yes, a member of several committees. Indeed, I may say that I have served on almost every committee under the Corporation.

1973. This Special Committee of which you are Chairman has amongst its duties that of considering any matter before Parliament affecting the City?—Yes.

1974. You call the committee together whenever you think it necessary?—Yes, that is left to the discretion of the chairman.

1975. Have you had many meetings in reference to this matter?—A great many.

1976. Has the Blue-book been drawn up under the superintendence of that committee?—It has.

1977. And received its sanction?—Certainly.

1978. And the committee reports to the Court of Common Council?—From time to time.

1979. Has it made any report in reference to this matter to the Court of Common Council at large?—No; it has not done so as yet.

1980. You are also engaged in business in the City?—Yes; I am a merchant in the City.

1981. And have been for many years?—For many years.

1982. And you are connected with some of the Livery Companies?—Yes; I am connected with three of the Livery Companies, and I am on the Court of the Haberdashers' Company.

1983. That is one of the principal?—One of the twelve.

1984. You have served as Prime Warden?—No; but I am ripening for the Chair; within measurable distance of it.

1985. You were elected as common councilman as far back as 1874?—December 1874.

1986. For the ward of which you are now Alderman?—No; for my residential ward—that of Castle Baynard.

1987. You are now alderman for Castle Baynard, are you not?—No, for Cordwainer; I should say, correcting myself, I am at present the alderman of the Castle Baynard Ward.

1988. But you were elected for the Cordwainer Ward?—For the Cordwainer Ward in 1874.

1989. And you at once began to serve on committees?—I at once began to serve on committees.

1990. Do you wish to tell us something of the feelings with which you entered on your duties?—I entered on my duties as a reformer, with the full impression that there was lavish waste in the Corporation and general mismanagement, and it is an agreeable incident to be able to relate to-day I find after 19 years' experience that such an idea was an erroneous one.

1991. You mean that you have discovered that the expenditure is not extravagant?—Is not extravagant and the work is good.

1992. And is the organisation all that you could desire?—Yes, with the knowledge that in many matters of detail improvements go on each year.

1993. You desire to testify to the public spirit of the citizens who are members of the Corporation?—Yes, it has always struck me, and continues to strike me with the greatest surprise, that so many merchants of the City of London sacrifice so much of their valuable time in the discharge of their public duties as Corporators.

1994. Is it the case that the names of those who are best known outside the City as merchants and bankers within it are frequently found among the members of the Corporation?—No, I cannot say that we have many bankers, but we have a very large proportion of the commercial element.

1995. The leading merchants? — The leading merchants.

1996. (Lord Farrer.) Shipowners?—Some.

1997. (Chairman.) You served as a common councilman how many years?—Ten years.

1998. You were not a deputy?—No, I am now alderman.

1999. Before becoming an alderman?—No, I was never a deputy; I entered the Corporation when I was very young.

2000. Then in 1884 you were elected to the Ward of Castle Baynard?—I was elected alderman.

2001. There was a contest?—There was a contest.

2002. Could you tell us the numbers given on each side?—As to the number of votes?

2003. Yes?—As to the number of votes by which I secured the gown.

2004. No, the numbers given on each side?—On each side. I should say 350 I believe voted for me as against 260 for my opponent.

2005. A little over 600 altogether?—Altogether.

2006. Is that a large proportion of voters in that ward?—Yes. I was going to say that we polled them almost to a man; we polled them within a very small number of the total qualified to vote on that occasion.

2007. There are some wards much smaller than that?—Yes, very much smaller.

2008. And some much bigger? — Very much bigger.

2009. Is that about an average sized ward?—Yes, I should say so. The rateable value is a high one, viz. 141,000*l.*

2010. Is there any feeling about the quantity of representation in the Court of Aldermen in these wards of different sizes?—In what sense.

2011. Do the bigger wards protest that they are not adequately represented?—No.

2012. In the Court of Aldermen? — No, that question has never arisen there.

2013. It is like the Senate of the United States, a big State and a little State, a big ward and a little ward, have all the same representation?—All the same representation, yes.

2014. (Lord Farrer.) On the Court of Aldermen?—On the Court of Aldermen.

2015. (Chairman.) The Court of Aldermen has a good deal of patronage effectually in its hands, has it not?—Yes.

2016-7. In connexion with that fact is there ever a complaint?—No I do not believe in my nine years' experience that I have ever heard a complaint; you mean from the citizens?

2018. No, I mean a complaint on the part of a big ward that it has not got its fair share of influence through its representation on the Court of Aldermen in the distribution of patronage?—Never. I might mention that the average number of voters in all wards now is 1,173.

2019. Yours is only about half that size?—Yes.

2020. You have been for nine years an alderman?—Nine years.

2021. As an alderman you are an alderman for life?—An alderman for life.

2022. In what way are you still brought into contact with your electors?—That you remain as it were—you continue the father of your ward. The alderman of any given ward is, I am pleased to say, a highly respected individual, and in any matters connected more especially with his ward in particular, but not necessarily confined to the ward, in any matters affecting the interests of the citizens they invariably approach the alderman, and therefore I may very well say that the alderman of any given ward is in close touch with his constituents.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.

3 Nov. 1893.

2023. But supposing an alderman became a negligent father, what cure would there be?—I do not know then; I do not know of an instance of a case. My colleagues, I am proud to say, are a very hard-worked body, and take a very great interest in their magisterial and aldermanic duties.

2024. That remains so after a lapse of many years?—Oh, their interest remains, and though they may have become—some of them—a little bit infirm, nevertheless, take for example the case of the—not the senior member of the Court of Aldermen but the oldest member—Sir Andrew Lusk; he is I believe 86, if not 87, he still continues to discharge his duties as a magistrate and as chairman of one or two of our committees. He does his share of the work even to day.

2025. As an alderman?—As an alderman.

2026. In the Court of Aldermen is he also able—I do not wish to enter into a personal examination of his merits or demerits, but would an alderman of that age be generally available for work in connexion with his constituents?—Yes.

2027. Would he be accessible to them?—Yes; he is a wonderful man, very active.

2028. Occasionally an alderman retires?—Yes, and upon some occasions wisely so.

2029. It is entirely of his own sense of duty, his own feeling of discretion?—Yes, or it may be from a knowledge perhaps in ripening for the Chair that his position may be such as would not warrant him entering upon that office.

2030. If he thought there would be a difficulty in his being sanctioned as Lord Mayor, he might retire before then?—Yes, there have been instances.

2031. And you duly served as sheriff?—I served as Sheriff of London and Middlesex in 1885.

2032. You were Lord Mayor in 1891-2?—In 1891-2.

2033. You wish to say something as to the absence of all political issues in your civic elections?—Yes, I have always felt exceedingly proud of the fact that the Corporation is a non-political body, that whether it be with a common councilman or alderman during an election the question of politics never arises; the citizens look to the personal worth of the individual candidate, and irrespective of politics return him to the position.

2034. That is, they do not inquire whether a man is dubbed Liberal or Conservative?—They do not know it even; they do not put the question. I have never known the question put. It is a thing I have more than once referred to in my speeches as Lord Mayor during my year. I have always stated that with extreme pride, both within the City of London and upon the many occasions when officially I went outside the City of London. I think I recollect, in wishing the corporators good-bye on the last meeting of the council at which I was called upon to preside, and in referring to the many kindnesses shown me during my year, I referred to the question that in the matter of politics, and although I saw corporators in front of me I had known for many years, on my right hand and on my left, with the exception of very few cases I was absolutely ignorant of their politics.

2035. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose the interest of the Corporation is the great thing?—The interest of the Corporation.

2036. That interest has on the whole generally, it may be quite accidentally, coincided with that of one party in politics?—I do not think so. I think before the present political condition was arrived at that there were as many Liberals—what in those days we called Liberals. There were only two parties; some years ago there were as many Liberals in the Corporation as there were Conservatives.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.

3 Nov. 1893.

2037. (Chairman.) You tell us that when you were elected a common councilman there was a sharp contest?—When I was elected alderman.

2038. Alderman?—Yes.

2039. When you were elected a common councilman there was none?—No; and that was accounted for in a great measure by the fact, I take it, of being at the head of a firm occupying very possibly the largest position, commercially speaking, in the ward; my neighbours were delighted to receive me.

2040. Is that a big ward?—No, not big.

2041. Is it as big as the one you now represent?—No, not quite so big, I think short by 100 votes.

2042. It is very much below the average?—It is very much below the average.

2043. Did you come forward in answer to a requisition in the first place?—Yes.

2044. You entered as a reformer?—I did.

2045. When you stood as an alderman did you issue any address?—Yes, and of course there was a contest; at one time there were as many as six candidates in the field.

2046. Ultimately they were reduced to two?—Reduced to two, and I secured the poll.

2047. What was the issue between you and your opponent?—As to any question?

2048. What was the issue on which the electors voted?—Oh, I rather flatter myself that they thought I was rather the better man of the two.

2049. They returned you, therefore we may conclude that; but why did they think you better; was it on account of opinions that you professed which were different from his, or on account of your standing in your neighbourhood?—No, they had regard for my long association with the Corporation, and therefore they felt that I should bring to bear, no doubt, a greater knowledge of Corporation matters than my opponent.

2050. Your opponent had not been a common councillor?—Yes, but not for the same period of time.

2051. How many years had he served?—I forget now in point of years; I was an older corporator at least, that is my impression.

2052. You were nine years?—Ten years a common councilman, nine years an alderman. As to the two wards—my residential ward and the ward I at present represent; my residential ward, Cordwainer, is now 3,400*l.* less in rateable value than Castle Baynard.

2053. As a Lord Mayor, what do you consider your most important duties?—The most important duties I regarded were those of chief magistrate; the term chief magistrate is applied to the office, and therefore my first thought was for the due and proper administration of justice.

2054. The amount of work as a magistrate done by a Lord Mayor differs very much from the amount of work of an alderman as magistrate?—Yes, as an alderman your magisterial work is regulated by rota, for instance this is my rota week, therefore I have sat with the exception of to-day the whole of the week, but as Lord Mayor one sits every day if possible.

2055. And that is severe work?—Yes, it is.

2056. (Lord Farrer.) At the Mansion House?—At the Mansion House.

2057. (Chairman.) It does not differ in character from the work of an alderman, but it differs in continuity?—It does, and I think, in fact I know, that the citizens, the public, not only expect, but like to see the Lord Mayor presiding, sitting in that Court.

2058. But it is a mere matter of local distribution what cases go to the Guildhall and what to the Mansion House?—Yes, it is north and south.

2059. Equally important duties go to the one and the other?—Oh, yes.

2060. But the Lord Mayor sits throughout his year whilst the alderman takes his week in rotation?—That is right.

2061. And beside that magisterial work, of course there is a great deal of ceremonial work?—Ceremonial work and charitable work. There is scarcely a day passes that the Lord Mayor does not preside at a meeting, held at the Mansion House generally, chiefly, or elsewhere, in the cause of charity. The work is enormous.

2062. I am not sure that that might not be called ceremonial work?—Scarcely. Well, it is more ceremony of the heart than anything else.

2063. He sanctions by his presence the object of a particular meeting?—He does, and he does an immense deal of good.

2065. You think on the whole that a commercial man acting as magistrate is more efficient than a professional stipendiary?—I do, most decidedly; I hold very strong views upon that.

2067. (Mr. Crawford.) Fraudulent bankruptcies?—Fraudulent bankruptcies more especially.

2068. (Chairman.) How do you account for the difference in action between the City of London and the City of Manchester and the City of Liverpool in most respects?—Of course, where they have stipendiaries as well all I should say by way of comparison is that we are better off in the City of London than they are; better placed.

2069. With a better stock of useful men?—I say so.

2070. It is the dearth of men suitable to fill the offices that causes these cities to undergo the expense of paying stipendiary magistrates?—It is not to save any expense; is that the question?

2071. No, no, no; it is the dearth of men suitable to fill the offices that causes Manchester and Liverpool to undergo the expense of paying a stipendiary magistrate?—I do not suppose that their system is the same as ours; their aldermen, I take it, do not possess the powers of the aldermen of the City of London.

2072. Oh no, certainly not, but still mayors for their term of office and a year afterwards are justices and they have a bench of commercial men?—Yes, but the work is chiefly done by stipendiaries.

2073. But they prefer to bring in stipendiary magistrates?—Yes. Well, as a merchant and with the knowledge I have of the magisterial working within the City of London I should elect for our system as against theirs.

2074. Would you from your experience within the City carry something of the same system outside the City?—Could it be extended?

2075. Would you desire to extend it or think it is worth extending?—There is not the same need for it outside the City as there is within, as the one square mile of course is the centre of the commerce of the world, and therefore, of course, the cases are commercial cases in the majority, but I see no reason whatever why a merchant should not administer justice outside the City as well as within. He would bring to bear outside the boundary of course sound common sense and the same experience.

2076. (Lord Farrer.) It is rather a matter of the subject matter of the business, is it not, than of local area?—No, not necessarily. It is more necessary, I take it, within the City of London that a man should have a knowledge of commerce and be familiar with commercial matters than it would be, say, in an agricultural district.

2078. (Lord Farrer.) Are there many purely police cases in the City?—Yes, purely police cases; they are dealt with under what is termed police summonses. There are two days set apart in each week, Tuesday and Saturday. What is dealt with there is wanton driving, obstruction, &c.

2079. (Mr. Crawford.) Those are charges by the police?—Charges by the police. The presiding magistrate gets as many as perhaps 70 or 80 summonses altogether in one sitting.

2080. (Lord Farrer.) You say there are special days set apart for these summonses?—Yes.

2081. Then does your experience in the City tend at all in the direction of trying to separate the purely police cases from the commercial cases?—Yes, that is the object.

2082. Or from many other cases which now go before the police magistrate which are not of the petty criminal nature?—Quite so; but, of course, unless there was this separation, the work could never be got through in the time.

2083. (Chairman.) Your evidence goes strongly to the maintenance of laymen as magistrates within the City?—Yes. Oh, certainly.

2084. Is there any necessary connexion between that, and the existence of the Corporation as now constituted?—I do not quite understand the question.

2085. Could not the lay magistrates be maintained in the City, even though the Corporation itself were radically changed in character?—Of course, if you can imagine such a thing as the Corporation being swept away, the men would remain.

2086. The aldermen now are elected for different wards?—Yes.

2087. Would a different class of men be put on if they were nominated by the Lord Chancellor, with such means of information as he has at his command?—There would come in, you see, the political element then to a very large extent; it would depend then in a very great measure as to who was the Lord Chancellor.

2088. The Lord Chancellors profess that that is not the case?—Yes; well, I do not quite follow them.

2089. You think there would be more danger of the political element there than when it comes by popular election?—The selection by the citizens, and the election by them to the position of alderman, of course is one of great responsibility, and they feel it; they know it, they know that it is an appointment for life, and therefore they exercise the utmost discretion with that knowledge, that responsibility of theirs to elect to the position fit and proper persons.

2090. And above all they have regard to the magisterial functions the aldermen discharge?—Oh, they know that comes first, I think.

2091. That is the first thing?—I think so; they are electing a magistrate.

2092. Would you say that in the rare occasions when the Court of Aldermen have refused to sanction the election of a particular person as alderman?—Well, of course the Court of Aldermen—the aldermen have a power of veto, but very rarely have they exercised it. I cannot tell you exactly from memory alone, but I think twice in a century.

2093. On those occasions it might be presumed that in the opinion of the Court of Aldermen the electors did not regard the magisterial functions as they ought to have done?—Well, no doubt everything was centred in their worship of the individual, I take it, to the detriment of everything else.

2094. I return to my question; do you not admit that it is possible to maintain a succession of lay magistrates within the City quite apart from the particular machinery by which they are now provided?—No, I think there would be a difficulty in getting your men, in getting magistrates to do the amount of work. As it now exists the alderman—any person about to be elected to the position of an alderman knows that for the privilege and the honour of that position he will have to do good suit and service, and that he will have to devote valuable time to the discharge of magisterial duties. But then there is his reward—his reward in the dignity of the office and the knowledge that later on as time passes he will be elected to the proud position of chief magistrate. And that is one consolation, for a man serves the office of an alderman ripening for the chair upon an average 9 or 10 years. In my case, take it, I was elected an alderman in 1884. I served a year before my time in consequence of the retirement of my immediate senior, so therefore I did good suit and service I trust for a period of eight or nine years.

2095. (Lord Farrer.) Does the way in which he discharges his magisterial duties as an alderman have any effect upon his selection for the chair, for the Lord Mayoralty?—No, his general capacity. But, of course, regard would be had to his magisterial duties, but then the magisterial work in the City of London is invariably well done; it is one of the many things that we are exceedingly proud of.

2096. (Chairman.) Let me put this to you and apply it personally. Supposing that there was a Commission of Sewers in the City discharging the important work now entrusted to that Commission, with a chairman, and vice-chairman, and other persons?—As it exists.

2097. Well, yes, you may say as it exists?—As it exists.

2098. I would rather say independently of nomination by the Corporation, but that is quite immaterial? Just so.

2099. Discharging just as much work as it does now, and after a time prominent members of that Court were appointed by the Lord Chancellor to serve on the Petty Sessions of the City?—Yes.

2100. And each person so appointed in his turn became Chairman of the Petty Sessions to serve for a year—supposing you had gone through that experience, had been appointed in that way to sit in the Court of Petty Sessions in the City, and had become chairman for a year, would you have felt in the least degree your zeal to discharge your magisterial duties abated compared with what you have gone through?—No doubt; as things are now situated the discharge of one's magisterial duties would be much more willingly entered upon than under those conditions. There is your reward.

2101. You think the pomp and ceremony?—No; not the pomp.

2102. The elevation?—The dignity and the knowledge that you have; really, one must serve the office of Lord Mayor,—actually serve it, to know the immense power and amount of good a Lord Mayor can do during his year of office. I venture to say that even those the aldermen who are ripening for the chair have no knowledge of the power, and the influence for good that a Lord Mayor possesses until they actually serve.

2103. You speak of the moral influence attaching to the tradition and elevation of his office?—I do, and in the knowledge that charity is benefited to so large an extent.

2104. (Lord Farrer.) I must recur to my former question; does the conscientious way in which he performs his duty as a magistrate help to ripen him for the office of Lord Mayor, and in what way does it help him towards that eminence, considering the way in which the Lord Mayor is elected?—If such a case occurred that an alderman performed inadequately the duties of a magistrate, and that he showed little or no capacity for the work, I take it that the Livery, the electors, would in the course of time, within the period, say, of nine or ten years, discover a knowledge of the individual's shortcomings. That is always an imaginary case. I have never known of an instance. They would say that a man who cannot discharge properly magisterial work cannot properly discharge the duties of chief magistrate during his year, when he would be expected to preside almost daily at the Mansion House.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.

3 Nov. 1893.

2105. (Chairman.) But you have known cases of one or two aldermen who have ripened so, as naturally to become Lord Mayor, who have been passed over when the time came?—Yes, but that was on account of either morality, or the knowledge that they were in such financial difficulties that were they returned, of course very serious consequences might follow.

2106. It did not arise from any failure of a magisterial character?—No, oh no.

2107. (Mr. Crawford.) I was only going to ask whether the conclusion arrived at which led to the exercise of that veto has been justified by subsequent events?—Oh, amply, amply, although well within my memory my immediate predecessor was vetoed; the alderman of my present ward. I remember at the time I think even "The Times" took it up in a leader. The action of the Court of Aldermen was considerably condemned; it was, I think, referred to at the time that it was interfering with the freedom of the Livery in their selection and in their election of the individual to that position.

2108. (Chairman.) That was a case of the exercise of the veto by the Court of Aldermen?—By the Court of Aldermen.

2109. Lord Farrer was rather pointing to the Liverymen passing over a man who was next in succession; has that ever happened?—Well, I do not know of a single instance in which, within my experience, an alderman has not properly discharged his magisterial work, so that it is an imaginary case. But I say that if we could produce such a case and it came to the minds of the Livery that he was not a capable magistrate I am confident that they would not return him as Lord Mayor.

2110. Has the Livery ever passed over a man?—No, I think not.

2111. Has a man ever resigned in order to prevent such an occurrence happening, on the very eve of an election?—Yes.

2112. Immediately before it came on?—Yes, almost immediately.

2113. In that case it may be said that the Liverymen did potentially set such a person aside?—Certainly.

2114. (Lord Farrer.) For what reason?—Financial reasons.

2115. (Chairman.) Well, then, besides these duties as chief magistrate at the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor has magisterial duties at the Central Criminal Court?—Yes.

2116. Is his action there more than ceremonial?—He is Chief Commissioner at the Central Criminal Court, and he opens the court.

2117. Immediately after that the work passes on?—Passes on to the judges.

2118. (Mr. Crawford.) Except taking the objections to grand jurymen?—Oh, yes, with that exception.

2119. (Chairman.) And he presides on all occasions over the Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council?—Yes.

2120. And he has numberless positions upon different boards in virtue of his office?—He has.

2121. Are all those active duties, or are they again purely decorative; for instance, he is trustee of St. Paul's Cathedral; what does he do in that capacity?—Well, the Lord Mayor for the time being is trustee; generally, you know, what is expected of a trustee for so important a trust.

2122. He is not a trustee of the British Museum?—No, he is not.

2123. There the trustee does a good deal of work in connexion with the British Museum?—Yes.

2124. What does he do in connexion with St. Paul's Cathedral; what did you do?—Not very much I am afraid, but nothing of any importance arose I take it.

2125. You had nothing to do with any alteration within or without that building?—No, nothing in my year occurred that really required any work whatever in that direction.

2126. What are the trusts?—Of a cathedral.

2127. Is not the cathedral vested in the Dean and Chapter?—And the Lord Mayor for the time being.

2128. Could two corporations possess it?—Two corporations could possess it by representation.

2129. (Lord Farrer.) Does he attend any of the meetings of the Dean and Chapter?—I do not know. As I have already said, nothing occurred during my year.

2130. (Chairman.) You were never summoned?—I was never summoned; nothing occurred.

2131. Probably you are a little vague as to what your duties would have been?—Under those conditions, yes.

2132. Well, you say you have a great deal to do practically with licensing business?—Yes.

2133. As Lord Mayor?—No.

2135. The licensing committee?—Yes.

2136. In the proof you have given me it runs this way: "Among other matters in which the Lord "Mayor, with his brother aldermen, takes a large "amount of interest is that relating to licensing?"—Yes.

2137. In truth, the Lord Mayor himself is too busy to take a special interest in that himself during his year of office?—Yes, he could not do it properly; that is to say, he might go one day and then not be able to attend the next.

2138. There is a licensing committee of the Court of Aldermen?—There is a licensing committee of the Court of Aldermen.

2139. Just as there would be a licensing committee to any other magisterial bench?—Yes, in the City.

2140. You claim that they are very active and careful in the discharge of their functions?—Oh, very; it is a great responsibility.

2141. That might be true of them even if they come into existence as I suggested in another way—the magisterial bench?—Of course there are regular licensing bodies outside the City as well as within.

2142. Have you any special instance to give of their zeal?—Yes. I remember very well the application for a licence for the Cathedral—originally it was the Cathedral Hotel in St. Paul's Churchyard, and the licence was continued subject to the old regulations, that it should be not merely a drinking bar but that it should be also a restaurant, and the proprietor did not conform to the views of the magistrates and the licence was withheld for a number of years—two or three years—and what we invariably set our faces against as much as possible is the drinking bar, and with the knowledge as commercial men of the constant tippling going on within the City, that is to say, very often there is scarcely a parcel sold or bought without "Well let us go and have a glass," and they go round to the nearest bar.

2143. That survives still, does it?—Oh, it does to a very great extent you know, but we regulate it. And as time goes on and licences fall in there will, even in the immediate future, be a more stringent provision and better regulation.

2144. (Lord Farrer.) What class of people—clerks?—Clerks. What we want is that where there is a licence there should be not only drink but food.

2145. (Chairman.) Real refreshment houses you wish for?—A refreshment house where they could go in and have their stand at the counter if they like, and take their modest luncheon of a little cold meat and a glass of beer, or bread and cheese and a glass of beer.

2146. (Lord Farrer.) That class of refreshment house is increasing very much indeed in the City, is it not?—Not increasing, but the mere drinking bars are developing into refreshment houses.

2147. (Chairman.) The stand-up luncheon place—that is, multiplying?—Oh, yes, immensely.

2148. (Lord Farrer.) And places where food is got with tea and chocolate?—Yes.

2149. (Chairman.) Chop houses seem to be disappearing, diminishing I think?—Yes, the old chop houses are diminishing.

2150. They used to exist in Finch Lane?—Yes, with the stone floor, the sanded floor; that is a thing of the past nearly.

2151. All this is a part of the general movement of opinion, is it not?—Yes.

2152. The same movement outside and inside the City?—Yes, I think we think differently to-day to what our fathers thought or even ourselves many years ago.

2153. This Cathedral Bar is at the east end of the City, is it not, of the Cathedral?—In St. Paul's Churchyard, the corner of Cheapside nearly.

2154. The east end?—The east end of St. Paul's, yes.

2155. According to the rude tradition, Queen Anne used to look upon the drinking shop at the west end?—Yes.

2156. That has long since disappeared; from your own experience, you can verify what we have been told otherwise, that the Lord Mayor has to expend considerable sums during his year?—The Lord Mayor is allowed 10,000*l.*

2157. (Lord Farrer.) 10,000*l.*?—10,000*l.*, and in my case I exceeded my allowance, I think wisely, by 12,000*l.*

2159. (Lord Farrer.) What are the sheriff's expenses?—4,000*l.*

2160. I mean, upon what is the money expended?—Charity; which of course, always charity comes in first.

2161. They are expected?—Oh, expected, not only expected, but they do it; they respond.

2162. Whenever, for instance, when there is a Mansion House subscription?—Yes.

2163. They would subscribe to it?—Yes, and they invariably support the Lord Mayor at any of the charity dinners; where the Lord Mayor takes the chair, there are the sheriffs to be found, always in support, of course putting their hands in their pockets. That is a very large item. And, then again, there are the expenses in connexion with the Central Criminal Court, which is rather a heavy item, and the Lord Mayor also contributes to that.

2164. (Chairman.) Do they dine the judges and the Bar?—No, that is a thing of the past.

2165. (Lord Farrer.) What is the expense of the Central Criminal Court?—Well, there is the daily luncheon, of course the sheriffs provide that.

2166. For the judges?—For the judges.

2167. And the Bar?—And for the leading members of the Bar. I mean to say the room set apart for that is—very properly so—safeguarded; that is to say, that only privileged persons are permitted to enter.

2168. (Chairman.) Do they not come by invitation?—Invitation of the sheriffs.

2170. (Lord Farrer.) Do the sheriffs have to pay that?—Yes, the sheriffs in City cases.

2171. (Chairman.) What is the arrangement between the Sheriff and the under-sheriff with respect to paying?—Now of course there are certain conditions. I served as Sheriff of London and Middlesex; now under the Act, as you are aware, it is no longer the Sheriff of London and Middlesex but the Sheriff of the City of London, and there were certain fees that my under-sheriff took in lieu of payment.

2172. And he indemnified you against damages?—And he indemnified me throughout, but I believe to-day that the present sheriffs pay their under-sheriffs, and I have heard the sum stated as being 500*l.*

2173. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation makes an allowance to the sheriffs at the present moment?—At the present moment.

2174. And that is taken by the under-sheriffs?—And that is taken by the under-sheriffs.

2175. And in addition they get something from the sheriffs?—And in addition they get something from the sheriffs.

2176. (Lord Farrer.) That allowance made to the sheriffs is paid over to the under-sheriffs?—Yes.

2177. (Chairman.) You omitted one item; I think that the sheriffs contribute their share to the Guildhall banquet?—Oh, yes, by-the-by, that is one's first experience of the sweets of office. My first cheque that I ever drew in that way was my contribution of one fourth; the Lord Mayor pays half the expenses connected with the proceeding of the 9th; the procession itself and the banquet, and the sheriffs each one fourth.

2178. What was your cheque, may I ask?—As Lord Mayor?

2179. No, for that quarter as sheriff; your first experience?—1,000*l.*

2180. One fourth?—Yes, but the day as a rule—the expense of the day I think—is 4,000*l.*

2181. So that out of the 4,000*l.* that the sheriff pays 1,000*l.* goes the first day?—Yes, that is so; some sheriffs spend more and some less.

2182. (Lord Farrer.) Have they to find that coach in which they drive; they have a coach, have they not, the sheriffs?—Oh, they purchase that coach.

2183. I suppose that goes on?—Well it is one of arrangement. Of course there is very little wear and tear to a coach during the 12 months, but they could not use the coach of their immediate predecessor; there would not be the time to renovate it and that, so they go back two years in all probability and bring out the coach of two years ago.

2184. (Chairman.) There are three in running?—Three? more; there must be four running.

2185. You say as Lord Mayor you also did some duties outside the city?—I did.

2186. Those were purely voluntary, I suppose?—Purely.

2187. Will you explain what they were?—Well, I went, for instance, to Islington, to the parish of St. Mary, Islington, to open baths and washhouses, and I was curious enough to ascertain the population of that one parish, and I believe the population exceeded 300,000—319,000 I think: in excess of the population of Sheffield, for instance, and within measureable distance of the population, say, of Dublin.

2188. (Lord Farrer.) That one parish?—St. Mary, Islington, one parish. And I was particularly struck, and I spoke to the commissioners, or rather they spoke to me I remember at the time, after I had inquired as to the population, and they remarked "You see we have not a mayor and aldermen," and conveying and stating how much they would like it if such a thing could only be arrived at.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.

3 Nov. 1893.

2189. Mayor of Islington?—Mayor of Islington. Well then I went down to Camberwell almost immediately, the following week, and again opened baths and washhouses. There I found that the population was a quarter of a million, and I think, in the course of my speech, the idea having emanated at Islington, I touched, during the course of my few remarks, upon the desirability that it would be for a district if they could, where the population approached anything like a quarter of a million, get a charter and have a mayor and council.

2190. (Lord Farrer.) What was the date of this; before the Local Government Act?—The date of this was in 1891.

2191. Since the Local Government Act of 1888?—Yes, in 1891.

2193. In support of many institutions?—Yes, I got tired of the sound of my own voice.

2194. (Lord Farrer.) In what way have you to decide. Is it within your own discretion in what cases you will hold a meeting?—Yes; but you have to decline so many.

2195. Of course?—Inasmuch as you have not the time at your disposal.

2196. Does the Lord Mayor decide that generally on his own discretion?—He does.

2197. Or does he take any of his colleagues into consultation about it?—No, I think it is left to the individual; he enters upon the office with great experience. Whoever serves the office of Lord Mayor is no novice.

2198. (Chairman.) He has been on the watch for for some little time?—He has been on the watch.

2199. Educating himself?—Educating himself over a long period of time.

2200. He also has the advantage of one or two officers who seem to be renewed continually so as to bring a certain continuity of experience?—Yes.

2201. Private secretaries and men of that kind?—Yes, there is the private secretary to the Lord Mayor; he has been private secretary to 19 Lord Mayors, I think.

2202. (Lord Farrer.) He will be able to say, "This is a thing you ought not to attend"?—His advice in a case of that kind is very valuable.

2203. And that is the case with charities, I suppose, as well as with meetings; does he exercise his own discretion?—Oh, he does chiefly.

2204. Entirely?—Entirely.

2205. As to what shall be a Mansion House subscription, and what shall not?—Yes. During my year I had three very important funds. There was the Mauritius, the Newfoundland, and then a colliery accident in Wales. I think I collected altogether over 40,000*l.* The present Lord Mayor certainly has exceeded that by receiving now for the Victoria disaster a sum as you are aware approaching 60,000*l.*—60,000*l.* or 70,000*l.*

2206. To what extent do you consider yourself responsible for the proper management, custody, and distribution of those large sums; it is a heavy responsibility?—It is a heavy responsibility. You call in, as a rule—for instance, take the Mauritius; I called to my assistance, and formed a committee of the leading merchants of the City of London who possessed a knowledge of Mauritius and had business dealings with Mauritius, and therefore their experience in that direction, of course, was of immense value to me. I did not take the sole responsibility myself, but I formed a committee, and left it to the committee to decide as to what should be done.

2207. And to the committee to appoint a treasurer?—A treasurer.

2208. And officers to take the custody of the money?—Yes.

2209. So the Lord Mayor's duty is in the first place to select the charity, and in the second place to hold a meeting?—Presiding and directing.

2210. And giving the prestige of his office to it?—Of his office to it.

2211. And he leaves the practical management to persons who are practically acquainted with the concern?—Yes, but he shares it with them; he does not simply form the committee, and leave the committee, and allow the committee to carry out the work; he calls the committee together and presides at each meeting.

2212. He presides at each meeting?—At each meeting.

2213. Does he feel himself bound to do that in every case, and during the whole duration of the committee?—Oh, he does.

2214. (Mr. Smith.) I should like to ask Sir David Evans a few questions. Are you acquainted with the municipal work in our large cities in England outside the City of London?—No, I cannot say that I am; I have never resided outside the City of London. I have a knowledge of course of the general municipal work.

2215. I think you must know that they take rather a different view of municipal work to what is taken in the City of London, do they not?—I am not aware that they do.

2216. I have noted that you classed the principal duties of the Lord Mayor primarily as his position as chief magistrate; you laid great stress upon that?—I did.

2217. And you said that the administration of justice was his first thought?—Yes.

2218. That is hardly what would be considered the first duty of a mayor of Liverpool or Manchester or Birmingham, is it?—I do not know, I cannot say. The mayor of Liverpool, or of Birmingham, or any other town, I take it, does not possess the same magisterial position, does not occupy the same magisterial position that an alderman or Lord Mayor of the City of London does.

2219. Do you not know that the mayor is for his year of office a magistrate?—Oh, yes.

2220. And he is chairman of the bench of magistrates?—Yes, he never sits alone.

2221. I suppose from the fact that you are all commercial men in the City very few of your aldermen have any legal training?—Very few. There are, of course, professional men from time to time returned as aldermen. I do not think we possess a professional member of the Court of Aldermen at the present time, but the late Alderman Stone was a professional man and he was a lawyer, and Alderman Sir Walter Wilkin is a barrister. I had forgotten that.

2222. (Chairman.) Alderman Wire?—Lord Mayor Wire many years ago.

2223. (Mr. Smith.) But in the large provincial cities they must have commercial cases as well as in the City of London?—Yes.

2225. You think it would be an advantage to extend that system over England?—I do.

2226. Your idea of the first duty of a Lord Mayor is to be a criminal judge of first instance?—He is referred to, his very style as chief magistrate, and knowing that the citizens desire that he, as Lord Mayor, should preside in that court, he naturally regards the position as magistrate with great concern, and therefore to meet the public want, the public requirement and desire, he sits as often as possible.

2227. It takes up an immense amount of his time?—It does. I sat upon an average, I dare say, five days a week.

2228. It would be impossible, therefore, for the Lord Mayor of London to take the same position as a mayor of a provincial city in attending the committees of the council daily?—He would not be able to attend the committees daily; but then, I take it, that what applies in the ordinary way to a busy man, that a busy man finds time for most things, would apply to him. Inasmuch as the Lord Mayor is an extremely busy man, it is astonishing how he does manage to find time for the proper discharge of his duties.

2229. You think, for instance, that the Lord Mayor could preside at the Mansion House and attend a gas committee, and a water committee, and an improvement committee, and a markets committee, and so on through the week?—But there is no necessity for the Lord Mayor to attend all these committee meetings. The Lord Mayor is ex officio a member of various committees, but the committees appoint their own chairman.*

2230. (Lord Farrer.) Do the committees appoint their own chairman?—They appoint their own chairman.

2231. (Mr. Smith.) It is the practice in provincial towns for the mayor to be present during the sittings of the committees?—Well, he is a less busy individual than the Lord Mayor of London, I take it. It would be quite impossible for the Lord Mayor of London to be present, and in my opinion it is better—it is just as well that he should not take the chair at all these meetings.

2232. No, not necessarily take the chair, but to be present?—It is not required; it is not necessary that he should. Of course, when any question of importance arises the Lord Mayor is summoned, and he attends.

2233. Is it not important that the chief magistrate of the town should be in touch with the municipal work all round?—I take it that the Lord Mayor is in touch every day of his life with everything that goes on within the Corporation.

2234. Surely he does not get so much information by sitting as a criminal judge as he would by attending the committees?—You must not imagine that the Lord Mayor as chief magistrate is sitting the whole of the day.

2235. Could you tell me how many hours he sits as a rule?—The Lord Mayor may sit an hour and a half, two hours, or three hours, perhaps. I omitted to say that when the chief clerk knows that there is a case that will occupy a very long sitting or that it will go over for adjournment into the following day or two or three following days, then the Lord Mayor is advised not to take that case inasmuch as it it would involve too much time, and such a case would be heard by an alderman who was past the chair. In that way there is a division of the magisterial labour.

2236. You know, of course, that in provincial towns there is a large number of magistrates, many of whom are members of the council?—Yes.

2237. But still there are many cases taken by the stipendiary?—Yes, so I understand.

2238. But you would not adhere probably on reflection to the statement that it is due to the dearth of men of commercial experience in those towns that they prefer legal business to be done by legal men, would you?—I do not know; I am inclined towards that belief, yes.

2239. You think that there are not men of sufficient commercial experience in Liverpool—I will not mention any other town?—Well, Liverpool is a second London; I should imagine that in Liverpool you would be able to furnish, no doubt, a sufficient number.

2240. Manchester?—Well, take your principal—I should exempt your principal towns.

2241. Birmingham?—Yes, Birmingham, certainly.

2242. Then there is a good deal of qualification of the statement?—Yes, so there is; I was more particularly thinking of the smaller municipal boroughs.

2243. When you were speaking of inside duties, when you went to Islington with 300,000 population, and Camberwell with 250,000, I presume that you went in state?—Yes.

2245. Do you think that they wanted a mayor to do their justicing?—I do not think they gave that a thought for the moment. They did not express themselves in that direction.

2246. Would you not gather from what they said, that they wanted a mayor to take the place of the chairman, we will say, of a vestry or district council, and to discharge municipal duties?—Yes, they wanted a corporation.

2247. And to discharge municipal work as distinguished from judicial work?—A combination of both, I take it.

2248. I think we look at it from different standpoints. In the provinces we look upon the judicial work as the work of the magistrates, and we look upon the municipal work as the work of the town council?—Yes.

2249. (Lord Farrer.) Arising out of that may I just ask one question. I think I rather gathered that the Lord Mayor is unable to take the longest and possibly the most important cases because they take up too much time?—Not necessarily the most important.

2250. But the longest?—The longest. There are some very tedious cases with a mass of evidence with almost a foregone conclusion that it must go for trial. Well, then no doubt the Lord Mayor is very wisely advised by the chief clerk that that could be just as well carried out and heard by a colleague.

2251. I think you have a very excellent chief clerk, have you not?—Excellent.

2252. A man whose name is well known everywhere?—Everywhere, yes.

2253. Of course he renders very efficient assistance to the aldermen and the Lord Mayor?—He does, undoubtedly.

2254. Is it not the case both in the provinces and in London outside the City that with the growth of civilisation there has been specialisation of functions, and that the judicial functions have been more and more separated from the administrative?—I suppose that that is the experience outside the City of London.

2255. Then the City of London stands alone in having kept the two together?—Yes.

2256. And you think that the City of London is right and the whole of the rest of England is wrong?—I think that the City of London, having regard to its position, is right, and that it would make a very great mistake if it altered its system.

2257. (Mr. Crawford.) Are you aware that the Royal Commissioners of 1854 suggested the appointment of a stipendiary?—Yes.

2258. And you know that subsequently the Government of that day introduced a Bill in 1857 in which they omitted following that recommendation?—Yes.

2259. Can you tell us from recollection the reason which was assigned by the responsible Minister of the day for that omission?—I think I have a recollection that it was due in deference to the indignation exhibited by the citizens of London in their desire that their magistrates—their aldermen—should be elected for life.

2060. May I refresh your memory by reading from the speech of Sir George Grey when he introduced the Bill. "The aldermen of London, I may state, "occupy a different position from that of aldermen in "other boroughs. Among other points of difference, "there is this important one: that they exercise "magisterial duties. The Commissioners recommend "that, instead of making the tenure of office the same "as that of aldermen in other municipal boroughs, "they should hold their office for six years; and they "further recommend that the aldermen should con-"tinue to act as magistrates and be eligible for "re-election at the expiration of the six years of "office. By the provisions of the former Bill, it was "proposed that power should be given to the Cor-"poration to apply for the appointment of Stipen-"diary Magistrates; this was a power similar to that

* But see also Mouckton, 2446; Kemp, 4611–20.

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G.
3 Nov. 1893.

"which existed and was exercised in reference to the "magistracy of other municipal boroughs. The "difficulty, however, which has pressed upon me and "to which I referred on a previous occasion arose out "of the consideration that it was opposed to the "principle hitherto invariably and universally recog-"nised, to have a class of persons exercising magis-"terial functions who would be subjected to continual "election and re-election. That is a principle which "in the administration of the law has never been "recognised in this country. There is no such "instance of the election of a magistrate, except in "the case of the mayor of a municipal borough. He, "it is true, is during his year of office a magistrate, "and in the year also succeeding to that of his "mayoralty, but he then ceases to be a magistrate, "and the cases were not very frequent in which the "same person was re-elected to the office. I propose "therefore that no alteration should be made by the "present Bill in the existing tenure of the office by "the aldermen of London. I propose that they "shall still continue to be elected for life, and retain "their magisterial positions and perform its duties"? —Yes, and therefore there is possessed by the aldermen of London a feeling of thorough indepen-dence.

2261. From that time to the present there has been no successful attempt made to interfere with the position which the City occupies?—None.

2262. You were asked just now with regard to the patronage of the Court of Aldermen whether there had been any complaint made?—Yes.

2263. As a matter of fact is not the patronage of the Court of Aldermen exceedingly small?—Yes, it is.

2264. Does not the principal patronage rest with the Court of Common Council?—Yes, chiefly.

2265. And that court, of course, is composed of the direct representatives of the ratepayers?—Yes, returned, elected, annually.

2266. I do not think any question was put to you with regard to your strictly municipal work as Lord Mayor. As a matter of fact, is it not part of your duty, and did you not when Lord Mayor attend every meeting of the Court of Aldermen?—Every meeting of the Court of Aldermen.

2267. And also every meeting of the Court of Common Council?—Every meeting of the Court of Common Council.

2268. And is it not the duty of every committee of both of those bodies to report to their respective courts?—It is.

2269. And in that way do you not personally be-come acquainted with all the business which is trans-acted by either committees of the Court of Aldermen or of the Court of Common Council?—The Lord Mayor is in touch with, has the knowledge of, the whole of the inner workings of the committees through the reports which come before the Court of Common Council.

2270. Does not the holding of meetings of those bodies exclusively rest with the Lord Mayor?—Exclusively.

2272. (Chairman.) Is there not some work which must be taken?—Yes, it is left to the discretion of the Lord Mayor as to whether it should be taken on a particular day or postponed, for instance; that is left to his discretion.

2273. Within certain limits?—Within certain limits.

2274. He could not of his own power refuse to receive a report of a committee indefinitely?—Oh, no; such an instance has never occurred

2275. (Mr. Crawford.) As matter of fact, is not the paper of business submitted to you before it is issued, and you see the Town Clerk to make yourself acquainted with the matters to be brought forward?—Such was always the case.

2276. And in that way do you not become inti-mately acquainted with the work of the Corporation?—Perfectly.

2277. Is it not the custom, from time to time, for chairmen of committees to consult the Lord Mayor upon particular matters which are in course of pro-cedure before committees?—That might almost be referred to as of daily occurrence.

2278. And in case of necessity do not the chairmen of the several committees in a body meet and confer with the Lord Mayor?—Such conferences took place upon many occasions during my year.

2279. (Lord Farrer.) Does that include the Com-missioners of Sewers?—Yes, the chairman of the Com-missioners of Sewers too.

2280. Then, looking to that statement that you are now making in answer to Mr. Crawford's question, do you still think that the judicial duties of the Lord Mayor are more important than the administrative duties?—I still attach the utmost importance to the judicial duties of the Lord Mayor, and I have always advocated that a Lord Mayor, in deference to the publicly expressed wish and desire that the Lord Mayor should preside at his own court, should do so; I think that the Lord Mayor is wise in endeavouring to do that as often as possible.

2281. (Mr. Crawford.) You were asked just now, whether assuming that an alderman was neglectful of his duty there would not be a difficulty in getting rid of him. As a matter of fact, would he not practically be shut out of the office of Lord Mayor by not being elected as a sheriff if he neglected his duty?—Yes, certainly.

2282. And can you recall any instances in which, when there has been a neglect of duty, pressure has been brought to bear upon a particular alderman by his colleagues that has caused him to resign his gown?—Owing to what?

2283. Owing to the inability of a particular alder-man to perform satisfactorily the duties of his office, pressure has been brought to bear upon him by his colleagues, and he has, in consequence, resigned his gown?—Yes.

2284. Only one question with regard to St. Paul's; as a matter of fact, is not the fabric of St. Paul's vested in the Lord Mayor for the time being, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London?—We are the three trustees.

2285. Of the fabric?—Of the fabric.

2286. Of the fabric of St. Paul's, and, as a matter of fact, in connexion with the building and re-building of St. Paul's, has it not been the invariable practice for the Lord Mayor for the time being to be made acquainted with it?—Such would be the case, of course; I have no recollection of it, but such must be the case, the Lord Mayor being one of the three trustees.

2287. Is not the Lord Mayor for the time being, one of the auditors of the accounts in connexion with St. Paul's?—Yes 2288. And you meet the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London at Lambeth Palace for the purposes of audit?—Yes.

* But see also Monckton, 2443.

The witness withdrew.

Sir J. Monckton.

Sir JOHN MONCKTON, Town Clerk of the City of London, called in and examined.

2289. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am specially desired by the committee I represent, in putting in the statement—which I formally do to-day, although I sent it last week—to say with reference to the state-ments in a small portion—I do not know whether inspired or otherwise—of the press, that the Cor-poration has wilfully delayed preparing its statements —those were the exact words used—for purposes that were set down, that such is not only not the case, but the Corporation desired its officers throughout the summer and autumn to use all possible expedition in the matter, which has been carried out without any reference to the occasion. I can only hope that the size of the volume gives colour to what I state.

2289*a*. (Chairman.) It is big enough?—Yes. Well, you see, to boil down seven centuries was a little different task to giving the history of equally respectable and well-standing bodies that have lasted about three years. I was desired to say that, and I have said it.

2290. You are the Town Clerk, Sir John Monckton?—Of the City of London, yes.

2291. And you put in this book?—I put in this book and the statement of the Corporation (book put in).

2292. This book has been prepared by the Special Committee?—By the Special Committee.

2293. To which this matter has been referred?—To which this matter has been referred.

2294. It is prefaced by a protest, I see?—It is.

2295. We do not desire to examine you generally upon that with which we have perhaps little concern, but the chief point is perhaps this: we should like to understand that you understood you were asked to co-operate in an inquiry as to the possibility of an amalgamation with the city and the county, whereas the inquiry has been transformed into one as to how it should be done?—That is the point upon which the Special Committee desired to lay especial stress, because in communications received which are here set out there was a form of expression which had considerable weight with the Corporation in its interpretation of that communication.

2296. Their attitude of mind toward an invitation to consider whether it could be done would be different from their attitude to an invitation to consider how it should be done?—Precisely.

2297. But in consenting to consider whether it should be done it is probably assumed that if it could be done it would be desirable?—I do not think I can admit that, if I quite follow your question.

2298. In consenting to co-operate in the inquiry as to whether a thing should be done, what would be the motive for co-operation unless the thing itself were desirable if it could be done?—Oh, the motive to my mind would distinctly be that the Corporation in such case would devote itself to arguments against the thing being done. There is a very strong feeling—in fact, the strongest feeling—that it is a thing that should not be done.

2299. Why did they consent to an inquiry as to whether it should be done?—Well, I think I must put that upon the old expression mens conscia recti they were not unwilling to be parties, probably it might be said they had not very much voice in the matter, when a Government invites the Corporation to do it, but they were not at all unwilling to embark in a matter of inquiry of that sort which they feel, and feel very confidently, could only result, if it were an inquiry limited to that, in leaving matters pretty much where they are.

2300. There were two motives if I understand, first, the deference naturally paid to a Government request?—Certainly.

2301. And secondly the conviction that the result of an inquiry as to whether a thing could be done would be a conclusion that it ought not to be admitted?—Should be done rather, I should say, than could be done I think that the feeling of the Corporation was that they would so show, as they believe they have shown in this statement, that it is a thing that should not be done, and that the creation of a monster municipality is a thing to be utterly avoided and the annihilation of the City equally to be avoided.

2302. Now the Corporation is of extreme antiquity?—It is so.

2303. Beyond legal memory?—Beyond legal memory, I should prefer to say.

2304. And the speciality of the City of London is that it is a county of itself?—It is so.

2305. And that it has been organised from earliest times with the independence of a county?—Yes.

2306. There are numerous charters to which you refer which have been granted by successive monarchs?—Yes.

2307. Defining, recognising, sometimes enlarging, the powers of the Corporation?—Yes.

2308. Do you claim that the Corporation has got a power of reforming itself?—To a considerable extent.

2309. Like Parliament, it can reform its own constitution?—Its own numbers for instance and its own powers.

2310–11. Under what power do you claim that?—(Mr. Crawford.) It is under a charter of the 15th Edward III.

2312. (Chairman.) This book states this: "The "Corporation has in this respect a more extensive "privilege than any other corporation, one which was "confirmed by charter of 3rd June, 15th Edward III., "enabling the Mayor and Aldermen, with the consent "of the Commonalty, 'where any customs theretofore "'used and obtained proved hard or defective or any "'matters newly arising within the City needed "'amendment, and no remedy had been previously "'provided, to apply and ordain a convenient remedy, "'as often as it should seem expedient, so that the "'same were agreeable to good faith and reason, for "'the common advantage of the citizens and other "'liege subjects sojourning with them, and useful to "'king and people.'" I understand the Corporation claims under that charter that they can reconstitute themselves?—Yes, by acts of Common Council, and they have done so.

2313. Do you attach any significance to the proviso: "So that the same were agreeable to good faith and "reason, for the common advantage of the citizens "and other liege subjects sojourning with them, and "useful to king and people?"—I should think that "that was the phraseology of the time. I do not attach a more important meaning to the words than would be applied to any words of a similar character, whether in an Act of Parliament or otherwise.

2314. Well, but they might receive considerable interpretation in another Act of Parliament. Has any judicial interpretation been put upon them?—Not to my knowledge.

2315. Do they not imply a limitation of the powers of the Corporation to make new laws respecting its own constitution?—I do not know that they do. It is possible that if something wantonly unreasonable were done it would be a very good handle for Parliament to take hold of.

2316. But apart from Parliament you think there would be no other authority?—I should think not.

2317. Supposing a municipal corporation had power to pass byelaws, subject to the condition that they did not interfere with the common rights of the subjects of the realm, the question of the validity of a byelaw might arise in a court of law?—It might do, certainly, under those circumstances.

2318. Well, might not the question of the validity of an act of the Corporation, performed in virtue of this charter, arise in a court of law?—That must be a matter of opinion, I think.

2319. It never to your knowledge has been tried?—Never to my knowledge.

2320. (Lord Farrer.) Have there been no decisions—legal decisions—on that point?—I am not aware so.

2321. (Mr. Crawford.) As to the power to make Acts of Common Council there have been decisions?—I beg your pardon, I understood you to mean taking legal steps to void them.

2322. (Chairman.) No act of the Common Council has been taken to a court of common law to settle whether it is "agreeable to good faith and reason "for the common advantage of the citizens and "other liege subjects sojourning with them, and "useful to king and people?"—Not to my knowledge.

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

2323. The Corporation claim this power, they have recently exercised this power?—Making acts of Common Council.

2324. Yes?—Oh, yes; they are constantly, indeed.

2325. Without limitation?—Well, that is a difficult question to answer; the act of Common Council, as made, is limited by the contents of the act.

2326. Yes, but do they claim the power and exercise it without limitation?—They do so.

2327. I will put it this way: have recent organic changes in the constitution of the City of London been done by the action of the City itself, or by, or at least with, the sanction of Parliament?—As regards Acts of Common Council, by the action of the City itself.

2328. A very important change has been made since the Commission of 1854, in the election of aldermen? The constituents electing aldermen have been changed?—Yes.

2329. How was that change effected?—Do you mean as to the size of the wards or what?

2330. No; I mean the electors themselves are a different body now to what they were?—Yes; I must refer to find how that occurred; the 30th Victoria first settled it. "The inhabitants on the electoral roll "of every ward (except that of Bridge Without) "have the right to elect a freeman to be their alder- "man, who must then be approved and admitted by "the Court of Aldermen before he can take his seat "as such. The Lord Mayor upon a vacancy occur- "ring issues his precept, summoning the wardmote "for the election of an alderman." All these matters for the election of aldermen are regulated by statute.

2331. That is the point I wish to put to you; why do you wish to have a statute for that purpose if it could have been done by act of Common Council?—I think that at all times the electoral power has been by statute.

2332. But these words which I have quoted of the charter of Edward III. do not contain any limitation of that kind; I understood you to claim for the City of London to do what it liked?—No; they were your words more than mine.

2333. You assented?—I assented to your question because there was no limitation expressed there. Of course, Parliament is paramount in all matters.

2334. Parliament might possibly take away your charter, or might revise it?—Undoubtedly.

2335. But if you have got the power, as I understood you to claim that you have, under the charter to do this thing, why has Parliament been called in to perfect it?—It has always been done by Parliament.

2336. Then your answer would be, although this power appears to exist, it has not been exercised in these important matters?—It has not been exercised by Act of Common Council, so far as the electoral power of the City is concerned.

2337. That is a branch of the reconstitution of itself; only a part of the reconstitution; you might have a more radical reconstitution?—By constitution I understand you to mean the numbers that constitute, and the areas they represent.

2338. And the electors who are entitled?—Yes; those have been fixed by Parliament.

2339. The constitution of the Common Council is the co-existence of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Court of Common Council, coming into existence under different conditions?—Yes.

2340. And I understood the claim of the City was, that the body which has so come into existence, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Court of Common Council; could by their own power, subject to the proviso, whatever it may mean, as to "good faith and "advantage of the citizens," change the way in which they came into existence, alter their own constitution as Parliament can?—Parliament has done that.

2341. No, the Corporation can do it for itself?—Yes.

2342. So the City could do it for itself, that was your claim?—No, I think not, not to that extent. I did not understand your question to apply to that, but to apply to that which has taken place.

2343. Well, how would you define the limits of your action?—What I said just now defines the limits. I mean to say that it has been the custom for the Corporation to alter its numbers, to alter the areas of their representation. That is as regards that part; of course acts of Common Council affect all sorts of other matters.

2344. But with respect to the constitution of the Common Court, it goes no further than that?—It goes no further than that.

2345. (Lord Farrer.) Would it have power to convert the office of alderman from a life office into an annual office?—I should say yes.

2346. (Chairman.) It would not be necessary to go to Parliament to make that change?—I should think it would not; but of course that is a matter of consideration, a Court of Common Council question. I should have to ask for time to look into authorities, and so on.

2347. There have been several alterations made besides this as to the electors of the Court of Aldermen. Have they been all made by the authority of Parliament, or have any of them been done by the authority of the City itself?—I should think they have been done by the authority of Parliament.

2348. (Lord Farrer.) Can you give us a list of any of the alterations in the constitution that have been made by the City itself?—I could by reference and preparing the list; I do not profess to carry it in my head.

2349. (Chairman.) You put it at the commencement of this book; you quoted that power under the charter of Edward III., conveying to me the impression that, in the opinion of the City, practically all the recommendations of the Royal Commission of 1854 could have been done by the City itself?—That is not my impression at all. My impression is that a good deal that is recommended by the Royal Commission, when I looked at it, was a matter for Parliament to take the initiative in.

2350. As a matter of policy, but as a matter of power surely the recital here leads to the conclusion that the City itself could have done it?—In some cases no doubt.

2351. At that date they had doubts whether they could effectually do it unless ratified by Parliament?—No doubt that would be so.

2352. And there is no recent case of a large change being done by the Common Council except under the authority of Parliament?—No very recent case.

2353. How far back is the most recent?—You are speaking now, I suppose, of altering the wards, or of what?

2354. Recent considerable changes in the constitution of the City?—Yes, it was early in this century, I think; without referring to the date, early in this century you may take it.

2355. Can you give us any reference?—No, I cannot for the moment.

2356. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find the shrievalty was dealt with in 1878 by an Act of Common Council?—Oh, there have been many matters dealt with by the Common Council, but I understand the Chairman to want the precise date of the change of the numbers of the wards.

2357. (Chairman.) The important point is to ascertain what you consider to be the living limitations of the power conferred by that charter?—By the charter conferring power to pass acts of Common Council?

2358. Yes?—Well there are so many of them, but I take it the Royal Commission desire to get facts, not opinions, from me, and the best answer would be to produce the acts of Common Council referring to all sorts of things. There was one not very long ago abolishing the oaths of the Lord Mayor and other officers. That is one of an altogether different kind, but as I said, there have been acts of Common Council varying the number of representatives of the various wards, and I can produce the acts before this Commission. That was in 1866. Now here are several alterations on page 2, an "act of Common "Council passed on the 18th of December 1856, "abolishing all laws and customs which prohibited "persons, other than freemen, from carrying on "business by retail within the City; also in an act of "the same date abolishing street tolls in the City; "also in an act of the 10th December 1857; chang- "the day, and altering the mode then in use for "returning the names of persons elected to be com- "mon councillors; also an act of the 10th February "1859, to amend the oath taken by the Town Clerk "of the City of London, and to separate that office "from the office of the Registrar of the Mayor's "Court." And so it goes on; they are very various indeed.

2359. And those were done by the authority of an "act of Common Council?—By an act of Common Council.

2360. Without any ratification?—Without any ratification; as lately as 1889 there was a somewhat important act altering the form of indenture of apprenticeship; that was found to be inconvenient—the seven years' apprenticeship—that was altered by the variation of the periods of the indenture to five years.

2361. No one of those touches the gravity of an alteration of the constitution of the City itself?—No, not as regards the electoral body, which I take to be what you mean.

2362. (Mr. Smith.) These internal matters are rather analogous, are they not, to the general power which municipalities have to make byelaws for the good government of the borough itself?—They are very far beyond that I think.

2363. It is obvious in an ordinary borough that such a change might be made as the separation of offices, and things of that sort. Any borough might separate offices of that sort without absolute statute?—No doubt, not by byelaw, but by resolution probably.

2364. (Chairman.) Soon after the charter was granted, in the next reign, it was assumed that under it the Court of Common Council could alter the conditions of tenure of the aldermanic gown?—Yes.

2365. Would it be held that they had that power now?—I should think if they had it then they would have it now; I mean nothing has occurred to alter it.

2366. It was confirmed by the statute, but it had been already exercised?—Yes.

2367. That would not throw any doubt upon its validity?—I do not think it need.

2368. If it has not been exercised, or anything like it been exercised, since the reign of Richard II., you would still hold it was subsisting and valid?—I should be inclined to do so.

2369. (Lord Farrer.) Would the fact that it was declared valid by statute prevent the Corporation from altering it afterwards?—I do not quite follow that, Lord Farrer.

2370. In this paper—I am only taking it from your own paper—"and similar ordinances have changed the "nature of the office of alderman, by first making the "office annual (as declared by charter of Edward II., "and afterwards constituting the office one for life), "as declared by statute, 17 Richard II. cap. 11?"—Yes.

2371. Would not the fact that Parliament had confirmed that, or declared it, prevent the Corporation from exercising the same power again?—No, I think not.

2372. (Chairman.) That would depend upon the language of the statute?—Naturally it would.

2373. (Mr. Crawford.) I might give you an instance in connexion with the Fellowship Porters, who are regulated by Act of Common Council, Parliament had introduced the Metage on Grain Act clause affecting the fellowship, and the objection was raised in some litigation very recently that Parliament having once interfered the Court of Common Council had no power to control by Act of Common Council, and the judgment then given by the Divisional Court was, that the ancient power of the Common Council to control the fellowship by Act of Common Council remained, and had all the force of an Act of Parliament. That was a recent judgment given in connexion with the Fellowship Porters.

2374. (Chairman.) Let us proceed to the question of the Lord Mayor. I do not want to go into the general history of the Lord Mayor; at present the Lord Mayor is elected how?—The Lord Mayor is elected by two main processes; you have already heard, and I daresay you do not want me to repeat it, that he must be an alderman and must have served the office of sheriff, that the custom requires.

2375. What is the original of those customs?—Oh, they are too old for one to attempt to trace out. I noticed in Mr. Rotton's evidence that he said he believed it was quite a non-legal requirement that the Lord Mayor should have been sheriff, but as there is no traceable law in the matter, and the custom is of the greatest antiquity, I take that to be the reason.

2376. At present when the livery have assembled in common hall for the election of a Lord Mayor is not a list read out of those who are eligible?—A list is read out by the common serjeant of the aldermen who have not passed the chair and who have served the office of sheriff. That is taken to be the list from which the Lord Mayor should be chosen, it being always understood of course that if the livery so please they may pass by one of the names or both of them and select one from the gentlemen who have passed the chair. These gentlemen or any of them are available to serve.

2377. Although not read out by the common serjeant?—Although not read out by the common serjeant they are taken as read, having fulfilled all the requirements.

2378. And the necessity of these limitations has never been contested, I mean the legal necessity?—No, I think not; you mean as regards the sheriff.

2379. The liverymen have never asserted on their side that they could choose a man who had not been a sheriff?—Never, certainly not; never in any experience I have had.

2380. There is no trace of any attempt to elect a Lord Mayor from outside?—I should imagine not; I think I should have come across it in some place if it had been.

2381. Can you tell us the earliest recorded recognition of those two conditions, being alderman and having served the office or sheriff?—I can only do that by assumption; I assume, because I know not to the contrary, that the first alderman who became Lord Mayor had fulfilled that condition. It is a matter of record, no doubt. We have all the Lord Mayors recorded, and all the sheriffs recorded; I should think it would have been without any exception.

2382. The charters do not lay down any such condition, I think?—I do not know that they do; I do not think that they do; I do not find it at all; the City guilds have occasionally claimed a more authoritative and originating voice in the election of a Lord Mayor.

2383. You do not know all the history of the controversy that arose so far back as 1366?—No, we find that in the various books.

2384. At present, at all events, you assume as a matter of legal necessity, that to be elected as Lord Mayor, a man must be an alderman and must have been a sheriff?—And must have served the office of sheriff, yes.

2385. The liverymen being called together elect two out of the persons so qualified?—Yes.

2386. The limitation of aldermen is one of great antiquity?—Yes.

2387. The liverymen used to be the electors of aldermen; aldermen within the several wards were they not?—The companies, yes, the City Guilds.

2388. The aldermen for the wards used to be elected by the liverymen within the ward?—Yes, the liverymen. When you come to inquire into it you will find that the origin of aldermen is beyond this, that you will come to as you get on with the statement.

2389. But comparatively recently that was the constituency of an alderman?—Well, not comparatively recently; within some time.

2390. Has any claim ever been made on the part of residents who are not liverymen to be electors of the Lord Mayor?—No, not to my knowledge.

2391. What is the test used on the occasion of a common hall?—That none but liverymen shall be present.

2392. How is it applied?—A large structure is placed in Guildhall yard with the names of the various companies fitted on the little doorways and the names of the various companies are to be over the respective doorways.

2393. Does the beadle come with his flock?—The beadles of the companies are stationed at their doorways and they are supposed to distinguish, and to the best of their ability do distinguish, because they know every liveryman personally from collecting quarterage from them, and they admit them in that way and care is taken as far as possible. I suppose it is not entirely possible to do it any more than to secure that in the old days none but electors shall be in front of the hustings, although it is done much better than that. They are admitted into the hall, and those who are not liverymen are called upon by the common crier to depart, so that for all practical purposes the hall consists of liverymen. But very much does not of course turn upon that, because in a case of a very narrow majority by show of hands a poll would bring things to a proper bearing.

2394. A register is kept in case of a poll?—Oh, a register is most carefully kept.

2395. Usually it is done by show of hands?—It is always done by show of hands.

2396. Not exclusively; sometimes there is a poll?—Very seldom indeed, there have been a few polls of late years, not many, I think not for 20 years.

2397. (Lord Farrer.) Not for 20 years?—I should think not. The last that occurs to me at the moment was when a Lord Mayor was desirous of being re-elected; I think that was some 20 years ago and it came to a poll and he was not re-elected, but the next alderman on the list was elected on the poll.

2398. (Mr. Crawford.) There have been polls in connexion with the shrievalties?—Oh, yes, there have been polls in connexion with the shrievalties; I am speaking of the election of the Lord Mayor at this particular moment.—Oh, yes, shrievalties oftener rather, yes, decidedly oftener, because there are outside candidates for the shrievalty.

2399. (Chairman.) Was there not a poll for the second year that Lord Mayor Fowler served?—No; the second year he was returned he was called in and elected by acclamation. I may say because of the death of Alderman Nottage, and they asked him particularly to come in again.

2400. There is also a poll in connexion with another election, the election of a chamberlain?—That is another matter; there was on the last occasion.

2401. There is no agitation on the part of the constitution of this electoral body, the liverymen?—No, no electoral agitation, certainly in the sense in which you mean.

2402. The inhabitants of the City who are not liverymen have not complained?—No, not at all, not in any way.

2403. There is no sectional opposition then?—There is no sectional opposition.

2404. Between the electors of the ward, and the electors in the Guildhall?—No, not at all.

2405. (Lord Farrer.) And the livery as a matter of practice, return the two senior aldermen?—As a matter of practice they do. They used not to do it. The other day at the late election, I do not think there was any mal prepense about it, the larger number of the hands was held up for the next in rotation, now our Lord Mayor elect, and when the other names were put successively, it did so happen that a gentleman two or three down was considered by the sheriffs to have a larger show of hands and his name was the second sent in, but I do not think there was any intent about it; I think the idea was to return the one they wanted to select.

2406. (Chairman.) The important thing is the first nomination?—The important thing is the first, no doubt.

2407. These two names being returned to the Court of Aldermen, they select one of them?—The aldermen meet in chamber and select one.

2408. They have the power of refusing both?—They have power of veto.

2409. Has any case recently happened in which they have declined to receive either man?—No, I do not know of any case; I do not know of one.

2410. What power of veto have they?—I think they have the power of veto; I think they always have had the power of veto.

2411. That is to say, they could refuse both?—Yes.

2412. But you are not aware that they have ever done it?—I am not aware of their declining the two; I am aware of them having declined one, and on the argument they might decline the other.

2413. They could not accept both?—No, but I mean to say, passing over the senior in that way.

2414. If two are selected they may select one?—They usually select the senior, but they may select the other.

2415. You are not aware of their having refused both?—No.

2416. The person so selected is presented to the Lord Chancellor?—The person so selected is presented to the Lord Chancellor.

2417. That is for the Queen's approbation?—That is for the Queen's approbation.

2418. Has that been withheld?—Not of late years, but I believe it is in history that it has been done; in fact, I am sure it has, because I have read it, but not for very many years.

2419. What is the latest date?—Well, I am not sure, we have not got it here; yes, I think so; yes, I think we find it here.

2420. (Lord Farrer.) Edward I. took it into his own hands altogether?—Oh, yes, he did; Edward I. kept the City without a mayor for 12 consecutive years, but in modern history there has been no declining on the part of the Sovereign.

2421. (Chairman.) You seem to have a memory of one within the last century or two?—No, I did not intend to convey that, it was a slip of the tongue if I said a century or two; I mean not for any modern time at all.

2422. (Secretary.) Was there not some difficulty about the election of Wilkes as Lord Mayor. I think he was rejected the first time he stood, but I am not sure whether this was by the Sovereign direct, or through the Court of Aldermen?—That is a matter, I suppose, of record, and my personal knowledge does not go to it; I know he got into Newgate among other things.

2423. (Chairman.) And was chamberlain?—And was chamberlain.

2424. You call attention to the fact that there is a fourfold condition to be fulfilled before a person can be Lord Mayor?—Yes; first he must be an alderman, secondly he must have been a sheriff.

2425. (Lord Farrer.) He must have been a sheriff?—Well, he must go through the election of sheriff. He has first to pass the original election of the rated inhabitants of the ward he desires to represent; he first submits himself to that popular election, and the rated inhabitants pass him as it were.

2426. (Chairman.) That is subject to the approval of the Court of Aldermen?—That is subject to the approval of the Court of Aldermen; they have a veto which, as Sir David Evans explained, was exercised as happened very fortunately, of late years. I may say one thing, to fill up, one little thing that occurred to me, that I suppose was not in Sir David Evans' mind. He was asked, I think by Lord Farrer, and it seemed to me a very salient point, I think his Lordship said, "So the Court of Aldermen then "passes as it were censure upon the electors." The real fact is, where the value is looked upon as so great, that the Court of Aldermen have—moving in commercial circles—very often private knowledge that the electors at large have not got, and hence the veto is such a useful and such a salutary one. And in the two cases in which it has been exercised—two cases that are very familiar to all minds, I do not want to particularly mention them—it was a most fortunate thing that the veto was exercised.

2427. (Lord Farrer.) That is the veto upon his being alderman?—Yes, I am speaking of the aldermanic veto.

2428. (Mr. Crawford.) But they can veto for Lord Mayor?—Yes.

2429. (Chairman.) Yes, go on?—Then, thirdly, the livery in Common Hall elect, and fourthly, the Court of Aldermen elect, so that a gentleman from the moment that he submits himself to the popular election of the rated inhabitants till he receives the approval of the Court of Aldermen before he can become Lord Mayor passes through as it were four electoral ordeals.

2430. And then there is the Sovereign's approval, whether that would be worth much or little now. The Lord Mayor, as we all know, is a person of great importance?—In the City.

2431. He is called to the Privy Council on the demise of the Crown?—Yes, that I understand is so. The Crown happily is of such long duration in the present reign that personal acquaintance has not gone to it. But I understand that that is the case, that he is specially called. I learned that from the authorities.

2432. You say this prefix rests on historical grounds, do you know what those are; do you know what the origin of his being a member of the Privy Council is?—He is only a member of the Privy Council in this way: I think the word Right Honorable is a courtesy prefix at all times, and it is founded on what I have stated. I remember some time ago having a little conversation with Garter on the subject, and he said that is so, that he is summoned to the Privy Council on the demise of the Crown.*

2434. (Mr. Smith.) It has nothing to do with his having to toll the bell of St. Paul's?—Not at all.

2435. (Chairman.) The Mayor of York is a Lord Mayor, and has been Right Honourable for centuries?—That I do not know; I believe all Lord Mayors do assume the prefix Right Honourable.

2436. And new Mayors who have been made Lord Mayors, I understand, will be designated Right Honourable?—The truth is I know something about the origin of that. I have had letters I have expressed my inability to answer. I think they have quietly assumed it, and nobody has objected. I find difficulty in giving much foundation for it.

2437. And whenever he is unable to attend himself apparently to discharge his functions he must have as a substitute an alderman who has passed the chair?—Yes; when he desires to appoint a locum tenens, which he does by a formal document pro ista vice, he appoints an alderman who has passed the Chair to preside over the Court of Aldermen, and over the Court of Common Council on those formal occasions, or on any other occasion of that sort. For ordinary purposes any of the aldermen may represent him.

2438. That is a usage that could not possibly be traced to any authority?—It is usage without authority.

2439. Then it is the practice of the Home Secretary to communicate to the Lord Mayor the occurrence of events in the Royal Family?—That is done always, and it is duly posted on the Mansion House, so that all who run may read.

2440. Has the Lord Mayor any powers or duties apart from being chairman upon those occasions, and as a magistrate?—Do you mean as regards the Corporation?

2441. Yes. Is there anything he could do proprio motu?—Automatically, you mean.

2442. Yes?—I should say not anything beyond the fact of his being chairman, and what a chairman may do. Of course the Lord Mayor may hold a court, and may break up a court, by removing the mace, but so I take it any chairman might break up or dissolve a meeting.

2443. And he summons meetings?—And he summons meetings of the Court. All the papers of business for the Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council are prepared by the Lord Mayor. The fact is they are prepared by the Lord Mayor's officer, and he sees them, and initials them. Sir David Evans perhaps, to some little extent, wandered in one respect, when he said that the Lord Mayor can do as he likes about different things upon summonses*; that is in theory right, but in practice it simply means this, the Lord Mayor is answerable for the summonses. As to the reports of committees that come up, I do not think under any circumstances his Lordship could keep them off the summonses, although perhaps he might say, "Well, I think perhaps "this might wait till another court." But what the Lord Mayor's powers extend to is this, that it would be not only his right but his duty to keep off improper matter, irrelevant, or improper, or puerile matter; he is responsible in that way, that only matters should come before the Court of Aldermen, or the Court of Common Council, that he knows about, and as he is advised, are fitting to come before it. There is one more point I may say that was a slip of Sir David Evans. I dare say he had forgotten for the moment he was not as Lord Mayor ex officio a member of all committees of the Corporation.† The Lord Mayor is on certain committees of the Corporation, he acts on committees as any other alderman; as an alderman the Lord Mayor takes his part, but the Lord Mayor is hardly on any committee ex officio at all, so that he is not supposed to attend all the various committees. If he had any particular reason for coming to one, he would no doubt be received with courtesy, and what he had to say would be heard; but he, in fact, arrives at the business of the Corporation by means of those reports which come up to the Courts before they get acted upon.

2444. In fact, he is detached from the municipal work to a large extent?—Detached in this sense, that he is at the head of it all, no doubt.

2445. But he does not participate much in the actual work, and his mind is not brought to the solution of the different problems they have to consider?—No, in most respects, no, I should say the Lord Mayor, as an alderman, is on certain committees which he was on last year, they go on for four years; he is on this or that committee, and such committees as a Lord Mayor takes personal interest in and in attending, as is the case with all members of the Court, he generally contrives to attend during his year of office. The present Lord Mayor was chairman of the police committee, although, as a matter of fact, he might during his year of office let somebody else take it; he said he was so interested in the work, that he has it still, and he attends that committee.

2446. (Lord Farrer.) But he is not ex officio a member of all committees?—No; hardly any.‡

Sir J. Monckton.

8 Nov. 1893.

2447. If he attends any committee without any special appointment he would not vote, supposing there was a division?—If he goes into a committee to make a communication of any special kind he would not vote at all.

2448. I am asking this question in order to compare the case with that of the London County Council, where the chairman is ex officio a member of each committee, and where he does attend the committees regularly whenever there are subjects that interest him?—And vote?

2449. And votes.—Yes, he is ex officio a member of the committee. The Lord Mayor is not ex officio a member of all the committees, and unless he has been specially elected he does not vote any more than any other member of the Court who is not a member of that committee.

2450. It is not his practice to attend all committees?—No, it is very exceptional. If the Lord Mayor were to appear, other business would be stopped in order to know what his Lordship wanted and let him go.

2451. (Mr. Smith.) He really would know less of the municipal work than any ordinary member of the council?—I do not think that. All these reports come before him, whereas ordinary members are divided among the various committees.

2452. They read the reports, I presume?—Well, I suppose a literary man would read the Library Report, and would not care much about the Markets Report, and vice versâ.

2453. (Chairman.) Do you think the Lord Mayor reads them all?—I think the Lord Mayor generally takes a considerable interest in these reports. As to reading the details he cannot, seeing that our papers of business for the court give a résumé, and he does actually in my presence say, "What is this?" and by the summons he does practically get all the work of the different committees brought before him.

2454. He knows what is going on, just as a man who reads the "Times" knows all that is going on?—Yes.

2455. But does he control the course of things?—He does not attempt to control things beyond his own ken.

2456. (Lord Farrer.) Would he take this sort of part, "This is a subject of importance, but it had "better be deferred for the present, and you had "better put it in the paper for another day"?—He could do so, but he does not do so. He relies on the chairman of the committee, who is an experienced man, and who has been elected, and who is really responsible for the work of that committee, and the officers advising him saying that that is a matter which ought not to be taken now.

2457. And would he as chairman, when business comes before the Court of Common Council, take the responsibility of saying, "I think we shall not get "through the business if we take this long thing to "day; let us take it next time"?—I do not think I have ever known the Lord Mayor to do that; I do not think I have ever known such a thing. I have known a chairman get up and say, "My Lord Mayor, "it is getting late in the day, my matter is not "pressing, and as the court is rather thin I propose "to put it down first on the paper for next court." That is done by the chairman invariably; I do not think I have ever heard a Lord Mayor interfere with the chairman's responsibility in that respect.

2458. But he would take the responsibility of striking out of the paper anything that was manifestly absurd or improper?—Anything irrelevant, improper, or absurd, or disloyal, or to use an impossible word, blasphemous, he would say, "No, I decline," because a member always has his remedy; a member could get up in court and ask for leave to move without notice.

2459. I suppose you have some standing orders for the conduct of business?—Yes, they are largely referred to here.

2460. And he is bound by those?—The Lord Mayor is bound by those.

2461. He can put a construction upon them?—Yes, he may do that; of course he may rule.

2462. He is appealed to on questions of order, is he not?—Yes.

2463. As chairman?—As chairman.

2464. For instance, if a member got up and said "This is out of order, is it not?" in that case the Lord Mayor would decide?—In all bodies there are constantly arising points of order.

2465. And the Lord Mayor decides those points?—And the Lord Mayor decides those points.

2466. With the assistance of the officials?—With the assistance of the officials

2467. (Mr. Crawford.) He must certainly follow the debates for the purpose of calling to order?—Yes.

2468. (Chairman.) Sir John, about the Court of Aldermen, I observe that so far back as that same reign of Richard II., the same year in fact, Farringdon Ward was split up into two. That was confirmed, if not initiated by Act of Parliament?—Yes.

2469. Another illustration of the invocation of Parliament to do what might be supposed to be in the hands of the council?—In that case Parliament appears to have followed other action.

2470. It may be that that had already been done by an act of Common Council?—I think so.

2471. It would have been within their power according to that claim, but it was confirmed by an Act of Parliament?—It would have been within their power.

2472. (Lord Farrer.) Then with reference to that, is it known within what time the area of the City was fixed, as it is at present?—I think that it is recorded here somewhere. The number of the wards of course has not been varied since that time, but the outer wards have been taken in; I forget the date; we shall come to it presently.

2473. In this case the Farringdon Ward seems to have been within the City, but to have been divided into Farringdon Within and Farringdon Without, so that some time or other the City seems to have been extended beyond the old walls, so as to take in a district which had previously been outside the City?—I cannot tell you now at the moment; I shall find it. I think I have the worst head in the world for carrying dates.

2474. (Chairman.) It was a common thing for the City—for a municipality—to have jurisdiction within its walled area, and within a certain distance the liberties or purlieus outside that walled area?—As liberties, oh, yes.

2475. That is what the City certainly has had from the time of Richard II.?—No doubt.

2476. And there has been no change since that time?—And there has been no change in the number of wards since that time.

2477. Nor any extension of the area of the City?—I cannot quite say, but I think there has been an extension of area since.

2478. In which direction do you think?—Bishopsgate Without and Cripplegate Without.

2479. (Mr. Crawford.) I think there was one extension in one of the recent statutes relating to markets, a very small extension, but it was declared by Parliament that they should form part of the ward of Farringdon.

2480. (Lord Farrer.) And you say from that date to this no alteration has taken place in the number of City wards. Since Edward VI.'s time has any alteration taken place in the area of those wards?—That is what we were this moment speaking of; there were one or two casual extensions, but not much.

2481. (Chairman.) The outside wards?—The outside wards having thus been extended.

2482. (Lord Farrer.) Have the limits of the wards within the old area been altered; has any part of one ward been given to another ward?—No; no readjustment of the size of the wards.

2483. (Chairman.) The election of aldermen is now absolutely defined by statute?—Yes.

2484. The statute prescribes who shall elect?—Who shall elect and who may be elected. Any freeman may be elected, not necessarily residential.

2485. It is essential that he should be a freeman?—He must be a freeman of the City.

2486. There are not many cases I suppose of freemen not residential of the City now being elected?—Not very many, but they are not rare either. One of the Lord Mayors I remember, Alderman Allen, who was alderman of the Ward of Cheap, had a publisher's business in Waterloo Place.

2487. But he had also a publisher's business in Leadenhall Street?—Certainly not in his ward; anyway not in Cheap.

2488. Sir David Evans has told us already, I think, that he resided in one ward, Cordwainer Ward, and was elected for Castle Baynard Ward?—Yes, Castle Baynard Ward; he means to say he has not business there.

2489. Is there any recent instance in which an alderman has been elected who was a freeman but not resident within the City?—Oh, I think so, on looking back a little.

2490. (Lord Farrer.) The alderman must still have a 10*l.* qualification, must he not?—The alderman?

2491. Yes?—Yes, I think he must—no, no, I beg your pardon, the alderman need not, he need not have any qualification at all. Any gentleman in this room would be qualified.

2492. The voter for an alderman must have a 10*l.* qualification?—The voter, yes.

2493. (Mr. Smith.) I think the alderman may decline to serve if he is not worth a certain amount of money?—If he pleases he may plead that he is not worth 30,000*l.*, and he may decline to serve without fine.

2494. (Chairman.) Before that statute of 30 Victoria the election of aldermen was in what body? That statute carried into effect one of the changes recommended by the Commission of 1854?—The electors were the freemen before that. The tendency of modern legislation has been to put it into the rated inhabitants.

2495. But there has been no corresponding change in the City Hall. You would have anticipated a corresponding change in the City Hall, but that has not taken place. The electors for the aldermen were formerly the freemen within the ward; and such of these as were liverymen were then, and are still, the electors for a Lord Mayor?—Under the 30th Victoria, the rated occupiers became the electors for aldermen, but not for the Lord Mayor in common hall.

2496. Yes?—The electors in common hall are still the livery.

2497. And formerly the freemen within the wards were the electors of the aldermen?—Yes.

2498. But the change that has been made in the district of the ward has not been made in the common hall?—No.

2500. For Parliament?—Well, there are two distinct sets of constituents there, the livery are constituents and the ordinary household voter.

2501. That is without a 10*l.* qualification?—That is without a 10*l.* qualification, the ordinary, whatever the qualification is.

2502. The question I wanted to ask was whether those who can vote for Parliament as rated occupiers without a 10*l.* qualification are voters for aldermen?—No.

2503. They are not?—No.

2504. (Chairman.) Is that so?—It is set out before you here by statute 30th Victoria, chapter 1: "Every male person of full age, not subject to any legal "incapacity, who shall for a period of not less than "12 months previous to the first day of December "in any year have been in the occupation within the "City, or the liberties thereof, either solely or "jointly with any other person or persons, of any "house, warehouse, counting-house, office, chambers, "or shop, or other building, and shall in the case of "a sole occupation be rated in respect of such "premises in his own name to an amount not less "than 10*l.* per annum, or in the case of a joint occupation be rated in the joint names of the occupiers "to an amount which, when divided by the number "of occupiers, shall give a sum of not less than 10*l.* "per annum for each of such occupiers to the police "or any other rate, shall be entitled to vote in any "election for aldermen in the ward in which such "premises shall be situate."

2505. (Lord Farrer.) Read the second section; consider what that means under present circumstances?—"Every person on the register of voters "for the City of London in use at elections for "members to serve in Parliament, and then in force, "in respect of the occupation of any house, ware-"house, counting house, shop, office, chambers, or "other building, shall be entitled to vote in any such "election for aldermen in the ward in which such "premises shall be situate." It is all right; Parliamentary voters as well as the first.

2506. Parliamentary voters, whether they have the 10*l.* qualification or not?—Yes.

2507. (Mr. Crawford.) Only it is confined to the ward in which the election takes place, voting for the qualifying premises?——

2508. (Lord Farrer.) Voting for the qualifying premises?

2509. (Mr. Crawford.) In the particular ward where the election is taking place, if you read section two of the statute.

2510. (Lord Farrer.) If he is an occupier of rated premises in the ward he votes for Aldermen, whatever the value of his occupation is?

2511. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

2512. (Lord Farrer.) That is so, is it not?

2513. (Mr. Crawford.) That is so.

2514. (Lord Farrer.) Then those voters are in fact members of the Corporation of the City, although they may not be freemen; and although they may not have a 10*l.* qualification.

2515. (Mr. Crawford.) You are mixing up the two elections?—A voter need not be a freeman.

2516. (Lord Farrer.) A voter for an alderman?—A voter for an alderman need not be a freeman.

2517. Need not be a freeman?—At one time he was, I think the last was in the Act of George I., he must be a freeman, being a householder and paying scot. Now, householders and those who are on the parliamentary register have the right to vote.

2518. Consequently they become for all practical purposes constituents of the City Corporation?—Yes, constituents of the body corporate.

2519. (Chairman.) These elections are held in the ordinary manner, the Lord Mayor goes and presides I think?—For the election of aldermen the Lord Mayor presides.

2520. And the person returned is then subject to acceptance or rejection on the part of the Court of Aldermen?—On the part of the Court of Aldermen. The Court of Alderman admit him if they are so minded, in fact, they admit him unless they are minded not to do it, and they swear him.

2521. And in the event of any alleged irregularity in the election, how is that examined?—By petition presented to the Court of Aldermen; they have charge of the whole business?—Yes.

2522. (Lord Farrer.) Where do these wardmote elections take place?—At various accustomed places of meeting in the various wards. For instance, in the Lord Mayor's present ward, the Ward of Bridge, the

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

Fishmongers' Hall is accorded and they usually do it there. In the largest ward of all, Farringdon Without, the largest room in the Old Bailey is used for the purpose; in some wards it may be a school room.

2523. (Chairman.) Usually some livery company's hall?—Some convenient place in the ward that is lent for the purpose. There is not a wardmote hall existing anywhere. The Guildhall itself stands in three wards, and the elections are held in some part of the Guildhall for Cheap, Cripplegate, and Bassishaw.

2524. (Mr. Smith.) Can you tell us about how often these elections take place?—For common councilmen?

2525. No, for aldermen?—Only when there is a vacancy.

2526. But how often?—The old idea used to be about two or three years; for a short time they were very often, and for the last year or two I am happy to say there have been hardly any vacancies.

2527. What would be a fair average, a vacancy about every two or three years?—Yes.

2528. (Chairman.) There are 26 aldermen?—Yes.

2529. And they are men of some age when elected?—Well, I do not know, it is wonderful how young they come in now; you had an instance to-day of a young gentleman as I call him, probably you might too, who has served the office of Lord Mayor a few years ago. I think it varies very much. The present Lord Mayor, on the other hand, is a very vigorous man; he is in his 70th year, you know.

2530. (Mr. Smith.) That is enough for my purpose, that you do not have more than one a year?—I should think that is the outside of it, taking 10 years together.

2531. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any excitement generally about the election of an alderman?—Oh, sometimes, here and there; it happens that some man is well known in the ward as a public man, and is looked upon as the man they will have without any doubt, and no one thinks of opposing him. He comes in by acclamation, as was the case with the now coming Lord Mayor, Aldermen Tyler; the whole ward seemed to point to him as the man. But here and there there is a good deal of contest for it.

2532. (Chairman.) How does a man get influence in his ward?—By various public services; we have 25 or 26 wards, but in the City there are 108 parishes, and there are the usual parish offices you know, with the usual parish excitement.

2533. Was Alderman Tyler a common councilman?—He was a common councilman, and a deputy for many years.

2534. For that ward?—For that ward, the Ward of Queenhithe, and it is a ward consisting very much of people of his own calling, the wholesale paper trade; he is very much looked up to and respected; he was as good as told that if he cared to come forward they would take him by acclamation; he finally did so and was elected. But now and then there are heavy fights indeed.

2535. (Mr. Smith.) Does a man's introduction to public life in the City generally begin with parochial office?—I should be inclined to think that many do this. Men who come into the Common Council are mostly men who have been known locally by public work in their immediate districts.

2536. What sort of offices would they hold?—Churchwardens, overseers, trustees, up to recently, of many of the City charities, and so on.

2537. That is the principal way which a man has of making his public capacities known in the City?—Yes, in a public way; well of course his business position has something to do with it also.

2538. But business position alone will not do it?—I cannot say that; there are many City men in business whose names are world-wide you know, and people would say of them, "Oh, if Mr. So-and-So, will come forward." Supposing there were a man living now,—I do not think there is—of the great firm of Copestake; if one of the Copestakes were to come forward, why the name would carry him in on the top of the tide, as a man known and respected; so it is with people of that kind.

2539. (Lord Farrer.) Can you give any reason why there are so few men engaged in what is now the principal business of the City of London—banking and finance — amongst those that come forward for any City place?—I should be rather inclined to put it down to the reason that men in banking and finance are usually very wealthy men having large estates—land say—and that they have not the time, or perhaps the inclination, to be sufficiently in the City. I think our great bankers and financiers are not like the working bees that I belong to; they perhaps come in four days a week from 11 till 2, and go away to their country seats; and I think that is the reason.

2540. There must be a great many very hard-working men connected with finance in the City?—Yes, and possibly so hard working on the other hand that they are totally unable to do anything else but to attend to Mammon.

2541. But it is the fact that they stand very much aloof?—I cannot say they stand very much aloof, but they do not come forward in such numbers as the merchant whose counting-house work is done by heads of departments and clerks, and who perhaps has only to attend a couple or three hours in his own counting-house to sign cheques and so on. Most of the bankers are men who must positively be in their work all day if they are at work at all, unless they are so far from it as to be absentees.

2542. And the old merchant has died out? The old residential merchant has died out without a doubt. I do not suppose there is now a single alderman living within the City walls; I should think not.

2543. Not only the old residential merchant but the business of the great merchants has very much changed?—I cannot say at all; my opinion would not be worth the breath I uttered it with; I do not know.

2544. Then another very large class—shipowners—they do not come forward, do they?—I do not know that they do.

2545. (Mr. Crawford.) There are one or two shipowners who are common councillors?—There are several on the common council. I was thinking of the aldermen for the moment. Alderman Lusk is the nearest approach, he has always been connected with shipping.

2546. And Alderman Ritchie? — Yes, Alderman Ritchie; one has to think them out for a moment.

2547. (Lord Farrer.) Do the heads of the great wholesale houses take an active part in the City?—In places they do; such a man as you had here to-day, in Sir David Evans, does. His wholesale house is one of the Manchester houses, indeed one of the Watling Street houses, and it is a very large house, and there are very few retail men amongst the aldermen indeed. Many of these old houses have now amalgamated and turned their concerns into limited companies, so that in that way they have lost individual touch.

2548. But still there are persons who manage those limited companies, who are leading partners in those limited liability companies?—Many of those gentlemen do take an active part in the City affairs. Sir James Whitehead, an ex-Lord Mayor, was chairman of one of the leading limited companies in the City.

2549. (Lord Farrer.) Are there a large number of chairmen of the great companies, chairmen or directors of the great companies, that are in the City government?—Not a very large number I should think. You see there are only 26 aldermen in all; they are all men in a large way of business if I think them out; well, there are two gentlemen of great respectability, of great standing, they are the two Aldermen Lawrence. They have by good fortune retired; they were large timber merchants years ago; they have retired, I believe, so repute says, with ample fortunes, and ample time to give. Well, they are two of our leading aldermen; in fact, Sir William Lawrence is the senior. They are both very active men, and are doing a great deal of work in that position.

2550. (Mr. Smith.) It is rather invidious to ask questions of this kind, but have you any book that would show the professions and occupations of your various members of the City Council, the common councilmen and the aldermen?—No book certainly that would show it, because we distinguish them by their companies, and addresses.*

2551. Their trades or professions or occupations are not given?—No; their trades or professions mostly, like their politics, are as unknown to me as they are to you. I quite by chance may know some. One knows more about the aldermen, for one sees more of them perhaps; they are fewer in number, one is better able to tell. I think I know the business of all the aldermen.

2552. I had reference to a statement made by the Commissioners in 1837, and I wanted to know if the same condition of things applied; that is all?——

2553. (Chairman.) Sir Robert Fowler was a banker?—He was, and one of his firm, Alderman Dimsdale, is a banker.

2554. (Lord Farrer.) What I wanted to get at was to what extent the existing Corporation, the governing body of the Corporation of London, can be said to represent what we ordinarily should call the business of the City as well as the holders of tenements in the City?—I think several of the aldermen are directors of limited banks; with the exception of one or two banks the greatest in the City are limited companies, and several of the aldermen are directors of those. In that sense business is eminently represented by them.

2555. (Mr. Smith.) There was a Parliamentary return obtained in 1882 on the subject of the trades, professions, and occupations of aldermen?—I remember having to prepare one at that time, especially with regard to residence, I think.

2556. It is residence, business, profession, or occupation?—Yes.

2557. I was not aware of its existence till to-day?—I thought it was longer ago than that; yes, there has not been one since.

2558. (Chairman.) The Court of Aldermen when constituted exercises some jurisdiction over the Livery Companies; would you tell us what that is?—They claim to do so. They have now a jurisdiction over the Livery Companies up to a certain point. The Livery Companies if they desire to enlarge their livery have to come to the Court of Aldermen for permission to do so.

2559. Is that the only way that the court now interferes with the livery?—Yes, I think it is; they incidentally inquire, if they are increasing the livery, what their fees and fines are, because they object to their lowering those, and they would object to any increase of the livery involving such lowering of fees.

2560. Your statement is: "The court exercises "jurisdiction over the Livery Companies, and takes "cognizance of any matters that may be brought "before the court touching the manner in which the "Livery Companies act up to the conditions imposed "by the court in granting the livery or otherwise"?—Where a Livery Company has not had a livery (they may have been a chartered company of freemen without a livery), and they may have come to the Court of Aldermen at some period or other to ask that a livery may be granted, the Court of Aldermen has by old custom a right to grant it. The Court of Aldermen then in granting the livery, if they do so, stipulate that the fine on admission to the livery shall be such a sum, and they would take cognizance of any breach of that if it were reported to the Court of Aldermen that the Worshipful Company of Bellows Menders, using a fancy name, were admitting liverymen at 20*l.* apiece instead of 60*l.* or 80*l.*, or whatever the condition may have been; they would have them before them and take cognizance.

2561. And do they also prescribe the number that can be admitted?—Yes, undoubtedly, if a livery has asked for an extra number. Sometimes a company will come up and say, "Our number is 100; we have "over 100, and we have a number of reputable "gentlemen more or less connected with the craft "that the company is supposed to foster and does "foster, and we ask for liberty to increase the "number." The Court of Aldermen then have, by a committee, the master and warden and clerk of the company before them, inquire into the matter, and come to a decision upon it.

2562. Suppose it is found that a Livery Company admits liverymen whether by small payments or in excessive numbers what can the Court of Aldermen do?—I think they can cancel their rights altogether.

2563. Any thing short of that?—They could admonish and request them to make submission and to correct. There is no doubt of that if they were so minded; if it were a small offence.

2564. They can advise or remonstrate, but if neglected?—If found out to be a mistake or an inadvertence or a misapprehension.

2565. If persisted in the only means of correcting is to cancel their livery?—To cancel their livery.

2566. (Lord Farrer.) What is the exact meaning of "Livery"?—The exact meaning of the word as handed down to us is that the various companies wore uniforms or liveries attaching to their own craft. A company called their freemen up to the distinction of wearing the livery pretty much as an Oxford boy wears his blue, if he is good enough and so on. The freemen were the lower grade, and they were called up to wear the livery if they were considered worthy of what was looked upon as the distinction.

2567. And the Court of Aldermen had a jurisdiction to give or to refuse the livery?—To give or to refuse; to give a livery where there was no livery, if no livery had been there, and to limit the number of the livery when the livery was granted.

2568. With the view to the constituency—to not enlarging the size of the constituency?—Not swamping the constituency, no doubt.

2569. (Chairman.) Can the Court of Aldermen grant to a new company a livery created de novo?—You mean to say can the Court of Aldermen create a company.

2570. Yes?—No, a company must have a charter.

2571. A company must exist by a charter of the Crown?—Yes, a charter from the Crown.

2572. (Mr. Crawford.) And in most of the charters of the City companies you will find it is specially provided for, the Court of Aldermen having power in regard to the granting of a livery?—A good many of them, if not all.

2573. (Chairman.) These liverymen are parliamentary constituents of the City of London?—These liverymen are parliamentary constituents of the City of London.

2574. If they reside?—Within 30 miles.

2575. (Lord Farrer.) You say that the Court of Aldermen allow officials to be admitted constables, is that in connexion with the Commissioner of the Police or how?—No, they are what are termed extra constables. The Court of Aldermen have always had the authority to appoint constables and for all time as far as I know; certain public bodies in the City set out here, the Post Office, the Bank of England, the Stock Exchange, and so on, have asked for convenience sake for certain of their officials, especially the Bank of England, to be admitted as extra constables. They are pretty analogous to a special constable at a special time in any part of England. They are not in connexion with the police at all. I think most of those gentlemen who wear cocked hats in the Bank of England are special constables, so that they may summarily remove improper persons and so on.

2576. (Chairman.) Is this a special power of the Court of Aldermen that vests in them only as justices?—They have always done it as the Court of Aldermen, and they have done it from time

* But see also below, Q. 2555.

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

immemorial; I do not think as justices except so far as the fact is that they are identical with justices, but it is not done by them in their meeting as justices; it is done by them in their meeting in Court of Aldermen so that they do it quâ aldermen.

2577. Is there any declaration made that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace?—Yes, the people who are desired to be admitted in the Court of Aldermen attend at what is called the Court of Outer Chamber, that is the Mayor's Court, and make a declaration before the Deputy Registrar of that Court.

2578. The Court of Aldermen are the Police Committee of London?—No.

2579. What have they got to do with the police of London?—Every alderman is a member of the Police Committee. The Police Committee as you will find later on is a committee consisting of all the aldermen, all the deputies, and a commoner from each ward.

2580. (Lord Farrer.) Then it rests with the Lord Mayor and aldermen to approve of regulations for the government of the Police Force?—No, not at all.

2581. You say so here.

2582. (Chairman.) Look at page 12 paragraph 2. "Under the City Police Act, 1839, (2 & 3 Vict., cap. XCIV.) it devolves upon the Mayor and aldermen to approve such rules and regulations as the Commissioner shall frame, for the general government of the force, and under the Metropolis Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., cap. CXXXIV.), similarly to give their consent to regulations framed by the Commissioner, as to the route for vehicular traffic within the City?—There are certain things under the Act that have to come before the Mayor and aldermen.

2583. (Lord Farrer.) No, but if you read that second paragraph?—"To approve such rules and "regulations as the Commissioner shall frame." I had my mind on the extra constables you were speaking of. Yes, that is so, that is under the Act.

2584. (Mr. Smith.) They are what we should call the Watch Committee to a certain extent.

2585. (Lord Farrer.) Then afterwards we find that there is a separate police committee?—The Police Committee of the Common Council has nothing to to do with the organization of the Police Force. It has to do with their clothing and various duties which are duly set out here. They do not interfere at all with the Commissioner's rights, responsibilities, and duties that are given him under the Act, not so much as a Watch Committee.

2586. (Chairman.) The Police Committee do not do that?—No, nor do they appoint constables. Police Committees in the boroughs appoint constables and sergeants recommended by the head of the force.

2587. (Mr. Smith.) The duties of a Watch Committee are mainly administrative, as regards the pay and clothing of the police: They do not interfere with the Chief of the Police's investigation into criminal cases unless he asks for their assistance?—That is in large boroughs, in some boroughs they do. I am acquainted with the comparatively small borough of Maidstone, and there the Watch Committee practically do everything needed. The borough being a small one, the Police Force is small, the Superintendent of Police was naturally a small man, and the Watch Committee took larger powers and used them.

2588. The Chief Constable or Inspector would object to be taken into detail in every prosecution?—Yes.

2589. (Mr. Crawford.) No committee has any such power in the City.

2590. (Lord Farrer.) I wanted to find out what was the exact line of demarcation between the Commissioner and the Court of Aldermen and the Police Committee as regards the government of the police?—The Police Committee of the Common Council have nothing to do with the government of the police at all, nothing. It would be perhaps convenient here to turn to the statement to see what they do.

2591. Unfortunately there is no page index to this?—There is a page index, but it is not lexicographical, and that you must attribute to the anxious hurry that was put upon us. At page 133 you will find it. It sets out the duties of the Police Committee briefly but thoroughly. Besides appointing the surgeon and receiver they control all the buildings, they look out for land to buy for the stations, and so on; they provide accoutrements, pay pensions, and have certain powers in connexion with the ward rates which are raised under and for the purposes of the act.

2592. Then this committee, which numbers 84 members, has really only to do with the providing of money and paying?—And providing and building police stations, a very important thing in the City where land is valuable and buildings are valuable. It has to do with all these duties that are set out here.

2593. But not with the government of the police?—Nothing to do with the government of the police, which is practically with the Commissioner, subject to confirmation by the Mayor and aldermen as laid down by the City Police Act.

2594. It is the Mayor and aldermen to whom the Commissioner submits his rules for the government of the police?—Yes.

2595. And his rules for the government of the street traffic and keeping order in the City?—Yes, omnibus time-keeping, and so on.

2596. The committee of the Common Council have nothing to do with that?—Have nothing to do with that.

2597. (Mr. Crawford.) And they are eventually submitted to the Home Secretary?—And they are eventually submitted to the Home Secretary.

2598. (Chairman.) Who appoints the Commissioner?—The Court of Common Council.

2599. Can they remove him?—No; they can remove him for malfeasance or misfeasance no doubt, but under ordinary circumstances they cannot remove him.

2600. (Mr. Crawford.) The Court of Aldermen can remove under the City Police Act?—Then only for misfeasance or malfeasance.

2601. (Chairman.) For good cause?—For good cause.

2602. The Common Council elect?—The Common Council elect.

2603. The Court of Aldermen remove for good cause, that is the position?—For good cause.

2604. (Lord Farrer.) These rules and regulations have to be approved by the Home Secretary?—Yes, and his appointment has.

2605. And his appointment too?—Yes.

2606. (Chairman.) The Court of Aldermen appoints committees out of itself?—It does.

2607. And some committees of the whole?—All the committees of the Court of Aldermen are committees of the whole Court.

2608. All?—Yes; there are but four, I think.

2609. Only those four?—Here they are, page 12; the Committee of Privileges, the Committee in relation to Gaols, the Committee for General Purposes, and the Finance Committee.

2610. Those are Standing Committees?—Those are Standing Committees. Special Committees are appointed from time to time as required, but I cannot call to mind any one that has been required, for the General Purposes Committee practically supplies all purposes.

2611. What is the difference between committees of the whole and the Court itself?—I will give you a case in point. Supposing an officer appointed by that Court applied for an increase of salary, the Court would at once refer it to the Committee for General Purposes. The Committee for General Purposes having dealt with it could do no more, unless they had special authority, than report to the Court, and the thing would be brought up and dealt with in open Court.

2612. That means two stages by the same persons?—That means two stages by the same persons, the convenience being that the committee can sit as it does sit in camera and go into matters in detail, have persons before them, and so on, and of course there is a great saving of trouble and often difficulty and labour, because the thing is thoroughly, if needs be, confidentially, threshed out in the committee, but it comes up into the Court in the light of day to be finally adjudicated upon and dealt with.

2613. Does the Court of Aldermen now sit in camera ?—They do not sit, as a rule, in camera, they do so now and then for some purpose or other; there is such a thing as strangers withdrawing; that can be moved; it occasionally happens.

2614. Is there more freedom of discussion in committee of the whole court than in the Court itself?—Obviously so.

2615. Are there different rules?—Do you mean of debate?

2616. Yes?—I think not. Our custom in the Corporation is that the rules of debate that govern the Courts are held to govern the committees. They do not vary much. Now and then a little conversational latitude is allowed, indeed a good deal is allowed at some times, but if it came to a point of order it would be held and is held that the rules of the Court rule the committee. If any one member wished to speak 20 times he would eventually bore them, but there are personal and other matters that cannot be conveniently dealt with in Court that are done in committees.

2617. That is because they are privately held?—The committees, yes.

2618. And the Court of Aldermen is always open to the public?—Yes.

2619. Precisely the same as the Court of Common Council?—Here and there strangers are asked to withdraw when they are to discuss a presentation to the Queen or a presentation to some distinguished person. It is thought more delicate to do that in private—when possibly there may be a divergence of opinion—than to do it in public, and for that reason strangers withdraw, but it is an uncommon thing; it is not a common thing.

2620. The real distinction between the Court of Aldermen and the committee of the whole Court is that in practice the committee of the whole Court sits in private?—Yes.

2621. Whilst the Court of Aldermen sits in public?—Certainly. And the committee has committee powers and the Court has Court powers. The Court has full powers. The committee has only such powers as by the reference are referred to it.

2622. Yes, and both are composed of the same persons?—Oh yes, but you see there is nothing at all in that fact.

2623. (Mr. Crawford.) You are bound to have a certain quorum are you not for a Court of Aldermen?—They are bound to have a certain quorum; they might not be the same persons; 13 or 14 gentlemen in a Court might delegate a matter to a committee, refer it to a committee; that committee might meet the following week and not one of those 13 or 14 gentlemen might be there; five or six others might be there.

2624. (Chairman.) The same elements constitute the two bodies?—The same elements constitute the two bodies; they are members of both Courts. It is very much the same condition of things as prevailed in the late Metropolitan Board of Works, where all their work was done in their General Purposes Committee.

2625. They always resolved themselves into a General Purposes Committee?—Yes.

2626. (The Secretary.) Do you ever have two committees sitting at the same time?—Oh yes.

2627–8. Of the whole?—No. The Court of Aldermen itself, say, meets at one o'clock; the General Purposes Committee always meets at a quarter to one; if a Privilege Committee is wanted for any purpose that is summoned either after or before it, and the Finance Committee always before the Court.

2629. (Mr. Smith.) It is possible for the Court of Aldermen to sit in five different capacities in the same day; as a Court of Aldermen and as each one of those committees?—They can do so but they never do. We very often have a General Purposes Committee or a committee of one kind or another meeting immediately before the Court of Aldermen. The General Purposes Committee is the committee that generally meets a quarter of an hour before the meeting of the Court of Aldermen, to sign a report previously agreed to, so that it may go before the Court.

2630. (Lord Farrer.) Then the Court of Aldermen as a matter of practice does overrule the committee's decision?—No, hardly ever; I have known it done, but hardly ever. Sometimes a small committee would recommend something that the Court as a whole has objected to, but it is very very rare indeed, still it is a possible thing. Even then it is hardly overruled. The usual course with the City Corporation—which I take it, with other bodies, is very much the same,—is to refer it back for further consideration which means to say: "We are not quite satisfied "think it over again."

2631. (Mr. Smith.) You said a small committee what quorum do you require?—Three is a quorum o aldermen.

2632. Of any committee?—Of the aldermen.

2633. (Chairman.) And of the Court itself?—Thirteen; half the Court.

2634. The Court must have that number?—Unless there are 13, the Lord Mayor and 12, or his locum tenens and 12, there is no Court.

2635. (Lord Farrer.) Is the Court of Aldermen a Corporation in itself?—No, I think not; they are an inherent part of the Corporation.

2636. What is the exact relation between the Common Council and the Court of Aldermen with regard to the spending of money; what power of spending money has the Court of Aldermen; have they any such power independently of the Court of Common Council?—Yes, a limited power, but not a general power. The Court of Common Council are the purse-holders of the Corporation, but it has for a long time—in fact, for all time as far as I know, been conceded that in all matters especially within the purview of the Court of Aldermen, such as justice rooms, such as jails before the Prisons Act was passed, and the various other matters that will appear, the Court of Aldermen may draw warrants to pay, but if the Court of Aldermen were to come to a vote on an abstract question; supposing it met and desired to give 1,000*l.* to some public fund, or something of that sort, the Court of Common Council then would naturally raise objection; they would say that is altogether out of your purview and we object. The case has not arisen, but that is what would happen no doubt.

2637. The Court of Aldermen have power to spend money relative to their special duties?—Relative to their special duties and to pension their own officers, at least it was so. There is a general pension scheme now just come in; I am speaking of what has been. If a clerk in the justice room who was their officer retired, it would be for them to consider what his pension should be, and that would be ordered accordingly.

2638. (Mr. Smith.) They would make that order on the Comptroller?—On the Chamberlain.

2639. (Lord Farrer.) Can you give us any idea what the annual expenditure of the Court of Aldermen is independent of the Corporation?—I cannot without reference.

2640. What is it—20,000*l.*?—If I said 5,000*l.* or 25,000*l.* it would be wrong; it is such utter guess work. I have nothing whatever to do with the expenditure department. It is a matter easily ascertainable. When the Chamberlain comes before you or his principal clerk you will get all these facts. I should say certainly not, that was nothing like it.

2641. (Chairman.) I think it may be said that all the evidence that we have been dwelling upon so far

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

of the Court of Aldermen has had reference to police work, or the justices' work, although we are not treating of the aldermen separately as justices?—Yes; I think as far as we have gone.

2642. (Mr. Crawford.) Except the Livery Companies.

2643. (Chairman.) It also appoints, I see, a visiting committee at Newgate?—Yes, that is under the Prisons Act—and at Holloway.

2644. A committee of the same character for the Holloway Prison?—Yes.

2645. What is this function it discharges with reference to Christ's Hospital?—Christ's Hospital—the condition of things at Christ's Hospital, with which your colleague, Mr. Crawford, is very much better acquainted than I am—has very much altered of late, and the new scheme took away from the aldermen the rights they had of annual nominations, and now all that happens is that the Court nominates six aldermen on the council of almoners, and I think I am right in saying that the Lord Mayor is the only person who retains a presentation.

2646. You have said nothing about presentations?—No, I have not gone into that at all.

2647. Simply six almoners?—There are six on the council, and they are just worth what they are worth; I mean if a man was very public spirited and very active he would acquire some influence there, and if not he would not.

2648. You wind up with a statement of the officers appointed by the Court of Aldermen?—Yes.

2649. They are judicial or magisterial?—Yes, their duties are magisterial.

2650. Does the Court of Aldermen appoint the Recorder now without limitation?—They appoint the Recorder municipally, without any limitation of any kind, under the Local Government Act. The approval of the Crown has to be given to enable him to perform judicial functions, but f there were no approval of the Crown he would be the municipal adviser of the Corporation, for what it was worth.

2651. But in order to clothe him in all his functions the Crown must assent?—Yes.

2652. What has the steward of Southwark to do?—Well, not very much, I think, now; it is a small nominal office. He went there last week to receive presentments from one or two manors either for real or alleged nuisances.

2653. (Mr. Crawford.) He presides over a court leet?—Over a court leet; it is an office that has practically died out.

2654. On page 77 you will find it. "The Steward's "Court, or Court Leet, was held on behalf of the "Corporation (as Lords of the Manor), and the "Recorder also acted as judge of the Borough Court "of Record(now fallen into disuse) which was held "for the trial of actions of debt, contract, and trespass "to any amount arising within the limits of the "Borough of Southwark. Courts Leet are still held "as occasion may require?"—Well, the Recorder went last week, I think, with the Secondary to hold one.

2655. (Chairman.) The Corporation is a quasi lord of the manor in Southwark?—Yes.

2656. The Alderman in Bridge Without never had any constituency?—I fancy not; I think not—certainly not in modern times.

2657. Each alderman is a justice?—Each alderman is a justice.

2658. And becomes such by election?—By election as alderman he becomes, de facto, a justice.

2659. By election and confirmation?—Yes.

2660. The Crown has nothing to say to it?—Nothing.

2661. Would there be any process on the part of the Crown depriving him of his authority?—To deprive an individual or to take it away altogether?

2662. To deprive an individual?—I should think—I give my opinion as a very humble one indeed—that the Crown, the Lord Chancellor representing the Crown, might remove an alderman for improper conduct as any other justice.

2663. (Mr. Crawford.) It is under an old charter of 17 Richard II.?—I should presume it. One is under the difficulty of never having known such a thing to be required or done.

2664. (Chairman.) The 17 Richard II. is an Act of Parliament apparently?—An Act of Parliament.

2665. (Mr. Crawford.) It was really a charter confirmed by Parliament?—Under the rules of the Common Council, the alderman would go quâ his office of alderman, and the other would go with it if he became bankrupt or committed fraud and so on; he loses his municipal office of alderman, and the other goes with it.

2666. (Chairman.) Under what provisions is it that he loses his office?—Under the 13th Victoria, chapter 94. It applies to aldermen as well as to common councilmen.

2667. (Lord Farrer.) I think also under the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, section 82, there was a similar provision?—Very likely.

2668. (Chairman.) You are not aware of any person being removed under the provisions of the statute of Richard II.?—I am not.

2669. Nor what the process would be if resort were had to that power?—I do not know; I cannot say. I should have to refer to the law officers to advise.

2670. You do not know whether there is any parallel to this election of justices in any other part of the kingdom?—Persons becoming justices by election?

2671. Yes?—No; not beyond the ordinary privilege for a year or two that attaches to mayors. Of course that is a parallel.

2672. That is not by direct election, is it?—The mayors?

2673. Yes?—No, probably not. No, it is not; of course it is not. They are elected by the Council; it is an election within an election.

2674. And now not necessarily that, since the council can elect a Mayor from outside their own body?—They can do that, I believe, now. I understand that is so.

2675. We heard from Sir David Evans, that the Lord Mayor always sits at the Mansion House during his year of office?—He mostly does; usually presides is the word we use.

2676. Unless he appoints a locum tenens?—He does not want to have a locum tenens for the bench. One magistrate sits for another as a matter of courtesy without any form at all. The locum tenens is required for certain fixed purposes, such as holding Courts, Common Hall, and so on.

2677. At the Guildhall there is a rota?—There is a rota.

2678. How often does each alderman sit?—Well, there are 25 for the year. They sit a week twice a year each, I think.

2679. Do all of them take their turn, or are some incapacitated or relieved from age?—No, there is no one relieved from that cause at all. Every one comes on the rota in due turn. The rotas are printed, and the aldermen accommodate one another, as one did Sir David Evans to-day; it rests with themselves. I think when an alderman is unable to do his work he would retire—Alderman Sidney was a case in point—he was a very hearty old gentleman who lived for some years after he retired; but he felt that he could not quite do all the work that was required, and retired simply on account of old age, though he lived, I should think, eight or ten years longer.

2680. Gave up his gown?—Gave up his gown—retired. Sir Reginald Hanson succeeded him.

2681. He might remain an alderman, and be excused his duties as justice?—He might do so by the courtesy of his fellows. There is no formal excuse. Any alderman may, on account of health, get leave from the Court of Aldermen for three or six months. That has been done; and then it has been provided by the standing orders of the Court that the juniors shall divide his work between them.

2682. (Lord Farrer.) Do they sit together, or one alone?—Alone.

2683. (Chairman.) Each alderman has the power of two ordinary justices?—Yes, that is set out here.

2684. (Lord Farrer.) The division between the Guildhall and the Mansion House is now a north and south division, is it not?—Yes; north and south.

2685. It used to be east and west. Was not King Street once the division?—Well, I do not know. I really do not know. It is so out of my purview—the justices' room work. I have nothing to do with it at all. I only casually know the other thing.

2686. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find it set out on page 16?—Oh, it is here:—"The Petty Sessional "business transacted at the Mansion House Justice "Room includes that which arises to the southward "of a boundary line drawn from Leadenhall Street to "Holborn Viaduct, and the business at Guildhall "embraces that arising in so much of the City as lies "to the northward of that line. It frequently occurs "that a heavy remanded case, or press of business, "requires the attendance of a second alderman at one "or other of the Courts.

2687. (Chairman.) You are of the same opinion as Sir David Evans with respect to the value of these lay justices?—Yes; I think that I, as an old professional man, take rather a stronger view; and it may perhaps not be to everybody's satisfaction that I should state that my opinion of stipendiary magistrates is not a very high one. It seems to me that gentlemen who have not entirely succeeded elsewhere have become stipendiary magistrates. I am speaking of the whole—not of one here and there, one takes the whole of the country, and I do not think so very well of stipendiary magistrates, as I do, as a rule, of unprofessional or lay magistrates, advised by careful and responsible clerks—this is the result of my own experience in the law and out of it.

2689. They are not imposed upon them; they have accepted and voluntarily make payments towards them. The amount of payment is compulsory?—I do not know what the condition of things is, whether they are put upon them or whether they are absolutely bound. I can only suppose it is that men fancy or it is the fact with them that they do not care to give the time to the work. I heard what Sir David Evans said to-day, and I agree with him very much. He did not express it precisely, perhaps, as I should have done, but I do thoroughly go with him that the hope of reward sweetens labour in men's minds. There is among men in the City who go in for corporate life a very large and probably a very just and proper ambition and they do not mind what they sacrifice in the way of time in order to achieve that ambition; they give time and attention; there is a certain emulation between them as to their work in the Justices' Room; they take care to be advised by very excellent clerks; the eye of the public is almost more upon their police cases than those of others, perhaps; they feel that very strongly indeed, and it is a matter of great pride with them to be as careful and as successful as possible. Certainly, whatever the reason may be, there is no doubt that they do give the most unremitting attention to their magisterial duties, and take a great pride in them, and they are active, and they do not do it in the perfunctory way that I take leave to say that I believe the stipendiary magistrates very often do.

2690. (Lord Farrer.) What salary do the City give to their chief clerks in the Guildhall and Mansion House?—Well, the Mansion House is the senior—speaking from memory—I should say that the Mansion House chief clerk begins with 500*l.* or 600*l.* a year, and as time goes on they are raised possibly in the end to 1,000*l.*

2691. Not more than that?—I should think not more.

2692. (Mr. Crawford.) I think Mr. Gresham had 1,200*l.*; Mr. Oke got up to 1,200*l.* I think?—Yes, probably. I am not sure.

2693. (Lord Farrer.) Do you think it would be a good thing to extend the same system, say, to the rest of London, and to put the business of the stipendiary magistrates into the hands—well, I will not say of aldermen of the London County Council, but of justices of the county?—If you could show sufficient inducement to men; because I spoke with the fullest possible intent when I spoke of City ambition just now. I do say that ambition does guide men, and guide their movements. You must show a reason to every man. What I began by saying I repeat: the hope of reward sweetens labour—some reward.

2694. I suppose there is this difference between the City and the rest of London, is there not, that the proportion of commercial cases is larger in the City?—The proportion of offences against property is enormous compared with that against the person. You may go to the Thames Police Court or some of those places—or even those that deal with the purlieus of the Strand, at night,—where drunkenness and assaults prevail. There is very little of that sort of thing in the City at all. There is no doubt that offences against property very much preponderate over offences against the person.

2695. So much smaller per resident population?—That is so; and there is no night population to speak of in the streets—no street attractions and detractions.

2696. (Mr. Crawford.) I am told that the highest salary is 1,000*l.*, and that was paid to Mr. Gresham?—Yes; I thought I was right.

2697. Mr. Oke went up to 900*l.*; Mr. Gresham was the highest—1,000*l.*, and he commenced at 800*l.*?—Yes.

2698. (Lord Farrer.) The principle you speak of would almost apply to county court judges as well; it is very much the same sort of business, some of it?—Yes. You must not draw me into any more personal opinions of an invidious character. There is no one to compete with the county court judges. You have to make county court judges, and to find men to take it. I have known some very poor hands at it in my experience—in my own experience.

2699. (Chairman.) Do you think that the experience of the great municipalities of the country would have been different if their justices had had the power given to the aldermen of the City; that is to say, that they might sit alone?—That is a point that I do not think I am fairly qualified to judge of. I am inclined to think so. I want especially one thing to be borne in mind that did not occur to Sir David Evans—one great point about City aldermen,—and that is the fixity of tenure. An alderman who is appointed for six years, with a pretty fair political possibility of being by the action of circumstances turned out at that time, has not the inducement to trouble himself to become an expert magistrate.

2700. I am not speaking of the aldermen of the great municipalities, because they do not become magistrates by virtue of their office?—I thought you were leading up to that.

2701. Taking things as they are, why does not a Liverpool magistrate, having the same qualifications—to a large extent he must have—of knowledge as a London merchant, as satisfactorily discharge his duties in Liverpool as the London merchant does in the Guildhall?—I gave you a reason just now.

2702. Is it because he is always tied to another man?—If he would give the time to it—if he had a sufficient inducement to give the time, and his mind and attention to it—he would do it as admirably, probably more so, because I think the north countrymen are rather the shrewdest. But he has not that inducement, he has nothing to live up to; he is simply a magistrate and justice of the peace for the rest of his life, and he does not care much. A City alderman is bound by a kind of freemasonry among his fellows, and he means to do his share or go. There is a code of honour between them; and, as I just now said, a reasonable amount of emulation that one shall make as good a magistrate as the other. I know that many of them are very keen indeed on their magisterial work, exceedingly fond of it and like it.

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

2703. There is a limitation on the Court of Aldermen, so that one man gets two weeks in the course of the year?—I think that is what it comes to. There are some men who take more rota, perhaps, not being otherwise very much occupied. A gentleman spoken of just now, Alderman Vaughan Morgan, has a business, a very large and important one, but it is that of a crucible house. It does not take his personal time and attention all day to look after that, I suppose, so as he is very kindly in his care of Christ's Hospital, he is equally very willing to his fellows to take their work, and a man who desires it may do so.

2704. (Lord Farrer.) Do you ever hear that people observe any difference between the way in which different aldermen do their judicial work?—I do not know that I do. I think one does acquire a sort of personal idea that one magistrate may be, for some purposes, keener or better than another. You speak of one as a good magistrate as you speak of a judge in one capacity or another.

2705. Is there any attempt, if there is a very difficult case, to get a specially good man to take it?—Tha I could hardly say. As I said before, it is not at all within my purview. There might be a very heavy case indeed, and if the Lord Mayor could not sit, if I were the clerk to the Court, I would try to get an active brain, an astute man, because men differ so. I think it is not improbable that it would be so; it rather rests with the clerk of the Court to get the Lord Mayor a substitute.

2706. Chairman.) When a heavy case comes on at the Mansion House, and the clerk suggests to the Lord Mayor, "You had better not begin it," the clerk has the pick of the men practically?—I think so. He may suggest to the Lord Mayor that he would ask Mr. Alderman So-and-So, as it is a class of case that needs a good man.

2707. In that way the fittest men get brought forward?—Yes, he may, always remembering that the clerk is always there—and a good and able man as our present clerk is—justice will presumably be done.

2708. (Mr. Smith.) If the City of London were very much larger in area, should you still advocate this system of judicial aldermen?—Yes. If the City of London were larger in area—as to which I may put in here a personally favourable opinion—personally—I am not speaking officially—and the other condition of things remained, I should be very much inclined, without any deep reflection on the subject, to think it would answer well, because I think the same spirit of emulation would prevail.

2709. You know that the great difference between the City of London and other large cities and municipalities is that most of those have extended their boundaries as circumstances required, and from various reasons, which it is not necessary to go into, the City of London has been hide-bound, and has never extended?—Yes.

2710. I am not putting it as a matter of objection, but as a matter of fact—is it not the fact?—that you can spare the time of your aldermen to do judicial work because your municipal work, from your small area, is not so important?—No, I think there, on the face of it, you are wrong, and when you have thoroughly read and digested this book you will say so—the municipal work is really very large, because it is not confined at all to the square mile of the City boundary. It includes port sanitary work, open spaces, markets, extending many miles afield.

2711. I am comparing your work with ours at Birmingham. We have 18 committees; I do not know how many you have?—Well, we have 30 committees.

2712. I wanted to ask you this, whether you thought that you could still spare presumably your best men for judicial work, if your area was extended, say, to something like the area of real London?—I do not think at all. What do you mean by real London? If you mean greater London, I look upon that as such an absolute impossibility that I cannot grasp it.

2713. I do not think we mean the same thing Take the area of the London County Council, which Parliament has fixed upon as a reasonable area at the present time?—If the City wall, say, for the sake of example, were made twice or thrice its size, I do not think the work of the Committees would be one whit increased. I think that the committees have got in them material enough to do at the same stroke the work of the larger area as they have the smaller.

2714. (Lord Farrer.) Including in that the work that is done by the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes. My mind does not run on the Commissioners of Sewers, because I am not personally particularly familiar with it.

2715. (Mr. Smith.) That is the lion's share of the municipal work. They are doing the principal municipal work of the City, as I understand it?—Yes.

2716. They are the urban sanitary authority?—Yes; there is a very large number of them; there is no earthly reason why they should not do it, I think.

2717. What we in the provinces consider as municipal work, you are doing but little of except markets and port sanitary authority within the City?—That is your definition of municipal work.

2718. As defined by the Municipal Corporations Act—the Act that reformed all corporations with the exception of a few in the South of England and the City of London.

2719. (Mr. Crawford.) It was found by the Commissioners to be inapplicable to the City of London.

2720. (Chairman.) I might put it in another way: Do you think that the County Council, charged with the duties it has within the area of its jurisdiction, could afford to have its chairman, deputy chairman, vice-chairman, and several other officers fastened with judicial duties; could they sit as magistrates, and at the same time do their work in connection with the County Council?—I should think they probably conveniently could not. I do not think it would be convenient that the chairmen of all our committees should be acting as magistrates qua chairmen of committees. You see our system, as I should like this Royal Commission to bear in mind, is that every committee of the Corporation elects its chairman for the ensuing year; he must have been at least two years previously on the committee; he must be at least in his third year—he may be in his fourth—and he has the responsibility for the work of the committee. But if he were put to magisterial work it would not be very convenient; and so I should say it would be with the chairman and the vice-chairman and the deputy chairman of the county council. If they were all trying "long-firm" cases they could not be attending to their municipal work. But I do not think that affects the Lord Mayor or aldermen at all.

2721. (Mr. Smith.) I have only one other question. Supposing the same practice were followed in the City that obtains in the whole of the rest of London, namely, stipendiary magistrates, and one stipendiary sat, we will say, at the Mansion House, and the other at the Guildhall, I suppose the aldermen previously sitting would find plenty of other work to do?—The aldermen would.

2722. Yes?—Do you mean municipal work to do?

2723. I mean municipal work?—I do not think they would be wanted particularly. New work would have to be found them, in this sense, that whereas they do attend committees now, but not as chairmen, they might take up—they might come in to a new line of business, if I might use the expression, and compete for chairs and work in that way.

2724. And that would be, in its way, quite as great a reward as sitting as a police magistrate?—Oh, I think not. I think there is a very considerable charm in magisterial work, and it is a give-and-take business,

I think the aldermen like doing it, and I am perfectly sure the wardsmen like their aldermen to do it. I think the two Courts are looked upon with the very highest esteem.

2725. Do you not think it is also a very honourable position to be the chairman of a large committee, having immense functions to discharge in the first City in the world?—Oh, yes; it is a very honourable position to be sergeant of a company, but it is a great deal more honourable position to be captain of the company. The magistrate is a man of higher position surely.

2726. Surely the administrative work of a great committee is much more dignified than the ordinary work of a police magistrate—than trying a few prisoners at first instance?—"Trying a few prisoners"—that sounds like quarter sessions. Not "trying a few prisoners," but trying heavy cases. Magisterial work has an esteem all over the country. We know that men fight for it—compete for it—are at this moment quarrelling because the Lord Chancellor does not take into his own hands to make more magistrates out of a class of men who, with all their Americanised ideas, still do as every good man should, look upward; and every magistrate is not—I do not think the aldermen would feel compensated at all if they had their magisterial powers taken away and they were told they might go and be chairmen if they liked.

2728. But do not many of the aldermen, who are on committees, take a great deal of the work in committee?—A great many of them? They do not take the office of chairman. A literary man will go on the Library Committee, as he would take an interest in the work. They would notify the committees they desired to serve on.

2729. (Mr. Crawford.) Sir David Evans told us he was Chairman of the Special Committee. That entails hard work?—That is an important committee of the Corporation.

2730. The present Lord Mayor is Chairman of the Police Committee?—Yes; that is not very hard work.

2731. (Lord Farrer.) This judicial work of the aldermen is then by far the most important and largest part of their work? They do not take a very large part in the administrative work?—They take a share; that seems hardly—in fact, it is very difficult to understand it; in their ward work they are literally—I suppose Sir David Evans really hardly saw his way to use the word—they are the fathers of their wards, and they identify themselves very very far more with their wards than the aldermen of ordinary country boroughs in my knowledge and experience do, for my father was town clerk of a country borough for a great many years of his life.

2732. (Chairman.) What does that paternal feeling produce?—In what way?

2733. Well, I leave you to explain?—I mean to say that they are really the friendly advisers in the wards in every possible way, and are looked up to. They lead in meetings—they lead in philanthropic work—in their wards very far more than I have ever known done by a specific alderman of a specific ward in the country.

2734. (Mr. Smith.) Pardon me, there are you not making a mistake?—An alderman in an ordinary municipality is not elected for a particular ward—he is elected an alderman of the City; and he is only assigned to a particular ward for the purpose of holding a ward election—that is all?—Well, I suppose that is so. Yes, I think you are right. I think that is so. But still, I like to use the comparison and contrast to show what it is the aldermen are here: that they are literally supposed to be the friend of the ward, and to take the lead in everything, and whatever is going on, whether it be a public matter or semi-public matter, the cry is, "Let us go and see the alderman." The alderman calls the meetings; the alderman rallies the people round him—and so on. The City alderman holds a position that I am sure is not understood elsewhere.

2735. I mean there is no derogation from the duty because it is not a duty to take that paternal interest in the ward that you have described. And an alderman of Birmingham is an alderman of the city of Birmingham—elected whenever a vacancy occurs; then after his election, when he is elected for the city generally, he is by a subsequent resolution assigned to hold ward elections in a particular ward; beyond that he has no connexion with it?—Some have no ward at all. For instance, at Maidstone, there are six aldermen to some four wards.

2736. I was not aware of that. We have a certain number of aldermen by charter, and a certain number of councillors; but the aldermen are not specially delegated to any particular ward, except for the purpose of holding a ward election?—Yes.

2737. (Chairman.) Besides these sittings at the Mansion House and the Guildhall, there are Quarter Sessions in the City?—Yes.

2738. Can you give us some information with respect to them?—I think not. Again I am afraid I must refer you there to the clerk of the justices. I mean I can give you nothing that would be valuable. There are the figures here as to the licences and so on, but I could not confirm them.

2739. There is here a statement that the aldermen who have passed the chair are justices of Southwark?—Yes, that I believe is so.

2740. That appears to be nominal now?—That is quite nominal.

2741. They never exercise any functions in Southwark as justices?—No.

2742. (Mr. Crawford.) It might be as well to correct a statement which appears, I think, in the third return of the London County Council, wherein they say that the justices of Southwark are paid—receive a salary?—We have contradicted that here, you know.

2743. What page is that?—At page 8 of the third return of the London County Council, they say, speaking of the aldermen as justices, "for these "duties they receive a salary." That is not so. The aldermen are not in any way paid.

2744. (Chairman.) Page 77—the last line: "The "aldermen (or justices) receive no emolument what-"ever."

2745. Have you anything special to tell us as to the licensing sessions in the City?—No, I have nothing. As I said just now, I have no sort of official concern with that; so that if I were to say anything it would be of no value.

2746. You do not apprehend that the functions of aldermen in respect of licensing sessions differ very much from the functions of justices of the peace at ordinary petty sessions?—I should be inclined to think not. It is within my knowledge that the aldermen, by deputations of their body, do give the most careful and thoughtful consideration to the licensing question. As I think Sir David Evans was saying only this morning—some of the older aldermen, who have many years experience in it—Sir William Lawrence, Sir James Lawrence, and Sir Andrew Lusk especially—attend a great deal to the work, and I think do it in the most conscientious and straight forward manner.

2747. What official should we call before us for information on those points?—I should think the clerk to the justices, Mr. Youle.

2748. (Mr. Crawford.) You will want two officials, the clerk of the peace for the quarter sessions and the clerk to the licensing justices, in respect of licensing matters. You can also have the clerks from the Mansion House and Guildhall?—Yes.

Sir J. Monckton.

3 Nov. 1893.

2749. (Chairman.) You have peculiar functions within the City as to fire inquests?—Yes; by a recent Act.

2750. And that Act appoints the alderman as the president or chairman?—Well, the condition of things under the Act is that the coroner holds inquests—the coroner for the City holds an inquest on a fire that seems to demand explanation. So recently as within the last week or two, I think, the coroner's jury found that a man had wilfully set his place on fire, and at this very moment the case, I believe, is under remand before one of the aldermen.

2751. The aldermen have nothing to do with the inquest?—No; nothing whatever. The coroner holds the inquiry.

2752. When a charge is made it is brought before an alderman in the regular way?—It is brought before an alderman in the regular way; and no doubt if there had been no inquest it might still have been brought before the alderman in a regular way. But in this particular case the coroner's jury found a fact.

2753. (Mr. Crawford.) If the persons are not present they have to be taken before an alderman; if they are present the verdict of the jury under the Act amounts to an indictment?—The Act of 1888 was the City of London Fire Inquest Act promoted by the City.

2754. (Lord Farrer.) Is that confined to the City?—To the City.

2755. Is there any similar Act outside the City?—I do not know of any.

2756. (Mr. Crawford.) There was one promoted to extend this; that was withdrawn. This is the only Act with relation to fire inquests in the City.

2757. (Lord Farrer.) I ask this question because I remember proposals to have inquiries into fires generally, similar to those held into the losses of ships.

2758. (Mr. Crawford.) The reason of it was that the Corporation held to the idea that the coroner still had his ancient jurisdiction to hold an inquest. There seems to have been a point taken by the late Chief Justice Cockburn, and to remedy the difficulty this Bill was prepared; it was passed into an Act; and, under section 6, the jury have the power to find a verdict of arson, which amounts to an indictment; and if the party or parties incriminated are present they can be immediately committed and tried upon that indictment.

2759. (Mr. Smith.) Has he the power of holding an inquest without a body.

2760. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes, certainly. If the party or parties are not present then they are bound to be taken by the police before an alderman, and the inquiry is held.

2761. (Lord Farrer.) Does that take place in the case of every fire in the City?

2762. (Mr. Crawford.) It takes place where the coroner thinks it necessary, or where the Lord Mayor, or the Lord Chief Justice, or the Home Secretary directs an inquiry to be held. Every fire has to be reported upon to the coroner by the Commissioner of Police and by the head of the Fire Brigade, and if he considers it necessary he holds an inquiry, or the Lord Chief Justice, or the Lord Mayor, or the Home Secretary can direct an inquiry.

2763. (Chairman.) The reference to an alderman would be nothing more than a reference in other cases would be to two justices in petty sessions?—Yes.

2764. (Lord Farrer.) Only this case of an inquest makes it more likely that the case will be looked into?

2765. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

2766. (Chairman.) Each alderman is said here to have the rule and government of his ward?—Yes.

2767. That is a large phrase?—It is a large phrase, yes. That rather illustrates what I said just now, that he is the "Father of the Ward." He summons the wardmote in obedience to the Mayor's precept, who elect in respect of offices vacant to be elected, common councillors and so on.

2768. Has the wardmote any other business than that of filling up casual vacancies?—Well, I have got the wardmote book here. The precept which is issued by the Mayor to the aldermen, ordering him to get his wardmote together, says what he is to do—he is to cause so many men to be common councillors for the year ensuing——

2769. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the St. Thomas's Day precept?—Yes; I am speaking of the wardmote days.

2770. I think the Chairman was asking whether a wardmote can be held for other purposes besides the election of officers?—Well, here he is told at that time to elect his common councillors, a beadle, keep a roll of the persons——

2771. (Lord Farrer.) A beadle; who are the beadles?—The beadles are elected. A ward beadle is a ward officer.

2772. What has he to do?—Summon the people, and generally act as the alderman's right-hand man, not in the way of advising, like the ward clerk, but to perform the ordinary functions of a beadle in attendance on the alderman: he is their anciently accustomed ward officer. Then they have to see as to the public-houses also: "that no person keep any public-"house within your ward which is not licensed, and "that the publicans observe all the laws now in "force for the regulation and good government of the "several public-houses."

2773. (Chairman.) That is the alderman's duty?—That is the duty of the alderman as the head of the ward; and it is to be done by the ward—it is part of the duties of the wardmote.

2774. Part of the duties of the ward; but has the wardmote anything to do with public-houses?—Not the wardmote. That is the alderman's duty, that part of it.

2775. I want to know what the wardmote has to do—the assembly of citizens within the ward—other than that of electing the common councilmen beadle, and alderman?—It may be assembled for all purposes for which citizens meet at any time. There are no legal requirements of them, that I am at the moment aware of; but they meet in wardmote, and have done so for all time for all purposes that inhabitants or citizens do meet for. It is their mode of meeting.

2776. They could vote an address of congratulation or an address of condolence to the Queen?—They might do that.

2777. Can they institute any work within the ward?—There is no reason why they should not do that at all. If they anticipate times of danger or difficulty they might do; and the wardmote is the alderman's mode of getting them together.

2778. And levy a rate for the purpose?—No; certainly not.

2779. What would it be?—A voluntary meeting, with voluntary results.

2780. Have they any coercive legal power?—None.

2781. (Mr. Crawford.) They could resolve at a wardmote, could they not, to direct action to be taken in connection with a particular Bill which was in Parliament, and which might affect them?—They might pass resolutions, say, like all meetings of townsmen or citizens.

2782. But apart from resolutions, could not they go further, and direct action to be taken by the ward clerk in connection with the ward in opposition to a particular measure.

2783. (Lord Farrer.) Could they order the spending of money?—That is a point that occurred to me. I am not aware of any money they could spend. They might direct the ward clerk to send a resolution.

2784. (Mr. Crawford.) I am only speaking now as a former ward clerk. I remember it was one of my duties to oppose a Bill of the South-Eastern Railway in Parliament, on behalf of the wardmote, and the expense of doing so came out of the ward expenses.

2785. (Lord Farrer.) As a matter of fact, do they do anything of the kind?—As a matter of fact, they do not.

2786. (Mr. Crawford.) They pass resolutions and forward them to the Court of Common Council?—On St. Thomas's Day they do frequently pass a large number of resolutions on the questions of the day.

2787. (Chairman.) Votes of thanks?—More than that; strong resolutions upon points of public interest. I remember once there was a very strong feeling indeed about trading stores; and I think they passed strong resolutions upon that—the Civil Service Stores, I mean—as the Common Hall have done.

2788. (Mr. Smith.) What funds have they out of which —— ?—They have themselves, qua wardmote, no funds. I am not exactly aware of what the solicitor is speaking at this moment—out of the ward funds.

2789. I was anxious to see how he was remunerated?

2790. (Mr. Crawford.) You may take it I was, Mr. Smith.

2791. (Mr. Smith.) I suppose you were?—You had a liberal alderman, perhaps.

2792. (Mr. Crawford.) In section 85 of the City Police Act of 1839 you will find: "And whereas "there are various charges of ward clerks and beadles "and other expenses connected with the holding of "wardmotes or other ward meetings, and for other "local purposes connected therewith, within the "several wards of the said city, which have heretofore "been paid out of the Watch rate: Be it therefore "enacted that all the reasonable charges and expenses "of each of the several wards of the said City, in "respect of the several matters aforesaid, to be from "time to time approved and allowed by the inhabi-"tants of each such ward in wardmotes assembled, "and certified to the said committee by the alderman, "deputy, and common councilmen of each ward, or "the major part of them, shall be paid by the said "committee out of the rates to be made by virtue of "this Act." So that you will see the words there, "or other local purposes connected therewith": and the opposition to this particular measure was construed by us to be a "local purpose," and I was paid out of that particular rate, I remember.*

2794. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

2795. (Chairman.) An alderman has a deputy—in some cases two deputies?—Yes; where there are two sides of a ward, two deputies.

2796. And they can take his place on all occasions except, of course, the annual elections, when they cease to be in office?—When they cease to be in office. That is so.

2797. Now, the aldermen are allotted to serve on the committee of the Common Council?—Yes. The Common Council consists of the Lord Mayor, the aldermen, and commoners. They form the Court of Common Council. Nearly all the committees are ward committees, and it means that they consist of a commoner from every ward, or side of a ward. That is 29, commoners and six aldermen are allotted to a ward committee by an old arrangement, and the aldermen settle among themselves at the commencement of the year what committees they will go on, mostly subject to the rule that they will serve for four years upon it. So that there are six aldermen and 29 commoners, and the late chairman, making together 36 members on each ward committee, of which there are 23 or 24, I think.

2798. What are the duties of the ward committee?—They are committees—we call them ward committees in contradistinction to special committees. A special committee may have 10, 12, or 15, members. But when a special committee is going to be appointed for any special purpose not previously required the Court say whether it is to be a ward committee, which means a committee representing each ward.

2799. (Lord Farrer.) To go back to the previous paragraph, does the wardmote make the ward rate—do they formally make it?—No; the common councillors of the ward, as I understand it; that is so, I think, Mr. Crawford?

2800. (Mr. Crawford.) The Police Committee. It is certified by the alderman deputy and major part of the common councillors of each ward.

2801. (Chairman.) Thirteen are necessary to constitute a committee of the Court of Aldermen; there must be two aldermen besides the Lord Mayor at every meeting of the Common Council?—The Lord Mayor and two aldermen and enough to make up 40.

2802. Perhaps you ought to tell us something about the aldermen and the Irish Society?—It is merely casually said here the aldermen have to do with it. But you will find it afterwards.

2803. They are trustees to several things—aldermen?—Yes.

2804. They have been selected from time to time. I see they are said to be trustees of Morden College?—Yes.

2805. Are they the sole trustees there?—Oh, no, I think not. I do not know who the other trustees are.

2806. (Mr. Crawford.) If you turn to page 309, it is fully stated. In future the aldermen will be the trustees?—They will be in the end, but they are not now. It is all set out there very fully.

2807. It is under Sir John Morden's will?—Turkey merchants have and the East India Company had certain representatives; they having failed, all future trustees must be taken from the Court of Aldermen or rather the aldermen of the City.

2808. (Mr. Smith.) By survival, as it were?

2809. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

2810. (Chairman.) There are seven trustees, apparently?—Yes.

2811. It is not quite correct to say that they are trustees of Morden College?

2812. (Mr. Crawford.) Not the whole of them as a body—no.

2813. (Chairman.) In point of fact, they will in future supply seven, and the seven will ultimately be trustees of the Morden College?—Yes.

2814. (Mr. Crawford.) At present two are?—Yes.

2815. (Chairman.) Apparently the Lord Mayor and aldermen have elected an alderman to be an additional trustee of Sir John Soane's Museum?—That is so.

2816. I suppose that was Sir John's own settlement? Was that an Act of Parliament?—Oh, an Act of Parliament, 3 William IV. Sir Robert Carden was the last; when he died Sir William Lawrence was elected.

2817. They are the Governors of Emmanuel Hospital under Lady Dacre's will and charter?—Yes; you will find that, at page 302, fully set out—the whole history of it.

2818. All these are cases in which the aldermen have been used as a body from which a certain number could be taken to act as trustees in public matters?—Yes. Just as a certain number of reputable people as the Prime Minister and other Ministers are made trustees in various cases—the British Museum and so on.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD OFFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Sir JOHN MONCKTON, Town Clerk of the City of London, called in and further examined.

Sir J. Monckton.

10 Nov. 1893.

2819. (Sir John Monckton.) Before resuming my evidence, Mr. Chairman, I desire respectfully to make a communication to the Royal Commission, if I have permission to do so. Having regard to what transpired last Friday, when the Corporation's protest was under discussion, I deemed it to be my duty to report to the Special Committee what I gathered to be the opinion of some, at least, of the Royal Commissioners as to the nature and the extent of the inquiry entrusted to them by the terms of the Commission. While possibly unavoidable, it was unfortunate from the absence of a transcript of the shorthand notes that I could not quote what actually transpired, but had to depend upon the accuracy of my memory. This I did to the best of my ability, and in the result the following resolution was passed by the Special Committee:—"Wednesday, 8th November 1893. "RESOLVED, That the Town Clerk having reported "the result of his examination before the Commission "on Friday last, he be instructed on the resumption "of his evidence on Friday next to state that if the "Commissioners consider that the terms of the "Commission are definite, as settling the principle of "amalgamation, and that the presence of the repre-"sentatives of the Corporation is interpreted as giving "any assent thereto, this Committee will not feel "justified in tendering any further evidence until "they have brought the circumstances before the "Court of Common Council for its decision thereon."

2819*a*. (Chairman.) Then you are in a state of uncertainty as to whether you are to go on?—Precisely, that is what it comes to, Mr. Chairman.

2820. I think, in that case, you had better retire?—I thought it probable that we should have to do so for a short time.

[The room was cleared and the Commissioners deliberated. At the conclusion of their deliberations Sir John Monckton was recalled.]

2821. (Chairman.) Our secretary will read out to you the reply which we propose to make.

2822. (The Secretary.) "In reference to the "resolution of the Special Committee, the Commis-"sioners have to say that the presence of the repre-"sentatives of the Corporation before them is not "interpreted as giving any assent to the principle of "amalgamation. The Commissioners think that this "answer will probably be sufficient to enable the "Special Committee to proceed without an authori-"tative interpretation of the terms of the Commis-"sion?"—May I take that out for a few minutes to Sir David Evans?

2823. (The Secretary.) I will give you a copy.—Yes.

After retiring for a short time, witness returned and said:—The result of our deliberation is as follows, Mr. Chairman, which I hand in. "The Chairman of "the Special Committee and I have very carefully "considered the position, and with great respect "desire before proceeding further with our evidence "to have the opportunity of conferring with those to "whom we look for instructions." And I was about to say that that opportunity will not be very long delayed. There is a Court of Common Council on Thursday, and the Chairman will call the Special Committee meanwhile, so that if it pleases you to fix Friday next—— 2824. You cannot appear before Friday?—Well, we cannot very well. It is a somewhat peculiar time of the year, and next Thursday is fixed for the first Court of the new mayoralty. There will be very great inconvenience in calling a special court unless it were absolutely vital that it should be done. Of course, that should then override all.

2825. It is rather inconvenient for our country members to come up for one day in the week; that is the difficulty, we like to have two consecutive days?—I trust, perhaps, at this juncture you will allow it to be so, and afterwards we must avoid any thoughts of Common Council or anything else. It is rather a particular matter to be considered, and we will have to get a committee meeting first.

2826. I am afraid we cannot coerce you, even if we had the desire?—Well, we use the words "with great respect" absolutely with meaning, because we do desire to be respectful and as useful as we can. You will appreciate, of course, the little difficulty we are in.

2827. You cannot go beyond your authority?—I hand that to your secretary.

2828. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any objection to this book of Observations as to the Result of the Royal Commission, 1853–4, being distributed?—I was going to speak about that; I am very glad you have mentioned it, Lord Farrer. I was asked for copies, and my answer was that, for the moment, it was a document that belonged more to the Royal Commissioners than to us. If you say that you would like it to be given here and there we will not object to go to the expense of printing sufficient copies. It really is put into print for convenience sake. It is the answer you asked to be supplied with, it might have been supplied in writing, when there might not have been any copies.

2829. Then we might have printed it, but as you have got it in print ——?—Very well, if you give an instruction on the matter as to your wishes—at any rate, hardly an instruction, but signify your wishes—we shall have a limited number of them printed; I suppose we shall have some 50 altogether probably.

2830. I think it is an interesting document?—Yes.

2831. And there is nothing in it that seems to be confidential?—If the Royal Commission say that, not only personally have we no objection, but rather with a view of facilitating the inquiry it will be done.

2832. I think it would facilitate the inquiry.

2833. (Chairman.) We have no objection; I do not know that we can express a desire that it should be circulated.

2834. (Lord Farrer.) My request is that the members of the London County Council may have some copies?—Yes, they wanted some copies. I did intend to ask what your views were upon that.

2835. (Mr. Crawford.) I suppose the Commissioners could express the opinion that they could see no objection to the London County Council having 12 copies if the Corporation will supply them?

2836. (Chairman.) That is what I was going to say, that we, as Commissioners, see no objection to your complying with their requests?—Really it was in the position of a written document, so to speak. Sir J. Monckton. 10 Nov. 1893.

2837. Then we shall hope to see you next Friday?—If you please, sir.

The witness withdrew.

EIGHTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 17th November 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Sir DAVID EVANS, K.C.M.G., an Alderman, and Sir JOHN MONCKTON, Town Clerk of the City of London, called in and further examined. Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G., and Sir J. Monckton. 17 Nov. 1893.

2838. (Sir John Monckton.) Will it be convenient, Mr. Chairman, if I state what took place in the Court of Common Council yesterday?

2838*a*. (Chairman.) We are, of course, awaiting the result of the action you took. You retired in order to get instructions, I understand?—That was so; yes. I can either state in detail what occurred or give the result of what did take place.

2839. We are more concerned with the result than with the details?—I have here the report of one—the Commission will——

2840. (Lord Farrer.) Might I ask whether we may accept as tolerably accurate the report in the morning papers of what passed?—As regards the "Times," "Standard," and "Chronicle," I think, yes. Then it might be sufficient without going into the details of the report of the special committee, which was laid before the court yesterday, if I read and hand in, if you will allow me to do so, the order of the court, which is a short document.

2841. (Chairman.) Are you furnished with the minutes of the proceedings of yesterday?—Yes.

2842. I mean, have you got a shorthand-writer's note of what took place?—Of what conversation took place yesterday?

2843. Yes?—No.

2844. We cannot go into those details then. We are not concerned with them. We could not criticise your action in the terms of your report to your council, or the deliberations of your council. We are only concerned with the result at which you arrived?—Then I think it will be sufficient if I read the result, and the result is contained in this paper, which, after I read it, I will, if you please, hand in.

"A COMMON COUNCIL holden in the CHAMBER of the GUILDHALL of the CITY of LONDON.

"TYLER, Mayor,
On Thursday the 16th day of November 1893.

"The Special Committee did this day deliver into this Court a report in writing under their hands of their proceedings, and under the circumstances therein stated, as regards the present position of the inquiry before the Royal Commission, submitting the following resolution for adoption by the Court, viz.:—'The 'Corporation, whilst ready and anxious to continue 'to tender evidence, can only proceed upon the 'assumption and an assurance that the Royal Com- 'mission will be ready to hear evidence when 'tendered upon the question of desirability, as well as 'of the convenient practicability of an amalgamation 'of the city and county of London,' which was read. And a motion being made and question put that this court doth agree with the committee in their said report, the same was resolved in the affirmative, and it is ordered accordingly."

2845. (Mr. Crawford.) In the resolution I notice the words "under the circumstances therein set forth." Would it not be a convenience to the Commissioners if you were to state what those circumstances were?—The statement of those circumstances is contained in that report which I have brought here for the purpose of reading—the original report—to the Commission, if they will be pleased to have it.

2846. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the position is this: The Court of Common Council has come to a certain resolution on certain facts placed before that court by the Special Committee. The resolution which is handed to us officially by the town clerk refers to the fact, but it is not set out in detail, so that the Commissioners, except from what they may have read in the public press, are absolutely in the dark as to what has occurred—as to what are the circumstances which have led to the passing of this resolution. I should have thought that it would have been better for the Commissioners, seeing that the town clerk is here to give them the information, that the report itself—it is now public property—should be put before the Commissioners, in order that the Commissioners may be fully aware of what were the circumstances which led to the passing of such a resolution.

2847. (Chairman.) We shall have to debate that in private, but you may leave the report informally upon the table.

[The room was cleared and the Commissioners deliberated. At the conclusion of their deliberations Sir John Monckton and Sir David Evans were recalled.]

2956. (Chairman.) The secretary will read the answer we propose to make in reference to the resolution conveyed to us. [The secretary read the answer as follows]:—"In reference to the suggestion made "by the town clerk that the report in writing of the "special committee laid before the Common Council, "before the passing of the resolution, which has "been handed in, should be received with the reso- "lution, the Commissioners have to say that, in their

Sir D. Evans, K.C.M.G., and Sir J. Monckton.

17 Nov. 1893.

" judgment, it would be inconvenient and undesirable " to receive the report, to which no reference is made " in the resolution of the Common Council, which " resolution appears to be complete in itself. As " regards the resolution of the Corporation, the Com- " missioners would refer to the duties imposed upon " them by Her Majesty to consider the proper con- " ditions under which the amalgamation of the City " and County of London can be effected, and to make " specific and practical proposals for that purpose, " and in view of their instructions the Commissioners " feel themselves unable to give any assurance that " they would be ready to hear evidence when tendered " upon the question of 'desirability' of an amalga- " mation of the City and County of London. Whilst " thus unable to give the assurance referred to in the " resolution, the Commissioners would observe that " they have not been rigid, nor is it probable that they " would be rigid in the future, in their interpretation " of the limits of questions pointing to the convenient " practicability of amalgamation. The Commissioners " cannot conclude their communication without ex- " pressing their grave regret that the Corporation " should hesitate to proceed in co-operating with them " in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them, " and they would still hope to receive their assistance."

2957. (Chairman.) You will, of course, require to take that with you?

2958. (Sir John Monckton.) If I may do so.

2959. (Chairman.) The whole purport of it I may sum up at once, briefly. It deals, first of all, with this paper, which you proposed to put in, and which the Commissioners think it inconvenient that we should examine into, the resolution of the Corporation being complete in itself.

2960. (Sir John Monckton.) Then I do not think there is more to be said upon that.

2961. (Chairman.) And then, with respect to the report, we referred to the terms of our Commission. And in view of those terms we feel ourselves unable to give the assurance; but we say that, as a matter of fact, we have not been very rigid, and we do not expect to be very rigid in defining the limit of questions touching practicability. We are very sorry that there should be any hesitation on the part of the Corporation, and we still hope that you will be able to co-operate with us. Without your assistance our path would be made very dark, and our labours would be very imperfectly performed, and we certainly hope to be able to receive you here again. You will have to consult, of course, the Common Council, on the subject once more?

2962. (Sir John Monckton.) We must do so.

2963. (Chairman.) They, having passed this resolution, before taking any further action you will require a further resolution. May we express the hope that the Lord Mayor will see his way to convening a special meeting of the Court of Common Council so that their decision may be known before we meet again?

2964. (Sir John Monckton.) I am quite certain his lordship will do that.

2965. (Sir David Evans.) I have no doubt the Lord Mayor will call a meeting, and that he will be glad to do so.

2966. (Chairman.) As it is very inconvenient, especially to country members of the Commission, to come up to town for only one day. So that if when we meet again we could see you we should be very glad.

2967. (Sir John Monckton.) I have no doubt the Lord Mayor will call a very early court, as the matter is one of considerable importance. As you very properly say, in reference to the instructions we brought, it is impossible to come to any personal decision without consulting the court. I will see the Lord Mayor, without any delay, in reference to the matter. I would express the hope that, whatever happens, this book will be of considerable value to the members of the Royal Commission.

2968. (Lord Farrer.) It will be still more valuable if we get your assistance.

Adjourned till Thursday the 23rd instant.

NINTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 23rd November 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Sir JOHN MONCKTON, Town Clerk of the City of London, called in and further examined.

Sir J. Monckton.

23 Nov. 1893.

2969. (Sir John Monckton.) I desire, Mr. Chairman, to commence the proceedings, if I may use the expression, with a ray of sunshine, by asking the Commissioners to accept the promised index for the Statement which has been prepared.

2970. (Chairman.) We are very glad to receive it.

2971. (Sir John Monckton.) It will be found that it is lexicographical and more convenient. On the last occasion when I was here, Sir, the Commissioners expressed a desire that their then communications should be conveyed to the Court of Common Council with as little delay as possible, and I represented the facts to the Lord Mayor, who called a special Court, which was held yesterday, succeeding a meeting of the Special Committee, for the purpose of considering the resolution, and in obedience to a specific direction given to me by the Court of Common Council. I will now proceed to read in extenso a report agreed to in a very full Court with only one dissentient. After the usual preamble the report which was adopted by the Court was as follows, to go somewhat into detail, but it is necessary for the understanding of the whole, that the whole should be taken:—

" We do certify, that having received by the hand of the Town Clerk a communication prepared by the Royal Commissioners in reply to the Resolution passed by your Honourable Court on the 16th day of November instant, which communication is in the following words:—

" 'As regards the Resolution of the Corporation, the Commissioners would refer to the duties imposed upon them by Her Majesty to consider the proper conditions under which the amalgamation of the City and County of London can be effected, and to make specific and practical proposals for that purpose; and in view of these instructions the Commissioners feel themselves unable to give any assurance that they would be ready to hear evidence when tendered upon the question of desirability of an amalgamation of the City and County of London.

" 'Whilst thus unable to give the assurance referred to in the Resolution, the Commissioners would observe that they have not been rigid, nor is it probable that they would be rigid in the future, in their interpretation of the limits of questions pointing to the convenient practicability of amalgamation.

" 'The Commissioners cannot conclude this communication without expressing their grave regret that the Corporation should hesitate to proceed in co-operating with them in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them, and they would still hope to receive their assistance.'

" We have fully and anxiously considered the same, and having regard to the extreme importance of the whole question, as one affecting not merely the interests of the City but of the whole metropolis, have been advised thereon, and on the position generally, by the Law Officers, together with the Chamberlain and the Town Clerk, and we have made special reference to the letter of the Town Clerk to the Secretary of the Royal Commission, written by our direction on the 30th day of May last, in the following terms:—

" 'Guildhall, E.C.,

" 'SIR, 30th May 1893.

" 'IN further reply to your communication of the 5th instant, I am directed to say that the Committee in charge of the subject-matter to which it relates are fully sensible of the courtesy of the Royal Commission, in expressing its willingness to receive any evidence, oral or documentary, the Lord Mayor and Corporation might wish to lay before it.

" 'The Corporation will be quite ready to furnish the Royal Commission with any information it may desire, and which may be within the knowledge of the Corporation's representatives, on receiving timely intimation of the wishes of the Commissioners, but it is impossible at the present stage of the pending inquiry to indicate the 'evidence' which the Corporation may deem it desirable to tender to the Commissioners, inasmuch as the Corporation is at present unaware of the extent of the inquiry, or of the views of the London County Council, who, it is understood, have been also invited to tender evidence, and at whose instance Her Majesty's Government have advised Her Majesty to issue the Commission, without any previous reference to or communication with the Corporation, the older body, and the one, therefore, in every sense most directly and materially concerned.

" 'The Corporation, with confidence, assumes that the Royal Commissioners will necessarily see the reasonableness and recognise the necessity for its being made acquainted with the general idea and scope of the proposed Amalgamation before being expected or called upon to submit its views as to such proposal.

" 'I am, therefore, respectfully to suggest, for the consideration of the Royal Commission, that the City, as represented by the Corporation, might not unfitly wait until evidence has been adduced by the London County Council (if evidence is proposed to be adduced), and be thus guided in limiting its own evidence to that which is pertinent and appropriate.

" 'This course the committee feel will both be respectful to the Royal Commission, and in every sense bring about a great saving of time and labour.

" 'I am, Sir,

" 'Your obedient servant,

" 'JOHN B. MONCKTON.

" 'To the Secretary, the Royal Commission, &c.,

" '30, Abingdon Street, Westminster, S.W.'

" and the reply thereto of the 9th day of June last in " the following terms:—

" 'Royal Commission on the Amalgamation of the City and County of London,

" '30, Abingdon Street, S.W.,

" 'SIR, 9th June 1893.

" 'I AM desired by the Chairman to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that the Corporation will be happy to afford the Commission any information within their power; but that they desire to defer indicating the evidence which they may deem it desirable to tender before the Commission until they are further acquainted with the extent of the Inquiry, and with the views of the London County Council.

" 'While thanking the Lord Mayor and Corporation for their courtesy, I am, at the same time, to request that you will inform them that in response to a letter from the Commission of the 5th ultimo, inviting them to give evidence before the Commission, the London County Council have promised to furnish them at an early date with, inter alia, a full statement of the Council's present position, powers, and duties over the metropolis, and of their revenue and expenditure.

" 'It would materially assist the Commission in the prosecution of their labours if they could have before them a similar statement as regards the position, powers, duties, and finance of the Corporation of the City of London, and I am accordingly to express the hope of my Commissioners, that the Lord Mayor and Corporation will, as a preliminary, favour them with such information as they may be able to given upon these subjects.

" 'I am, Sir,

" 'Your obedient servant,

To the Town Clerk, " 'G. GLEADOWE,
Guildhall, E.C. " 'Secretary.' "

I lay special stress upon the word " preliminary," because a great deal turns upon that. It has been stated that the Corporation have made a change of front by accepting a situation at the outset, which they are now desirous of retiring from.

2972. (Chairman.) You are not now reading?

2973. (Sir John Monckton.) No, Mr. Chairman, not the remarks which are being taken. Great stress now is laid upon that, because it is very strongly urged in certain quarters that the Corporation are—in fact, even a member of the Corporation himself yesterday said so; one who is not in accord entirely with the majority of that body—that the Corporation are making a change of front by accepting the situation, or apparently accepting the situation at the outset, and putting in their statement in accordance with the invitation of the Commission, and are now desirous of retiring from that position. Hence, I draw special attention, as the Corporation desires me to do, to this word " preliminary " used in the sentence that I have just now read—" That the " Lord Mayor and Corporation will, as a preliminary, " favour them with such information as they may be " able to give upon these subjects." Then the Report proceeds: " And we are of opinion that the " difficulties of the case will at the present juncture " best be met by the adoption by your Honourable " Court of this Resolution. That the Town Clerk be " instructed to lay before the Royal Commission this " our unanimous Report embodying (inter alia) the " following:—The Corporation can only interpret " the expression of inability of the Royal Commis- " sioners to give an assurance that they would be " ready to hear evidence, when tendered, upon the " question of the desirability of the amalgamation " of the City and County of London to be a " final ruling that in their opinion the terms of " the Commission, ambiguous as they admittedly " are, definitively settle the principle of such amalga- " mation as something already resolved upon. As " the Corporation regards such a ruling as tantamount " to a judgment in favour of amalgamation before " the Corporation has the opportunity to place before

Sir J. Monckton.

23 Nov. 1893.

"the Royal Commission its views and arguments "upon so important and momentous a question, the "Corporation feels that it would be only wasting "time if it proceeded further in the tender of evidence "on the question of desirability, which the Royal "Commissioners evidently are of opinion is not at "the present time open for discussion. Although itself "powerless at the present stage to remedy such a "conclusion, which it sincerely regrets, the Corpo- "ration respectfully suggests (as a modus vivendi "which it is most anxious to arrive at, in order that "its desired co-operation may still be given) that it "is open to the Royal Commissioners themselves to "seek and probably find a remedy by making humble "application to Her Majesty to extend the limit of "the inquiry entrusted to them, and the Corporation "would further respectfully ask that the term "'amalgamation' may be clearly defined in the "interests of all concerned in the Inquiry. All "which we submit to the judgment of this honour- "able Court." That report, now, Mr. Chairman, seems, in the views at any rate of the Corporation, to sum up the matter as it stands. I was desired to have this lithographed, and I have done so, in order that the Commissioners may have these copies with them for more convenient reference. The only further remarks I have to make—if I may make them——

2974. (Chairman.) Perhaps you would tell us what action was taken upon this?

2975. (Sir John Monckton.) Yes, I have at the beginning, by saying—but I will repeat it—that was adopted by a very full Court, the fullest Court I think I ever saw in the Guildhall, with one dissentient. The Corporation have never objected, and do not now object, to take part in the consideration of the conditions under which a general system may be established for the municipal government of the metropolis, and to assist the Commissioners in making specific and practical propositions for the purpose. But they do object, and I say it, of course, with all due respect to this Royal Commission, and the Supreme Authority from which it emanates, to take part in what appears to them a one-sided discretion which, so far as they are concerned, simply has one alternative.

2976. (Chairman.) Is that the end of your remarks? Is that all you have to say?

2977. (Sir John Monckton.) I think that for the moment is all that I have to say.

2978. (Chairman.) Well, I think I may say at once that we are greatly disappointed, and regret the answer we have received. Perhaps, if you will retire for a few minutes, we will communicate to you an official reply.

2979. (Lord Farrer.) I want to ask you with respect to one paragraph in this paper, what the exact meaning of it is?—The paragraph is—"The "Corporation can only interpret the expression of "inability of the Royal Commissioners to give an "assurance that they would be ready to hear evi- "dence, when tendered, upon the question of the "desirability of the amalgamation of the City and "County of London to be a final ruling that in their "opinion the terms of the Commission"—now, these are the words I want to call attention to—"am- "biguous as they admittedly are, definitively settle the "principle of such amalgamation as something "already resolved upon." I want to ask you if you can tell us what is the meaning of these words— "ambiguous as they admittedly are"—admitted by whom?

2980. (Sir John Monckton.) Well, I think at the very outset the remark made, if I may respectfully say so, by the Chairman himself, to begin with——

2981. (Lord Farrer.) Can you point to any statement from the Commission to that effect?

2982. (Sir John Monckton.) Not an official statement.

2983. (Lord Farrer.) Or any admission of ambiguity on this particular point.

2984. (Sir John Monckton.) I think it is the general opinion, that is, outside. It is my personal belief, and it certainly is the belief of all those for whom I am at this moment speaking, that there was an ambiguity at the outset. I do not know whether you have got a copy of the "London Gazette" here, have you? If I had a copy of the "London Gazette"——

2985. (Lord Farrer.) The question I ask is not whether there is an ambiguity, but whether it has been admitted that there is an ambiguity, and by whom?

2986. (Sir John Monckton.) Well, by myself for one undoubtedly, and by those with whom I act.

2987. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so. But by anyone else?

2988. (Sir John Monckton.) I do again, and I do so with great respect, refer to the Chairman, who at the outset was struck with the vagueness of the Reference to the Commission.

2989. (Lord Farrer.) Did he ever admit that there was any ambiguity on this particular point?

2990. (Sir John Monckton.) On the Reference generally.

2991. (Lord Farrer.) No; did he ever admit that there was any ambiguity on the question whether——

2992. (Sir John Monckton.) No, I speak there of the terms of the Commission when I say "ambiguous as they admittedly are."

2993. (Mr. Crawford.) It only applies to that—the terms of the Commission.

2994. (Lord Farrer.) Yes; but I want to know upon what point you state they are ambiguous.

2995. (Sir John Monckton.) If you give me the "London Gazette"—you were about to lend it me, Mr. Crawford—I will tell you. In the first place, —I do not want to travel over the ground again— the Corporation for some time were absolutely misled by the grammatical difference in words; that is one thing.

2996. (Lord Farrer.) In spite of Mr. Fowler's answer to Mr. Benn in the House?

2997. (Sir John Monckton.) I am speaking of the correspondence as set out in the statement.

2998. (Mr. Crawford.) At a later period—after the answer in the House.

2999. (Sir John Monckton.) Very well. The very "Gazette" itself contained ambiguity in the first page of the "Gazette." The Commission then sets out certain words in the second page—this is a small matter, perhaps—— 3000. (Chairman.) You had better read, Sir John Monckton, we are not so pressed for time.

3001. (Sir John Monckton.) "Whereas we have "deemed it expedient that a Commission should "forthwith issue to consider the proper conditions "under which the amalgamation of the City and the "County of London can be effected, and to make "specific and practical proposals for that purpose." On the second page I see "The Queen has been "pleased to appoint a gentleman named to be secre- "tary to the Royal Commission on the proposed "amalgamation of the City and the County of "London." One assumes one thing and one assumes another, but especially there was the correspondence that passed between Mr. Fowler and the London County Council, and between Mr. Fowler and the Lord Mayor, which absolutely exposes, on the face of it, ambiguity.

3002. (Mr. Smith.) But you say "The terms of the Commission" in the document, you cannot travel into the correspondence.

3003. (Sir John Monckton.) No; I said "the terms of the Commission" and I have referred to the terms of the Commission here.

3004. (Lord Farrer.) My question still remains this: do you mean by this word "admittedly" that we have, collectively or individually, as Commissioners, admitted that there is this particular ambiguity in the terms of the Commission?

3005. (Sir John Monckton.) No, the word is not intended to apply to this Commission.

3006. (Lord Farrer.) It is not intended to apply to this Commission?

3007. (Sir John Monckton.) No; it is intended to apply generally. It is matter of common concurrence that it is a vague and ambiguous reference.

3008. (Lord Farrer.) Vague and ambiguous on this particular question—whether the Commission does or does not exclude the question of desirability?

3009. (Sir John Monckton.) I have not said that here. I say it now—I mean to say, the document I have before me here—"the terms of the Commission, "ambiguous as they admittedly are"—I must not be fixed down to some little point in the sentence—"the terms of the Commission, ambiguous as they "admittedly are."

3010. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, but you will observe that this sentence loses all force unless we have regard to that particular question. It refers to the "inability of the Royal Commissioners to give an "assurance that they would be ready to hear "evidence, when tendered, upon the question of the "desirability of the amalgamation of the City and "County of London." That is the question to which this paragraph refers.

3011. (Sir John Monckton.) To which those words refer.

3012. (Lord Farrer.) And my question is this, and I put it again, in order that we may have it with perfect certainty. You do not allege that the Commissioners, or any of them, have admitted that there is any doubt upon the meaning of the Commission upon that point?

3013. (Sir John Monckton.) I say two things in answer to that. In the first place, the Corporation does not allege or fix these words—"ambiguous as they admittedly are"—to any single person; but I say, if the words, "ambiguous as they admittedly are" were out, the sentence would have all its force. I do not think that the words have any, or make any, difference to the allegement in the sentence.

3014. (Mr. Smith.) That is our idea; we are only extremely anxious, I think, that there should be no interpretation of those words that should include the Commission as expressing that opinion in any way.

3015. (Sir John Monckton.) There is no suggestion that it does so.

3016. (Mr. Crawford.) I should think the difficulty would have been met if there had been a hyphen between the word "Commission" and the word "definitively."

3017. (Mr. Smith.) I think it would have been better met if Sir John Monckton's suggestion had been adopted, and they had been omitted altogether.

3018. (Sir John Monckton.) I attach very little weight to the words, very little; it is a parenthetical expression.

3019. (Mr. Smith.) If we may, for a moment, compare great things with small—the City of London with the town clerk of Birmingham—I saw no ambiguity, and when I asked the consent of my Council, as I had to do, when I entered upon this inquiry, I distinctly pointed out to them that my duty was not to range over the huge inquiry, whether it was desirable or not, that the City and London County Council should be unified; that was a question for Ministers of the Crown, primarily, and for Parliament subsequently. We, as a Commission, are a body of practical men, to say whether there is any impracticability in the course proposed. I saw the point at first; I do not see why the City of London should not have been able to see it just the same.

3020. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it was seen: I do not think it is at all clear that the Commissioners were themselves clear upon the point. If this is to be put on the City it should be publicly known that undoubtedly there was vagueness, and it is exceedingly unfair to say that there was no vagueness.

3021. (Mr. Smith.) There is no vagueness as stated here in the terms of the Commission: I do not think they are ambiguous. I see no ambiguity myself.

3022. (Mr. Crawford.) That was not the opinion of the Chairman.

3023. (Chairman.) I never said anything about ambiguity.

3024. (Mr. Crawford.) I have your own letter—the secretary's letter. It contains an expression that undoubtedly there was vagueness.

3025. (Chairman.) What are the words?

3026. (Mr. Crawford.) The words are these:—"Mr. Courtney desires me to tell you what he "purposes to do as regards the meetings of the "Royal Commission on the amalgamation of the City "and County of London, of which he is Chairman, and "he hopes that the arrangements which he proposes "will suit your convenience. He has asked the "Local Government Board to depute a representative "to draw up a memorandum, upon which he could "afterwards be examined, setting out the existing "state of affairs in the metropolis, and indicating the "problem to be solved by the Commission more "precisely than is done in the Royal Warrant." If that does not mean vagueness, I do not know what does. To which I replied, "I was rather anticipating "a preliminary meeting of the Commissioners to be "called to discuss procedure, but I quite share the "Chairman's difficulty as to the vagueness of the "Royal Warrant, and the consequent necessity for "the preparation of an official memorandum, in-"dicating, in detail, the problem to be solved by the "Commissioners." And surely it is only fair for us to admit that we do think there should be some indication of the problem to be solved. I do not think it is just to the City to assume that there was no question of vagueness on our minds.

3027. (Lord Farrer.) The reference may be a very wide one, and may be uncertain in its scope without involving the particular ambiguity with which we are now concerned.

3028. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes; but that is not the point; I do not think it is quite reasonable or fair to put upon the town clerk, that we, the Commissioners, did not think there was any vagueness. There is not the slightest doubt of that, and Mr. Smith freely from the outset pointed out that that was the true interpretation, and he was very desirous that the question should have been raised at the outset. On the contrary, the Corporation were asked as a preliminary to send in their statement. They did so after a protest. When they put in their statement, certain questions were put to them, and of course the whole question arose. I do not think it reasonable or fair to let the City consider that we are all perfectly settled in our own minds as to it being perfectly clear. I venture to think, with all due respect, that whoever drafted this Commission has prepared it exceedingly badly. In the first place there is practically no operative part, the whole of our duties are in the recital; it is as vague as vague can be.

3029. (Mr. Smith.) If Mr. Crawford would do me the justice to say that I saw no ambiguity, I should be perfectly satisfied. I do not think I could have taken a seat on this Commission if I had thought that the larger question of the desirability, which afforded infinite opportunities of delay, was to be opened up.

3030. (Chairman.) I do not think there has been any question as to ambiguity, only regarding the problem set before us; it was an exceedingly wide one, and it was thought desirable that, by having a representative of the Local Government Board before us, we might have a clearer and narrower definition of the words. That was why that was desired.

3031. (Mr. Crawford.) Just so.

3032. (Chairman.) All that was desired. There was no kind of uncertainty as to what the work itself was to be, especially in this regard, as to the question of desirability of amalgamation.

3033. (Lord Farrer.) My question is answered. Sir John Monckton tells us that they do not mean by these words that we have, collectively or individually, admitted that there was any doubt upon this point.

Sir J. Monckton.
23 Nov. 1893.

3034. (Sir John Monckton.) I do not understand it at all to mean that anything collective has come from the Commission in that respect.

[The room was cleared and the Commissioners deliberated. At the conclusion of their deliberations Sir John Monckton was recalled.]

3287–8. (Chairman.) Our Secretary will read you, Sir John, the conclusion to which we have come.

The Secretary then read the following reply:—

"In reply to the further communications from the Corporation the Commission have in the first place to express their regret that the Corporation should still hesitate to proceed with their evidence as has been entered upon. The Commissioners agree that in view of the terms of the reference to them, it would be useless for the Corporation to proceed further in the tender of evidence on the question of desirability of amalgamation, but the Commissioners would wish it to be clearly understood that they hold themselves open to receive evidence upon the convenient practicability of amalgamation, and they do not understand the Corporation to refuse to give evidence in reference to this.

"The Commissioners, whilst desirous of securing the full co-operation of the Corporation in the pursuit of their labours, do not see their way to make such an application to Her Majesty to extend the limit of the inquiry entrusted to them, as the Corporation suggests, and they do not think that they can judiciously enter upon any attempt to define the term 'amalgamation,' the general meaning of which appears to be sufficiently clear."

The Secretary handed a copy of this reply to Sir John Monckton.

3289. (Sir John Monckton.) This is for me to take.

3290. (The Secretary.) That is a copy for you to take.

3291. (Chairman.) You take that answer back, of course, to the Corporation.

3292. (Sir John Monckton.) If you please.

3293. (Chairman.) Who will have to consider it at their earliest convenience. We are extremely sorry that there should be any interruption. I hope it is only an interruption in the giving of your evidence, but the labours of the Commission cannot be interrupted in consequence. We shall have to go on receiving what other evidence we can obtain, and we hope you will soon resume your place in the witness chair.

3294. (Sir John Monckton.) I shall lose no time in submitting this to those who instruct me.

Sir John Monckton then withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

Mr. W. H. DICKINSON, Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, called in and examined.

3295. (Chairman.) You produce this book—"Analysis of the accounts of the Corporation of "the City of London and the rating authorities "(exclusive of poor law) within the City of London "for the four years 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892"?—Yes, the analysis of the accounts.

3296. You hand it in to us?—Yes.

3297. (Chairman.) Have you prepared for us some further memorandum of a short character to explain it, or not?—Yes, I have a very short preamble to it which we can let you have.

3298. Already embodied in it you mean?—No, it is not embodied in it, it is rather a long document. We thought it should be printed separately. I will hand it to the Commission. It just shortly states in an explanatory note what the principle of the analysis has been.

3299. This is a book which, without that explanatory note, we have seen for the first time. We will take some little time to look at it before we can, with any advantage, enter upon any examination of it. We propose to-morrow morning to ask your attendance and Mr. Gomme and we will examine you upon it?—You will not go into this document until to-morrow.

3300. Not until to-morrow; at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 a.m.

TENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 24th November 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson.
24 Nov. 1893.

Mr. W. H. DICKINSON, Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, re-called and further examined.

3501. (Mr. Dickinson.) Before asking Mr. Gomme, the Statistical Officer of the County Council, to go through this document which we handed in to you yesterday, I think, if you will allow me, I should like to state what our position with regard to that document is, and with regard to any other documents which we may have to hand in. As the Commission will remember, the London County Council was asked to provide them with as full a statement as possible of the powers, duties, expenses, and general position of the London County Council with regard to local government; and further, with any further information as regards the municipal government of London all over the Administrative County of London. In accordance with that request we have prepared and presented to the Commission these documents, which, perhaps, you will allow me just to run over. The first was a document which gave a return of the powers and expenses of the London County Council, showing which expenses ran all over the Administrative County, and which of them stopped at the City of London.* The second was a document which showed the position and constitution, and the work of, and all particulars about the London County Council in its municipal and administrative work in London.† The third was one which was prepared for us by Mr. Kemp, showing the position as regards county government in the County of London, which, as the Commission know, is the county outside the City of London, showing the position of the Lord Lieutenant and discussing other questions relating to county government, justices of the peace, and so forth.‡

3502. (Mr. Crawford.) It goes a little further, does it not, Mr. Dickinson; that statement, number three, I see deals distinctly with what you call county government in the City; the greater part of it deals with that?—Yes, it does; it gives the county government in both.

3503. There is more information in regard to the City?—I am obliged to you. It is on the county government outside the City, and also on county government inside the City, so as to show in one document what is the position as regards county government over the whole Administrative County of London. Then the fourth paper was one which we had prepared, showing the work that was carried on by the vestries and other local bodies in London, and I have prepared it in the form which should show under each head of work, what is the particular duty which falls on the local bodies, and what is the particular duty which falls on the central body or any other bodies.§ That completed, so far as we were concerned, the information which we were in a position to offer to the Commission as regards the government of London. But with the exception that Mr. Crawford has pointed out, it did omit all reference to the position of government in the City of London, and of course we had hoped that the City would be able to provide you in a much more complete form with that information than we could do. But, of course, for the purpose of informing our own minds, we have for some time past been investigating the matter, both as regards its present position, and as regards any possible future development, and we have had prepared for our own information an important memorandum by Mr. John Kemp, who has been working with us upon the whole position—legal position—so far as we are able to gather it, of the respective governing bodies within the City of London — the Corporation, the Commissioners of Sewers, and others. And we have also had before us the accounts of the City and Corporation; the published accounts. Mr. Gomme, the Statistical Officer of the Council, has been for some time past formulating this document, which I handed in yesterday, and which shows, so far as he is able to gather from the published accounts, the financial position of the Corporation of the City of London. It was suggested by the secretary to the Commission the other day in a letter to the Council that the Commission would like to have this document before it to-day, and we have had it finished off so that it is in the form of a document that we can put in, and I shall ask Mr. Gomme to go through it in detail before you to-day. The explanatory note which I referred to before Mr. Gomme's statement, has not been put in at the present moment; I am only informing the Commission of its existence. Then to further complete the investigation of the question for our own information, we had prepared by Mr. Kemp statements as to what had been the recommendations of the various Royal Commissions who, like yourself, have investigated this question; and further, also, a memorandum as to the effect upon the municipal corporations of the old Municipal Corporations Act; how that Act dealt with the unreformed corporations at that time. We wrote to the corporations to ascertain what had been the effect of the Act, how it affected freemen, and so forth. We heard from Liverpool and some others, but not from very many, and upon these answers Mr. Kemp prepared that memorandum. All that information has been collected for our own purposes, but it is all available for the Commission, if it will be of any use to the Commission; and we shall be very pleased to ask Mr. Kemp to come before you and give any information he can upon the subject if the Commission desire. At the present moment, of course, to d y it is limited, as I understand, to the investigation of the accounts. Of course, our own consideration of the question has not stopped there, we have gone further into the matter, and have considered, as far as our information allowed us, the question of future legislation, and of course, we shall always be willing to give the Commission any information on that point that the Commission would like to have. I thought it was right to mention it, at this juncture, in order that the Commission might know what information we are in a position to give, and that we offer everything that we have prepared for our own information for the purpose of the Commission being able to form a judgment upon the question.

3504. (Mr. Crawford.) Do you mean by your latter remark that you are prepared to put before the Commissioners some scheme which has been formulated?—I do not offer any scheme in any way, but I only meant to state that we have—our Committee have—gone into those questions carefully, and if the Commission wish for our assistance in any way that we can give it, we will give it. I have mentioned exactly what our own course of procedure upon this matter has been, in order that the Commission may know what amount of information they can get from us, if it is of any use to them.

3505. Even to the extent of putting forward a scheme for the consideration of the Commissioners; do I gather that, Mr. Dickinson?—No, sir, I do not think I have offered to put forward any scheme.

3506. I understood from your last remark that you had considered that question?—That we had considered that question.

3507. With the view to probable future legislation, and that the information so gleaned by you was at the disposal of the Commissioners, would not that point to the preparation of a scheme?—We had considered that question, but our consideration of the question has been materially handicapped, seeing that we have not had the information about the City Corporation that we should have liked to have had, so I could not offer any scheme to the Commissioners, because from that very fact it must be incomplete, and it might possibly be misleading the Commission, if the Commission sees its own way to get the information.

3508. (Chairman.) So far as your preparation of materials has as yet gone, your statement is exhausted?—Yes, sir.

3509. (Lord Farrer.) Just enumerate once more those papers that you have mentioned; you are ready to put them in if the Commission wish to have them, are you not?—Yes, the latter papers.

3510. Yes, that is three memoranda by Mr. Kemp?—Yes, perhaps we had better keep them in the order in which we have got them. "A." is Mr. Kemp's memorandum on the whole question of the position of the City, historical, and legal;* "B." is the analysis which you heard about.†

3511. Before we pass from that, that memorandum was prepared without the assistance of the book which the City have lately put in?—It was prepared without the assistance of that book.

3512. (Mr. Crawford.) Does that differ very materially?—I think I must leave Mr. Kemp to answer that, as no doubt he has been able to correct it.

3513. (Chairman.) We have not got it before us?—No.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

24 Nov. 1893.

3514. (Lord Farrer.) That was the first?—That we call the first, because it has been the whole basis upon which our investigations have gone. Then Mr. Gomme's analysis of the accounts had to wait until the accounts to the last year were delivered, because we were unable to get them till rather late, and the third, a short synopsis of the recommendations of the various Royal Commissions on this question, merely was for our own information, as I say,* and the other is a very short paper of the actual effect of the Municipal Corporations Act—how the Municipal Corporations Act dealt with unreformed corporations.†

3515. (Mr. Smith.) Are not these numbered?—We call them A., B., C., and D., in the order I have mentioned.

3516. A., B., C., and D., and that does not conclude your final ideas of future developments?—No, sir.

3517. (Lord Farrer.) I presume that, before putting in anything containing anything like a proposal from the London County Council of a scheme, you would wish for time to consider the materials which the Corporation have put in, and, as we hope, will still put in?—Certainly I should; in fact, as I say, any scheme we can prepare must be incomplete without that assistance.

3518. (Chairman.) Have you anything further to add?—No, sir.

3519. (Mr. Crawford.) Might I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the same courtesy may be extended to the Corporation with regard to copies of this last statement; we have invariably supplied 30 copies of our documents; would the London County Council kindly furnish us with 30 copies of this analysis of the accounts?

3520. (Chairman.) I suppose you will have no objection?—If we knew what the position of the City was in regard to this matter we should not hesitate; of course, the book is printed, and we have copies that we can allow. I mean, if the City has withdrawn altogether——

3521. (Mr. Crawford.) The City has not withdrawn?—We are in rather a difficult position as to whether we should furnish it to anybody but the persons concerned. I have no objection to it if the Commission have not; they know the position of affairs better than I do. I have only seen what the account in the paper was.

3522. (Chairman.) They have not withdrawn, and even supposing they had withdrawn, what objection have you got to give them?—We have no objection, except furnishing it to other people.

3523. It is a mere matter of feeling?—Oh, it is not a matter of feeling in the least, sir, if you think that we should continue the same course, if there is no alteration in the position of the City.

3524. (Mr. Crawford.) We may expect them?—Certainly, Mr. Crawford.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. George Laurence Gomme, Statistical Officer of the London County Council, called in and examined.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

3525. (Chairman.) What is your position in connexion with the County Council?—I am the Statistical Officer of the Council.

3526. And you have prepared this book‡ which has been put in?—I have prepared this document for the committee of the Council which has been put in, yes.

3527. This book is founded primarily on the accounts of the Chamberlain?—Almost entirely on the published accounts of the Chamberlain of the City of London, checked here and there by the local taxation returns to the Government, which are also founded on the published accounts of the Chamberlain.

3528. Those local taxation returns are derived from the Chamberlain's reports?—Are derived from the Chamberlain's reports, I believe.

3529. So, whether directly or indirectly, all your figures come from the Chamberlain's accounts?—All my information comes from the Chamberlain's published accounts.

3530. And you do not suggest any alteration or correction of those figures?—I have found two little points which may or may not be clerical errors, but they are very small; they do not really affect the figures.

3531. They are quite unimportant?—They are quite unimportant.

3532. Your desire has been rather to rearrange the accounts than to present anything new or additional?—Yes, to rearrange the accounts from the point of view from which the committee of the County Council was considering this question.§

3534. Arabic 2 and 3?—2 and 3.

3535. Yes?—We first give the revenue derived from General Estates, Gresham Estates, Bridge House Estates, and Blackfriars Bridge Estates, and so on. Then the revenue derived from interest on securities and cash balances, and then the revenue derived from dues and duties. These items are the Gross Revenue. And then deducting from those the charges for Collection and Management, Rents, Rates, and Taxes, which are permanent charges against gross revenue, this brings out the net revenue under those heads for that particular year.

3536. (Lord Farrer.) Would you tell us with regard to that, on what principle you have separated those particular sources of income from those which we have afterwards; the receipts from markets, for instance, on page 4?—The principle has been that these are the permanent estates of the Corporation, which primarily meet all the expenditure, and have collaterally to meet all the expenditure upon loans, and the market revenue is a remunerative undertaking, or should be a remunerative undertaking, and bears its own expenditure and also its own loans, and therefore I have classified those together under one head.

3537. And would a similar observation apply to the income from the Courts of Law?—The income from the Courts of Law has been taken to be simply receipts in aid of the expenditure for the same purposes; that is to say, where under the Mayor's Court you have an expenditure in this particular year of 9,455*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*, of that sum 9,072*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* has been met by receipts from fees and so on, and only 383*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* has actually fallen on the estates of the Corporation to maintain that Court.

3538. (Chairman.) Is your view of the market revenue this: that after meeting the charges of administration and interest, and repayment of debt, if there is any net receipt the market duties ought to be reduced, so that it should not be a source of income?—No, I have not considered it from that point of view; that is a matter of opinion, that I have really not gone into.

3539. That is not the reason why you have separated it?—No.

3540. You have not regarded it as a source of income which ought not to be permanently productive for general purposes?—No, I have not considered it from that point of view.

* See Appendix V.
† See also Gomme, 4409. Payne, 6657, sqq.
‡ Not printed.
§ See Appendix XI.

3541. (Lord Farrer.) The difference is not simply that the one may be affected with a special trust, because that is the case with the Bridge House Estates, is it not?—That is the case with the Bridge House Estates, and that is shown in this analysis by the balance in column 19, on page 3. The balance of the Bridge House Estates is there, you will observe; 14,811*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* is the amount, and it is not carried forward to column 20 for the general purposes of the Corporation, whereas with reference to the markets, the balance of revenue on the markets is carried forward into the corresponding column 30, as applicable to the general purposes of the Corporation.

3542. (Mr. Crawford.) You treat that surplus revenue as part of the property of the Corporation?—It is a part of the revenue of the Corporation, and therefore I have treated it as such.

3543. (Chairman.) Now will you come back to the point before us?—Then we have the net revenue from the estates of 600,839*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* in column 6. I bring that into column 7, and set against it the charges on net revenue for various purposes. For instance, the bridges are chargeable against the Bridge House Estates; columns 8 and 9 give that; but the Holborn Valley Improvement is chargeable against the coal and wine duties; the Leadenhall Market Approach is chargeable against the general estates of the Corporation by the Act of the Corporation; the Parks and Open Spaces are chargeable against the grain duty; the Royal Exchange is chargeable against the Gresham Estates; and the Gresham College is chargeable against the Gresham Estates. Then there are various salaries and pensions in connexion with these particular estates, which are chargeable and put into column 15. That brings out a total charge against revenue of 531,610*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* Then the balances available after deducting those charges, are brought forward in column 17, and it is separated into two in columns 19 and 20, column 19 showing the amount carried forward to next year to the particular account under which the balance arises; column 20 showing the amount carried forward for the use of the Corporation for its general purposes.

3544. And the meaning of that is, that in column 19 you consider those accounts as absolutely separate from the general accounts of the Corporation, so that their balances cannot be available for ordinary purposes, but the other accounts are available for ordinary purposes?—That is so.*

3545. (Lord Farrer.) Will you, before leaving this page, say what is the meaning of "Bequests" in column four in number one?—Column four is certain bequests which the Corporation pay out of their general estates, and presumably under the trusts.

3547. (Chairman.) Do the amounts agree?—The amounts agree if you take the General Estates and the Gresham Estates; those are the two items which make up the total; the two last ones, Miss Bathus' bequest and Admiral Duff's legacy do not appear at all in the accounts, they are quite special and reserved; but if you take the first two items, the General Estates and Gresham Estates, they come to 1,488*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* in 1889.

3549. (Mr. Smith.) Those are the incomes of the trust estates only?—No; those are the payments.

3550. (Chairman.) Those are certain specific charges you assume charged by the original donors on those particular estates, and they are paid in consequence?—I assume that is so.

3551. (Mr. Smith.) And in some cases on funds in money, I presume?—No, these are all charged; the General Estates are charged with 884*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*, the Gresham Estates are charged with 405*l.* 11*s.*, and then there are special bequests.

3552. Admiral Duff's money?—Admiral Duff's money is not included in this account at all, it is a special account towards the end of the Chamberlain's Accounts, and I have eliminated those altogether.

3553–4. I happen to know, because he was good enough to leave 1,000*l.* to Birmingham in the same way for a scripture reader, which was very much required.

3555. (Chairman) Yes?—Then bringing forward that balance, 146,045*l.* 3*s.* 10*d., from column 20, it is entered into column 21 to be further dealt with; and then the market revenue is dealt with separately, and the charges against the market revenue for works and services, rents, rates and taxes, establishment and management, interest, repayment of debt, are deducted from the total revenue, thereby bringing out in column 27 the net revenue from markets in this particular year.

3556. (Lord Farrer.) Just let me ask you a question; these markets are governed under different Acts, are they not?—They are under special Acts, yes.

3557. And the balance from one is frequently made applicable to pay anything that is wanted upon another, is it not?—Well, I would not go so far as that; Mr. Kemp would be able to explain the legal position, but they very frequently do run into each other.

3558. They run into each other?—Yes.

3559. (Chairman.) Is it not rather this way, that the balance of the market account, whatever it is, goes as a debit or a credit to the general account, and in that way they may balance one another?—Well, not entirely so; for instance, the Coal Market and the Deptford Cattle Market are not entered to the general account of the Corporation.

3560. (Mr. Crawford.) The Deptford Cattle Market has to be kept separate, under statute?—Under statute, yes.

3561. (Lord Farrer.) If there is a surplus from the cattle market, it goes to help one of the other markets.

3562. (Mr. Crawford.) Under the statute; distinctly under the statute?—When the loans are all paid off.

3563. It goes to pay off, as far as it can do, the loan upon the Islington Cattle Market.

3564. (Lord Farrer.) The different markets assist one another, but they do not form one fund?—They do not form one fund in the Corporation accounts.

3565. And they do not come into one account, but each has a separate account.

3566. (Mr. Crawford.) They are bound to have by the several statutes.

3567. (Chairman.) Well that brings an additional 4,834*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*?—There is a minus balance in one account in this particular year, and that only brings forward a revenue from markets applicable to general purposes of 4,834*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, which being brought forward into column 31 brings the revenue up to 150,879*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Then the expenditure on certain permanent works that the Corporation has undertaken is given in group four, and there dealt with. For instance, the Holborn Valley Improvement.

3568. Receipts and expenditure?—Receipts and expenditure. The receipts from the Holborn Valley Improvement were 45,055*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*, the expenditure was 43,621*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, then on the Clerkenwell Improvement the receipts were 9,190*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, and the expenditure 16*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* On dwellings for the poor there were receipts of 5,518*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, and expenditure of 10,086*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, showing that a certain amount, namely 4,568*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, fell in that year upon the General Estates of the Corporation.

* See also Gomme, 10,683.

* See also Payne, 6985.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

3569. (Lord Farrer.) Where is that expenditure shown?—The total of column 34, "Dwellings for the Poor," 10,086*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, 5,518*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* of which was met by receipts from the dwellings for the poor, and the balance fell on the General Estates of the Corporation. Then in parks and open spaces the total expenditure was 3,227*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, of which 1,522*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* was met by receipts from parks and open spaces, namely, 1,933*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, and some of that, being trust property for recreation grounds, was carried forward as a balance to the next year, leaving 1,704*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* to be taken out of the general estates of the Corporation of that year for parks. Then the balances are brought into column 37—and adopting the same plan as in previous sections, namely, to divide them into two—one where the balances are carried forward to the account of next year, and not used by the Corporation, and the other, column 40, where the balances are applied to the general purposes of the Corporation.

3571. You do not start from any balance in hand?—I start from no balance; I simply say, for instance, the Holborn Valley Improvement account has increased its balance by the transactions in that particular year by 1,434*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* Then, those figures being brought forward, the next class we deal with is that of justice and police; and each heading in this class is dealt with in the same way, showing how much of the expenses is met by fees from the different courts, and how much of the expenses falls upon the general estates of the Corporation. The Mayor's court for instance; the total expenditure was 9,455*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*, of which 9,072*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* was met by receipts, and the balance, 383*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, fell upon the general estates. Criminal justice fell wholly upon the general estates. The City of London Court is an account kept separate by the Corporation with its own balance, and the receipts were 14,916*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, and the expenditure 14,673*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*; for the Borough Court of Southwark there are few expenses—special expenses met wholly out of the General Estates; the expenses of the sheriffs are met wholly out of the General Estates; the expenses of the coroner are met wholly out of the General Estates; so are those of the police; certain expenses for magistracy are met partly out of fees received by the magistrates, amounting this year to 2,151*l.*, and the balance fell upon the General Estates of the Corporation. Then the balances arrived at after taking count of these expenses are dealt with in the same way as before, the particular balance of the City of London Court being carried forward to the credit of that account in column 53, and the balances applied to the general purposes of the Corporation being set out in column 54, it being noted that 600*l.* was withdrawn from the invested balances of the City of London Court by the Corporation, and applied to their general purposes in that year.*

3572. Do you know why that was; the City apparently more than paid its expenses that year?—I do not know why it was; they simply did it.

3573. (Lord Farrer.) The City of London is bound by no such rules as there are in the Municipal Corporations Act with regard to keeping the capital account distinct, or preventing capital from being drawn upon?—I believe not.

3574. (Chairman.) Well, the result of that is to leave an applicable balance of 105,000*l.* in round figures?—That is the result. Then Administrative Purposes are dealt with in a group by themselves, under the heads of "Weights and Measures," "Lunatics," "Reformatories," "Port of London and Local Marine Board," "Petroleum," "General Establishment Expenses," and "Pensions to Officers." And where under each of these heads there is any amount met by the fees, that is so accounted for, as, for instance, for Weights and Measures, 194*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* was received in fees and only 11*l.* 11*s.* fell upon the Corporation Estates. For Lunatics, 455*l.* 16*s.* was received, the balance falling upon the General Estates. Reformatories wholly fell on the General Estates. The Port of London and Local Marine Board, all but a few fees, amounting to 26*l.* 10*s.*, fell upon the General Estates. Petroleum wholly fell upon the General Estates, and the General Establishment Expenses almost wholly fell upon the General Estates and interest on securities and cash balances. That amount is explained by the fact that the Chamberlain's expenses practically come out of interest on securities.

3575. The expenses of his office?—The expenses of his office.

3576. That is an historical circumstance; the office was formerly gratuitous, so far as salary was concerned, and he made his income out of the interest on balances?—That is so. The pensions to Officers fell wholly on the General Estates, making a total expenditure under the heading we are now dealing with of 46,293*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, and leaving a balance of revenue at this stage applied to further General Purposes of 59,476*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* Then under Group VII. I have classified the expenses for Mayoralty and Civic Purposes. I bring forward the revenue from column 67 into column 68, and there being no receipts in this class, it being all expenditure, I charge the expenditure against the revenue from General Estates, thereby reducing the balance to 17,937*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, and, the other balances remaining the same, the total balance, after deducting these charges, then become 29,486*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*

3577. Something like 30,000*l.* being the cost of the Mayoralty and Civic Purposes?—About 30,000*l.* Then in Group VIII. I have used the term "Optional Purposes"* to interpret the remaining charges, bringing forward the old balance of 29,486*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, and then dealing with the Library, Museum, and Art Gallery, including the Monument—the fees of that going to repay the expenditure upon it—then the Schools; the fees of the Schools being 38,899*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, and the total expenditure 50,985*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, leaves 10,640*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* on the General Estates; at this point the revenues from the General Estates are exhausted, and the balance of charge for Schools is, therefore, charged on the next source of revenue, viz., "Interest." The Pensions of School Officers is the next charge upon the Interest; the expenditure for Almshouses is the next charge, and other sundry Donations, amounting altogether to 7,024*l.* 5*s.*, exhausting the total revenue applied to General Purposes within 641*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, as set out in the last column.

3578. That sum which was drawn from the City of London Court, 600*l.*, seems to have gone in part payment of certain donations?—The explanation of that is simple; I have put it against that because the previous item is exhausted at that stage, and I have taken the City of London Court as the next chargeable item and Markets as the last.†

3579. But the previous item is not quite exhausted, you still have 663*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes, because 663*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* is an amount that was increased in the Reserve Fund. They increased their Reserve Fund by that amount in this particular year instead of applying it to General Purposes.

3580. (Lord Farrer.) That leaves a surplus on the whole account?—That leaves a surplus on the whole account for 1889 of 641*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*

3581. (Mr. Smith.) But for that 600*l.* of course it would only have been 41*l.*?—It would only have been 41*l.*, yes.

3582. (Lord Farrer.) But the 600*l.*; do you treat that as revenue?—I treat that as revenue; yes.

* See also Payne, 6985.

* See Payne, 6712, sqq.

† See Payne, 6985.

3583. What is the exact source from which it comes?—It is from the City of London Court fees. I have dealt with that in the Memorandum.

3584. Does it come out of the City of London Court fees for the year?—No, the Corporation invest the balances arising out of the City of London Court, and that balance is available for them to draw upon as they require it.

3585. In a subsequent year?—In any year, I take it.

3586. So that is revenue?—Yes, being drawn from their invested balances I treat it as revenue.

3587. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find that explained on page vi?—I have explained it fully on page vi.

3588. (Chairman.) It is a small account apparently from which the General Purposes money is occasionally drawn and repaid?—Yes, that seems to be so.

3589. And in four years there has been an excess repaid in the way of investments of 5,000*l.*?—That is so; yes.

3590. That concludes that part of the analysis?—That concludes that year; and the same principle is adopted in all the succeeding years, although, of course, the figures work out differently.

3591. And then do you bring together the results?

3592. (Lord Farrer.) Just before you go to that, what are the results as regards surplus or deficiency in each of the succeeding years?

3593. (Chairman.) That is what I was going to say. Do you bring together the result of your investigations on the four years?—On page ii.

3594. Apparently on page ii?—In 1889 there was a surplus balance of 641*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, which we have just now dealt with. In 1890 there was a deficit balance of 19,599*l.* 14*s.*; in 1891 a deficit balance of 33,574*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; and in 1892 there was a deficit balance of 21,469*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*; making a total deficit in the four years, or a net deficit rather, of 74,001*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.

3595. If you put the minus sign before that it would be better?—Or perhaps the words "net deficit" would be better.

3596. You go on to say how these deficits are provided for, I think?—I go on to show, as far as the accounts show it, how this 74,002*l.* was met, namely, by a reduction of cash balances from 46,137*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* at the beginning, to 7,930*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* at the end of 1892, showing a total reduction of 38,206*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* on account of balances. Then come transfers from the Reserve Fund of 28,821*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, those transfers being sales of property and not interest, and then sales of property which are received into the General Estates of the Corporation Account of 6,984*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*† Then there is a slight—I will not say error—but at all events a slight amount which I have not been quite able to understand.

3597. It is a discrepancy?—It is a little discrepancy that I could not quite agree.

3598. You do not at this stage make any investigation of the causes of the change from surplus to deficiency?—Not at that particular stage; at a little later stage, when I compare the three years together, viz., on page viii. I just show you then———

3599. We will come to that in its place?—I am concerned, in the first instance, with showing in each year how the particular surplus or deficit is arrived at. The first total shows how the 641*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* appears in the accounts, giving the balances at the beginning of the year and the balances at the end.

3600. Then the negative 19,599*l.* 14*s.* in the next year?—Yes, the 19,599*l.* 14*s.* is in the next year. Bringing forward the 46,779*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, and adding to it what they had from sale of property and from the reserve fund, makes the balance at the beginning 59,154*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, the balance at the end being 39,554*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*; you get your minus balance in the third column.

3601. Now there is a point which seems to require explanation, but I daresay it can be explained pretty easily. One would naturally suppose the balance at the end of one year would be the same as the balance at the beginning of the next, but that does not seem to be always the case?—Yes.

3602. That is not so in any of these items; it is in some, but not in all of them?—That is explained in the paragraph preceding. They wind up with a balance of 46,779*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* Then to that is added sales of property which is not revenue, amounting to 3,375*l.* and 9,000*l.* transferred from the reserve funds—not from a revenue source—making 12,375*l.* If that be added to the 46,779*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, they start off with 59,154*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, instead of 46,779*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

3603. So that if those sums which did not arise from revenue but from sale of capital had not been included, the deficiency at the end of the year would have been 37,000*l.*?—No, the deficiency for that particular year would always have been the 19,000*l.*, because I kept the working of each year separate.

3604. (Lord Farrer.) But the balance of 59,154*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* would have been so much the less?—Would have been so much the less, yes; and the total decrease at the end of 1890 would, as the Chairman says, have been 12,375*l.* more; but it would not have been the particular decrease of that particular year.

3605. (Chairman.) I do not quite follow that at present; I do not know whether the other Commissioners do.

3606. (Lord Farrer.) In which year did these sales take place; in 1889?—In 1889; yes.

3607. (Chairman.) These are revenue balances, and then you take these other sums of capital receipts in 1889 before starting with 1890: you add to those sums all revenue balances?—Yes, that is so, because they started with that amount of cash in hand.

3608. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not quite understand what sales you are referring to; you say "sales of property." I have not been able to trace it?—Sale of premises, Smithfield, it is entered in the accounts as.

3609. Smithfield?—Yes. I will give it to you in a moment; page 80 of the Chamberlain's accounts.

3610. The 1889 accounts, is it?—Yes, page 80 Sale of premises to B. Taberer and others, 3,375*l.*

3611. Thank you very much. Why I asked you at this stage was, because I was looking at your summary last night. For four years you bring out a total of 6,454*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* I was trying to make it up, and I could not quite make up your figures. That is why I asked at this stage. In your summary I found a total of 6,454*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* I could not arrive at that?—That is more than one year.

3612. I know, I wanted to know how you arrived at it?—That is why.

3613. (Mr. Smith.) Before you leave the balance, might I just ask this: These are balances on the working of each particular year?—Of each particular year.

3614. And each would in an ordinary borough have to be made to come out of the rate?—I presume that would be so if the borough fund be insufficient.

3615. If the borough fund be insufficient you have to make it up by way of borough rate?—Yes.

3616. And it would have involved apparently a rate of about 1½*d.* in the £ in 1890, and 2*d.* in the £, I calculate, in 1891?—On the 4,000,000*l.* rental.

3617. And 1½*d.* in 1892?

3618. (Mr. Crawford.) Upon what assessment do you take that?

3619. (Mr. Smith.) I was taking it at 4,000,000*l.* It is in evidence, I think, that your 1*d.* rate produces in the City 18,000*l.*

3620. (Mr. Crawford.) I think that does appear somewhere.

24 Nov. 1893.

3621. (Mr. Smith.) I am taking it broadly?—Yes, it is about 18,000*l.*

3622. (Chairman.) Then you go on with 1891, how that was met?—I show how 1891 has been met in the same way by first of all setting out the balances with which they commenced the beginning of the year for the several revenue accounts.

3623. In that case they are practically the same; to the end of last year there is a slight difference only?—There is a slight difference only. And then in 1892 the same process is gone through, showing the balance that they began with and the balance at the end bringing out the net deficit again.

3624. (Lord Farrer.) In 1891 there was another transfer from capital?—There was another transfer from the Reserve Fund, yes.

3625. From the Reserve Fund?—Yes, there was a transfer of 10,000*l.*; but the whole of the transfer was not capital; only 9,821*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* was from sale of property, the rest was from ordinary revenue, like interest, and so I have treated it as such.

3626. (Chairman.) There is an exact 10,000*l.* transferred?—Yes.

3627. But 9,821*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* was derived from the sale of property?—Was derived from the sale of investments or property.

3628. From the sale of investments?—Investments or property.

3629. Then in 1892?—Then in 1892 I bring forward the balance at the beginning of the year and the balance at the end, showing a minus balance at the end; taking only revenue, showing a net decrease of 17,959*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Then I just shortly note how that was increased, so as to give them the cash balance with which they began the now current year. That was done by sale of property in the Reserve Fund amounting to 10,100*l.*, of which 10,000*l.* was transferred to the General Estates, and 100*l.* left in the Reserve Fund balance. This left the Corporation with a balance of 7,830*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* in hand for current purposes at the end of 1892.

3630. (Lord Farrer.) In the accounts for 1892 is there any sale of property, or diminution of the Reserve Fund?—Yes, there is a sale of property amounting to 3,509*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*

3631. That was in 1892, was it, that the sale of property took place?—That was in 1892, yes.

3632. (Chairman.) That would not appear in this account?—No.

3633. That would go for the next one?—That would go for the next one.

3634. Then you give us another table. Will you explain that?—Yes. On page v I give a table showing the net amounts which fall upon the General Estates and Funds of the Corporation. I first of all set out the General Estates and Funds, under the heads of Rents, Bequests, and Interest, and then tabulate the heads of the charges which fall upon those receipts. The receipts-in-aid in each case that we have dealt with in the analysis being deducted, and only the amounts entered there which fall upon the General Estates. That shows that the General Estates and Funds in no year met the entire expenditure; and then it shows in what way the deficit was made good. It practically summarises the previous pages.

3635. There was a deficiency in 1889 of 4,000*l.*; it went on to 33,000*l.*, 49,000*l.*, and 32,000*l.*?—32,000*l.*, yes.

3636. And those were met?—By market profits,—

3637. (Lord Farrer.) The market profits may be considered as revenue of the year of the Corporation?—Oh, they belong to the revenue of the year, undoubtedly.

3638. (Chairman.) And in 1889 pretty nearly balance themselves?—In 1889 pretty nearly balance themselves.

3639. (Lord Farrer.) That is properly revenue, I suppose?—That is properly revenue.

3640. (Chairman.) It was not derived from the revenue of the year, that 690*l.*?—No, it was not; but they could have derived it from the revenue of that year.

3641. It had been made?—Because the revenue from the City of London Court was more than 600*l.* It was simply their method of doing it, simply drawing from investments rather than from the actual balance in hand.

3642. (Lord Farrer.) But the profits upon balances of previous years from sales of property and transfers from the Reserve Fund, those are distinctly taken from capital?—Those are. Well, the balance of the previous years would probably not be capital. That we do not know; the bulk of that would be revenue.

3643. It is not the revenue of the year?—It is not the revenue of the year.

3644. (Chairman.) I think you have a little overstated it in saying that the City of London Court could have stood it on that year. Look at page 6?—In that particular year, yes, that is so. In that particular year they did not have sufficient, but then in that particular year they had a very heavy expenditure for erecting a new court, which is noted in Note (c) on page 6; that is the balance of erecting a new court, so that their revenue was deficient on that account in that particular year.

3645. That note (c) ought not to have gone with that, ought it?—It ought to have gone, I suppose to the 14,673*l.* I see, that is it. Is there not another (c) out here after the 600*l.*?—That is on page 7. I have made my notes for different pages, but in other years the City of London Court has a substantial balance.

3646. Next year it was drawn upon to the extent of 4,000*l.*?—Yes, they drew 4,100*l.* in the next year, only 100*l.* in 1891, and 500*l.* in 1892. Then on page v, if I am to go on?

3647. Yes, please?—I deal there with the special items of expenditure of account, because it happens that in these years there are special expenditures—expenditures that might be considered as special, and I divide those into two heads—investments, and exceptional expenditure out of the General Estates and funds. The investments are set out in the Table on page v, and then I give the details of those and the references to the page of the accounts where I get the information from.

3648. The investments; now would you explain what these are?—The investments out of the General Estates and funds of 12,923*l.* 0*s.* 5*d., in 1890, was on account of the commutation of renewing fines for leases, and they are made applicable by the City to the Grain Duty Loans Account, they transfer them to the Grain Duty Sinking Fund account each year, and invest that money for the purpose of paying off the loans borrowed on the credit of the Grain Duty.

3649. They create a sinking fund, do they?—So that it really is a sinking fund.

3650. They are not buying up their bonds?—They are creating a sinking fund.

3651. (Mr. Crawford.) To meet bonds for renewal?—For instance, in 1890 they invest 12,923*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in 1891, 8,695*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, and then in 1892 there is a minus before the figure; that is where they actually paid off that amount of money from the previous investments—loans falling due on the grain duty. And then I have also treated as an investment—although I am not quite sure whether it is right to do so—the purchase of property, where they purchase property, as they did in 1891, for instance, at Shiplake, Lock Island, and Walton-on-Hill. I have considered that as an investment, although it may be that it is a necessary transaction for the year. But still, as it is entered in the accounts as a purchase of property, I considered that just as much capital as, on the other hand, I have considered the sale of property to be capital and not revenue.†

3652. You do not know what the special purpose of this purchase at Shiplake Lock was?—I do not know anything about it, except that it was a purchase of property.

* See also Payne, 6985.

† See also Gomme, 6159-60.

3653. It was to secure the island from being built upon. It had been used for the purpose of campers out. It was going to be built upon, and application was made to the Corporation to preserve it for the benefit of the people.

3654. (Lord Farrer.) It is an open space where boating parties camp?—It is an open space.

3655. (Chairman.) It would be a part of the expenditure of that year really?—It would be a part of the expenditure of that year really.

3656. Exactly?—Yes.

3657. (Lord Farrer.) And it will be an open space permanently belonging to the City?—Yes, for ever.

3658. (Mr. Crawford.) For ever?—It must be continued so.

3659. (Chairman.) Whether it was that year or not would depend upon the way in which they treated their accounts—whether it was paid off in a few years or not?—That would be so; though it would take it out of the category of an ordinary investment if it is expenditure upon an open space.

3660. (Mr. Crawford.) The property at Walton-on-the-Hill was purchased in order to give the City a locus standi in connexion with the preservation of Banstead Downs; because in connexion with this property there were certain rights of common, and these gave them authority to interfere.

3661. (Chairman.) In neither case would it be a remunerative investment?—Except Walton-on-the-Hill, I suppose.

3662. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, Walton-on-the-Hill, I can only say that recently——

3663. (Chairman.) Great results may be got from it?

3664. (Mr. Crawford.) The last thing I know is that the tenant applied, on account of the sad agricultural state of the country, that he might be let off the quarter's rent. I do not think we are likely to get a profit by it.

3665. (Mr. Smith.) It might almost have gone into your parliamentary expenses. It was simply to obtain a locus?—Of course, I have only taken the information as it appeared in the accounts.

3666. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find it set out in the Blue Book, Mr. Gomme?—Well, I believe I did notice it there afterwards. That would not be an actual beneficial purchase by the Corporation.

3667. I am afraid anything but beneficial?—I have understood that would not be so. Still, it was entered in as purchase of property, and therefore I entered it in in that way.

3668. (Lord Farrer.) These would be purchases which would be treated as capital in the accounts of the London County Council?—They would probably be so, yes.

3669. And paid for out of borrowed money?—And paid for out of borrowed money.

3670. (Chairman.) I am not sure.

3671–2. (Mr. Smith.) You would get a very short loan for it, Lord Farrer.

3673. (Chairman.) Go on, Mr. Gomme?—Anything more on page v?

3674. I do not think there is anything that I wish there.

3675. (Lord Farrer.) The sinking fund upon the grain duty, is that a fund formed with a view to the termination of the duty, and of paying off any debts that are charged upon it?—No, that is for the payment of all the loans borrowed on the security of the grain duty.

3676. There was a loan borrowed upon it for the purpose of Open Spaces?—For the purpose of Open Spaces.

3677. And the grain duty comes to an end in 1902.—In 1902 the grain duty comes to an end, and this provides for paying off loans secured upon it.

3678. (Mr. Crawford.) It is wholly applicable to the purchase of Open Spaces?—I believe so; Yes. Then I take the Gresham Estate. There was a small investment there in one year only, and in that particular year, 1892, the Gresham Estate did not happen to pay off any loan, so that I presume that that investment is for the purpose of a sinking fund.

3679. (Chairman.) There is a debt on the Gresham Estates?—A debt on the Gresham Estates, and in all other years there is an amount paid off of that debt, but in 1892 there is an investment of 4,091*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, so I assume that is for the purpose of a sinking fund.

3680. (Mr. Crawford.) And you find that treated as a trust—the Gresham?—Oh, yes; quite so; that is so. Then, on the Bridge House Estates there was a small investment, and there was a small purchase. Inasmuch as the Bridge House Estates is another trust account, I have assumed they have increased the value of the estates by the same amount, and have left them as capital. Then the grain duty I have already explained; and the Holborn Valley improvement investments are simply investments of balances or investments of revenue from various sources for the purpose of paying off the loans on the Holborn Valley. Those investments do not affect in any way the General Estates of the Corporation. Then I note the investment of funds in the City of London Court, to which attention has already been drawn, and point out that, in each year, there was a small sale of these investments, which was added to the revenue of the year; and during the same period there was a total of 10,151*l.* which was invested on account of the Court, leaving a net addition to the investments of the City of London Court of 4,851*l.*

3681. (Chairman.) The fees of the City of London Court are the same as those in any county court, are they not?—I believe that is so; I do not know whether the fees are on the same scale; but the City of London Court is a county court.

3682. And you do not know whether the fees would be changed in the ordinary course by Parliament if Parliament were to change the fees of the County Court?—It is under a special Act, and I do not quite know how far the County Courts Acts apply to the City of London Court.

3683. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact, you may take it that the same rules do apply, and the scale of fees also?—Yes.

3684. Speaking comparatively, the fees are very high; that is why they go to the Mayor's Court?—Then I summarise the investments in the last paragraph, which is pointing out shortly the net result of the previous two pages description.

3685. (Lord Farrer.) This is exceptional expenditure?—Then I take the exceptional expenditure for the purpose of showing that the balances which are deficit in the four years have to some extent been caused by what might be called exceptional expenditure, although, of course, in other years there might be the same kind of exceptional expenditure going on, I do not quite know that; but I have taken, for instance, the drainage works at the Mansion House as exceptional expenditure in 1889; I have taken the erection of new offices at the Guildhall, of 6,000*l.*, in 1892, as being special. Then there are certain alterations to the Council Chamber, which are really the balances, I take it, that have been paid off a previous very heavy account, and I take those to be exceptional. Then there are works at schools which are of the nature of capital, I consider those exceptional. Then for the purchase of parks there is a certain purchase of land and improvements which I give in footnotes on the pages referred to there that I have considered exceptional. Billingsgate Buildings, there was a very heavy expenditure, in 1890, of 14,000*l.* odd, which was in the nature of a capital charge, and that I have considered exceptional. Then the erection of the new offices in the Mayor's Court I have considered exceptional; and then such of the investments as were met out of the General Estates, not for the purpose of a sinking fund, I have considered exceptional, making a total, in 1889, of

24 Nov. 1893.

16,790*l.*; in 1890, of 21,425*l.*; in 1891, of 13,498*l.*; and in 1892, of 12,957*l.

3686. Billingsgate Buildings are connected with the market, I suppose, are they?—Dwelling-houses for the poor, I think, Billingsgate Buildings are.

3687. (Mr. Crawford.) No, offices, &c. for persons connected with the market?—Connected with the market.

3688. But unfortunately they have proved anything but remunerative. They are not part of the market, but used for the purposes of the market. But they have not been the success which was anticipated?—That expenditure is of the nature of capital; what one might call the capital expenditure.

3689. (Chairman.) Taking that as an average of 16,000*l.* or 17,000*l.* a year, you have no reason to suppose that that exceeds or is less than the average of what would be called the average of such expenditure over a long period of years?—No; I have no reason to suppose that. If there was not this exceptional expenditure there might be others of the same sort.

3690. And if they were not charged in this way to current account there might be a corresponding charge for interest?—Yes.

3691. (Lord Farrer.) These are charges which, speaking quite generally, in the London County Council would be treated as charges to capital account, would they not?—I think they would be so, speaking generally. Then, I note on page vii, the charges on the General Estates in respect of debts for which the estates were collateral security, say, in cases outside the ordinary work of the Corporation, like, for instance, the Leadenhall Market Approach, for which the estates were first security; in 1889 the Leadenhall Market Approach was charged with 5,208*l.*, and slightly less in 1892, consequent on a reduction of interest. Then the Holborn Valley improvement. The Coal and Wine Duties ceasing in 1889, a certain amount of the debt for the Holborn Valley improvement was charged upon the General Estates amounting to 20,000*l.* in 1890, 19,000*l.* in 1891, and 17,000*l.* in 1892.

3692. (Chairman.) That will go on decreasing?—That will probably go on decreasing.

3693. The balance being in process of reduction?—The balance being in process of reduction.

3694. (Mr. Crawford.) You have found by your investigation that by the cessation of the Coal and Wine Dues the Corporation was landed in considerable debt?—I believe that is so.

3696. (Lord Farrer.) All those are in the nature of capital payments too?—Well, paying off loans. Then, on pages viii and ix, just for the purpose of comparison of three deficit years with one surplus year, I have taken out, under each heading, the receipts and expenditure, and shown how the three deficit years gain or lose as compared with the surplus year. You take, for instance, the first item: rents from general properties, there was an increase of receipts as between 1889 and 1890 of 15,000*l.*, and there was a decrease on the cost of collection and management, and that made a total benefit on the year 1890 of 19,000*l.* Then in the next year there was a decrease of rents, and there was a decrease also of collection and management. If you deduct one from the other, the decrease of rents from the decrease of expenditure, it makes a benefit to 1891 as compared with 1889 of 4,000*l.* Then in 1892 there is the same corresponding process; so that under each heading you will be able to see in what way these three subsequent years compare favourably or unfavourably with the year 1889.†

3697. (Chairman.) These are all additions to and subtractions from the former figures?—That is all. Yes.

3698. (Mr. Crawford.) I see there is a large deficit in the Mayor's Court in 1890, 12,918*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.*?—That is so. It is made up by the reduction of receipts and the increase of the payments in that particular year.

3699. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any general statement in the Corporation's own accounts which gives you the balance as a whole?—No; the Corporation accounts treat, in what they call the City's cash, the whole items together, and there is no separation of the individual items except for the purpose of accounting.

3700. In the separate accounts?—There are no separate accounts.

3701. Is there any general balance-sheet?—There is a general balance-sheet of the assets and liabilities, but that is not complete; it does not give the whole information, I think.

3702. It does not give the whole?—No, for the purposes which are set forth in the note they do not state the whole assets.

3703. Is there any statement in the Corporation's accounts from which one can say what are the whole of their assets and the whole of their liabilities, including all the subordinate accounts?—No, there is not.*

3704. There is not?—No, I should say not; no.

3705. (Chairman.) Then you proceed to give us principal items which account for these differences?—Then I have selected one or two items just to show shortly where the differences are accountable.

3706. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Gomme, I do not understand you to say that the accounts do not show the total liabilities of the Corporation?—Oh, no.

3707. But I gather that they do not show the assets?—They do not show the assets.

3708. But I think they show pretty clearly the liabilities?—Of course I am not in a position to judge that. I assume they do. I have no reasons to suppose that they do not; but they do not show the assets.

3709. The accounts themselves are pretty full, are they not, Mr. Gomme?—Oh, very; I know that to my cost.

3710. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any general account in the table of accounts of the Corporation that shows what you have shown here for each separate year—the balance of income and expenditure—the aggregate balances of income and expenditure, and the deficit or surplus?—No.

3711. There is no such thing?—No; because they include sales of property, for instance, and other capital receipts and expenditure, in one account, in the City's cash account.

3712. (Mr. Crawford.) That is to say, you have worked out the accounts according to your own theory and method, and they are worked out here by the City in a rather different manner?—Quite so.

3713. (Chairman.) It is a case of rearrangement. Now you proceed to take some view of the capital really, on page xii?—On page xii, then, I deal more in detail with some old heads, and I set out the sources of revenue from the general estates of the Corporation, using the words as far as possible as they appear in the accounts of the Corporation. That is the whole of the detail that the Corporation give as to their property.

3714. (Mr. Crawford.) Why do you omit the receipts from the Mayor's Court and the school fees?—Because the receipts from the Mayor's Court I have taken to be receipts in aid of the expenditure of the Mayor's Court.† In this I am dealing now entirely with only the rent account.

3715. Simply the rent account?—Yes.

* See also Payne, 6791–6802.
† See also Gomme, 4413–32.

* See also Payne, 6932–75, 7060–70.
† See also Payne, 6985.

3716. (Chairman.) And you have very little information as to what property those rents are derived from?—Only the information that is given in page xii. The information is duly separated as between the City of London and the outlying counties and Ireland.

3717. Rents and fines are all carried into the year's income?—All carried into the year's income, yes; and even a deposit on building agreements which you will see entered in 1890 as 3,000*l.*, and as minus in the two succeeding years is entered under revenue.

3718. (Mr. Crawford.) Probably this return—the 2,000*l.* and the 1,000*l.*—is the return of the 3,000*l.*? I believe that is so.

3719. That is to say, the money kept in hand for a certain period during construction, and then returned?—And then returned.

3720. (Chairman.) The only observation is, that it is put into income?—It is put into income, and is a slight disturbing cause, but I do not think it was so sufficiently to make any alteration in regard to that.

3721. Have you any knowledge of the principles upon which the Corporation grants leases or levies fines?—I have no knowledge at all. I know that in 1837 evidence was given before the Commission as to where the Corporation property was situated, in the second paragraph of that section.

3722. What is meant by commutation of fines?—Well, I hardly know,—it is entered in the City accounts as that,—unless it is that the rentholder commutes his fine for a capital sum.

3723. (Lord Farrer.) They seem to vary much from year to year?—Yes.

3724. (Chairman.) There was a very large sum realised in 1890, 10,000*l.*?—In 1890, yes.

3725. Commutation of fines in 1892, 400*l.* It varies?—That was applied to the Grain Duty Sinking Fund, as I have already noted.

3726. It was applied towards capital account?—It was applied towards the repayment of debt; yes.

3727. Although both items of receipt and expenditure are put into the ordinary income account?—Are put into the ordinary income account.

3728. (Mr. Smith.) In the same year there is a premium on granting a lease put into income?—That is put into the income account; not being an important item I left it there.

3729. (Chairman.) Well, the result appears to be probably a rental income of 160,000*l.* a year?—A rental income of about 160,000*l.* a year.

3730. (Lord Farrer.) On the whole, that is an increasing income, is it not? These particular years do not show it, but it is a considerably increasing income?—Yes. On page 40 I note that fact. It is, no doubt, an increasing income.

3731. (Chairman.) Page 40?—On page 40 I have extracted from the accounts showing how the rents have gone up from period to period, from 1869 to 1892. In 1869 there was 75,000*l.*; in 1892 there was 163,000*l.*

3732. (Mr. Crawford.) The two last columns are trust accounts?—The two last are trust accounts; yes.

3733. (Chairman.) Then your next table?—My next table, on page xiii, is simply for the purpose of showing that both the Court of Common Council and the Court of Aldermen have powers of drawing upon these funds, and the extent to which they respectively exercise those powers. The first table, on page xiii, is the amount that the Court of Common Council were responsible for in the year, and the second table, with the description entered in the first column, shows the amounts for which the Court of Aldermen were responsible in those years.

3734. Then against many of these items there were receipts?—Against many of these there were receipts, and they are set out on page xiv. I first of all give the expenditure and then deduct the receipts in aid, and show under each head what the net result is for the Court of Common Council and for the Court of Aldermen.

3735. (Mr. Crawford.) Then, is not that slightly misleading, because, taking your column at page xiii, I see you include the Mayor's Court and Schools, and yet in your column on page xii, you do not give the receipts of the Mayor's Court and scholars' fees?—Well, the items on page xiii are the net amounts which fall upon the Corporation estates, not the gross.

3736. (Chairman.) Is that so? I thought, for instance, Schools, it was the gross, 51,000*l.*—that there were receipts from Schools of 51,000*l.*?—I beg your pardon. That is so; they are included in there; in that 51,000*l.* would be the 40,000*l.* odd for Schools.

3737. I think the observation of Mr. Crawford is rather just. It would have been well to have had those receipts in aid brought more distinctly against the items for receipts and expenditure?—The items for receipts in aid should be explained to you.

3738. Explained specificially, yes?—That would be very easily done.*

3739. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, before you pass from page xiii, I should like to ask you one question. I see a statement here:—"The powers of the Court of "Aldermen to expend moneys were in the evidence "before the Commissioners of 1834 (page 67) and of "1854 (see Questions 2024–6), considered to be "unlimited." I do not know whether you have gone carefully through the evidence which has been given in this Inquiry, and have ascertained that the Court of Aldermen restrict themselves to drawing moneys for the purposes peculiar to that Court, such as magistracy, not for general purposes?—Oh, I believe that that is so. As a matter of fact, that statement simply has to do with their powers. How they exercise those powers is set out in the columns.

3740. (Chairman.) Your next sentence says:—"The expenditure actually incurred by them seems "to have been limited to honorary grants, pensions "to widows and orphans of deceased aldermen, and "charges in respect of their magisterial functions"?—That is so.

3741. (Mr. Crawford.) I was going to ask you a question in regard to that, "pensions to widows and "orphans of deceased aldermen." Can you tell me when last there was a payment of a pension to a widow or orphan of a deceased alderman?—No; I cannot offhand.

3742. You have taken considerable trouble to go back to the accounts since 1869—can you tell me when last there was a payment of that character?—I cannot charge my memory with any particular payment—no.

3743. May I take it that you have not found any such payments in modern times?—I certainly have not found a specific payment—certainly not. It is more the heading of the account than a specific charge. On page 39, I set out those payments, and it will be noticed that, in column 17, the Court of Aldermen's expenditure under that heading is 210*l.* per annum apparently.

3744. (Lord Farrer.) That is for the widows of freemen, is it not?—Yes; but a portion of it is payable by the Court of Common Council by order of the Court of Common Council, and the other is paid by the orders of the Court of Aldermen.

3745. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes; but there is a distinction between the widow of a freeman and the widow or orphan of an alderman?—Quite so.

3746. I think, Mr. Gomme, it is only fair to say that these are really doles. You may regard these as doles; they are Christmas gifts, as a matter of fact?—Yes.

3747–8. There is very little in it, but it might offend some of the aldermen to state that they create a pension fund of their own as it were?—Well, that expression is what I have taken from some document—it is the heading of the account rather than the actual expenditure.†

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

3749. (Mr. Smith.) There was something very like it in one of the previous Commissions. I do not know whether it came from that?—I think it is very likely. I think very likely I did get that expression from one of the previous Commissions.

3750. I think the figures are almost familiar to me. I think it comes from an extract from the previous Commission.

3751. (Chairman.) You go on to give the expenditure for the four years under consideration which was ordered by the Court of Aldermen, and there is no item in that which appears to be capable of covering a pension to a widow or orphan of an alderman?—No; certainly not. The accounts are marked with an asterisk, thus enabling us to distinguish items that are paid by the Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council respectively.

3752. Then, taking these two expenditures together, and deducting the receipts in aid, and comparing them with the rents of the City estates, you get the deficiencies in the four years?—We get deficiencies in the four years. Yes, that is to say, that the whole of their expenditure is not met out of the estates and funds.

3753. The deficiency running from 19,600*l.* up to 65,000*l.*?—Yes.

3754. It is met out of other sources, but not out of the estates?—But not out of the estates; yes.

3755. Now, the first of the other sources?—The first of the other sources is the interest on cash balances. I first set out the total amounts received by the Corporation in those four years for that purpose, and then I divide it between interest on securities invested by and belonging to the Corporation, and the other head is profit on the employment and interest of floating balances in the chamber. Those are the words used by the Corporation, it being that the use of these balances in 1889 produced 11,000*l.* odd; in 1890, 12,000*l.* odd; in 1891, 10,000*l.*; and in 1892, 9,000*l.* Then I explain shortly how it arises that this profit is made. In the offices of the Chamberlain, he being the City Treasurer not only of the Corporation accounts, but also of the City Trust accounts, and the Police Commissioners, and the City Commissioners of Sewers——

3756. (Mr. Crawford.) He acts as banker for them?—Banker—yes.

3757. (Chairman.) These receipts are not earmarked so as to meet the expenses of the Chamberlain's office?—No; the profits are put down in one sum, and of course one does not know how much is under each.

3758. You can tell whether they are profit or not, but they go in indiscriminately on the credit or debit side, as the case may be,—those items?—Yes.

3759. (Mr. Crawford.) You do not find any charge against either the Commissioners of Sewers or the Police Committee for keeping their accounts?—Not at all.

3760. Do you happen to know that an immense amount of work falls on the Chamberlain's department in keeping those accounts?—I do not know it as a matter of fact; but I can quite conceive it.

3761. I see a statement here:—"The ratepayers of "the City are taxed for the purposes of the City "Corporation; because the interest earned by the "cash balances of the City Commissioners of Sewers "and the Police Commissioners, instead of going in "relief of rates, as in all other rating authorities "throughout the kingdom, go to swell the funds of "the Corporation." Would that be quite a fair statement if there is work done by the Chamberlain's department for those two bodies?—I think it is so, in this way: that in all other rating authorities they have the command of their own cash balances, and they receive the interest on those cash balances.

3762. But they would have to pay, would they not a large staff for checking accounts, and collecting, and other matters that is all done in the Chamberlain's department?—They would, no doubt, have to pay their accountant's staff, but, of course, it is a question of amount, as to whether the amount that the Chamberlain receives from interest is either in excess or less than the amount which it would cost.*

3763. (Chairman.) Do you know what the average floating balance of the Commissioners of Sewers would be?—No, there is nothing to prove that, but in page xvi I set out the actual balances at the end of the year. Of course, between the first and the last date of those years they may float up to a large amount or down to a very low amount.

3764. You do not suggest that they make a bogus balance at the end of the year?—Oh dear, no.

3765. (Mr. Crawford.) I see you say, "to a slight extent only"?—Yes, because I have no means of judging to what extent, nor do I know how far the City Commissioners of Sewers have an expenditure of their own for keeping the accounts.

3766. You do not know at all whether it is customary for the Chamberlain to have to advance money to the City police before the rates are collected, for which no charge is made?—I do not know that that is so.

3767. And that is a charge that would reasonably be made by a banker, is it not?—Certainly.

3768. (Chairman.) It is not very much?—It is not very much.

3769. Supposing this 70,000*l.*, which appeared to be more than an average at the end of the year, that the City Commissioners of Sewers have of floating balance, that would not produce more than 1,400*l.* a year?

3770. (Mr. Crawford.) If I may be allowed to say so, I think it shows the County Council that they might do well to start a banking department; we find it pays?—In 1892 the balance of the Commissioners of Sewers was 126,000*l.*

3771. But much lower in other years?—Much lower in other years.

3772. Seventy thousand pounds is the average of all?—Yes.

3773. (Lord Farrer.) After all, it is not very important, is it?—It is two pockets of the same persons?

3774. (Mr. Crawford.) What I objected to was the statement that we were taxing the ratepayers. We rather claim the credit that we come to the assistance of the ratepayers?—It is scarcely two pockets of the same persons, Lord Farrer.

3775. (Lord Farrer.) The ratepayers and the Corporation?—It simply tends to point out the difference in the City, that the Commissioners of Sewers do not have the same privilege or otherwise of dealing with their cash balances as any other rating authority in the kingdom.

3776. (Chairman.) The result appears to be that there are cash balances in the hands of the Chamberlain very much exceeding 30,000*l.*?—That looks as if it were so; yes.

3777. These are at the end of the year?—Those are at the end of the year only.

3778. You do not know when the rents would be coming in?—No, but presumably on the four quarter days.

3779. And therefore the end of the year would not be the most favourable time, would it?—Probably not.

3780. To balance accounts — to depend on the receipt of rents?—Probably not. No, I should think not. In that case the general estates, of course, would be low.

3781. The amount received from interest on these cash balances appears to have been a little over 10,000*l.* on an average?—A little over 10,000*l.* on an average—yes.

3782. And if these were the average cash balances, that would be over 2½ per cent.?—Yes, on an average that would be so—a little more in one year.

* See also Gomme, 4333–9. See also Payne, 6986–96.

3783. If you take it at 400,000*l.*, which is an excess, you say?—Yes, an excess.

3784. Two and a half per cent. would be 10,000*l.*?—Would be 10,000*l.*

3785. Which is about the average?—Yes.

3786. The Chamberlain seems to make his money well. We will now proceed to the question of the markets?—In the next section I deal with the markets, pointing out that in the first table I give the receipts in the four years—the gross receipts.

3787. There are two markets you put aside as being special?—Two markets—the Coal Market and the Deptford Cattle Market—I put aside. The other markets are those markets that appear in the accounts—the revenue from which appears in the accounts to go to the General Estates of the Corporation. They are not dealt with in any other way by the Corporation but as their ordinary private property.

3788. (Lord Farrer.) And it comes into the accounts?—It comes into the accounts.

3789. Just in the same way as the rents?—In the same way as the rents.

3790. (Chairman.) Dealing strictly with the expenditure, exclusive of loans, these show a considerable surplus?—Exclusive of loans they show a considerable surplus.

3791. About 160,000*l.* a year?—About 160,000*l.* a year.

3792. Which would seem to be something like two-thirds of the receipts?—Yes, that would be so on an average.

3793. That is a very large receipt to make in the way of profit out of the market?

3794. (Lord Farrer.) The debts are very heavy?—The debts are very heavy.

3795. (Chairman.) Then the expenditure on loans?—Expenditure in respect of debt in the four years was in respect of interest only; there was no repayment of capital. I give the actual figures under each different market in respect of the four years. Then I bring out the surplus.

3796. Are those loans perpetual loans?—No, they are loans renewable at particular periods.

3797. They are not annuities or loans that come to an end at any given time?—No.

3798. So that if they come to an end they have to be renewed?—They have to be either repaid or renewed.

3799. They have to be repaid or renewed?—Yes.

3800. They are not perpetual in the sense that a person who has the bond may claim to be repaid at the particular time that the bond matures?—They are repayable at the time the bond is matured.

3801. On the important point of perpetuity is the Corporation under any obligation to redeem and extinguish such bonds within a limited period?—There is no annual payment; I only know that, as a matter of fact, within these years they did not extinguish any bonds. Whether they exchanged them, or how they dealt with the bonds as they fell due, of course is not disclosed by the accounts.

3802. (Mr. Crawford.) You do not know whether the bonds are repayable at a fixed period?—I believe that is so; but I do not know it as a matter of fact.*

3803. (Lord Farrer.) Repayable—that the Corporation are bound to repay them to the bondholder.

3804. (Mr. Crawford.) I mean to say that an ordinary bond is issued for a certain sum of money repayable on a certain date?—Oh, I understood that. I beg your pardon. I did not quite understand your previous question.

3805. (Chairman.) They may be repayable and renewable, or repayable on an application to extinguish?—Yes.

3806. The former is the position you understand to be taken?—The former.

3807. (Mr. Smith.) There is no reduction of debt in the first instance?—There is no reduction of debt.

3808. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find in your own schedule that you give the repayments?—Yes, I give the dates of the repayments in each class at page 44–45. I did not quite understand your previous question.

3809. (Chairman.) So far we have arrived at this, that the revenue meets the expenditure with a small surplus, but not a very large one, towards the extinction of debt?—That is so, something like 12,000*l.*; 10,000*l.* to 12,000*l.*

3810. Then the reserve fund, what is that?—That is the account of the Corporation, that I confess I had a great deal of difficulty in understanding; and in order to satisfy myself how it was, I analysed it from 1869 to 1892, and I just shortly summarised the result of that. However that operated in the earlier years, during these four years that I have more particularly paid attention to, the reserve fund, from the point of view of account only, seems to have been confined to a matter of transfer from the Clerkenwell Improvement Account, which was then closing, to the Holborn Valley account, or from that account to the General Estates of the Corporation.*

3811. (Mr. Crawford.) Might that be explained in this way, Mr. Gomme? Assuming that the Corporation had expended large sums in connexion with the improvement, and then repaid themselves at suitable periods by tranfers from the reserve fund, might that not be the explanation of what you call a mere transfer account? Is it not really a payment from the reserve fund to the Corporation itself by way of recoupment for moneys expended on outstanding improvements?—Perfectly so. I quite understand that that may be so. But my point was, that taking the figures of these particular years it did not operate in any other way than that I have explained. I am not suggesting that the transfers were improper in any way. I am simply saying that for the purpose of the four years, and treating revenue as distinct from capital, all that the reserve fund account did was to operate as a transfer account. As to whether the transfers were proper or not I have no knowledge.

3812. You do not suggest that they were not proper?—Oh, certainly not.

3813. (Chairman.) The fund was created in 1857?—The fund was created in 1857, it appears, by order of the Common Council, and it has had a great deal of money paid into it, and paid out of it during those years, as I set forth there.

3814. Yes, you start from 1869. You give at the bottom, I see, an extract from the report of Mr. Hicks?—Yes; that was a piece of information—the only piece of information really that I had available to explain to me anything about the reserve fund, and I printed it for the information of the Committee.

3815. What was the date of that report?—Well, unfortunately I did not get the exact date. It was not very long ago. The document was made public.

3816. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes. I think it was about 1889, as far as I can remember?—I think it was somewhere about that.

3817. (Chairman.) He speaks of the last 15 or 16 years. It is rather desirable to know what years are referred to. Well, he gives an explanation of the cause of the creation of this fund apparently?—Yes; he gives a short explanation of the way the fund then operated.

3818. (Lord Farrer.) But the object of it was to meet the falling-in of certain leases?—To meet the falling in of certain leases on the Finsbury estate.

3819. (Chairman.) Those were ecclesiastical leases; the Ecclesiastical Commissioners refused to renew, were they not?—That I do not know.

3820. (Mr. Crawford.) I think, Mr. Chairman, that these were the prebendal estates, of which the Corporation used to get very beneficial leases from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and which, I believe, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners refused to renew.

* See also Gomme, 4117–25.

* See also Payne, 6997.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

3821. (Lord Farrer.) And those have all come to an end now?

3822. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

3823. (Lord Farrer.) Therefore the original cause for the fund has come to an end to.

3824. (Mr. Crawford.) The original cause may have come to an end.

3825. (Mr. Smith.) Or rather its necessity.

3826. (Lord Farrer.) The necessity for the fund.

3827. (Chairman.) Well, what can you tell us about this fund and its operation?—Well, I am afraid I can tell you very little more than I have, except so far as is disclosed by Mr. Hicks' report.

3828. You do not know how this half million of money to which he refers was formed?—No; I have no information upon that point. I simply printed this report for the information of the Committee when they were considering the subject.

3829. (Mr. Crawford.) You see they had an enormous expenditure in connection with the Thames sewage outfall, incurring something like 24,000*l.*

3830. (Lord Farrer.) This gives one to understand that a very large part of the reserve fund has been spent upon these objects?

3831. (Mr. Crawford.) Upon these very objects?

3832. (Lord Farrer.) Which are mentioned here.

3833. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, and the gist of the report was to show the Corporation that they had really been far too liberal.

3834. (Chairman.) It would appear that they had this reserve fund to operate upon if they saw anything ornamental or otherwise desirable.

3835. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I am afraid you cannot call the Thames outfall ornamental.

3836. (Chairman.) Queen Anne's Statue, almshouses.

3837. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, that may be ornamental. But you see the enlargement of the City of London Pauper Lunatic Asylum, under ordinary circumstances, would come out of the county rate, and that came out of the Corporation reserve fund?—Yes, that is so.

3838. (Chairman.) Is that reserve fund fed in any way now?—During the four years it has only been fed from the Clerkenwell Improvement Account.

3839. A transfer?—And interest on the City bonds that were placed in the reserve fund.

3840. (Mr. Crawford.) There has been no chance of feeding it since the loss of the coal dues; it has been absolutely stranded. The Corporation was absolutely stranded by the loss of the coal dues.

3841. (Lord Farrer.) In this account of the receipts from rents, there has been no great falling-off in the rents in consequence of the falling in of these leases. They seem to go on—the aggregate sums seem to go on pretty steadily.

3842. (Mr. Crawford.) Apparently by the schedule which is set out here, it is so, Lord Farrer. It seems to be so.

3843. (Chairman.) Then we must go on to the next item—charges for debt to the general estate?—I then deal with the question of the charges for debt, and I divide those into two classes, namely, those charged directly and finally upon the Corporation estates, and those charged first upon market rates and dues and then upon the Corporation estates as collateral security.

3844. (Mr. Crawford.) I find that the Finsbury lease fell in in 1867?—That is just before I began.

3845. You commenced in 1869?—In 1869—that is so; yes.

3846. (Mr. Smith.) Could you tell us, Mr. Crawford, roughly, what was the loss sustained by the falling in.

3847. (Mr. Crawford.) Of the Finsbury leases?

3848. (Mr. Smith.) Yes.

3849. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, it was long before my time, Mr. Smith. I can get the information.

3850. (Mr. Smith.) I did not know whether you might know.

3851. (Mr. Crawford.) I will endeavour to answer the question.*

3852. (Chairman.) Will you go on?—I then set out in Class "A" the loans charged directly upon the Corporation estates and their interest—in respect of Highgate Woods, Leadenhall Market Approach, Pauper Lunatic Asylum, and a portion of the Metropolitan Cattle Market debt. I then give the loans in detail, and show, from the statement annexed to the Corporation accounts, when those loans are due, and the amount of interest that is payable thereon. The amount on Highgate Woods is 5,000*l.*, due in 1892, the yearly interest amounting to 150*l.* The loan for the Leadenhall Market Approach is 148,800*l.*, repayable in various years, the last one being 1907; and the amount of interest that was payable on that loan in that period will be 32,000*l.* And the loan for the Pauper Lunatic Asylums is 8,000*l.*, repayable in 1898; the yearly interest being 240*l.* The loan for the Metropolitan Cattle Market for the extension of the lairs and slaughter-houses, that is charged upon the general estates to the amount of 78,600*l.*, repayable at various years, the last one being 1902, and the interest due within that period being 15,835*l.* Then I summarise that, and point out that the total debt chargeable directly upon the Corporation estates is 240,400*l.*, and the amount payable thereon for principal during the current year (1893) was 36,000*l.*, and the interest 8,163*l.*, or altogether 44,163*l.*

3853. The two great loans in that class are in process of gradual extinction—Leadenhall Market Approach and the Metropolitan Cattle Market?—Not quite so.

3854. Subject possibly to the power of reborrowing?—Subject to the power of renewal if thought advisable.

3855. But with respect to the smaller loans of Highgate Woods and Pauper Lunatic Asylums, there is no provision for payment until they are due?—The whole sum is due at one particular time—yes. Then under Class "B"——

3856. Now, these loans have been in course of payment all during the years that you have been reviewing?—Yes, that is so.

3857. Well, have they been renewed during those years?—The Highgate Woods loan has not been renewed.

3858. I mean the Leadenhall Market Approach and the Metropolitan Cattle Market?—The Leadenhall Market.

3859. Those periods and sums for repayment—no doubt as you have gone backward you can go forward, from 1893 to 1895, and 1897, and 1902; there could be something corresponding to that in the past?—There would be something corresponding to that in the past—yes.

3860. As these capital sums were paid off, was there any renewal of the debt?—I could not answer that off-hand. I should have to look into that. But my impression is that there has been a certain amount paid off the Leadenhall Market Approach in 1892, but not for the Metropolitan Cattle Market, I believe.

3861. It is not every year; you see 1893–1896 in one case?—Oh, not every year; sums are not due every year.

3862. (The Secretary.) In page xvii. you say there was no repayment out of principal?—That is for markets alone; but this is not for the markets. Leadenhall Market Approach is a loan chargeable not upon the market rents but upon the Corporation estates.

3863. The Metropolitan Cattle Market?—The Metropolitan Cattle Market is a loan charged upon the Corporation estates, and not upon the market revenue. But, as a matter of fact, I know that only interest was paid upon the Metropolitan Cattle Market in that year.

* See Q. 3901–9.

3864. (Mr. Holt.) There is no sinking fund then, is there, to redeem these loans?—No, there is no sinking fund.

3865. They go on perpetually then? They may be renewed?—They may be renewed.

3866. (Chairman.) They may be; the only question is whether, in fact, they are?—I know, as a matter of fact, as between 1891 and 1892 there were certain loans, some got paid off and some got renewed; but I could not give you the exact figures at the present moment here.

3867. (Lord Farrer.) Can you find out from the accounts?—Oh, yes; I could find that out. The Corporation give it very fully in their table at the end. Their statement of loans is very complete, and it is simply a matter of picking it out.

3868. (Mr. Crawford.) With regard to markets, I have just referred to the Acts, so as to clear up the point raised by Lord Farrer. I see there is no stipulated time for repayment; but the amount of the loans is restricted by the several Acts, and power is given to the Corporation to borrow the money under the common seal of the Corporation, with bonds in such form, and containing such stipulations and conditions as they may think fit, and the Corporation has power from time to time to pay off, and in the same way, to reborrow.

3869. (Lord Farrer.) Yes.

3870. (Mr. Crawford.) So that the total amount does not exceed the amount mentioned in the Act.

3871. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so; they have power to borrow to a limited amount, but they are not bound to pay that off within any given time.

3872. (Mr. Crawford.) The reason apparently being that they are not merely secured upon the market revenue, but upon the whole of the estates of the Corporation. They have something more than the mere tolls of the market as security.

3873. (Mr. Smith.) The practice there would differ entirely from the way in which any other Corporation would treat it. Any other Corporation would borrow not upon the tolls, but upon the general rates of the Corporation, and yet would be subject not only to pay its interest but also to provide the sinking fund for the repayment of the principal; therefore, it would make a greater charge upon the ratepayer than an ordinary municipal borough.

3874. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes; that is where it is charged simply upon rates, of course; an ordinary borough not having property such as the Corporation have.

3875. (Mr. Smith.) But many boroughs have property.

3876. (Mr. Holt.) We pay those things off.

3877. (Chairman.) Looking forward to page 44, I see a statement there with reference to the Leadenhall Market Approach Loan. The total amount raised; adding those four sums together, I find the total amount raised is the total amount now outstanding?—Oh, then that would prove that there was nothing repaid.

3878. Nothing has been repaid there?—Nothing had been repaid on that account.

3879. Is there anything repaid on the Metropolitan Cattle Market?—The Metropolitan Cattle Market would come on page 40, I think. Metropolitan Cattle Market (1882–5); there there is only a balance of 78,600*l.*

3880. A great deal has gone there?—Yes.

3881. Those are charged on the markets as well as on the General Estates?—Not these two loans; the Leadenhall Market Approach and the Metropolitan Cattle Market, as I understand it, are charged upon the general estates; and the Metropolitan Cattle Market, which is the sum in question which we are now dealing with in the first column—I may now correct myself; in the first column, the whole of that sum, namely 78,600*l.*, which was borrowed in 1855–56 to the extent of 43,000*l.*, and in 1873 to the extent of 35,600*l.*; the whole of that is still outstanding.

3882. That makes the 78,600*l.*?—That makes the 78,600*l., which is chargeable upon the general revenues of the Corporation, and not upon the market tolls. So that nothing of those two loans has been paid off.

3883. Yes, I see. Then there has been no repayment of those?—No. Then I take the loans outstanding at the end of 1892 upon the market rents and dues, and I set them forth.

3884. That is, primarily upon those?—Primarily upon those. Quite so. And I set them forth under the heading of each market, showing a total of 2,509,000*l.*, the details of which are given in pages 42 to 45. I give the date at which each loan falls due, and the amount of interest that is payable within the year in which they fall due.

3885. Well now, there appears to be the 400,000*l.* on the Metropolitan Cattle Market — the original total amount?—Yes, that appears to be so.

3886. It has not been reduced; but surely it must have been paid off and renewed? — Paid off and renewed, no doubt—yes.

3887. There has been no reduction?—There has been no reduction.

3888. There must have been sums outstanding repayable in the past which have been re-borrowed?—No doubt, which have been re-borrowed. It was first borrowed in 1852.

3889. (Mr. Crawford.) Then bondholders get the benefit of that clause which I referred to just now in the Contagious Diseases Animals Act, in which the moment the debt is paid off on the Foreign Cattle Market, the profits are to be applied for the reduction of the debt on the Metropolitan Cattle Market?—Oh, yes.

3890. (Chairman.) Then the London and Central Markets also—do you know about that also? It is difficult to add up all those figures?—Some of these have been paid off. In the column "Amount paid off," part of the 1863 loan has been paid off to the extent of 113,000*l.*; and the part of the 1875 loan has been paid off—85,000*l.*—that has been paid off during last year, as I explained on page xxi. Then the Billingsgate Market—there seems to be 4,000*l.* paid off that, leaving outstanding 268,000*l.*

3891. You say certain sums were paid off during last year? — There was a sale of the Farringdon Market in 1892, and financial arrangements were made for the redemption of that loan out of the proceeds of the Farringdon Market. It really did not actually occur in the year 1892, but certain financial transactions took place which effected that.

3892. (Mr. Crawford.) The amount was applied?—The amount was applied. Oh, yes; I point that out on the second paragraph of page xxi.; 85,000*l.* was paid off in 1892 by means of a temporary loan pending the completion of the sale.†

3893. (Chairman.) There you have brought in, I see, Deptford market, into which we have not yet entered?—I have not explained that total yet; shall I go on with it now?

3894. Yes, please?—Then, for the purpose of estimating what the total market debt upon the Corporation might be, we have first of all to estimate the probable income from the general markets, which I have put at 100,000*l.* You will see the evidence of that at page xvii. And then I have estimated the probable income from the Deptford Cattle Market at 22,000*l.* The evidence for that is on page xxxiii.

3895. (Lord Farrer.) What is the reason for the apparent increases in the income available in particular years?—Two years are taken there. I have taken the exact years of the loan. This table is a mere calculating table. It is not an account table, it is simply for the purpose of calculation. I have set out the debt payable under each loan, and then the interest payable, and then the income available to meet those charges. That is simply my estimate of the way in which those charges are to be met from income. And then having arrived at that table I proceed to estimate what would be the ultimate charge which would fall upon the City Estates from the market debt. I give in the first column the principal due on bonds on the different dates at which they are due. I then calculate the interest, and give that in the second column; and then if we go on to the fourth column I give there the income available for principal after paying interest, that is, deducting the interest, 88,443*l.*, from the income available, namely, 122,000*l.*—in the first year it is 143,882*l.*—and then after showing the amount of income available for the paying of principal, I apply it to that purpose and re-borrow the unpaid principal at 3 per cent. This is merely for the purpose of estimating what would be the charge at the end of 1907 upon the General Estates of the Corporation. The last column shows the accumulation of debt each year by that process, charging only 3 per cent. for the unpaid amounts each year, and it shows that at the end of 1907, when the last bonds fall due, if the money were re-borrowed at 3 per cent., there would be a debt then upon the markets of 1,805,292*l.*

3896. (Chairman.) Is that figure shown?—That is on page xxii. I then apply the free income, the 122,000*l.* will then be free; and then I estimate how long it will take to repay that debt, and it works out 20 years; and then that points to the fact that the markets would not be free from their present debt, that is, if the whole revenue is applied to it, until 1927, and of course none of their revenues in that case would be available for general purposes. Then the important consideration comes in as to the value of market rents. Burdett puts it at 23 years, and this calculation makes it 34 years from the present date, although less than 23 years from the date when they fall due.* But it is a matter for consideration. Then I go on further to point out that the whole of this income being hypothecated to the existing debt it leaves no margin for any future capital expenditure that might be required; and in order to test what that capital expenditure might be I set out in the table at the bottom of the page what the capital expenditure on the Central Markets and the Deptford Cattle Market has been in the four years under consideration, and pointing out that it amounted to 132,573*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* in the four years.

3897. Very large in one year especially?—Very large in one year.

3898. Do you know the character of that expenditure?—In 1891—I believe it is stated in the accounts, the construction of the London Central General Market and the fruit and vegetable section—purchase of the site.

3899. (Lord Farrer.) That would probably bring with it some additional income, would it not?—No doubt that is so. That particular expenditure, no doubt, would, because it is the purchase of a site and the enlargement of the market. But other expenditure is not of the same character.

3900. (Mr. Crawford.) No, but I see you rather sum it up, and you draw an inference from the fact. You say:—"There is one point further which affects "the value of market revenues as applicable to "existing debt chargeable on those revenues; namely, "that if applied to the extinction of existing debt "there is no provision for the next 34 years for any "new capital expenditure on the markets. This is a "serious matter, as even during the four years under "consideration the following capital expenditure has "been incurred, and it is not reasonable to suppose "that this can now cease for the next 34 years." Whereas this appears to be an unusual expenditure which will bring in a profit in all probability?—Yes, that is so; and probably, therefore, that remark on page xxii might be a little modified.†

3901. It struck me that the remark was a little strained. May I answer Mr. Smith's question?‡

3902. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, thank you.

3903. (Mr. Crawford.) I find that, taking the average of the 20 years prior to the Finsbury leases falling in, it was about 40,000*l.* a year which the Corporation lost.

3904. (Mr. Smith.) By the non-renewal?

3905. (Mr. Crawford.) By the non-renewal—yes.

3906. (Mr. Smith.) Was any part of the sinking fund applied towards a special fund for that purpose?

3907. (Mr. Crawford.) That, I am sorry to say, I cannot answer you offhand.

3908. (Lord Farrer.) They clearly found themselves in possession of a considerable surplus arising from the savings of former years, which they have applied, as Mr. Hicks states, in the way mentioned there.

3909. (Mr. Crawford.) I believe, as a matter of history, that there was some slip made—a certain notice was not given, and advantage was taken of that fact, and the Corporation lost the power to renew.*

3910. (Chairman.) We now come to the trust funds of the City. They appear to belong to two classes—those in which the property is given up exclusively to the particular fund, and those in which there is a residuary benefit to the City itself?—Yes, that is the general character of the trusts.

3911. What are those in which the City has a residuary interest?—There are two of those—the City of London Court and the Deptford Cattle Market.

3912. And in all other cases, I take it, the funds are exclusively devoted to the particular trusts with which they are associated?—In other cases the funds are exclusively devoted to the particular trusts with which they are associated.

3913. What is the first of them?—The first of them is the Gresham Estates, and I set out at page xxiii shortly the nature of the charges to which they are applicable—first, to the Royal Exchange, and, secondly, to the Gresham College; and then for the four years under consideration, I give a synopsis of the amounts spent for those purposes.

3914. The income is something under 10,000*l.* a year—between 9,000*l.* and 10,000*l.* a year?—The income is about 9,000*l.* a year.

3915. Does half of that income belong to the Gresham Trust?—Yes, one half belongs to the Corporation.

3916. The expenditure sometimes exceeds and sometimes falls below that?—Yes, the expenditure sometimes exceeds and sometimes falls below that; but practically it is about the same.

3917. Is there a debt upon that trust?—There is a debt upon that trust, and interest and repayment are charged in the three years—1889, 1890, 1891.

3918. Is that a diminishing debt?—That is a diminishing debt; that is, so much is paid off each year, and that diminishes the amount of interest. In the year 1892 they did not pay off any of the debt, but they provided an investment of 4,091*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, which presumably would go to a sinking fund for that debt.

3919. You cannot tell us any particulars of the debt, perhaps?—Yes, the particulars of the debt are given at page 44. On the rebuilding of the Royal Exchange the original debt was 85,000*l.*, and that sum was borrowed in 1842, of which 17,800*l.* has been paid off.

3920. That is at page 44?—That is at page 44, and that leaves 67,200*l.* chargeable upon it——

3921. But half of that applies to the City?—The whole of those figures apply to the City; they represent the half which belongs to the City.

3922. (Mr. Crawford.) It is charged on the City's moiety of the Gresham Estate?—Yes.

3923. (Chairman.) And the balance now is 67,000*l.*?—The balance now is 67,200*l.*

3924. At 3½ per cent.?—At 3½ per cent.

* See also Payne, 6880–94.
† See also Gomme, 6161–2.
‡ See Qq. 3846–51.

* See also Payne, 6997–7006.

3925. That is about 2,000*l.* a year?—Yes; interest.

3926. And the property, therefore, may well pay that with considerable instalments of principal?—Yes.

3927. It seems to me that that would be; however, for our purpose, it is wholly immaterial?—Yes; for our purpose it is wholly immaterial.

3928. Because the funds are exclusively devoted to the trust?—Yes, because the funds are exclusively devoted to the trust.

3929. The City has no interest in it?—Apparently not.

3930. Whatever happens to the City, all that would happen in this case would probably be some fresh nomination of trustees?—That would be so.

3931. (Mr. Crawford.) You know, as a matter of fact, that it is managed by a joint committee of the Mercers' Company and the Corporation?—Yes, I believe that is so.

3932. And the clerk to the committee is the clerk to the Mercers' Company?—Yes, I understand that that is so.

3933. (Chairman.) Then the Bridge House Estates are also exclusively devoted to the trust?—Yes, the Bridge House Estates are exclusively devoted to the trust.

3934. The former fund was under the will of Sir Thomas Gresham?—Yes; the former fund was under the will of Sir Thomas Gresham, about 1575.

3935. What is the history of this trust?—The Bridge House Estates—I quote from Mr. Brand's evidence in 1854, which gives a short account of the origin of the estates, that is the only information I have——

3936. He sums it up by saying, "The result is a "fund held in trust for the maintenance and "support of London Bridge"?—That is so.

3937. But it has been administered as a fund entrusted for any of the bridges over the Thames?—No; it has been administered as a trust for the Blackfriars Bridge, and for Southwark Bridge by an Act of Parliament, the 30th of Victoria, chapter 3; latterly, of course, for the purposes of the Tower Bridge by another Act of Parliament passed in 1885.

3938. (Mr. Crawford.) That is so; the trust has been extended by statute?—Yes; the trust has been extended by statute.

3939. (Chairman.) Does not Kew come into it?—No; Kew was dealt with out of the coal and wine duties.

3940. Parliament has enacted that this trust might be rightly extended to many bridges over the Thames?—Parliament has enacted that this trust might be rightly extended beyond London Bridge, and has, in fact, extended it to three other bridges.

3941. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that quite a fair way of putting it, Mr. Gomme; is it not that Parliament has, on the application of the Corporation, sanctioned the use of the fund for particular bridges, not has held that it is generally applicable to bridges?—No, I did not say it was generally applicable to bridges; my reply was, that it had, as a matter of fact, been extended from London Bridge to two or three other bridges.

3942. All those Acts have been promoted by the Corporation?—Distinctly so.

3943. It has been on the application of the Corporation for liberty to extend the trust to a particular bridge which was the subject-matter of the Bill before Parliament?—Distinctly, that is so, but then it would be difficult to say, if the Corporation had not done that, what they would have done with the balances.

3944. (Lord Farrer.) It simply amounts to this: That the Corporation look upon themselves as the representatives of the public interest, and having this fund in hand, thought they could not do better than apply it to the improvement of other bridges besides London Bridge, very much to their credit; but in doing so they acted as representatives of the general public of London?—Yes, I take it that they had this money in hand; they could not apply it to any purpose without applying to Parliament, and they applied to Parliament to permit them to apply it to bridges.

3945. (Chairman.) They might possibly have gone to the Court of Chancery for a cy près administration. I think the making of bridges is within the definition of charges?—Yes, of course that may be so.

3946. (Lord Farrer.) But practically it has made the Corporation to a very considerable extent a general bridge authority for that part of London?—Yes, it has made the Corporation a general bridge authority for that part of London within the limits of the City, which is a county of itself.

3947. Is the Tower Bridge within the limits of the City?—The Tower Bridge is within the limits.

3948. (Mr. Crawford.) It is just a little beyond on both sides?—Just a little beyond.

3949. (Lord Farrer.) And the other side is also beyond the limits of the City?—And the other side too.

3950. (Mr. Crawford.) The bridges themselves are held to be within the city. They are patrolled by the City Police, and of course managed by the City Authorities, although extending beyond the City limits.

3951. (Mr. Smith.) The Tower Bridge is within the Liberty of the Tower?

3952. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

3953. (Chairman.) On the south side?

3954. (Mr. Crawford.) No, that is within the area of the London County Council.

3955. (Chairman.) Subject to a power that might be exercised on the part of the Corporation with the sanction of Parliament, this is an exclusive trust for bridge purposes?—This is an exclusive trust for bridge purposes.

3956. (Lord Farrer.) You do not know whether there are any distinct trust deeds under which that trust is exercised?—No, I have no knowledge of them.

3957. (Mr. Crawford.) I think in all the preambles to the various Acts it is set out simply as a trust for the maintenance and support of London Bridge.—I think those are the words, I have quoted them from one Act.

3958. (Chairman.) What was Mr. Brand's official position?—I think he was Comptroller.

3959. (Mr. Crawford.) Comptroller of the Bridge House Estates?—Yes.

3960. (Chairman.) That is an affluent trust?—Yes, that is an affluent trust, and it results, after payment of debt, interest, and repayment, in a balance of 104,012*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*

3961. That is after appropriating very large sums to this new project of the Tower Bridge?—Yes.

3962. Apart from that it would be a very affluent trust?—Yes, apart from that it would be a very affluent trust. There is a possibility, I believe, of liabilities accruing against the balance for compensation for damage to the property of wharfingers during the construction of the Tower Bridge; but that liability, of course, would be of a temporary nature.

3963. Then the coal duty?—That being a trust that pays for itself, separates itself from the general estates of the Corporation. It does not affect the Corporation at all in any other way.

3964. Yes, but there are peculiarities connected with it which it is interesting to enter upon. Certain debts have been contracted, leaving a burden on the Corporation?—I was then alluding to the Bridge House Estates.

3965. I beg your pardon, the coal duty?—The coal duty is now a matter of the past; but for the information of the Committee, I set out the heads under which the coal duty arose, and the application of it at various stages.

3966. It goes back to the Charter of James I.?—I believe that that is so.

3967. Did that charter charge that duty with specific trusts?—I do not know about the Charter of James I.; it was a little later I was thinking of.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

3968. The words you have quoted are: "The "Corporation had received to their own use all profits "belonging to the office of measurer, and the Charter "confirmed all the fees and measurings aforesaid, "and the profits belonging to them, and the uses "and customs aforesaid to the Corporation and their "successors, and further granted to the Corporation "and their successors the office of measurer of, "amongst other things, all coals which might be "brought into the Port of London or the Thames in "any ship or vessel, or which might be brought into "any shore or wharf of the Thames from Staines "Bridge to a place called Yentleete, otherwise Yant-"leet, near the sea, together with the right to receive "all profits belonging to the said office of mea-"surer"?—Yes; that was under the Charter of James I.

3969. (Lord Farrer.) One of the old town dues by that charter was for the measuring of coal; that was its origin practically. There is nothing that arises upon it now, is there?—There is nothing that arises upon it now, as it really has ceased.

3970. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact, it did originally form part of the estates of the Corporation, and then by Statute it was applied to particular purposes, and the very reason why under the recent Coal Duties Abolition Act the Corporation were allowed to have another year, was really by way of compensation for giving up their ancient chartered rights which would have revived, and any profits derived from the exercise of them would have still formed part of their revenues and estates.

3971. (Lord Farrer.) And also was it not upon the plea that they had, on the strength of those coal duties, undertaken very considerable liabilities which would leave them at a great loss if the coal duties were taken away from them at once.

3972. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, certainly, that is clearly shown by the evidence.

3973. (Chairman.) I think there might be some dispute—it is unnecessary to enter upon it—as to the cause of that prolongation.

3974. (Mr. Crawford.) Except that I am merely relying upon the preamble of the Act, and also the evidence which was given. I remember I had a good deal to do with it at the time, and that was one of the reasons why we put forward the claim, and it was compensated for by giving us continuance for one year.

3975. (Chairman.) Was it not added to the recital on consideration of your giving up your charter.

3976. (Mr. Cawford.) It recites our ancient charter rights, and then it also recites the remainder of this debt, and it continues the duties for one year, the produce to be applied in part payment of the debt on the Holborn Valley Improvement.

3977. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know, as matter of fact, whether the coal dues did pay all the liabilities which the Corporation incurred on the strength of them?—They paid off the liabilities so far as Kew and other bridges were concerned, but they did not pay off all the liability on the Holborn Valley Improvement.

3978. (Mr. Crawford.) The Kew and other Bridges Debt was not a liability of the Corporation, because under the Kew and other Bridges Act there was a joint Committee of the Metropolitan Board of Works and the City of London?—That is so.

3979. A distinct Corporation in fact?—A distinct Corporation, only that the dues were appropriated to that particular purpose.

3980. Certainly?—For the one year.

3981. For the one year?

3982. (Chairman.) What is the trust of the Coal Market?—Well, the Coal Market is peculiar, and I am not quite sure about that; but so far as the information goes, I have set it forth on page xxvi. The Corporation have the establishment of the Coal Market in their hands, and then by the first and second Victoria the dues cease. "When and so soon as the same "dividends and interest shall be fully sufficient for "the purposes last mentioned, then ever from thence-"forth the said duty of 1*d.* per ton of coals, cinders, "and culm shall cease." Well, the accounts say that this market does not pay on the whole, at all events for these four years. There was a deficit balance in 1890, and there was a deficit balance in 1891, and there was a deficit balance in 1892; and a small surplus balance in 1889.

3983. When did the 1*d.* a ton cease to be received?—That ceased, I believe, after the first and second Victoria.

3984. (Lord Farrer.) Does this deficit now fall upon the general funds of the Corporation?—That deficit does not, I believe, fall upon the general funds of the Corporation.*

3985. (Chairman.) There was no fear of renewing that duty of 1*d.* a ton in consequence of the receipts being insufficient?—Well, that is a legal question that I am afraid I would rather not answer.

3986. The whole affair seems to be rather a small business?—Very small, apparently.

3987. For the present is there going on an accumulation of debt against that trust?—No, it is scarcely as an accumulation of debt against that trust. Yes, it is so; that is to say, it is an accumulation against the balances.

3988. It is absolutely separate from the Corporation estates?—That is so.

3989. It is a debt due?—It is a debt due.

3990. Now due?—Met by the reduction of balances.

3991. Do you know the amount about due to the Corporation from that trust?—No, I have not gone further into it than these four years to ascertain whether the previous years resulted in deficits in the same way, but as matter of fact, I know that they have a balance from that market to meet these deficits, and I assume, therefore, the previous years were profitable.

3992. Probably there is no considerable sum owing; except in unusual cases, there is no very great amount one way or the other on the annual accounts?—No, I should think not, but it would be ascertainable.

3993. (Lord Farrer.) Supposing there was a deficiency, would it be paid for out of the general funds of the Corporation?—That I do not know.

3994. You do not know?—No, it is very small, you see, the last deficiency is only 158*l.*

3995. (Chairman.) What is the Clerkenwell Improvement Trust?—The Clerkenwell Improvement was carried out under Acts which are set down, and the improvement seems to be finished now, and the accounts are simply the record of the sale of property of surplus lands, and the revenue derived from rents.

3996. But the trust does not appear to be exclusively in the interests of the Corporation?—No, the Corporation have advanced moneys to the Clerkenwell Improvement, and moneys are now paid away from the Clerkenwell Improvement back to the Corporation.

3997. Strictly in repayments?—I have assumed that that is so; there is nothing to show it in the accounts; it may be that the Corporation are simply using the sale of property.

3998. (Lord Farrer.) Are you aware that these trusts are exclusive in that sense, that the funds have nothing to do with the Corporation funds; the Corporation funds are not liable for any deficit, or do not receive any excess?—With regard to the Clerkenwell Improvement, I suppose that they would be in the same position as the Holborn Valley Improvement, that if there was a deficit it would fall upon the general estates of the Corporation.

3999. (Mr. Crawford.) It was an improvement effected by the Corporation upon the credit of their estates and revenues?—Quite so.

4000. Of course if there was a deficit, they would have to meet it?—Yes.

* But see also Gomme, 6164.

4001. (Chairman.) It differs entirely from the Gresham Estate?—Oh, quite.

4002. In fact, this is not a case in which you would say the trust was exclusive?—Oh, no.

4003. It has to be added to the other two, in which, you say, the Corporation itself has a residuary interest one way or the other?—Yes, that would be so, but they have not, as matter of fact, applied it in the way that they have the other two, and so I have left it as it is.

4004. Well, in the last four years the Corporation has had a great access to the reserve fund from the proceeds of this improvement?—But they have applied it to the repayment of the Holborn Valley account, and it is simply like applying the result of the sale of one capital property to the repayment of another capital sum, and in that sense it is not applying it to revenue.

4005. (Mr. Crawford.) They recoup themselves?—Yes.

4006. (Chairman.) If a man is a trustee for two different families he cannot apply the proceeds of one to the deficiency of the other?—Well, it depends upon the circumstances, because they are not governed by the ordinary laws of trustees, but by special Acts of Parliament.

4007. (Lord Farrer.) That is a question that I think we must not assume too readily; that all these are exclusive trusts and have nothing to do with the general debts or the general property of the Corporation?—No, in this case I only interpret the figures as given in the Corporation accounts. I do not pretend to be able to say whether the Corporation are right in doing what they have done; I simply state what they have done and the result of that on the figures.

4008. I suppose there would be nothing to prevent the Corporation from applying their own funds to the repayment of the deficit upon any of these trusts if they thought it was for the general benefit?—No, I should think not; it is a matter of opinion.

4009. (Chairman.) You assume apparently that the surplus lands are exhausted in this improvement?—Yes, I think that is the conclusion I draw from the accounts.

4010. But what are they rents of, if not of surplus lands?—Well, they would be the rents of lands held by tenants or property held by tenants; the surplus land, I take it, was land not let but simply the land held for sale.

4011. Vacant?—Vacant land.

4012. As distinct from occupied land?—Yes. The reason why I say it is apparently exhausted is because among the assets of the Corporation for the last year, 1892, they do not enter any item under the Clerkenwell improvement as an asset.

4013. (Mr. Smith.) You do not mean surplus lands in the technical sense in which it is used in Improvement Acts. It means all the land, practically, which is not required for roads?—Not in this case.

4014. You mean undisposed of?—Undisposed of.

4015. (Chairman.) And before 1892 they had such an item in their accounts?—Before 1892; in 1891, for instance, they had such an item in their accounts.

4016. The City of London Court is a case in which the surplus proceeds do go to the general account?—In which the surplus proceeds go to the general account, yes.

4017. Or a deficiency is charged to the general account?—Yes. As a matter of fact there has been no deficiency in the four years; it has resulted in a surplus.

4018. That depends, however, upon the scale of fees?—That would depend upon the scale of fees, undoubtedly.

4019. Which is possibly not within the power of the Corporation?—That is so, I understand.

4020. What is the Blackfriars Bridge Estate?—The Blackfriars Bridge Estate is an improvement carried out under the Act of Parliament 26 & 27 Victoria, c. lxii., and it appears to be the residue of that improvement in the same way as the Clerkenwell Improvement. It is charged now only with certain taxes, and in the four years the balances have been increased to the extent of 3,231*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, making a total unapplied balance of 5,900*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, but whether the Corporation can use that unapplied balance or not, or what becomes of it, there is no information.

4021. So far as you know, it is an unclaimed balance?—So far as I know it is an unclaimed balance.

4022. But was not that done under the Bridge House trust?—I do not know.

4023. Why was Blackfriars Bridge trust treated as a separate matter; do you know?—No, I cannot answer that; as far as I understand this was the improvement of the approaches to Blackfriars Bridge as distinct from the building of the bridge itself.

4024. (Lord Farrer.) Then it was a City improvement?—A City improvement.

4025. (The Secretary.) It was under the same Act apparently?—It was under the same Act. This surplus property arose from the approaches to the bridge.

4026. (Lord Farrer.) If it is a City improvement you can hardly call it a totally separate trust, except in the strictest legal sense. The Corporation did it as the great authority of the City?—Quite so.

4027. (Chairman.) It is scarcely conceivable that it should have turned out—an improvement of that kind—to have kept a balance in their hands?—No; one does not know what the capital expenditure of the City has been upon it without examining the original accounts, and this 5,900*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* may possibly be due to them for loans or other purposes.

4028. (Lord Farrer.) They probably have not been gainers by the re-building of Blackfriars Bridge altogether?—Not altogether; certainly not.

4029. (Mr. Smith.) Or by making the approaches?

4030. (Mr. Crawford.) It was distinctly a metropolitan improvement.

4031. (Lord Farrer.) Clearly.

4032. (Chairman.) And the Holborn Valley Improvement, how does that stand?—The Holborn Valley Improvement—the Corporation were empowered to apply the surplus funds remaining in their hands from the coal and wine duties to this improvement; and I set forth in the table at the bottom of page xxvii the amounts which have been transferred from the coal and wine duties in these four years for the purpose of the Holborn Valley Improvement. The whole of these transfers were not actually applied to debt in the year, but the balance not applied was invested as a sinking fund, leaving a considerable amount in hand, to the extent of 100,300*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* nett. That is the amount that was paid. Then there was a small balance paid to them from the coal and wine duties, when the coal and wine duties ceased; a small balance of some 300*l.*, or between 300*l.* and 400*l.*, and the balance of the cost of this improvement falls upon the general estates of the Corporation.

4033. (Lord Farrer.) Was this improvement entirely within the City limits?—I believe that was so. I believe that it did not extend beyond is within.

4034. Still, it was a Metropolitan improvement clearly?—Oh! It is a large Metropolitan improvement, certainly.

4035. (Chairman.) It certainly is within the limits of the City. They go up to the Gray's Inn Road?—They go up to a little beyond the Gray's Inn Road.

4036. (Mr. Crawford.) The whole of it is within.

4037. (Lord Farrer.) The whole of it is quite within.

4038. (Chairman.) The Deptford Cattle Market?—The Deptford Cattle Market was established under the provisions of the Act 32 & 33 Vict. c. 70, which gave power to the City to establish it, and, if they failed to do so, gave the power to the local authority—the local authority then being the Metropolitan Board of Works. Then the City Corporation erected the market, and the surplus revenue was applicable, under section 27, to the payment of moneys borrowed by the Corporation for the Metropolitan Cattle Market.

4039. This a free balance?—This is a balance, yes, which is available for the Corporation.

4040. How have the balances been?—The balances, after paying off debt—and they repay principal as well as interest in this case—have resulted in a minus balance in three years, and a plus balance in one year only, 1890; but these balances were due to the payment of a large sum for debt, 25,000*l.*, which is not an annual repayment spread over a long period, but a lump sum paid as it fell due, and the deficits, therefore, are not caused by ordinary normal expenditure, and they were met by a reduction of balance from 25,556*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* to 8,782*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*

4041. There has been a reduction of balance of 16,000*l.*?—Yes.

4044. Then the next item you refer to is the Grain Duty. There, again, with regard to Deptford Market, it can hardly be called a separate and exclusive trust, it is connected with the other markets of the City, and is managed by them, as—I will not say the market authority which is disputed, but as a—market authority for London?—Yes, in that case they draw the tolls from the general Metropolis, and apply it to the debt on the other markets.

4045. That is the proper business of the Corporation, as the governing body of London.

4046. (Lord Farrer.) I do not say that they are the proper authority, that is assuming a disputed point, but they receive this money and exercise these powers as a governing authority in London?—As a governing authority in London.

4047. (Mr. Smith.) That is an undertaking of the Corporation?—Yes, from which they will derive profit.

4048. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, they cannot derive profit until the very large debt on the Islington Market is paid?—Not profit to be applied to their general purposes, no.

4049. (Lord Farrer.) As the market authority, they apply the profit from this market to the debts on other markets?

4050. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, they are bound to apply the profit as stated in the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act?—Section 27.

4051. Section 28 really; sub-section 3 says: "All "money received by the mayor, alderman, and com- "mons from charges made by them under this part "of this Act shall (subject to the application thereof "as in this part of this Act directed in payment of "interest on, and in repayment of principal of money "borrowed for, the purposes of this part of this Act) "be applied in repayment of the principal of money "borrowed by them under the Metropolitan Markets "Acts, 1857 and 1865, and subject thereto in dis- "charge of expenses incurred by them in the execu- "tion of this part of this Act." Well, the money borrowed under the Metropolitan Markets Acts, 1857 and 1865, were in connexion with the Islington Market, and there is a very heavy debt upon that.

4052. (Chairman.) But you started with the statement that this and the City of London Court were not exclusive trusts?—Quite so.

4053. You started with the statement that those two were not exclusive trusts?—Quite so, were not exclusive trusts; of course, if the Metropolitan Board of Works had carried out the Deptford Cattle Market, the profit revenue from this market would have gone to the general benefit of the ratepayers of the Metropolis; that is to say, if the City of London had failed to do it it would have fallen then to the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the funds would have gone in relief of the rates of the Metropolis.

4054. (Mr. Holt.) But I think we understand in this case the surplus money has gone towards reducing the debt on the market. You say 100,000*l.* has been paid during the four years?—Up to the present time the surplus money has been used exclusively for paying off the debt on this particular market.

4055. When that is all solved and paid it will go on then to the Islington Market?—Yes.

4056. (Mr. Smith.) It is there hypothecated to the Islington Market, with an ultimate profit to the City?—With an ultimate profit to the City.

4057. (Chairman.) The grain duty?—The Grain Duty is levied under the Act of 1872; it is an old revenue of the Corporation. That was a continuing Act.

4058. It is still levied?—It is still levied, and will be levied until 1902, when, under the Act of 1872, it ceases. It is charged, under that Act, with the preservation and maintenance of open spaces in the neighbourhood of London, but not within London.

4059. (Lord Farrer.) Not within the area of the Metropolitan Board of Works or of the London County Council?—No.

4060. (Mr. Crawford.) As defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855?—Yes, quite so.

4061. (Lord Farrer.) Then there, again, the Corporation have been acting as practically—what shall I call it—trustees or managers for the benefit of the population of London and its neighbourhood?—No doubt; that is so.

4062. (Chairman.) Does that apply to grain brought into London any way—by railways, for example?

4063. (Mr. Crawford.) It is brought into the port of London for sale, these are the words?—It is brought into the port of London.

4064. (Chairman.) It only applies, then, to water-borne grain?—It only applies to water-borne grain; the revenue from that is set out on page xxix, and the gross amount of duty received, and the charges on that duty for the receivers and inspectors, and so on, are set down.

4065. (Lord Farrer.) Is that only grain, or does it include wine and fruit duty?—Oh, that is only grain, as I understand, and the park charges upon that fund are also set down. It is to be noticed that they do, as a matter of fact, pay some small amount for St. Paul's Churchyard, which is within the metropolis. It is only a small thing.

4066. (Mr. Crawford.) That is because, you see, they are at liberty, under the Act, to raise a loan not simply upon the security of the proceeds of this grain duty but also on their estates and revenues?—On their estates and funds; quite so.

4067. (Chairman.) So far, that is a solvent fund?—Yes, I think it shows itself to be, but then it only meets interest, it does not meet the capital charge.

4068. There was an investment in one year?—There was an investment of 2,530*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* in the year 1890, but beyond that there have been no other investments made out of the funds.

4069. (Lord Farrer.) I do not see any charge for interest?—Charge for interest is the first item under parks and open spaces, 8,015*l.*, at the top of page xxix.

4070. (Chairman.) How is that lump sum for Epping Forest; is that a contribution to the expenses of the verderers, or what is it?—Yes; they transferred from this fund to the Epping Forest account this amount every year, and that goes in the payment of charges upon Epping Forest.

4071. (Mr. Crawford.) Not the expenses of the verderers, expenses of the conservators?—Yes.

4072. The Corporation are the conservators?

4073. (Chairman.) Then there is another fund which has reference to parks and open spaces?—Then there are two small funds—Epping Forest Account, and Ward's People's Recreation Ground.

4074. (Mr. Crawford.) I should like to clear up that point for you with regard to the question of St. Paul's Churchyard—how it is brought in here. That, really, that was taken under an agreement with the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's under the Corporation of London Open Spaces Act, 1878, and they had statutory power then to charge the grain duty with the cost; that is how it really comes in there.*

4075. (Lord Farrer.) A special clause?

4076. (Mr. Crawford.) A special clause inserted in that Act?

4077. (Chairman.) This Ward's Recreation Ground was some bequest, I suppose; was it?—That, I take it, was some bequest for that particular purpose.

4078. (Mr. Crawford.) It is under a scheme of the Court of Chancery?—Yes.

4079. (Chairman.) The Corporation has spent more than it has received?—The Corporation has spent more than it has received, the balance being charged on their general estates.

4080. You sum up—that there are seven trust funds now in the hands of the Corporation?—Yes; I give a summary.

4081. With respect to two of which they have a beneficial interest; with respect to the other five they act as bare trustees?—As trustees.

4082. (Lord Farrer.) The Grain Duty was, I think, the property of the Corporation before the Act, which was arranged for its ultimate cesser?—I believe it is an old revenue of the Corporation.

4083. Is there a Fruit Duty still?

4084. (Mr. Crawford.) That is voluntary?—Voluntary metage.

4085. (Mr. Holt.) Does that go in 1902, did you say?—That goes in 1902. Then I would point out that the actual expenditure of the year under these various trusts and statutory funds does not exhaust the effect of these funds upon the general funds of the Corporation, because they are charged with outstanding debt for certain purposes for which the general estates and funds are made collateral security.

4086. (Chairman.) Yes?—Then I set forth the principal and interest of the debt paid in the four years under each of these heads.

4087. (Lord Farrer.) Are the general assets and funds of the Corporation security for the Gresham Debt?—Yes, I believe the general assets and funds of the Corporation are made security for all these debts.

4088. For all these debts, are they?—Collateral security.

4089. That does mingle them up to a certain extent?—Yes.

4090. (Chairman.) The Corporation have become responsible, but the Corporation could not, without the assistance of Parliament at all events, take any benefit under the Gresham Trust?—No, I believe not.

4091. (Mr. Crawford.) There is a point, it is only fair to say, in dispute there; the Corporation always regarded this as a trust, the Mercers' Company do not regard it as a trust, and the point is likely to be settled very shortly, because there is an appeal as to the payment of corporate duty; if it is a trust, the Corporation would not be liable for corporate duty, and we have hitherto paid under protest, but that point will be very shortly settled. We have always regarded it as a trust, and throughout our entire accounts you have always seen it treated as a trust?—I have always seen it treated as a trust. The repayment under each of these heads in each year is shown on page xxx, the amount of the Holborn Valley Improvement, repayment and interest; the amount of the Tower Bridge, repayment and interest; amount for the parks and open spaces, only interest; the amount for the Royal Exchange, repayment and interest, including the 4,091*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* invested as a sinking fund, which I assume to be a sinking fund, last year; and the 25,000*l.* a year for the Deptford Cattle Market repayment, together with the interest. I then proceed to estimate the contingent liability which will fall under each of these trust accounts upon the Corporation estates. I take first the Holborn Valley Improvement loans. I set out the total indebtedness under this Holborn Valley Improvement, which is 482,200*l.*, repayable at various periods, set out on page xxxi up to 1902, with interest within the same period of 107,861*l.* Then I set out the assets of this particular estate, amounting to 95,421*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, beyond which are some rents amounting to 3,000*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* in the year 1892. I then construct the table on page xxxi in order to find out what will be the ultimate debt falling on the estates. Setting out the principal due in the first column, deducting from that or giving credit for the 95,421*l.*, which is an asset of the estate, I then ascertain the unpaid principal that remains, and with that reborrowed at 3 per cent., the interest falling due on that is set out in the fourth column. Then, as against that, I give them credit for the rents, amounting to 3,000*l.* each year, giving them also credit for a small amount of interest on the 95,000*l.* not applied for the redemption of debt, and I work out the unpaid interest at the end of each year, and I reborrow that at 3 per cent., showing in the last column the accumulation of debt each year which would amount at the end of 1902 to 507,245*l.* Then against this would be the assets of the rent-producing property of 3,000*l.*, and as these rents were partly in respect of lands and partly in respect of buildings, I reckon the surplus lands at 28 years' purchase, and the latter at 20, bringing out the capital value of these rents to be 77,813*l.* 9*s.* Deducting that from the 507,245*l.* leaves a net deficit, which is estimated to fall on the estates of the Corporation, of 429,432*l.* for this particular improvement.

4092. (Chairman.) What those surplus lands which produce any rent are you do not know?—I have no information. I simply take it from the book and use it in the best way I can, from the information supplied there.

4093. Has there been any produce of the sales of surplus lands in recent years?—Yes, in 1891 and 1892 there was a sale of property, which amounted to 3,250*l.* It is set forth in the table immediately above the loan table. I also give them credit there, it will be observed, for the balance of the coal duty applicable to this particular debt, a small amount of 495*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, which I have referred to a little earlier.

4094. On the face of it, there appears to be a sort of accumulating charge?—On the face of it there will be a debt at the end of 1902, unless some other revenues, not known to me, meet the debt, of 429,432*l.*

4095. (Lord Farrer.) And that the City will have lost by undertaking this improvement?—And that will fall upon the City estates by undertaking that improvement.

4096. (Chairman.) Well, is that more or less than the present valuation of the debt upon that charge, upon that property?—I have not worked that out, but I should think about the same, if you give them credit for the assets.

4097. You cannot tell what the surplus land will produce?—No, of course the question of the valuation of the surplus land is purely an estimate, and it may or may not be realised.

4098. Then you proceed to treat the Tower Bridge?—Then I proceed to treat the Tower Bridge, and I point out that the revenues are sufficient to meet that, and therefore there is no likelihood of the charge for debt on those estates falling on the general estates. Then I have the loans for Parks and Open Spaces, which are 214,000*l.*, repayable at different periods, the last one, in 1898, with interest, amounting to 28,490*l.* in that period; and against this debt the Corporation provided a sinking fund, that is the sinking fund that we have talked about before, of 8,743*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, which is invested in Consolidated Stock, and then there is a cash balance in the sinking fund available for investment of

* See also Gomme, 6164–5.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

24 Nov. 1893.

382*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* The Corporation insert that in their assets as being worth 8,849*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, and I have taken that figure. Then there is the grain duty beyond the asset: the Grain Duty is applicable to this particular debt until 1902, when it ceases. I therefore point out that the net yield was from 15,000*l.* to 14,000*l.*, and the charges, exclusive of the loans, were about 6,000*l.* a year. And then I estimate that the balance available for loan purposes from the Grain Duty might be taken roughly at 8,000*l.* a year. Then having got the amount already provided for a sinking fund and the 8,000*l.* a year, which would be the revenue to meet the debt, I construct a table on the same principle as before, showing the amount of principal and interest due in each year. The amount available to meet the principal in the first year is 8,850*l.*, that is the sinking fund, and then 8,000*l.* a year until 1902. It is shown by the last column that an accumulation of debt under this head will fall upon the general estates, in 1902, of 189,370*l.*

4098*a.* The effect will be a reduction of about 25,000*l.* in the total debt?—A reduction of about 25,000*l.*, yes, that is so.

4099. Then the Royal Exchange loans you neglect?—The Royal Exchange loans I neglect, because I assume that the revenue is sufficient for the purpose, although it comes very closely up to it. Then come the loans for the Deptford Cattle Market. The debt outstanding at the end of 1892 was 76,000*l.*, repayable in the five years as set forth, in varying amounts, with the interest due upon the balance outstanding. I give the balance applicable to loans from the Deptford Cattle Market, which in 1889 was 20,690*l.* 5*s.*; in 1890, 27,056*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*; in 1891, 20,569*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.*; in 1892 it fell to 14,910*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* only. But there was left in 1892 a cash balance of 8,782*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, and I assume that that will give sufficient margin to pay off the remaining loan, even if it is not quite enough margin to pay off the whole of the 25,000*l.* due in 1893. The following year the amount is only 10,000*l.*, and if they have a deficit in one year, they will make it up in the next. But it is important to note that the proceeds of the market seem to be decreasing: in 1889 they were 55,575*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*; 1890 they were 62,602*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; 1891, 57,985*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*; 1892 they were 51,980*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*

4100. Is that due to restrictions on the cattle trade?—I cannot say the cause of that, the expenditure seems to slightly rise, so that the former estimate of profits from this market would perhaps not be quite realised. But for the purposes of this stage of the memorandum I take the revenues to be at all events sufficient to meet the loan charge. Then I summarise these facts with reference to the charges for debt on trust and statutory funds and I bring out my estimate to be that the Corporation will be liable for the Holborn Valley debt to the extent of 429,432*l.*, and for the parks and open spaces debt to the extent of 189,370*l.*, giving a total of 618,802*l.*

4101. Then you take these figures up again in estimating the total debt?—In pages xxxiv and xxxv I deal with the total debt; that is the debt falling directly as described in the previous section, and the debt falling indirectly through the trust funds, and they amount together to 859,202*l.* I suggest that this might for the purposes of an estimate be replaced by a loan at the 3 per cent. interest, repayable by annual instalments for 30 years; the annuity to repay this loan would be 43,836*l. Thirty years seems to be the correct period to take, when you consider the dates at which these loans were raised originally. The Holborn Valley in 1864, the Cattle Market in 1852, and in 1873, the Parks in 1876, the Highgate Woods in 1888, the Leadenhall Market in 1882, and the Lunatic Asylum in 1888. But if a longer period, say 50 years, were taken to repay this loan, an annuity of about 33,000*l.* would be required. Having got that charge for loan, I then estimate the effect of it upon the revenues of the Corporation, using the figures of the four years as the basis of the estimate. I take the net revenues from the estates and funds, exclusive of markets, because I assume that market loans will be met out of market revenue, and then charge the net revenues with the charges borne upon them, and I bring down the minus balance in consequence of those charges. I then deduct from it certain loan charges, which were included in those charges, and therefore should not be included in the new estimated debt charge, and I give them credit for the special expenditure not of annual occurrence, which was described on a previous page, and which may or may not occur again. And after that, after those two amounts are deducted, it gives us the revenue available for debt charges at 18,476*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* in 1889; 25,129*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* in 1890; minus 3,171*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* in 1861; minus 3,739*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* in 1892, and then deducting the estimated debt charges, show a net deficit in the annual income, if all debt is paid for on this plan, of 25,359*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* in 1889; 18,706*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* in 1890; 47,007*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* in 1891; 40,096*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* in 1892. Then I turn those experiences of the four years into an average, and the deficit appears to work out at an average of some 32,792*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* per annum.†

4102. (Lord Farrer.) Then that assumes that the revenue will not increase, does it not?—That assumes—well I have made a special note of that to say that the revenue is taken on these same figures, and no account is taken of probable rises in revenues. There is also this to be said which I do not note in the memorandum that the money invested from the City of London Court is also available, but inasmuch as that has been used for current revenue I assume that it would be wanted in the future for current purposes.

ELEVENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 30th November 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER. | MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT. | MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. G. L. GOMME, Statistical Officer of the London County Council, recalled and further examined.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

4103. (Chairman.) We had arrived in going through your paper at pages xxxiv and xxxv, I think?—Yes, Sir. We had practically finished what in the explanatory note I have put down as the financial section of the analysis. I divide it under three heads, if you will notice.

4104. Yes, "Financially," "Administratively," and "With reference to Unification?"—And it happens that we had just finished the first section. There were one or two things that you asked me for during the course of last examination that I can now put in. On page xiv, you asked me to give you the amounts which made up the receipts in aid, deducted from the expenditure under the orders of the Court of Common Council.* I can now put that in.

4105. For each of the four years?—That is for each of the four years.

4106. The main item is for schools?—The main item would be for schools.

4107. That is 40,000*l.* on an average?—About 40,000*l.* on an average.

4108. Those are the fees paid at the City of London School and the other schools?—Yes; and the School of Music.

4109. The School of Music?—Yes, and the School of Music.

4110. The next item is the Mayor's Court?—The next most important item is the Mayor's Court, beginning with 9,455*l.* and then going to 7,000*l.* in the last three years.

4111. And the magistracy may be coupled with that?—The magistracy is about 2,000*l.* There are also the rents from the dwellings of the poor.

4112. 5,500*l.* or thereabouts?—5,500*l.*

4113. And receipts from parks and open spaces?—And receipts from parks and open spaces.

4114. What is the nature of these receipts?—They have principally to do with Epping Forest, I believe, rents in respect of West Ham Park amounting to 245*l.* 11*s.* Then there are some small fees, sale of guide books to Bunhill Fields Burying Ground, which is a receipt from an open space. Then there are some receipts for licences on Coulsdon Commons, amounting to 2*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* This is in the year 1892. Then the Epping Forest account shows a receipt for rents amounting to 456*l.* 10*s.*; licences, 292*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*; sale of thinnings, 630*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*; receipts for marking cattle, 90*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*; and rent charges, 10*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*

4115. Epping Forest is the main source of revenue?—Epping Forest is the main source of revenue. In all the other years the entries corresponding to those are put as receipts in aid of parks.

4116. (Lord Farrer.) Is this what you were giving—the analysis of the receipts in aid?—Yes.

4117. (Chairman.) The other items appear to be rather immaterial. The Monument appears to bring in about 800*l.* a year. Have you something else?—Then you asked for a statement as to the dates when the loans were renewed.†

4118. Yes?—That is easily obtainable from the City figures, and I have drawn up a statement to show on what dates each loan was repayable, and not being paid was then renewed. I think it works out that they are generally renewed about every 10 years.

4119. The City would lie under an obligation to pay off or renew a certain sum almost every year?—Yes, that is so.

4120. (Lord Farrer.) To pay off with power of renewal?—With power of renewal.

4121. (Chairman.) Or fresh borrowing?—The actual amount so payable in the years after 1892 are set forth on pages 42 and 43 of this statement. The totals will be given on pages 44 and 45.

4122. What are the figures to which you refer on pages 42 and 43?—On pages 44 and 45 you have the totals; it begins on 42 and 43, the total amounts payable.

4124. The next is 341,600*l.*?—The next is 341,600*l.*; the next is 162,500*l.*; and the next is 470,200*l.*

4125. There is a very considerable sum in 1898 apparently?—In 1898, yes; it is 948,400*l.* The principal item of that being for the central markets.

4126. Have you any other figures to hand in?—There was just one small point on page xiii. I said I would try and identify the source from which I got the words of the paragraph there, "Pensions to widows and orphans of deceased aldermen."*

4127. Yes?—Mr. Crawford corrected me on that. I have looked through the two previous Commissions; although I cannot identify those particular words, yet in the Commission of 1854 Mr. Acland gave evidence in answer to Question 196, which appeared to be confirmed by Mr. Scott's evidence, that this fund was then at all events for the widows and orphans of deceased aldermen, and Mr. Acland mentions cases where they were granted small sums. But still I have not been able to find the exact passage from which I believe I quoted.

4128. (Mr. Crawford.) My question had reference to more modern times?—Yes, more modern times.

4129. Whether you had been able to trace any payment of pensions to widows and orphans of aldermen?—Quite so.

4130. (Chairman.) Going on with your evidence then?

4131. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Chairman, might it be convenient for those to appear upon our notes?

4132. (Chairman.) Oh, certainly; they are appendices to this book.

4133. (Mr. Crawford.) No, I think they are simply matter got up by Mr. Gomme?—In any way that you prefer to do it, they can either go on the notes or be entered in this book.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

4134. (Chairman.) Well, they will be handed in as supplementary to this book?—Yes.

4135. (Mr. Crawford.) They are the clearing up of certain questions put by you, Mr. Chairman, to the witness.

4136. (Chairman.) It will be on the notes that they are handed in, but they will be as appendices to this book?—There will be one or two corrections to make before finally printing, and they may very well be added if you so wish it.

4137. (Lord Farrer.) You will add these to your paper?—Yes.

4138. (Chairman.) There will be a reference to it on the notes?—Yes.

4139. Well, the next point of your work is to classify the annual expenditure?—Yes, on page xxxvi. On page xxxvi I begin the next section of my examination of the accounts, and classify them in order to get at the figures from an administrative point of view, quite regardless of whether the money is obtained from the Corporation general estates or from trust property. In fact, putting on one side the sources of revenue and simply taking the expenditure as that of one administrative body. Inasmuch as some of this expenditure is quite exceptional and not really incidental to the year, it has to be divided into, as I have put it here, five classes. First of all, "Exceptional expenditure"; secondly, "Expenditure on account of undertakings the debt of which is charged upon the "general estates"; then "Expenditure by remunerative undertakings," then "Expenditure met by its own earnings," and then "Expenditure ultimately "falling upon the general revenues and properties "of the corporation"; the total expenditure, I may say then, agreeing with the figures brought out on pages 36 and 38. The exceptional expenditure I have set out in a table by itself, the first item being payments out of accrued balances or special funds. For instance, the very large sum of 238,275*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* was paid in 1889 on account of Kew and other bridges, but then that was out of the Coal and Wine Duties which had been specially reserved and therefore that could not be considered an item of expenditure for that particular year. Similarly with the Holborn Valley Improvement, sums have been paid off out of the Coal and Wine Duties and out of the estates of the Holborn Valley Improvement simply because those moneys had accrued for that purpose, and therefore they could not be considered as ordinary expenditure of the year. And the same remark applies to the small sums on the Clerkenwell Improvement. And then I bring forward what I have previously classified as the exceptional expenditure on page vi which we dealt with on the previous day. That is to say, exceptional expenditure which under other circumstance might have been met out of loan capital instead of out of revenue.

4140. (Lord Farrer.) Capital expenditure in fact?—Yes, capital expenditure. That makes a total of what I have considered to be exceptional expenditure which should not affect any result brought out by each of the years, amounting in 1889 to 492,600*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*; 1890, 119,228*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*; 1891, 72,139*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*; and in 1892, 117,148*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*

4141. (Chairman.) The greater part of that is clearly abnormal and could not be expected to recur?—Absolutely so.

4142. But some portion of it might be expected to recur every year, although it may be extraordinary in the particular year in which this arises?—There is no doubt that all the items under head number two, if they were not met out of capital might very readily be considered to recur under one head or another, if it is not one thing it may be another.

4143. Either for the specific charges or for keeping up some fund out of which those should be met?—Quite so; but still, for the purposes of the estimates that I bring out, I have wanted to err rather on the side of safety and I have put that in rather in that way. Then the next class is the loan expenditure on account of undertakings charged upon the estates. That is given upon page vii, which, again, we have already dealt with. Those were loans falling on the general estates, the income under the special heads being insufficient.

4144. (Lord Farrer.) The debt charged on the general estates; you say that the income is insufficient there to meet it?—The income is insufficient for the special heads. For instance, Leadenhall Market does not pay for its Approach; the Holborn Valley Improvement, the funds were not sufficient in those three years for that purpose so it had to fall on the General Estates. And the Grain Duty was not sufficient to supply a sinking fund, so in two years it had to fall as a charge upon the General Estates. Then under Class c. I put remunerative undertakings, which are the markets, and the expenditure set forth in each of these years is given in pages named in the memorandum. Page 5, column 26, gives the total expenditure of all the markets, namely, 215,848*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, and the figures the next year are given in page 13.

4145. (Chairman.) Those four years?—Those are what I have classified as expenditure in respect of remunerative undertakings. Then Class d.

4146. (Mr. Crawford.) Before you pass to Class d. would you mind turning to page v, and tell me why it is you do not carry Market profits to the receipts of the general estates and funds? You see you separate the two; if you look at the table at the top of the page you see the receipts from General Estates and funds?—Yes.

4147. Now you have told us that the Markets form part of the revenue of the Corporation; why then do you not carry the market profits which are mentioned below, 4,067*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* for 1889, 12,533*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* for 1890; 14,546*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* for 1891; and 10,056*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for 1892, why do you not carry those up as part of the receipts from General Estates and Funds?—Because I have considered that the Market debt is not being paid off, and that that money is primarily charged with that debt.

4148. Except that you know that the revenues and the estates of the Corporation form part of the security for the Market debts?—They form collateral security, yes, but the Market revenue—the market profits—form the first security and it seemed to me as an accountant that that was the proper way to do it.

4149. That is your explanation?—Yes. Then in Class d. I have got what I call, by an expression of my own, I think—expenditure met by its own earnings, that is to say, that portion of the expenditure which earns receipts in aid, for instance, Dwellings of the Poor. It is true that the Corporation spend a large sum of money for that, but then it earns its rents, and therefore it comes under a different category to that expenditure which earns nothing.

4150. (Chairman.) It does not earn enough, does it?—It does not earn enough, but a portion of the expenditure was met by the earnings.

4151. (Lord Farrer.) How does that differ in principle from the expenditure on remunerative undertakings?—Well, it is not wholly remunerative, it is only partially so. That is to say, that there is always a balance which falls upon the General Estates of the Corporation.

4152. (Chairman.) "Met" is a little misleading perhaps?—I think perhaps "partly met," and yet of course the meaning is clear that the whole of that 68,513*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* has been met by earnings or receipts in aid. It would be put in this way, that the total expenditure of the Corporation for that year would have been the two sums together; 68,513*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* was met by receipts in aid under the several heads, and the balance, 233,158*l., was the amount that fell upon the estates without any receipts to aid it.

4153. I see, in fact, you have separated Schools into two parts, for example?—Quite so.

4154. You put in the Number 1 table such of the schools as the school expenses and the school fees provided for?—That is so.

* See also Gomme, 6167.

4155. In Number 2 the surplus ?—That is so.

4156. (Lord Farrer.) The Lunatics in the same way?—Yes.

4157. (Mr. Crawford.) Parks and Open Spaces: that would have to be carried to a special fund—the Metage on Grain Fund?—In what way; I have already explained that I am now letting go the previous——

4158. I understand you are not distinguishing between the two?—I am not distinguishing between the two classes of expenditure—that met out of trust funds and that out of general estates.

4159. To use a well-known phrase now, you really have amalgamated them?—I have amalgamated them.

4160. (Chairman.) And then you come to the total ordinary expenditure by clearing out these extraordinary items?—Yes, by that process I then come to the total annual expenditure for all purposes which can be regarded as ordinary current expenditure. It was important to get that out as far as one could, and the figures after eliminating the exceptional expenditure ——

4161. (Lord Farrer.) That is eliminating those that come under?—Under a. and under b.

4162. (Chairman.) Under b.?—Which for the present is not ordinary expenditure, that is, expenditure that falls upon the estates as collateral security. Then we get the three items, remunerative undertakings, expenditure met by its own earnings, expenditure falling upon the revenues and properties as the ordinary current expenditure, which might be considered to be the normal expenditure of the Corporation, amounting in 1889 to 233,158*l.* 14*s.*; in 1890 to 239,485*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.*; in 1891 to 252,151*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*; in 1892 to 248,563*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*

4163. Does not that include the cost of collection?—No; well it does virtually include the cost of collection, because in dealing with this figure afterwards I take the net proceeds from the estates and revenues and not the gross.

4164. To set against it?—The cost of collection and management is put in there for the purpose of arriving at the arithmetical total and making that correct, but it does not come into consideration afterwards. Of course, for simplicity's sake, I take the net and not the gross.

4165. (Lord Farrer.) You keep it out of both sides?—I keep it out of both sides.

4166. (Mr. Crawford.) Then it would be better, would it not, to act on the chairman's suggestion, and call it expenditure partly met. I think it is a little misleading if you put expenditure met, because it is perfectly clear it could not be met. Take Petroleum for instance. You give simply receipts there, in 1890, 1*l.* 5*s.*; in 1891, 2*l.* 5*s.* Well, of course, the accounts show you that the inspector's salaries are considerably in excess of anything of that kind?—Oh, yes, but even a portion of the Petroleum expenses, namely, amounting to 1*l.* 5*s.*, was met by Petroleum earnings.

4167. (Lord Farrer.) It is the portion of the expenditure met by its own earnings; that is what it really means.

4168. (Mr. Crawford.) Then it should be "partly met by its own earnings!"

4169. (Chairman.) That might imply that you have got receipts only for a portion of this. It is really expenditure so far as it is met?—You want the qualifying adjective to "expenditure" rather than a qualification elsewhere.

4170. (Mr. Crawford.) You must qualify it.

4171. (Lord Farrer.) You want to qualify the "expenditure" rather than the "met"?—That is so.

4172. (Chairman.) Expenditure so far as it is met. You consider that a proper accounting, to deduct the cost of collection on both sides?—I did, of course, for simplicity's sake only; in preparing this memorandum for the Council's Committee, but I can quite conceive that it might be best for some reasons to include it on both sides.

4173. The result would be the same?—The result would be the same.

4174. The national expenditure and income used to be treated in that way; they deducted cost of collection from customs and other receipts, but it was deliberately changed about 30 years ago?—Yes.

4175. So that the expenditure on the cost of collection should always appear on the debit side?—Of course; but I prepared this memorandum originally for the Committee of the Council and not for this Commission, so that I did it in the way that was most convenient, so to speak, for the Council's observation rather than for anyone else.

4176. Well, you start with that explanation; with a total expenditure rising every year?—Yes.

4178. You have not made any attempt to classify the expenditure into what we may call inevitable and optional?—No, except so far as the analysis does that. I have a group of expenditure in each year of what I have called optional, but then that might be extended according to the opinions of anybody who happened to be examining it. This was my opinion, but it might very well be different from anybody else's opinion.

4179. (Mr. Crawford.) What page is that, Mr. Gomme?—Take 1892 for instance, on page 32. In each year of the analysis I have a class called Optional Purposes; you will see there that the annual revenue that was available for these Optional Purposes in that year was a balance of 3,949*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* from Markets, and then it was applied to the Library, Museum, and Art Gallery. I call the Library optional because the Corporation pay for it, and there is the Free Libraries Act, which I suppose might be available for the City if they chose to adopt it, and therefore I call the library optional.

4180. Why do you call schools optional?—Because I take it that the City could increase the fees, and, in fact, in their own report on the reserve fund, Mr. Hicks' report, they suggest that the fees of the schools should be made sufficiently large to cover expenditure; and therefore the fact that a portion of the expenditure of the schools falls upon City estates must be at the option of the Corporation.

4181. I do not know whether you meant by that phrase that they were not bound to keep up the schools?—No, it is with regard to the expenditure only—I am not dealing with their statutory powers in that.

4182. (Mr. Smith.) They are not bound to keep up the schools on the scale on which they are now maintained?—Whether that is so or not, I take it that they are not bound to make a loss by the schools every year, so that a certain charge should fall on the Corporation estates.

4183. It can scarcely be a trust involving a perpetual loss?—Quite so.

4184. (Mr. Crawford.) I think there is a trust of that character in connexion with Ward's School. It is under a scheme in Chancery, and they could only take over the school by finding and giving the ground. That entails, and will always entail, an annual loss to the Corporation, and, in fact, the amount left is clearly insufficient to maintain the school.

* See also Gomme, 6167.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

4185. (Mr. Smith.) A gift is a gift, as they have given the land they have done with it.

4186. (Mr. Crawford.) Perfectly true; but it might have been turned to other uses. With regard to the City of London School, that is regulated by Act of Parliament; they are bound to maintain the City of London School.

4187. (Mr Smith.) But they are not bound to maintain it at a loss?

4188. (Mr. Crawford.) Not necessarily at a loss.

4189. (Lord Farrer.) But where a corporation has such a large licence in the use of its funds as the City of London have, it is difficult to distinguish between what is optional and what is not?—Extremely difficult.

4190. Unless it had been for this paragraph in Mr. Hicks' report on page 19, where it says: "The "committee urged that the school committee should "consider whether some steps should not be taken, "either by raising the scale of charges for pupils, or "otherwise, so as to render the school more nearly "self supporting without lowering the character of "the education now afforded."

4191. The whole of that paragraph, if I remember right, is founded very much upon the notion, I daresay an extremely well-founded notion, that the City deserved very great credit for having applied so much of their estates optionally to purposes of general public utility?—Quite so, perfectly; that refers to this expenditure.

4192. Therefore it is very difficult to say if they claimed credit for having done it optionally, that that expenditure is not optional?—Quite so.

4193. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not know whether you are aware, Mr. Gomme, as a matter of fact, that an endeavour was recently made to increase the fees, which was outvoted by a considerable majority?—I do not know that, but as an old pupil of the City of London School I happen to follow the history of the school very well, but I did not hear of that.

4194. (Mr. Smith.) With regard to both tables seven and eight, there is, as you say there must be, considerable discretion given to the compiler, because I am not at all suggesting that it is, but those expenses of the mayoralty might be considered excessive or not, as the case may be, 17,622*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* Some of them might be considered by some people, optional expenditure?—Oh, exactly, that is perfectly so, but the mayoralty being an old institution, I have left it a civic expenditure unqualified.

4195. I quite understand it.

4196. (Chairman.) It must give the quality of inelasticity to the expenditure?—Quite so.

4197. (Lord Farrer.) It is like the expenditure of the London County Council upon bands in the parks.

4198. (Mr. Smith.) You have no limit in your statutes.

4199. (Lord Farrer.) No.

4200. (Mr. Smith.) You have music wherever you go.

4201. (Chairman.) Then you proceed to make a very important division of the total expenditure?—Yes, I proceed to do that on page xxxviii.

4202. Between civic and county purposes, will you explain that?—For the purposes of the Committee of the Council it was necessary to attempt some classification of the expenditure between the City and the County and on minute examination it appeared that there were certainly three classes of City expenditure, that relating to Local City purposes pure and simple, that relating to County purposes, and that relating to general purposes. The expenditure for Local City purposes only would consist of those items whose range of utility does not go beyond the City area and of such administrative expenditure necessary to the management of the City estates and the support of the mayoralty and City functions. Then the expenditure for County purposes I have considered would be those services concurrent with services performed by the County Council or for services of the same nature as existing County Council services. And then the expenditure for general purposes I have considered would be those items whose range of utility goes beyond the City area and yet are not exactly County Council purposes, or whose funds are drawn from the larger area beyond the City. Then for the purposes of reducing this minute classification to broad principles between the City and County, I have considered that the general purposes might very fairly be grouped under County, and that reduces us to the two classes of City and County purposes; that is the method of reasoning that I went through in order to arrive at the two distinct classes.

4203. The first class referred to expenditure which would still be left to the City in the event of the City becoming a division of a unified County?—I would not say that. That is not my reason for so classifying the expenditure at this stage. In the first instance I wanted to get at what the expenditure of the City for City purposes as it at present exists really was without regard to what it should be. For instance, your remark would suggest that the mayoralty should remain for the City alone.

4204. Quite so. Yes, the items might be altered in character and arrangement, but those items do refer in your analysis to the City specially?—To the City specially as it at present stands.

4205. (Lord Farrer.) Then, again, take such an item as the establishment expenses, the City, especially the Common Council, as distinguished from the Commissioners of Sewers, do a great deal of work for London outside the City, such, for instance, as work connected with markets, open spaces, and bridges?—Quite so.

4206. Well in that case a portion of the present establishment expenses would be attributable, would they not, to those functions?—Scarcely so, because the establishment expenses here named are credited with moneys applicable to the special subjects throughout the City's account. They are very careful to do that; in every case they charge so much of the establishment expenses for markets and so on.

4207. That is charged specially to the market account?—That is charged specially to the market account.

4208. And these are the establishment expenses of the City as the government of the City, pure and simple?—Yes, for all purposes, that is to say, there are very many purposes which fall ultimately under the head of establishment charges; I could give you the details of those if it was required.

4209. (Mr. Crawford.) It might be well to have those details?—I am not sure that I could give them to you actually now, but a little later I could specify them. I have them roughly here, but in order to put it in, if that were thought desirable, I should like to——*

4210. Take one year for example, Mr. Gomme?—Take one year.

4211. 1892, the Commissioners have the accounts before them?—1892; there were the general officers' expenses on page 51 of the City accounts, officers, the town clerks establishment account, 7,298*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

4212. (Lord Farrer.) What is the account?—You will see sundry officers' establishment account, proportion of the salary of the Town Clerk, proportion of the salaries of the clerks and messengers in the Town Cerk's office.

4213. And then this sum of 3,021*l.* forms part of the establishment expenses, does it?—Yes; in fact the whole figure, 7,298*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

4214. (Mr. Crawford.) The whole of that would be included in the 34,341*l.*?—Yes.

4215. (Mr. Smith.) But the important thing to remember, I understand you to say, is that this is a classification of the status quo?—Of the status quo.

4216. It is not suggested as a basis for future division?—Certainly not; it is entirely as it at present stands from the point of view that I have mentioned.

* See also Gomme, 6167.

4217. (Lord Farrer.) Then what I wanted to get at was whether as matter of fact the whole of these establishment expenses is really payment for the purposes of government within the area of the City?—I believe without minute examination that the whole of that is for establishments within the City.

4218. Within the City?—Yes, of course it is extremely difficult to analyse some of that—the hall keeper——

4219. And the same thing will be true of the mayoralty, and the same thing will be true of state and civic purposes?—Entirely so.

4220. Well then, with regard to the Mayor's Court and the City of London Court—that is with reference to the state of things as it exists?—As it exists, entirely, yes. Of course the law and parliamentary expenses may not be wholly for the City; but I have no means of further analysing those, and they are simply as I find them in the accounts.

4221. (Mr. Crawford.) But the item 11,626*l.* is shown in the accounts, is it not? It is made up of several items?—It is made up of several items.

4222. Which are clearly set out in the accounts. It may be a matter of time to discover them. There is no difficulty, is there?—Sometimes it is set out very clearly; at other times it is not quite so clear. I do not bear in my memory this particular case.

4223. Well, I only wanted to know this, whether in this item, 7,626*l.*, you would include costs of prosecutions inside the City which are undertaken by the City, which outside the City would be undertaken by the public prosecutor?—If you excuse me one moment, I will find the item, and tell you where I take it from. The largest part of that is made up of expenses in relation to the supply of gas and water to the citizens.

4224. That is parliamentary properly?—That is parliamentary—4,703*l.*—that would be presumably for the City of London only.

4225. (Mr. Smith.) Well, to some extent did not the City of London—perhaps Mr. Crawford will tell us—by arrangement with the County Council promote some Bill, or conduct some opposition?

4226. (Mr. Crawford.) Certain expenses which fell on the City, although the result of the joint action could not have fallen on the County Council.

4227. (Mr. Smith.) I have a recollection of that. I think you opposed my Water Bill in the interests of London generally?

4228. (Mr. Crawford.) We had special reason for it. I am very sorry we did not carry out the original idea.

4229. (Mr. Smith.) I think you were quite right?—The County Council paid its share of the proportion falling on the general county, and this was the proportion for the City.

4230. I rather thought the City, perhaps I am wrong, bore rather the lion's share of the expenditure, for some reason or another.

4231. (Lord Farrer.) They bore the original expense to a certain point, and after a certain agreement the County Council shared it, and there was a dispute between them as to whether the agreement extended back to the items incurred before.

4232. (Mr. Crawford.) It was so, upon the interpretation of the Statute. But I know we felt at the time that we were a little hardly done by. However, you have explained that, Mr. Gomme, thank you.

4233. (Mr. Smith.) Practically this is interesting more as an explanation of the old accounts than as having any practical bearing on our work?—That is so, entirely. Then on page xxxix I set out underneath each head the services which seemed to be concurrent with those of the County Council. Those of a similar nature, and those whose range of influence is beyond the City area.

4234. (Mr. Crawford.) Take sheriffs; how do you explain that?—Well, there are the sheriffs of the county and the sheriffs of the City of London.

4235. Yes; but the sheriff of the county of London has not anything like the expense of a sheriff of the county of the City of London?—That may be so. I am simply taking the services now without regard to the amounts under each respective head.

4236. (Lord Farrer.) This is not for the purpose of comparing the expenditure with the other?—Not at all.

4237. Simply stating what, as a matter of fact, is the case at present?—What, as a matter of fact, is the case at present. For instance, the City has expenditure on criminal justice, and so has the Council; for this there are two concurrent services within the City and within the county. They may be properly divided; but it is a fact that they are divided.

4238. (Mr. Crawford.) Then, magistracy; what amount would fall upon the London County Council in connexion with the magistracy?—The County Council's expenses in connexion with the magistracy are very heavy. I cannot give you the exact figure. But there again the County Council has to meet the expenses of the magistracy——

4239. (Chairman.) Except that the nation at large pays the Metropolitan magistracy?—For certain expenses. But there are all the expenses transferred from the county justices to the Council.

4240. (Mr. Crawford.) That would be the chairman's salary, would it not—the chairman of quarter sessions and clerk of the peace probably.

4241. (Lord Farrer.) And the expenses of certain buildings?

4242. (Mr. Crawford.) But not what we call magistracy, would it?—It struck me that the term was hardly a correct one to use—magistracy.

4243. (Lord Farrer.) Did you mean by "magistracy" simply the aldermen and their judicial functions as magistrates, or did you mean to include the expenses of quarter sessions?—Not the expenses of quarter sessions—the expenses——

4244. (Chairman.) Of the police courts within the City?—No, not the expenses of the police courts within the City; the expenses of the City Corporation as magistrates.

4245. (Mr. Crawford.) That would include the expenses of police courts, surely?—It would not include the expenses of the Mayor's Court.

4246. But that is not magistracy?

4247. (Chairman.) The Guildhall and the Lord Mayor's Court—those are the two police courts?—Yes. The Guildhall it would include—yes.

4248. (Lord Farrer.) There is a question going on, whether the expense of the police courts of the Metropolis should not be defrayed out of the county fund?—This is so. It is a peculiarity of London that the Metropolitan police courts are not actually paid for.

4249. (Mr. Smith.) It is one of the many peculiarities?—You may say one of the many peculiarities.

4250. In ordinary boroughs, all the expense falls on the borough rates?—Yes.

4251. (Lord Farrer.) I think there is a preceding question—the Treasury have asked that the police courts expenses shall be borne by the county fund?—That is so.

4252. And there is a question going on, whether there are not considerable per contras to be considered before that question can be settled?—I think so.

4253. (Mr. Crawford.) I think there is a joint committee of inquiry on that subject?—Yes, but although police courts expenses in the Metropolis are nominally paid for by the Government, still it comes back upon London in another shape; and therefore it is perfectly consistent for the purpose of this memorandum to put the entire expense of the magistracy of the City as a concurrent county purpose with that of the rest of London.

4254. (Chairman.) Outside the City it will certainly have to come back, if it does not come back already?—Yes.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

4255. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any expense now connected with the police courts thrown upon the county funds?—Well, not directly. But the police courts have all the fees of the courts; and there are various other considerations that the Committee of the Council are now considering with reference to it that makes it certain that it is not altogether paid for by the Government. You cannot say that entirely.

4256. (Lord Farrer.) "Prison and other county pensions,"—those are expenses that would have fallen on the county; has the County Council any expenses of that sort?—Oh, yes; oh, certainly we pay the prison pensions. Then the next class was one I have called of a "similar nature." For instance, the County Council has expenses for bridges, and so has the City; the County Council has expenses for parks and open spaces, and so has the City. Then the third class is that whose range of influence is beyond the City area. There are the markets, the revenues from which are paid by consumers all over London without regard to their location in the City. The market approaches are put in to go with the markets. And then there is the Port of London.

4257. Is that the sanitation?—These are the sanitary purposes which affect the Thames generally. And then there is education. Those four schools do not apply only to the City freemen or to the City purposes generally, but scholars attend from all round; they are very glad to attend. And the library, museum, and the art gallery. The library is free, and so on, and is of general value to London. And then there is the Royal Exchange, which is also not peculiar to the City more than to the general area of London. Then we take the net result of this division of the expenditure, and it appears about 74 per cent. of the present expenditure of the City is really for what might roughly be considered as county purposes.

4258. That is including the last three, i., ii., and iii.?—i., ii., and iii., yes.

4259. Including b.?—Including all under class b.

4260. (Mr. Crawford.) You use the expression, "for which there is dual management." Now, what have the London County Council got to do with markets?—"Dual management" would only partially apply to markets. The Council has a great deal to do with the question of markets.

4261. As to inquiry?—As to inquiry.

4262. You say "dual management." At the present moment they have not anything to do with the markets?—At the present moment they have not anything to do with the markets, no.

4263. Take the port of London. What would they have to do with the port of London?—They would have nothing to do with the port of London.

4264. (Chairman.) It applies to the Nos. i. and ii.?—It applies practically to Nos. i. and ii. Then the next section, which was also prepared for the purpose of the County Council Committee, was an endeavour to arrive at something like an estimate of the financial effect of unification;* and I provisionally considered it under two heads—the transfer of county services as set out in table b. of the preceding page, and the complete transfer.

4265. (Mr. Crawford.) May we take it that the deductions which appear here, are your deductions, or deductions adopted by the committee for whom this was prepared?—Well, they are deductions which I placed before the committee, and the committee criticised them, and so on; they have not formally adopted them.

4266. As a matter of fact, apparently, before being put in here as part of this statement. They do not see any reason to disagree with them?—I have not heard that the committee do disagree; but, on the other hand, they have not formally adopted the memorandum. The committee received this as the report of their official, and criticised it.

4267. And authorised its being placed before the Commission?—And authorised its being placed before the Commission.

4268. Therefore they do not object to it?

4269. (Chairman.) Are those figures the same as you have given us before;—Those figures are using the net figures only; having arrived at the net figures, I used the net figures throughout.

4270. (Lord Farrer.) And when you speak of county services you mean all that are under b. on page xxxix?—Quite so; and when I say City purposes, I mean all under a.

4271. (Chairman.) There is a small difference between the totals in two cases of expenditure and the revenue meeting it for civic purposes; what is the meaning of that?—Where is that?

4272. 128,039*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* is exactly met. The next sum is about 40*l.* different, the next sum 20*l.* exactly different, and the fourth sum exactly met?—Yes. There that is a printer's error; that must be so. I have not detected it. I should have done so. It is a mistake that I will correct for the final proof.*

4273. (Lord Farrer.) They are meant to be precisely the same?—Oh, certainly.

4274. (Chairman.) And you have taken so much of the revenue of the City as is necessary to meet this expenditure?—Yes; the way that I have done that is, those being the civic services, I have then taken that portion of the civic services which fell upon the general estates and civic funds, and that portion which fell on the funds and receipts in aid without regard to whether there is a deficit or not. I have simply taken it as it stands.

4275. (Lord Farrer.) Having the expenditure you then take the receipts in aid, and add to that so much out of the general estates and funds as is necessary to make up the difference?—Yes, and also the same class of City receipts that correspond to the class of City purposes.

4276. (Chairman.) But you ascertain what the corresponding receipts would be, and then you make up the difference?—Make up the difference—yes. Then I classify the county in the same way, showing how that expenditure is met at present—under what heads of receipts—there being Bridge House Estates, to meet a portion; the Grain Duty to meet another portion; Gresham Estate another portion; revenues from Ward's Recreation Ground Fund to meet another; and the General Estates and Funds to meet another portion. The Market Rents and Dues—I have taken that at the same as the expenditure, because, as I previously explained, the balance of the market rents and dues being applicable to loans, I have only considered that portion of the receipts which actually meets the expenditure, and then the balance is the fees and other receipts. That is an approximate estimate of the way in which these two classes of expenditure are now met.

4277. (Lord Farrer.) You mean that if this class of duty was thrown upon the County Council with the special revenues appropriated to those purposes, the County Council would have to raise this sum out of the rates in order to enable them to discharge those duties?—Yes, and unless they obtained also the same amount from the general estates and funds, as is now applicable to those purposes.

4278. Then, without assistance from the general estates and funds, they would have to raise that amount out of the rates?—Without assistance; that is so.

4279. That is, always assuming the division of duties that you have made?—Assuming that division, it would amount to that. I then pass on to the final estimate.

4280. (Mr. Smith.) Before that, you have not noticed one paragraph which, I think, is important. You say, in addition to throwing the expenditure on the County Council, it would leave the Corporation

* See also Payne, 7012, sqq.

* See also Gomme, 6167–8.

with an annual revenue of, say, 50,000*l.* to 60,000*l.* in addition to the amount required for City purposes?—Yes, that is so. That is to say, if, taking over that expenditure, the County Council did not receive in 1889 the 49,175*l.* 13*s.*, and the 49,834*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*, and the 53,200*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, and the 55,412*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, which is necessary to meet that expenditure, that would remain in the hands of the Corporation, and at the same time it would have no expenditure attachable to that portion of revenue.

4281. But you would have that revenue allocated to no particular purpose in addition to the amount already had?—That is so.

4282. (Mr. Crawford.) At the same time assuming that the markets were not to be so productive, you really would be interfering, would you not, with an important part of the security of the market bondholders?—If the market revenues were not sufficient to meet the market debt, of course that would be the effect, but all throughout the memorandum I have assumed, probably rather sanguinely, that they would be sufficient.

4283. (Mr. Smith.) You could always make the rates of the Metropolis applicable to any liability that was required on that, could you not?—Not if the markets were still in the hands of the City. I understood that that was the question.

4284. (Mr. Crawford.) But the accounts show, Mr. Gomme, do they not, that within the last two years, as far as regards two of the markets, there has been rather a decrease owing to the foot-and-mouth disease and other matters?—There has been a decrease.

4285. A considerable decrease?—There has been a decrease in the Deptford receipts—I do not know the cause. Of course, my answer to your question, Mr. Crawford, assumed that the market would be taken out of my classification and put back into the City. At present I am assuming that it is in the county. Of course, if there was any deficiency then, it would have to be met out of the rate.

4286. (Mr. Smith.) That is what I meant. You would be able to make the bondholders quite secure by charging the deficiency on the rates of the whole area?—Perhaps so. My answer to Mr. Crawford was on the assumption he put to me that it was put back.

4287. (Mr. Crawford.) That might mean an increase of taxation?—That would be so.

4288. (Chairman.) There is no risk of the security of the bondholders. The rates would be as good as the City estates?—Yes.

4289. I thought so, but the question might be raised if such a necessity arose for them being on the rates, whether, they being in relief of a charge now raised contingently, it lies on the City estate without some contribution to meet that possible charge?—Yes, the question might undoubtedly arise.

4290. (Mr. Crawford.) The bondholders might not object, but I am afraid that the ratepayers would.

4291. (Chairman.) Exactly. Will you go on, Mr. Gomme?—I then attempt to make an estimate of the financial effects of complete unification. That involves further consideration, besides what is incidental to the Corporation accounts. It refers to other City accounts of expenditure, namely, certain expenditure and services which are now under the Commissioners of Sewers, and to police expenditure, which is now under the control of the Commissioner of City Police——

4292. (Lord Farrer.) Before we go further. By complete unification do you mean including the business of Commissioners of Sewers or excluding the business of Commissioners of Sewers?—Oh, excluding the business of Commissioners of Sewers, except one or two items which are really concurrent with those of the County Council. It happens that the City Commissioners of Sewers have a few duties of that nature. I set them out on that table at page xli, but there are not many.

4293. (Mr. Smith.) I wanted to ask a preliminary question on this. It appears to me that in this particular classification, you have followed the existing state of things as regards the functions of the County Council. You have not dealt with it from a Municipal Corporations Act point of view?—No, I take it that it would be almost impossible to do that in London, because an ordinary municipal borough has a great deal of expenditure which in London falls on local bodies, vestries and district boards. Therefore, unless the attempt had been made to make a complete revolution of the whole thing it would have been necessary, at all events as a preliminary, to take only the facts.

4294. I only wanted to know the course you have followed. I quite see that; of course that is obvious?—Yes, that is so. The items from the Commissioners of Sewers which might be said to be concurrent and which are in fact concurrent with those under the County Council, are difficult to pick out, because the accounts of the City Commissioners of Sewers are not sufficiently minute. They do not give the statutes under which their expenditure occurs, so that I have no doubt that a proper examination of the City Commissioners of Sewers' accounts would slightly alter this table.

4295. (Mr. Crawford.) You can get that from their recent statement, from their statement which has been recently put in before the Commissioners. There every statute is referred to?—I think so, but this was prepared before their statement was put in.

4296. Would you mind explaining this before you proceed. I see you use two phrases, "complete unification" and "partial unification." Would you mind telling me what you mean by "complete unification" and what you mean by "partial unification?"—For the purposes of this memorandum I have considered partial unification to mean leaving the City with what I have classed as City purposes, and transferring to the county that which I have classed as county purposes; and by complete unification I mean the transfer of the whole.

4297. The whole—making one body responsible for the whole?——

4298. (Lord Farrer.) Excepting the business of the City Commissioners of Sewers?——

4299. (Mr. Smith.) Or rather, such business as belonged to a district board?—Such business as belonged to a local body. Then, having arrived at the expenditure, there would be a consequential alteration in the rate, because the City funds being made applicable to the whole of London the City rate would be unified throughout London, and there would, therefore, be a slight reorganisation of the county rate so as to make the City uniform with the rest of London.* And those are the heads under which the estimate is made.

4300. (Lord Farrer.) It would then do away with the special county rate and the general county rate, and make one rate for the whole of London?—That is so.

4301. (Mr. Crawford.) But you are required under the Local Government Act to keep a separate account—a general county account and a special county account?—Every county is required under the Local Government Act to do that.

4302. That is not peculiar to London?—But if the circumstances ceased which made it necessary to make a special county rate I take it there would be no special county rate made.

4303. Take the question of the police. I think I am correct in saying that the Corporation makes an annual payment of something like 33,000*l.*?—That is so.

4304. And gets no subsidy from the Government?—That is so.

4305. So that that really is in relief of the City ratepayer?—No, my own opinion of that is that it is a damage to the whole of London.

* To the extent of $2\frac{8}{10}$d. in the £. See also Payne 6851.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.
30 Nov. 1893.

4306. No, but I am speaking of the City ratepayer now; is not that in relief of the City ratepayer?—Yes, that is, certainly. The City Corporation's grant is a relief to the City ratepayer.

4307. If you hand over the whole of the estates to the county as it were, this unified county, then to that extent the City ratepayer is considerably injured is he not, on a mere question of police?—Not at all, because I have provided for the continuation of the allowance to the City police.

4308. You have allowed for that?—Oh, certainly.

4309. Where do we find that?—You will find it when we come to page xlii; because the present amount paid for police out of rates is put down as 74,285*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, and to meet that expenditure I have taken exactly the same figure annually to be the police rate.

4310. So that you have considered that question?—I have considered that question, but I do not want it to be assumed that my answer conveys the fact that in consequence of the Corporation granting that amount for the police instead of the Exchequer contributions, that that is beneficial to London. I hold that it is not.

4311. You are dealing with London; that is another question?—Then at page xlii I take the figures that were brought out on pages xxxviii and xxxix as the ordinary current expenditure as divided between the City and the County, and I first of all bring them forward as the expenditure which would have to be met by the new body on the basis of those four years, assuming those four years to be normal. I have added the extra charge for debt which is not included in the present expenditure, making allowances for the debt which is included.

4313. If provision were made for paying off that debt?—If provision were made for paying off that debt.

4314. In the same way as the County Council are bound to pay off debt?—In the same way as a local body would be bound to pay off debt; deducting such items as are already included in the figures 517,334*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, for debt. Then, having got the expenditure which would have to be met——

4315. Might I suggest to you that if you are altering these at all it would be as well to make a reference back to the extra charge for debt. Just refer back to the page?—Perhaps it would be better to put a footnote there to show how I come at those figures, because the figures are not the same as on page xxxiv.

4316. Just put an explanation?—It does require an explanation.*

4317. (Mr. Smith.) Before you leave the subject of debt, we may return to it again, assuming for the moment that the whole of London was in future to be dealt with as a municipality and not as a county, you would not necessarily be tied down to 30 years for the repayment of all the debt. That is in consequence of the Local Government Act of 1888?—Not exactly so; on fixing upon the period of 30 years I have already pointed out at page xxxiv that the reason for doing that is that we should be creating a new loan for the repaying of old loans which had existed so far back in some cases as 1852.

4318. That is your explanation?—Yes.

4319. But of course you know the Local Government Act of 1888 confined all borrowing under that Act I think to repayment within 30 years?—Except so far as the County of London was concerned.

4320. The County of London is exempt?—That is exempt under the Metropolitan Board of Works Loans Act.

4321. But all expenditure legitimately under the Local Government Act of 1888, I think, was limited by Parliament, in its wisdom, to 30 years, even for the purchase of freehold land?—I think that is so. Then having got the total expenditure, which will have to be met on account of the City Corporation services, I then take the Commissioners of Sewers services and, subject to the observation that I made just now as to there being some corrections necessary, I take out the items given in the City Commissioners of Sewers' accounts which are concurrent with those of the County Council. Some of those produce a profit in some ways, such as dangerous structures and gas-meter testing; there I put a minus sign so as to show this feature; the whole expenditure not coming to a very large amount, but being 9,852*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* in 1889; 7,368*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* in 1890; 12,052*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* in 1891; and 11,526*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* in 1892.

4322. (Mr. Smith.) In point of fact, with the exception of the expenditure on artizans' dwellings, the amounts are inconsiderable?—Inconsiderable.

4323. And I think the Chairman of the Commission of Sewers told me, in answer to one of my questions, that the City of London was a very unfavourable area for the development of artizans' dwellings, and they were not likely to be much extended?—I should judge that that would be so as matter of fact.

4324. (Mr. Crawford.) The other items you refer to here are small amounts, which are handed over, are they not, by the Corporation to the Commissioners of Sewers? The Commissioners of Sewers have not the carrying out of these various matters themselves at the present moment?—They have, most of them.

4325. Take gas-testing—gas-meter testing; explosives; weights and measures; these are not done by the Commissioners of Sewers?—In the case of weights and measures the expenses were borne by the Commissioners of Sewers and the Corporation received the receipts until 1891, and then they altered it and handed over the receipts to the Commissioners of Sewers.

4326. Who did?—The Corporation.

4327. But now, as a matter of fact, the carrying out of the Acts themselves is entrusted to the Corporation, but inasmuch as any expense under the Act falls on the Consolidated rate, and that is the rate raised by the Commissioners of Sewers, the Corporation hands over any profit which may be made in relief of the ratepayers?—I do not discover from the accounts that the Corporation perform any duties in respect of dangerous structures.

4328. No, you are perfectly right in respect of dangerous structures?—Nor in respect of gas testing.

4329. Yes; it is only a matter of explanation, it might mislead one to say that the Commissioners of Sewers do these duties.

4330. (Mr. Smith.) It is a case of de minimis, is it not?

4331. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly it is very small, but when looking through the statement it might mislead you?—I am quite prepared to admit that this table is drawn up without complete information, but drawn in the best manner we could adopt from the figures at hand; but I do not think it would make any extraordinary difference to the estimate. That gives us the total expenditure which would have to be provided for in these two classes. I then proceed to estimate the revenue that will be available to meet that expenditure. There will be the revenue from the general estates—here taking the net revenue, not the gross; the revenue from interest; the revenue from the Gresham estate; the revenue from the grain and other duties, after deducting the 8,000*l.* which is hypothecated to loans; the receipts in aid; the Bridge House Estates* and the market rents and dues. Again, the market rents and dues are put at the same figure as the expenditure, because the balance is hypothecated for loans. That brings out a total revenue which may be estimated to be available for this total expenditure

* See also Gomme, 6-68-70.

* But see also Gomme, 6160.

at 517,334*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.* in 1889; 533,216*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* in 1890; 519,897*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* in 1891; and 541,904*l.* 5*l.* 10*d.* in 1892. Then the last table is to bring all this various detailed information together, and make an estimate of the final result. I, first of all, bring down the expenditure for current purposes, including the police, paid for out of the estates—in answer to Mr. Crawford's question— then the police paid for out of the rates only, and then the transfer from the Commissioners of Sewers; making a total expenditure of 642,631*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* in 1889, 648,458*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* in 1890, 677,478*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* in 1891, 695,744*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* in 1892. Then to meet this expenditure there would be increased revenue from the following sources: the Bridge House Estates and the Blackfriars Bridge Estate, which I have assumed might be applicable in future to London bridges generally, instead of being kept in hand at the banker's unused.

4332. (Lord Farrer.) Is that an estimate of what the future surplus from those estates would be?—No, that is taking the exact surplus in those four years.

4333. From the receipts?—From the receipts. They are all detailed in the analysis at certain pages. Then the surplus revenue of the City of London Court I have taken as being available to meet similar expenses. There is an excess of expenditure for instance in the Mayor's Court, and the two courts would come in. Then I have estimated the special county rate to be levied on the City, and the exemption abolished. I have estimated that throughout the four years at the same figure for the purpose of clearness, though of course in each particular year it would have been slightly under or slightly over that figure. Then I have taken the Police rate at the same figure as the balance of expenditure falling on rates; and the revenues from the estates and funds I have brought down as in the table above, making the total revenues applicable in the four years to be 651,271*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.*, in 1889, 671,109*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, in 1890, 672,408*l.*, in 1891, 694,817*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in 1892. Then I bring down the balance produced by deducting the revenue from the expenditure, and it shows a surplus balance in the first two years of 6,639*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* in 1889 and 20,651*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* in 1890, and a deficit balance in the last two years of 7,070*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* in 1891 and 2,927*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* in 1892. I then adjust the small item of cash balances, which I have already explained as the estimated loss to the Chamber of London through not using the balances of the Commissioners of Sewers which would then become local—I have put that at 2,000*l.*

4334. (Chairman.) That arises simply from the Commissioners of Sewers?—The Commissioners of Sewers' balances, that is all.

4335. (Lord Farrer.) There a reference back would be convenient?—A reference to the page where I——

4336. Yes?—Yes.*

4337. (Mr. Crawford.) But you make no provision for the keeping of their accounts and collections which would be necessitated by such a change?—That would fall upon them locally and rightly so, but there is no necessity for that provision in this table as it would be the same as a district board; the expense falls to the district board.

4338. Yes, only it goes to increase the expense?—It would possibly.

4339. Well, it must necessarily, surely?—That depends upon the extent to which the Chamberlain keeps the Commissioners of Sewers' accounts. If he keeps them as a banker it would not increase their expenditure at all. If he keeps them as an accountant of course it would be so.† Then I bring out the final results in the last line, showing a surplus in the first two years of 6,639*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* in 1889, and 20,651*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* in 1892, and a deficit in the last two years of 7,070*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* in 1891 and 2,927*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* in 1892.

4340. That is by an amalgamation of the City estates and revenues and the public and trust funds?—That is so, by an entire amalgamation, and then, of course, assuming that all the figures in these years are normal, that no change would be made in them in consequence of unification—in fact, leaving it still as it stands, without taking any further consideration of savings in any quarter at all.

4341. (Chairman.) Or increase?—Or increase.

4342. (Mr. Crawford.) Take 1891 and 1892 as, fair samples, there would not be much financial benefit from amalgamation?—Taking 1891 and 1892 there would be no financial benefit certainly.

4343. (Lord Farrer.) You assume the police charge to remain as it is at present?—I assume that the police charge now being in the hands of the Corporation for the City would remain in the hands of the new body for the City.

4344. (Mr. Smith.) That is rather a large assumption, is it not?—Well, I have not entered into the constitutional question that it raises.

4345. That it would remain in the hands of a sort of district council?—Well, I do not think it is a case for a district council having its own police; it would rather be the idea of the police remaining in the hands of the Corporation, the city area under the new state of things being a special district for that special purpose.

4346. (Lord Farrer.) But this assumption is founded on the actual facts of the last four years?—Yes.

4347. With the exception of this one change with regard to the balances of the Commissioners of Sewers, you have not estimated for any change at all?—Not for any change at all.

4348. You have taken the facts as they are to see what the effect would have been if there had been unification during these four years?—That is so; exactly.

4349. (Mr. Smith.) Unification without alteration?—Unification without alteration; and, even if the police were altered, it is just as well to point out that it would make no difference to the estimate, because I have taken the same figure both for receipts and expenditure.

4350. It would make no difference if they were put on the same basis as the rest of the police of London, whatever that may be?—Oh, that would make a difference.

4351. That is what I wanted to get at?—Because there would be the question of the Exchequer Contribution Account.

4352. That is the question raised by Mr. Crawford. The City of London have their own police; London is policed from the Home Office. I was assuming if unification takes place the police would follow the larger body, and not remain a special force. But I am bound to say that I also contemplated some day or other the municipality of London having its own police?—No doubt.

4353. (Chairman.) In any case the Exchequer contribution would be received which is not now received?—No, it is not now received. That opens up a financial adjustment which I have not entered into here; it would be rather a complicated calculation to make.

4354. Whether it remain county police or metropolitan police under the executive Government, there would be an Exchequer contribution?—There would be some adjustment necessary, there is no doubt.

4355. (Lord Farrer.) That is to say the Government do not contribute as much now to the City police as they do to the Metropolitan police?

4356. (Mr. Crawford.) They contribute nothing to the City police.

4357. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so. So that a change in the government would be a gain financially to London?—Undoubtedly. The Government do not contribute as much to the county of London because the Corporation are generous and give to the city police what elsewhere would come out of Government contributions.

* See Gomme, 3755-75.

† See also Payne, 6986-96.

Mr. G. I. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

4358. (Mr. Smith.) Whatever may happen elsewhere, with regard to other matters, unification of the police force would certainly be a gain?—A gain to London unquestionably.

4359. (Mr. Crawford.) Ah! a gain to London as a whole, but surely not a gain to the citizens of the City of London.

4360. (Mr. Smith.) The City pay the whole cost at present; surely it would be a gain if they got something back.

4361. (Mr. Crawford.) No; for at the present moment the City ratepayers of course get the benefit of the contribution made by the City, which means one-fourth of the whole of the expense of the City Police. But if you threw the whole lot into one fund, and then come to have a rate upon the whole Metropolis, I should think the City ratepayers would have to pay more than they have to pay at present?—I think not, because it is a question ——

4362. (Mr. Smith.) I was only looking at it in this way, that at present the City Police Force is rather an expensive luxury to the City of London?—Of course, in putting the police in here I have had it in my mind that it would be perfectly possible to let it remain in the hands of the unified corporation, because of the provisions of the special county rate. You could levy a special county rate for that purpose in the City alone and so carry on the City police without expense to London generally.

4363. This is very properly an analysis of existing facts?—An analysis of existing facts, yes. Then I give one or two supplemental tables for the purpose of information more than anything else. They do not fall really into the general scheme of the memorandum. First of all, the expenditure on behalf of the freemen of the City; that is set out on pages 38 and 39, in detail for a series of years, beginning in 1869, showing the expenditure for the Freemen's Orphan School under two heads, namely, the "Current expenditure" and the "Supplemental expenditure" allotted by the Corporation; and then showing further the expenditure for widows of freemen, the amount and the cost of distribution; and then the expenditure for almshouses, and the total. And then I show the revenue which is applied to meet that expenditure. First of all the "Fees on freedoms and "gifts in the chamber by persons on their admittance "to the freedom;" then, "Rents, dividends, &c., "credited to Freemen's Orphan School account;" and then, "Annual grants by the Corporation for "Freemen's Orphan School, for the widows of free-"men," and the total; and then "certain charges paid "by the Corporation as part of their annual expendi-"ture"—bringing out the total revenue, and showing either a slight balance or a slight deficit each year, but practically coming in the end to the same figure.

4364. (Lord Farrer.) Do you gather from these figures that the number of freemen is increasing or decreasing; or are you unable to say anything about it?—The number of fees raised seems to be in 1892 a little more than twice what they were in 1869; but whether that is due to increase of fees or increase of freemen, there is no evidence.

4365. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find the fees were increased recently?—Oh, the fees were increased.

4366. (Lord Farrer.) And the pensions to widows seem to be a fixed sum without any reference to the number of the widows.

4367. (Chairman.) That is the grant; the grant-in-aid is on the other side?—The amount paid is in column 10.

4368. (Lord Farrer.) But that remains very much the same.

4369. (Chairman.) Yes?—Then on page xliv I set out the bequests, quoting as nearly as possible the words of the City accounts.

4370. These are separate trust estates?—First of all on the general estates these: bequests are paid out of the general estates presumably under the bequests.

4371. (Lord Farrer.) Under wills which have given property to the Corporation subject to certain charges?—That is what I assume it to be.

4372. (Mr. Smith.) That is in some cases?—Well, in one case it states so, namely, "Coal supplied to the "several parishes in London and Southwark pursuant "to the will of Sir Thomas Cambell."

4373. Yes, I was looking at the bottom one; that is an invested legacy, I take it?—Admiral Duff's legacy, that is so. Yes.

4374. We have got one in Birmingham, I happen to know, and that was what attracted my attention to it, of 1,000*l.*; that, of course, is a trust estate or trust fund rather, and does not form any part of the accounts?—One year's dividends on 1,163*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* in 2¾ per cent. consols.

4375. These are matters not at all of municipal management, they are trusts?—Simply trusts.

4376. Charitable trusts?—Charitable trusts, as I take it.

4377. (Chairman.) The maintenance of the garden and fountain in Smithfield Market, does not indicate any name.

4378. (Mr. Crawford.) Sir Martin Bowes' bequest, I think it is connected with.

4379. (Chairman.) It should be in that case ditto. The water supplied to the drinking fountain is Sir Martin Bowes', but the other is not?—That should be stated so.

4380. (Mr. Smith.) That is a bequest is it, the maintenance of that garden?—I only take it from the accounts.

4381. (Mr. Crawford.) I think the provision was made in the Act when the market was erected.

4382. (Chairman.) And you add below some reference to scholarships in the City of London School?—Yes, there are various scholarships which are all set out in the City accounts on pages 246 to 253.

4383. These are foundations for prize purchases?—Yes, the Times scholarship, the Beaufoy scholarships, the David Solomon's scholarship, and so on.

4384. I think there should be some explanation of that. These scholarships are not like the ordinary cost of maintenance of the school?—Oh, no.

4385. It is a kind of voluntary action on the part of the Corporation; but they are like trusts. They are specific sums which have been given for the purpose?—That is so, and the capital sum from which the dividends are derived is set forth in the accounts very clearly, and the amount paid to the scholar who gains it side by side in each year.

4386. You might say besides this there are scholarships arising from certain bequests or foundations attached to the City of London School?—Oh, yes.

4387. (Mr. Crawford.) They are all carefully preserved by deeds of trust. I think in connexion with each scholarship there is a deed of trust?—Oh, yes, it is very clearly stated.*

4388. (Chairman.) You have some observations to make on the loan account?—Yes; the short statement on page xlv is explanatory of the loan account. That we have already partly examined on pages 42 to 45, to which this added table put in to-day has reference. That is summarised on page 46 in as convenient a form as I could adopt. It shows that the average rate of interest paid by the Corporation annually is 3·42, nearly 3½ per cent.

4389. A saving may be expected upon that as loans are matured and renewed. That is higher than the rate of interest the Corporation are paying now?—That is so, because that is shown by the average interest paid in previous years; for instance, loans that were renewed in 1891 were evidently renewed at a less rate, because the average then was 3·45, showing a slight increase compared with 1892.

4390. (Lord Farrer.) Are those bonds quoted on the Stock Exchange?—I believe they are; they are very well known.

* See also Gomme, 6169.

4391. Are they; and are they distinguished, all these different loans?

4392. (Mr. Crawford.) On the Stock Exchange?

4393. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, on the Stock Exchange?

4394. (Mr. Crawford.) I fancy they come under the name of Corporation Bonds. They are a very favourite security with trustees, and also of insurance offices in London. There is no difficulty in getting rid of Corporation Bonds?—That is so.

4395. (Mr. Smith.) They are really a mortgage, practically mortgage bonds.

4396. (Mr. Crawford.) What you would call mortgage bonds, but they are really known on the London Stock Exchange as Corporation Bonds.

4397. (Mr. Smith.) They are transferable by assignment, not payable to bearer.

4398. (Mr. Crawford.) Some of them are transferable to bearer.

4399. (Lord Farrer.) There is such a large number of different issues that instead of having one consolidated stock——

4400. (Mr. Crawford.) That is so, but every loan has been raised under some statute, and I think I gave you a reference to a statute on the last occasion which practically contains a clause similar to all other clauses, leaving the form of the bond pretty much to the Corporation.

4401. (Chairman.) When was the last loan issued, do you know?—The last loan would be the Tower Bridge loan.

4402. (Mr. Crawford.) I think there was a smaller loan in connection with the markets?—Yes, there was a loan of 22,000*l.* in connection with the markets last year.

4403. (Lord Farrer.) At what rate was that?—It is on page 42, the third column,—22,000*l.* at 3¼ per cent.

4404. (Chairman.) That must have been issued at a premium, one must suppose. In the same year I see 134,500*l.* Tower Bridge loan at 3¼ per cent., page 44?—Yes, that is so,—3¼ per cent.

4405. (Lord Farrer.) What was the rate of the last County Council loan?—I think it works out to 2·8 per cent.; it is under 3 per cent.

4406. (Chairman.) Do the City accounts show what amount was actually raised, whether it was the exact sum, or anything more or less than 134,500*l.* last year in respect to that loan?—In respect to the Tower Bridge Loan?

4407. Yes?—I think not. In some cases it does happen that there is a premium.

4408. (Mr. Crawford.) On page 168 you will find it 134,500*l.*, at 1 per cent. premium?—That is so. Yes.

4409. Mr. Gomme, the question was put to you by the Chairman on the last occasion (Question No. 3532): "Your desire has been rather to re-"arrange the accounts than to present anything new "or additional?" and your answer was: "Yes, to "re-arrange the accounts from the point of view from "which the committee of the County Council was con-"sidering this question." May I take it that the point of view from which the committee of the County Council was considering the question is defined on page 1 of your memorandum, viz., "One object of "the analysis has been to resolve the whole trans-"actions into a simple matter of receipt and expendi-"ture; and the result is to show what a small sphere "the whole financial transactions of the Corporation "occupy in London municipal affairs." Was that the object?—No, I think not. I think the point of view from which the committee of the County Council were considering the question, was the point of view of unification. This is an incidental remark cropping up out of the examination of the accounts.

4410–11. I was going to ask you, with regard to these remarks that one finds here, is one to take it that they are your remarks, or are they the remarks of the committee?—They are my remarks

4412. Entirely your remarks?—Entirely my remarks.

4413. There is just one question I would like you to give me an explanation upon, page x?—Page x of my memorandum?

4414. That is, where you are dealing with the question of extraordinary expenditure?—Yes.

4416. You use this expression: "Unless the "figures for these three years are very exceptional, "and there is no evidence of this, the significance of "these conclusions in relation to the question of "unification lies in the fact that the condition of its "finances must have an important bearing upon the "position which the Corporation would take in the "future in municipal matters if it were left in its "present state"?—Yes.*

4417. Now you say there is "no evidence" of exceptional expenditure. Take the question of police: Do you not find evidence of an exceptional expenditure in 1892?—I find that the police expenditure was heavier in 1892 than the previous years; in fact, I believe it has gone up in each year.

4418. Well, do you happen to know that in the end of 1891 a resolution was passed by the Court of Common Council increasing the number of the police by 90?—I do not know that, but I do know that the police expenditure has gone up in each year, and I have assumed that that is for purposes which are not "exceptional" in the sense that I take the word "exceptional," but for purposes that were necessary.

4419. You do not include that as an extraordinary expenditure, but as a necessary expenditure?—As a necessary expenditure.

4420. That is the distinction that you draw?—That is the distinction that I draw.

4421. With regard to the Mayor's Court, where you show that for the last three years there has been a considerable loss, have you referred to the accounts, and do you find that there has been extraordinary expenditure in 1891 and 1892 in connexion with the salaries of judges?—I have already given credit for the extraordinary expenditure in the Mayor's Court, 2,331*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* in 1889; 4,534*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* in 1890, and 32*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* in 1891.

4422. I only want to test the accuracy of your statement that there was no evidence of extraordinary expenditure?—Well, it would turn on what you mean by the word "extraordinary." My definition of the word "extraordinary" is not expenditure that the Corporation has incurred upon such a thing as salaries, because I assume there that they have rightly incurred it, and that that would go on. That is not extraordinary in the sense that I have taken it.

4423. Well, I mean to say probably you would consider it to be extraordinary if one were paying really what amounts to the salary of two Common Serjeants, would you not?—Certainly, in that case I should, unless two Common Serjeants were necessary and proper. Assuming that one is, two would be exceptional, certainly.

4424. Looking to the accounts, do you not find that there is still a salary, although probably in the accounts shown as pension, to the late Common Serjeant, and at the same time an increased salary to the present Common Serjeant?—Is that in 1892?

4425. 1891 and 1892, 1892 more particularly?—1892, that is so; and it is perfectly impossible to distinguish in close detail small things of that kind, because, as against such a case as that, for instance, I would put what I have made a note of in the 1892 account on page 29, namely, that the Corporation having lent temporarily a loan of 85,000*l.* pending the sale of Farringdon market, instead of paying the whole amount of interest due on that, only paid something on account, viz., 500*l.*; in fact, it is impossible, in a large number of figures of this kind,

* See Gomme, 3696–3712.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

30 Nov. 1893.

unless one has access to detailed papers, to show that in no single instance has such a circumstance as you have just now mentioned occurred; but then I set one against the other, and I think on the whole, so far as I am able to give an opinion from the figures, that they counterbalance each other. For instance, my attention was particularly drawn to that 500*l.* paid for interest on account only; there would be something due to be paid on that, so that if there was something less paid on one account and something more on the Mayor's Court, the one would about balance the other.

4426. I mean to say, where you find, as you do here, in one or two years a considerable deficit, does not an investigation of the accounts show that there has been an extraordinary expenditure to account for that deficit?—Not an extraordinary expenditure in the way that I have used it for the purposes of of my estimates. I have assumed that the expenditure is all proper and correct, and that it is necessary; and in that sense I have not considered it to be an extraordinary expenditure, except in those items that I have picked out and set aside.

4427. (Chairman.) It is not a sort of occasional expenditure; there is no reason to suppose it is occasional expenditure?—That is rather the interpretation that I would put upon it, yes.

4428. (Lord Farrer.) That expenditure, or something like that, is likely to recur?—Is likely to recur, yes.

4429. (Mr. Smith.) With regard to the police, you have treated that as a matter of growth, I suppose?—I have treated that as a matter of growth, and necessary growth.

4430. (Lord Farrer.) There was a considerable increase made to the police in 1892?—Yes; Mr. Crawford has explained that.

4431. (Mr. Crawford.) You do not know, probably, that in the matter of open spaces, within the last two years, the area of open spaces under the control of the Corporation has increased?—Yes, I do; because you have purchased land.

4432. There is Epping Forest, that of course would entail extra expenditure?—Yes. Then again, that would be not "extraordinary" expenditure in my sense, because it is also continuous.

4433. (Lord Farrer.) The expenses of the police are likely to increase, are they not—pensions will increase?—Pensions will increase.

4434. And all that would fall on the rates?—In the metropolis, I have no doubt, yes.

4435. Could you work that out for us? It is a mere question of proportion, the problem that we were talking of; whether, supposing the police were transferred to the county and the Government paid for the City Police, the same Exchequer contribution that they do for the rest of the Metropolis, the City ratepayers would gain or lose?—Yes, I think I could work that out.

4436. The City Corporation losing, as applicable to their particular area, that proportion of their general funds which it now extends towards the police, I am, of course, making the assumption, that the police of the City is transferred to the county?—Yes.

4437. And falls into the Metropolitan police?—Yes.

4438. That the Government pay the same contributions in respect of the City that they do in respect of the rest of the Metropolis?—Yes.

4439. And that, according to your plan of unification, you know the City estates would belong to the county?—Yes.

4440. Then can you work out the question whether the City ratepayer would gain or lose?—Yes, I think there would be no difficulty about that.

4441. It is merely a question of proportion?—Yes, merely proportion and adjustment of rating.

4442. In your paper about the freemen of the City, where do you get these items about the freemen; from the accounts?—Oh, yes, entirely from the accounts.

4443. There is no list, is there, of the number of freemen upon the list at the time being?—No.

4444. You have nothing except what appears in the accounts?—I have nothing except what appears in the accounts.

4445. You do not know as matter of fact, do you, whether the fees for each freeman have been made much higher or lower lately?—Only what Mr. Crawford mentioned just now.

4446. You do not know what the freeman's fees are?—Not at all.

4447. (Mr. Crawford.) But you know how the fees of the freeman are applied, do you not?—How they are applied; oh, yes.

4448. They do not go to benefit the Corporation estates?—No, they are applied to this Freemen's Orphanage School, I believe.

4449. (Lord Farrer.) My object was not with reference to the application of the money, which I have no doubt is perfectly correct. My object was to ascertain what the history of the freemen has been, whether they are increasing in number or diminishing?—That I have no means or telling, unless you got it from the Parliamentary roll.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson, Deputy-Chairman of the London County Council, recalled and further examined.

4450. (Chairman.) You have nothing further of yourself to add to Mr. Gomme's evidence?—No, Sir, I have not.

4451. Is Mr. Kemp here?—Yes.

4452. His memorandum would be so ready that we could take it up at any time?—Yes, we have got it in print now. We could hand it to you to-day if you wished for it, or to-morrow. Of course, Mr. Kemp has been trying to make it more perfect.

4453. But we could have it for instance now in a rough state so as to begin if possible to-morrow morning.

4454. (Mr. Smith.) We hope to know to-morrow what course the City intend to pursue. Perhaps it would be better to defer it till then.

4455. (Chairman.) I think we had better not take any premature action.

(Room cleared, on resuming.)

4484. (Chairman.) Mr. Dickinson, we need not keep you and your friends in attendance any longer to-day, but if it would be convenient for you to come to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock, we shall be glad of your presence. We cannot now definitely say whether we shall or shall not proceed with any examination of Mr. Kemp then, but it would be very convenient to prevent any possible loss of time if he and you were able to attend at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning and be ready, if necessary?—Yes, we will, Sir.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 a.m.

TWELFTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 7th December 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr. W. H. DICKINSON, Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, re-called and further examined. Mr. W. H. Dickinson. 7 Dec. 1893.

4485. (Chairman.) You appear, Mr. Dickinson, to hand in another book?—Yes. May I just say that we do so in accordance with the request contained in a letter I received from the Secretary of the Commission, stating that the Commissioners desired that Mr. Kemp should give his evidence; we therefore tender him with this book.* May I hand a copy to each of the Commissioners? May I at the same time make one remark which I think has been rendered necessary, owing to a question which was addressed to Mr. Gomme last time? It applies both to Mr. Gomme's statement and to the statement of Mr. Kemp. It was asked whether these statements represented the views of the Council. Of course the Committee of the Council are entirely responsible for these statements, and for all the main points that are contained in them, but they do not stand quite on the same footing as the former statements, because they are statements prepared by particular individuals for the information of ourselves, and therefore there may be—there may appear to be—certain ideas as to the policy of amalgamation contained in these documents which are the expressions alone of the writers of these documents, and I would ask that if any questions arise as to policy in this matter, from deductions from, or comments made upon, these documents, they may be addressed at a later stage to some member of the Council who, of course, will be willing to appear in the matter.

4486. (Mr. Crawford.) I did not quite understand that, Mr. Dickinson. I gathered that the remarks to which you refer arose from questions which I put to Mr. Gomme?—Yes.

4487. I asked Mr. Gomme whether I was to take it that the deductions which appear here were deductions which had received the approval of the Committee on whose behalf the statement was prepared and put in. I thought the reply that he gave me was that they had approved, and therefore we might accept them as documents which were put in with their approval?—Yes, I did not mean to object to that. I say that on all main points of fact which appear, the documents they have been before the Committee and myself, and we entirely endorse them and approve of them, but I ask that any deductions that might be made by means of cross-examination, may be put to a member of the Council, rather than to Mr. Gomme or Mr. Kemp, who have merely prepared these documents for our information and for us to form our conclusions upon.

4488. Would it not be the better plan, since Mr. Gomme and yourself have had an opportunity of reading the questions put, and seeing whether they have been correctly answered—and that examination, I assume, would be open to members of the Council—if anything has been stated there by any individual witness which does not meet with the approval of the Council or any member of the Council—would it not be far better for the Council, through a proper representative, to make known its views to this Commission rather than that the Commission itself should call for some evidence of that character?—There is no question as to the fitness of any answer that has been given up till now, but I only ventured to make this remark in view of future proceedings, especially for this document, now which of course relates very particularly to the legal position of the City.

4489. (Mr. Smith.) I understand the difficulty arises in this way, that the evidence of Mr. Gomme was as to certain facts, mostly financial, with respect to the existing position—if I may call it, the status quo—of the City, and that any observations as to the form of amalgamation or the policy of amalgamation were rather his own remarks than those of the London County Council?—Yes, they certainly were originally.

4490. (Mr. Crawford.) But not disapproved of by the Committee, to whom, of course, the statements were submitted?—There is nothing disapproved of in this document by the Committee at all. It is only the deductions which may be drawn from certain statements that I ask the Commission not to take ultimately from the officers who prepared them.

4491. (Chairman.) These statements may be accepted as statements of fact, but when deductions of policy are made from these statements of fact they are not to be attributed to the Council officially?—Not without giving us a further opportunity.

4492. I may say that I have had a short opportunity of looking over this book, and I do not propose to ask any questions whatever as to the introduction, which I think ought to be reserved?—That was in my mind.

4493. That evidently belongs to the second class?—That was in my mind.

4494. Then, as you have said, it will be convenient in this, with reference to possible future evidence on the part of the Corporation, that we should not consider the introduction, but proceed simply to the historical review of the existing situation?—Shall I ask Mr. Kemp to explain this statement now?

4495. If you please.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN KEMP, Secretary to the Special Committee of the London County Council, called in and examined. Mr. J. Kemp.

4496. (Chairman.) Will you tell us, Mr. Kemp, what your position is with relation to the London County Council?—I am a barrister, but I was engaged to act as secretary to the Special Committee on London Government.

4497. With reference to this Commission?—With reference to this Commission.

4498. And you have prepared a memorandum which has been handed in*?—Yes, sir.

4499. That memorandum is, apart from the introduction, a succinct statement of the constitution of the City as it exists at present?—Yes, sir.

4500. With its rights and powers and jurisdictions?—Yes; and further—the latter part of the statement consists of a document which has been already handed in separately and deals with the County of London and the county government of the City—the City as a county.

4501. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the fourth statement of the London County Council?—No; I think it was the third.

4502. (Chairman.) You have probably seen the volume which was handed in by the Corporation?—Yes, and I wish to say that I have revised this since. I am indebted for a number of corrections—of course I have endeavoured always to verify them, but I am indebted for a certain number of corrections to the volume of the Corporation.

4503. And your memorandum to a large extent covers the same ground?—It approaches the matter from such a different point of view that it does not really cover all the ground or nearly all, because the statement of the Corporation deals very largely with the practical work which they do under their powers, and I naturally had not the knowledge about that, and besides it was not exactly the question as it presented itself to me.

4504. I do not propose to go over the same ground in examining you that we have already gone over with the Town Clerk. I will only take up points which appear to me to be new points, or points upon which there seems to be some difference of view expressed in the two statements?—Yes.

4505. You commence with a definition of the area of the City?—Yes, it might be divided into two parts: London within the walls and London without the walls, which are commonly called the liberties.

4506. There is no dispute whatever as to their both being within the jurisdiction of the Corporation?—Within the jurisdiction of the Corporation.

4507. We need not be concerned with the origin of that definition. Then on page 8 you say the Corporation has never extended its boundaries?—As far as I know it has not beyond the liberties of the City; but there have been liberties within the City which formerly were excepted from its jurisdiction, and which have at various times been brought within its jurisdiction.

4508. That is, islands within the area?—Yes.

4509. Which have been absorbed within the jurisdiction of the City?—Yes.

4509. At the bottom of page 7 you give them?—There was the case of Whitefriars and Blackfriars which "were respectively declared to be part of "Farringdon Without and Farringdon Within by "Acts of Common Council of the 11th March 1736 "and 28th February 1806, and Saint Martin's-le-"Grand was annexed to the Ward of Aldersgate by "the Post Office Act."

4510. As a matter of curiosity, that Whitefriars, or Alsatia as it was called, how was that governed; have you any notion?—I am afraid my knowledge does not extend to that.

4511-2. You say the City might have extended its jurisdiction, but it never could have extended its customs?—Yes, I mean that there was nothing to legally prevent it from extending its jurisdiction; the reason I have drawn attention to this is, that I have often seen it stated that formerly the course that was pursued in the City was to extend its area to districts outside, and I have even frequently seen it stated that that was the origin of such distinctions as wards within and without, and that is why I point out that although they are called "without"—they are without the walls—but they are always within the liberties.

4513. But was it possible, do you mean, for the Corporation to have extended its jurisdiction without the consent of persons outside?—No, I do not think so; I mean merely to make the distinction which I there draw, between "extending its jurisdiction" and "extending its customs," which it could not have extended.

4514. By agreement it might have extended its jurisdiction, but even by agreement it could not have extended its customs without the sanction of Parliament?—That is so.

4515. (Mr. Smith.) Is it quite clear that it could have extended its jurisdiction?—Well, for example, it certainly could have extended its jurisdiction in a much fuller way than it did over Southwark—that it got by grant. The borough of Southwark was granted to the City by Charter, but the City never fully extended its jurisdiction over it.

4516. You would rather confine that observation to the borough of Southwark, would you not?—Yes, the distinction that was in my mind when I said this was that there was nothing legally to prevent them from extending their jurisdiction, but there was from fully extending the City, as a City, over these areas, because it could not extend the customs.

4517. (Chairman.) Do you mean to say that the Corporation of London could have come to an agreement with the parish of St. Giles'-in-the-Fields to have taken St. Giles' into the Corporation?—I think so; I see no reason why it should not.

4518. Without the sanction of the Crown?—I think so. The limits of the City, so far as I know, were never fixed by Parliament or otherwise than as they happened to exist by custom. Oh, not by custom; the jurisdiction was limited by the jurisdictions of other persons. There was, for instance, the jurisdiction of the Liberty of the Tower and of other liberties within the City, and there might be jurisdictions without it. There was, of course, the county at large of Middlesex; but I think that it could have extended its jurisdiction by consent beyond the City.

4519. It is a question of historical curiosity, I think, more than of practical value?—Yes.

4520. I should think it was doubtful?—Well——

4521. (Mr. Smith.) It is an interesting feature to me; I have had something to do with borough extension lately; I do not quite see the power.

4522. (Lord Farrer.) At any rate that power does not exist now?—Oh, no.

4523. (Chairman.) Is your statement at the bottom of the paragraph on page 8 quite exact: "By virtue "of various Acts and Byelaws of the City the Senior "Alderman for the time being was made the Alder-"man of the Ward of Bridge Without"?—Yes, I think that is quite correct.*

4524. I thought the Senior Alderman was occasionally passed over?—Yes, I have described that later. I mean that it is given to him if he accepts it, and then to the next in seniority.

4525. That is scarcely the interpretation of the sentence as it stands, is it?—I am afraid not. I have explained it more fully on page 16.

4526. (Mr. Crawford.) Probably that was written before the Blue Book of the Corporation was put in?—Both passages were written before then.

4527. But your explanation on page 16, I think, is really derived from the information contained in our Blue Book?—No, it is not; I really had it here.

4528. (Chairman.) It is matter of common knowledge that within recent times the Senior Alderman has waived his privilege; is not that so?—Not only so, but I have felt bound to retain here what differs from the City's statement, because you say that there never was an Alderman elected, or Common Councilman elected for that Ward?—Well, of course, you may know better than I do, but the information that I have obtained is that there was for a short time.

4529. (Mr. Crawford.) Elected by whom?—Elected in the Ward.

4530. But which Ward?—Of Bridge Without; elected for Southwark.

4531. Can you give me the year?—Well, what I have on page 8 is, "Common Councilmen and Alder-"men were chosen for a short time for that Ward,

* But see also Kemp, 4621-3, 5898.

"but the practice fell into disuse — there is no "record why or how." And that is taken from the Reports, both of 1837 and 1854, when it was given in evidence, I think, in the second case, by Mr. Pulling. It was immediately after the grant of Southwark.

4532. That was by Charter of Edward?—Yes. Well, I think it was immediately after that.

4533. You may take it that for six centuries they have not?—Oh, no.

4534. (Chairman.) Do you wish to call attention to any point on sub-head 2, "Charters and Customs"?—The Corporation has not any Charter which defines its constitution.

4535. But a bundle of overlying Charters?—Yes, and its title—its style—has been fixed since 1690 by the Act of 2 William and Mary. Before that it was called in the Charters by very different names.

4536. You open up a prospect of the City Corporation being dissolved by the failure of liverymen?—Well, it struck me as a manner in which it might happen, I have always seen what I give here as an exhaustive statement of the manners in which it could be dissolved, but that is another way in which I suppose it could be dissolved.

4537. (Mr. Crawford.) Was that a view held by the late Mr. Firth?—I do not know.

4538. I did not know whether you had gathered it from his book?—No. I did not; I think it is mentioned in a note in Pulling's book, or suggested.

4539. I think I remember having seen it in one of Mr. Firth's works?—Well, if it is I have not heard of it.

4540. (Mr. Smith.) You refer to Blackstone here, do you not?—Oh, only for the——

4541. (Chairman.) For the general proposition that the Corporation must have a head?—Yes, that is it. The point is of course that the Lord Mayor is elected by the freemen of the City who have been that liverymen of the Company for a year, is by Act of Parliament, and therefore cannot be changed, and if the liverymen were to fail altogether, I suppose there would be no possibility of electing a head of the Corporation.

4542. (Mr. Crawford.) That is not a reasonable probability, is it? There are over 8,000 liverymen?—Oh, they will not fail in that way.

4543. I am afraid not in our time at all events.

4544. (Chairman.) You express an opinion which is personal to yourself that Parliament could not judiciously extend the customs of the City, if the City itself had its area enlarged?—That is merely my opinion that they would not be extended unless in the opinion of Parliament they were customs which were fit to be in the general law, but it is merely an opinion.

4545. The custom of market overt could not be extended to a large city unless Parliament were ready to extend it to the whole kingdom?—It could be.

4546. Yes, but it could not be judiciously?—I do not think so, though I see no reason why it should be a custom prevailing just beyond Temple Bar, and not immediately outside it.

4547. (Mr. Smith.) Do you know any practical advantage arising from the custom existing inside the Griffin, and not existing outside?—I have heard it said that that is the reason why there is a pawnbroker's shop at the corner of Chancery Lane.*

4548. I think that is not a bad answer.

4549. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Attenborough finds the custom a valuable one, Mr. Smith.

4550. (Mr. Smith.) I see?—That might be a practical benefit. The last case, as far as I know, in which the custom was discussed and arose was the Osborne case.

4551. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, Spink?—There if it had happened that Mrs. Osborne had sold the jewels in the open shop downstairs, there is no doubt that Messrs. Spink would have got a title that was good against the world.

4552. That was a case in Gracechurch Street, was it not?—Yes.

4553. (Chairman.) They sold it upstairs instead of in the shop?—They sold it behind a door upstairs.

4554. (Mr. Smith.) All that you have to say is that Parliament would have to discuss the propriety of that?

4555. (Mr. Crawford.) And the advantage?—And the advantage.

4556. (Chairman.) You go further than that?—I seem to go to the length of saying that they could not be extended at all in London unless they were included in the general law of the country.

4557. It amounts conversely to a condemnation of their existence?—Not necessarily; I think there are many things which have not yet been done which Parliament might do.

4558. No, the condemnation of their existence if Parliament is not ready to extend it?—I think so.

4559. The custom of market overt and the custom of descent, whatever they are in the City, appear different from those of the common law, and are all condemned. Unless Parliament is ready to extend them they are open to condemnation?—I think so.

4560. (Mr. Crawford.) That is simply a personal opinion, Mr. Kemp?—Purely.

4561. (Chairman.) Now, on the top of page 12 you open up a very important question upon which we should like to have your views, that is, the power of the Corporation to reform itself?—Yes.

4562. Power of omnipotence?—I think it is an important power in the Corporation, which still has significance, in fact it has the effect of making it different from any other municipal corporation in England. For a corporation at common law has certain powers that are incidental to it. But the fact that by custom you may alter the constitution of the Corporation makes it a corporation by custom; that is to say, it alters its position at the common law—alters the incidents of its nature. I know that the power has been used even in recent times to effect alterations that could not have been effected by any other corporation, as far as I know. One of the best examples of that is the fixing of the number of Common Councilmen, which was done by an Act of the Common Council in 1840. Their number was reduced and fixed at 206, which of course is a very material change of the constitution.

4563. You say it has a power by custom, but it has been expressly confirmed by Charter?—By Charter.

4564. Whatever has been its origin?—It could not have been granted by Charter, because it runs contrary to the common law. Then I should like to say also with regard to it, that the validity of any byelaw or Act of the Common Council made under it can be tested in the Superior Courts.

4565. Under the proviso that it is agreeable to good faith and reason; or for what reason, under what limitation, is it open to be tested?—I do not think that even without that proviso the power of the Superior Courts would have been excluded, because you have to expressly exclude the power of the Superior Courts, for their jurisdiction is taken to extend to everything that is not expressly excluded, but no doubt the proviso does afford a measure of the validity of the custom that might to some extent guide the Court in considering it.

4566. Has there ever been a case you know of any Act of the Common Council being taken before a Superior Court, and its validity considered?—Yes, in Vanacre's case, which I referred to earlier, on page 10. It is reported in 1. Lord Raymond.

4567. What was that?—Vanacre was elected a Sheriff of London, and he refused to serve, and the Corporation recovered a fine of 500*l.* in the Mayor's Court—their own Court—under an Act of Common Council, which imposed this fine and regulated the distribution of it. I may say here that there was a special writ; a special way of trying the validity of byelaws arising under this custom.

4568. A recognised writ, do you mean?—Yes, a writ of Habeas corpus cum causa; a writ that issues in other cases, but under which you would not try the validity of a byelaw of any other Corporation; and the reason of that is the existence of this custom. When the writ issues to an inferior Court to bring up the body and the cause, the Corporation have to make a return to it, and the return must be good. If it was a Corporation at the common law, the return, if good, would be good on the face of the return to the knowledge and within the jurisdiction and procedure of the Court to which the return was made. But in London, as the byelaws are made under a custom, it might be that there was a good return which the Court could not take cognizance of—would not know was good on the face of the return, and therefore it was that you were able in this case to inquire in a summary way by motion upon the return to the writ into the validity of the byelaw, and that was done in Vanacre's case. The writ issued and the Corporation returned the custom in the words of the Charter. It was Chief Justice Holt who gave the judgment of the Court, and he summarized the objections to the return and then answered them. The first objection to the return was that the office of sheriff had arisen within the City within living memory, it had been granted to the City, and that it was therefore bad to return a custom as dealing with that which had arisen since the reign of Richard I. Chief Justice Holt set aside that objection for the moment, and considered the validity of the byelaw as a byelaw made by a Corporation at the common law, but he afterwards returned to it, and said that it was not a good objection, because the custom was that you might make byelaws modifying things which should arise within the City, and that it was quite within the jurisdiction to make byelaws for an office which might have been granted later. He held that the byelaw was valid at the common law. But the point of the case, of course, in answer to your question, is that the custom was pleaded, and no one suggested that it was not a competent thing to try the validity of the byelaw under it, and I believe it has been done in other cases.

4569. And he held that it was a good custom to the length of being applicable to circumstances which arose within memory?—Yes. You might make byelaws under this custom, with regard to anything in the City that proved to be hard and defective, unless of course, you had an Act of Parliament against which it cannot prevail.

4570. (Mr. Crawford.) Has your attention been called to a case which is reported in 8 Coke Reports?—That was a question where the Court of Common Council had made an Act that no foreigner should trade within the City. An objection was taken to that on the ground that there was an Act of Parliament which said "that the Drapers as well as other "merchants should be free to sell in gross their mer-"chandise as well to any of the King's subjects as "to the citizens of London, notwithstanding any "liberty or franchise granted to the contrary." In that case (I think that was in 3 James I.), the Court held that the Act of Parliament did not override the Act of Common Council; the Act of Common Council, being made in pursuance of the right given by the Charter of Edward III., was good and in force?—I have not read the case, but I venture to suggest that it could be nothing more than a question of construction, that the Act of Parliament did not in fact attempt to interfere with the custom, because I should think—I may say it requires only to be stated to command assent—that if the Queen in Parliament has said with regard to anything that it shall be thus, there is no power in the land that can ever make it otherwise, except the Queen in Parliament.

4571. That is to say, Parliament is all-powerful, we know?—Then in that case there never can be any question as to an Act of Parliament, except a question of construction, whether in fact it has interfered with the custom.

4572. (Chairman.) It is impossible for a Court to hold that the Act of Parliament could not set aside the custom or its assertion, but the Court might well come to the conclusion that the Act of Parliament, as a matter of fact, did not do so?—Did not.

4573. (Mr. Crawford.) Has not done so?—That is how I take it.

4574. (Lord Farrer.) What do you consider to be the limitation upon the power of the City to make these alterations—nothing except what has been done or settled by an Act of Parliament?—Oh, yes, they must be reasonable. They would be tried probably upon the same grounds as other byelaws, except that of course it is a more extensive power. Their reasonableness, the nature of them, as right, or equitable, or reasonable, would, I should think, be tried upon the same principles as any other byelaw; but whether they are valid or not would not be so tried.

4575. (Mr. Smith.) Power to make an ordinary byelaw depends upon the Statute; the power to make these byelaws depends upon the custom?—It depends upon a Statute if a Statute has granted it; but of course it is incident to a corporation at the Common Law, they could all make byelaws.

4576. At the Common Law; but by the Municipal Act I think it is by Statute?—Yes.

4577. (Chairman.) But no ordinary corporation could make a byelaw affecting the number or distribution of its own Councillors?—No, it cannot alter its constitution by a byelaw.

4578. Whereas the Corporation of the City of London has affected the number of Common Councilmen contained within itself?—That is one instance.

4579. The only question that could arise would be as to the reasonableness of that action?—Yes, and I do not think that in such a case as that there would be any question of reasonableness. Where the question of reasonableness would arise would be where they attempted to make a byelaw which imposed restrictions upon certain persons, or interfered unduly with their rights.

4580. Then a byelaw which gives a fanciful representation to a particular area of the City, which was almost deserted in numbers, might be open to question as being unreasonable?—It might.

4581. (Lord Farrer.) And of course where Parliament has once either recognised or determined anything, the discretion of the Court to alter it by byelaw would be taken away?—Would end, yes. Of course the reason why I referred to the matter here was that in this very case of these elections it has almost in every case now been fixed by Statute.

4582. (Mr. Crawford.) That is as to the qualification?—Yes, it is as to the qualication of the electors; also to some extent as to the qualification of the persons elected.

4583. Certainly?—Not altogether, though.

4584. Not in every instance, certainly not?—No.

4585. (Chairman.) The question who had the power of electing the Lord Mayor was set at rest by a Statute of George I.?—Yes; 11 George I., chapter 18. It gives to the freemen of the City, who had been liverymen of a Company for a year, the right to elect in Common Hall, a right, I should say, in connexion with the election in Common Hall of the Lord Mayor, because there are two steps in the election; he is selected from the Aldermen who have served the office of Sheriff. First two candidates are nominated by such persons as have been liverymen of a Company for one year, and are freemen of London; and secondly, he is selected from these two by the Court of Aldermen.

4586. That limitation of eligible persons has existed a long time, and has never been questioned, to your knowledge?—To my knowledge, no. I do not know that it is a legal limitation.

4587. (Mr. Crawford.) It might be correct, might it not, Mr. Kemp, to put it the other way round, that two men are selected by the liverymen and returned to the Court of Aldermen, and the Court of Aldermen elect one of these two?—That is what I said.

4588. You use the term "select"—the Court of Aldermen select; it is rather the liverymen "select," and the Court of Aldermen "elect." You may not have meant to use the term "select," but you did use it?—They are the words of the Report of 1837.

4589. (Chairman.) They are almost interchangeable?—Yes.

4590. Did that same Statute of George I. fix for all purposes the persons entitled to vote in Common Hall?—Yes. The other officers elected in Common Hall are elected by the same constituency. They are the Sheriffs, the Chamberlain, the Bridgemasters, and the auditors of Chamberlain's and Bridgemasters' accounts. I do not know that there are any others.

4591. (Mr. Crawford.) The Ale-conners?—The Ale-conners.

4592. I believe they have a very important privilege?

4593. (Chairman.) The question I asked was whether the Statute of George I. extended to those elections?—It does; the same constituency elect those officers.

4594. That I understand; but was the constituency fixed by that Statute?—It was fixed by that Statute, and, as far as I have been able to find out, there is a great deal of doubt as to who were entitled before that. I do not think it is at all a certain thing that the liverymen were for a very long period entitled to elect the Lord Mayor, and I find in history that when the Statute was passed the citizens of London received it so badly that the guards had to be doubled at St. James's Palace and Somerset House.

4595. (Lord Farrer.) By what influence was the Statute passed, do you know?—By the influence of the Companies, which was very strong; and they were supported, I think, by the Court of Aldermen. The other constituent parts of the Corporation, the citizens and the Common Council, were opposed to it as infringing their right.

4596. (Chairman.) We proceed to the office of Lord Mayor. I am a little surprised—it is a statement of no importance—but you say the escheats were so rare in the City that one had not occurred for 30 years?—I do not know that one has not occurred for 30 years. One had not occurred for 30 years, it was said, in 1837.

4597. The escheator?—That officer is an ancient county officer; his duties are to find out the escheats of the Sovereign in the City, and certify them to the Treasury. It, of course, is not of much practical use.

4598. (Mr. Smith.) No. Is there any special feature about their being rare in the City; they are not, of course, common anywhere?—Unless the great value of property there has something to do with it, I do not know.

4599. (Chairman.) I see the Lord Mayor has a seal of his own?—He has a seal, which is affixed to certain documents.

4600. He is not a Corporation in himself?—I think not. I have not looked for that; it did not occur to me; but I do not think he is.

4601. It is one of the chief marks of a Corporation sole to have a seal?—To have a seal—yes.

4602. (Mr. Smith.) Do you happen to know, is that an ancient seal, or has it been adopted recently for modern convenience?—Oh, he certainly has had it for a long time, but what the origin of it was I do not know.

4603. Of course every man had his own seal originally under which he executed deeds?—I think it is nothing more than that.

4604. (Chairman.) It applies to certain proceedings which must be of considerable antiquity—the exemplification of the freemen?—Yes.

4605. That must been of importance for a long time?—Yes.

4606. (Mr. Crawford.) There was a seal in connexion with the Mayor's Court, the ancient Court of the City—a Mayoralty seal. It used to be kept at the Mayor's Court; for a very long time it used to be affixed there.

4607. (Mr. Smith.) Is it affixed to all processes issuing out of the Court.

4608. (Mr. Crawford.) No; the seal Mr. Kemp is referring to is a seal which is put on documents which are going to be sent abroad?—Yes.

4609. I think Mr. Kemp will find, when he makes inquiry, that the Mayoralty seal was in existence in 1381.

4610. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, yes.

4611. (Chairman.) I think you make some statements here which are a little at variance with information which we have received elsewhere, about the Lord Mayor being Chairman of every Committee that he attends, and Chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers?—He is certainly Chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers by Statute. The statement that he is Chairman of every Committee that he attends I have made upon the authority of the Report of 1837; I am not sure whether it is not also in the Report of 1854—I cannot say.*

4612. (Mr. Crawford.) Sir John Monckton corrected a statement which had been previously made by Sir David Evans, and said No; the Lord Mayor is not ex-officio Chairman of the Committees; as a matter of fact, of course, every Committee chooses its own Chairman.†

4613. (Mr. Smith.) And they told us that if the Lord Mayor appeared at the Committee they stopped the business to see what he wanted?—It is so stated in the reports of previous Commissions, but of course the evidence may have been wrong.

4614. (Chairman.) You say he is by Statute Chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes, that is so.

4615. But he does not actually fulfil the functions of that post, does he?—The Lord Mayor is the Chairman; the Recorder and the Common Serjeant are ex-officio members. That is under the Act of 1848—the City Commissioners of Sewers Act of 1848.

4616. Then de jure the Lord Mayor is Chairman?—I think the Lord Mayor is, yes,—by the Statute.

4617. (Lord Farrer.) Much the same thing happens with the Conservancy Board. I think the Lord Mayor does not often attend, but when he does attend he takes the chair?—He is Chairman by Statute there, I think.

4618. (Mr. Crawford.) If you turn to the 17th section of the City of London Sewers Act of 1848 it makes it perfectly clear: "Be it enacted, that at "every meeting of the Commissioners the Lord "Mayor, if present, shall preside as Chairman, "instead of the Chairman who may be appointed "by the Commissioners under the authority herein-"after contained"?—It is clear that by Statute he is the Chairman, but as a matter of practice——

4619. (Chairman.) He is a superseding authority, but the Statute apparently recognises the other Chairman as well.

4620. (Mr. Crawford.) It recognises the power to appoint another Chairman?—Yes.

4621. (Chairman.) With respect to Aldermen, you have here a corrected statement, I think, of the Ward of Bridge Without; at least a slightly different statement‡?—Yes.

4622. The Senior Alderman may remove to this Ward?—And if he declines, then the next in seniority may remove to it, and so on until all who have passed the Chair have refused, in which case the Common Council elect any freeman.

4623. That has never happened, I think; it has never gone through all the Aldermen and been refused?—I do not know.

4624. You say with respect to the Court of Aldermen, "In its executive capacity the Court of Aldermen

Mr. J. Kemp.

"have a power concurrent with that of the Common "Council of ordering payments out of the City cash." Is it an equal power—equal in range?—No, I think not. It seems to be to some extent conflicting with the power of the Common Council. They make orders for payments with regard to things which specially concern the Court of Aldermen. They have not, at any rate, as great a power over the property because, for instance, the seal could only be used by the Court of Common Council, and therefore the Court of Aldermen could not deal with land.

4625. Could not convey?—Could not convey. I do not know the limits of their power of spending money; this is all the information I have about it.

4626. You know to some extent?—That they have that power; that they do spend money.

4627. But it may be within strict limits?—I have not seen it so stated anywhere.

4628. (Mr. Crawford.) That appears, I think, from an answer that Mr. Gomme gave me. I asked him whether he was aware that, as matter of fact, the Aldermen restricted their payments to matters which came within the purview of the Court of Aldermen, mostly in magisterial work, and he understood that was so?—They also vote money for charitable purposes. I have noticed payments on account of pensions, I think, to widows and orphans of freemen which are partly voted by Aldermen.

4629. We had that cleared up on the last occasion. That is the annual grant which is made for Christmas doles?—But this is made, is it not, by the Court of Aldermen and also by the Court of Common Council; they appear separately. I have no doubt that is so.

4630. (Chairman.) Is it true that the Court of Aldermen can remove the Commissioner of Police for cause without the concurrence of any other authority?—Yes, that is so; the Queen and the Court of Aldermen are mentioned in the Statute distributively.*

4631. (Lord Farrer.) They can do it without the consent of the Queen or of the Home Secretary?—Yes.

4632. (Chairman.) Each can do it without the consent of the other?—Yes.

4633. (Mr. Crawford.) That is clear in the City Police Act of 1839?—Oh, yes.

4634. (Chairman.) You assume, on page 18, the question of the legislative power of the Court of Common Council?—Yes, I have stated it again.

4635. You give some evidence of interest as to the procedure in the Court of Common Council?—Yes.

4636. Founded on, or at least analogous to, the practice of the House of Commons?—Of the House of Commons, yes. "A byelaw, or Act, or Ordinance "(which all signify the same thing) is read three "times, and after the third reading the Town Clerk "puts the question that this Act do pass and become "a law of the City."

4637. And there is a distinct interval, I suppose, between those stages?—Yes.

4638. Or readings of the byelaw or Act?—Yes.

4639. (Lord Farrer.) No officer of the Council has a right to speak?—Unless called upon, I think not.

4640. Do you know whether he is ever called upon to speak?—No, I do not.

4641. (Mr. Crawford.) Continually so.

4642. (Lord Farrer.) Constantly?

4643. (Mr. Crawford.) It is open to any member in the Court to rise in his place and say that he wishes to ask a question of one of the officers at the table. The question is then put, and the Town Clerk, by the direction of the Lord Mayor, asks the Court whether it is the pleasure of the Court that the question should be answered. If the vote is in the affirmative the question is answered

4644. (Lord Farrer.) That is only an answer to a question.

4645. (Mr. Crawford.) To a question.

4646. (Lord Farrer.) Does he ever give an argument or state a reason?

4647. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, certainly.

4648. (Lord Farrer.) He does?

4649. (Mr. Crawford.) It has fallen to my lot to address the Court for two hours in connexion with an explanation of legal proceedings or matters of that kind.

4650. (Chairman.) It is necessary that there should be the presence of the Lord Mayor and a couple of Aldermen at the sitting of the Common Council?—Yes.

4651. But their votes do not count in any way apart from the votes of any other members of the Court of Common Council?—No.

4652. It is not necessary to have the concurrence of the two orders of Aldermen and Common Councilmen?—No.

4653. I pass on to the question of the citizens of London. You tell us the freedom can be acquired in three ways?—Yes. I might say four, if you divide redemption into redemption and gift, but gift used to be regarded as included practically in redemption. By patrimony or birth, by apprenticeship or servitude, by redemption from the Court of Aldermen.

4654. (Lord Farrer.) Are there no citizens except those who are freemen?—No, not strictly speaking, a "citizen" means one who is free of the City.

4655. But are there no persons who have a vote for the Common Council who are not free?—Yes.

4656. Well, does not that make them citizens?—Well, I have suggested a question.

4657. (Chairman.) You call them Corporators?—It is possible that it has that effect. It is a difficult thing to say. But non-freemen are electors in the Wards, both of the Aldermen and the Common Council, and have been since 1867.

4658. (Lord Farrer.) And they form the constituent body?—They form the constituent body.

4659. (Chairman.) Freedom by apprenticeship or by patrimony is conferred upon both sexes?—Yes.

4660. Women being called sisters?—Yes, certainly, by patrimony the freedom is conferred on both sexes, and I think it is, I know it was, by apprenticeship, but in the City statement it seems to be confined to patrimony, and therefore I would not like to be very sure. It may be that there are no female apprentices now.

4661. And has a woman freeman the right of joining in the election of men freemen?—No; because the election is fixed by Statute, and the words of the Statute are, "any male person, not otherwise disqualified"—if I remember aright. Anyone who has the qualification mentioned may elect.

4662. "Every male person," page 13?—Yes. "For Alderman, or Common Councillor, or Ward officer."

4663. That was cumulative, I think you say somewhere that the old franchises were not removed by that statute, page 18?—Yes, that is thought to be so.

4664. "This qualification does not exclude the old "qualification of being a freeman householder in the "Ward, paying scot and bearing lot"?—That is said to be so by Mr. Pulling, and, I think, by other persons who were familiar with the laws of the City. Whether in practice any such person is found and does vote I do not know.

4665. But the Statute does not necessarily exclude?—The Statute does not necessarily exclude such a qualification.

4666. (Mr. Crawford.) There is a customary qualification?—Yes, "a freeman who is a householder "of a ward paying scot and bearing lot."

4667. (Chairman.) You do not know whether a woman fulfilling this condition does vote or has the power of voting?—No, I do not know.

4668. Then freedom by servitude is acquired by apprenticeship recognised at the close of the apprenticeship by the Chamberlain?—Yes.

4669. Who admits the claimant?—Yes.

* See also Kemp, 4842.

4670. And freedom by patrimony?—"All children, "male and female, of a freeman, born after his admis- "sion, may claim their freedom when they come of "age."

4671. (Mr. Holt.) Born anywhere, or in the City?—Born anywhere; oh, yes.

4672. (Chairman.) But that does not apply, apparently, to children of a free sister?—No, not if she marries a man who is not a freeman.

4673. Then, of course, as to children by a freeman husband, the question would not arise?—No. (In further answer to Mr. Holt.) They may be born anywhere. Indeed, not only that, but many other customs of the City of London follow the person of the freeman wherever he goes; the custom of the distribution of his estate used to while it was in force.

4674. And then freedom by purchase?—Freedom by purchase is obtained in three cases. It is necessary to get it—"First, where there has been a breach of "the apprenticeship indentures, as by contracting "matrimony, or not serving the full time. Secondly, "where persons, not aliens, are admitted as a mark "of distinction for public services. In this case the "freedom is, properly speaking, obtained by gift. "Thirdly, where the admission is by presentment "of the Chamberlain, or some person entitled by "grant to confer a freedom. All these are obtained "from the Court of Aldermen, but when the person "applying is an alien, or alien's son, the consent of "the Common Council is required."

4675. You say freedom by admission as a mark of distinction; it is more properly a gift?—It is so described in the Statutes. I rather think the Act of 1835 spoke about freedom by redemption or gift.

4676. The original meaning of "purchase" did not necessarily imply payment of money?—Did not necessarily mean payment. But still the terms are used together, I think, in the Act of 1835.

4677. (Mr. Crawford.) In the City it is called "honorary freedom"?—Honorary freedom; yes, sir.

4678. (Chairman.) Is that the official way, or is it a phrase merely in common use? Is that the official designation?

4679. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, the term "honorary freeman" has been in use for a good many years.

4680. (Chairman.) Was there any distinction between what you call an honorary freeman and an ordinary freeman in his rights and privileges?

4681. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I am not prepared to say.

4682. (Chairman.) A freeman, I imagine, when admitted, is a freeman for all purposes. It only refers to the way in which he gets in?—Yes.

4683. (Mr. Crawford.) You see that an honorary freeman is always presented through some Company, and therefore he gets his rights otherwise.

4684. (Mr. Smith.) The term honorary freeman has become statutory, because there was an Act passed a little while ago enabling other boroughs to give the title of honorary freeman; but it was expressly provided that it should not carry any privileges.

4685. (Chairman.) You say, "Down to 1835 "persons could only become free of the City through "the Companies, but since then it has become the "common practice for the Chamberlain to admit "persons to the freedom without reference to any "Company"?—Yes.

4686. Would that be what you were telling us?

4687. (Mr. Crawford.) There might be a case where an honorary freeman would have no Company at all, and then he would be presented by what we call compurgators?—I am not speaking, pardon me, of honorary freemen.

4688. But that was the point the Chairman put to you?—I mean I am not referring specially to any class of freemen, but to freemen generally. There is a misprint in this line, it should be "1835"; immediately after—"In most cases in which the freedom "is obtained by redemption."

4689. (Chairman.) Yes, instead of "1838"?—Instead of "1838." I am not sure that I have made a right correction. I thought it referred to what came before.

4690. That is a different thing?—Yes.

4691. Well, you can tell us what that was—that resolution?—The resolution:—"In 1838 the Common "Council resolved that all persons occupying premises "and carrying on any trade, business, or profession, "within the City, or its liberties, should be com- "pelled to be free. The process of enforcing the "privilege of exclusive trading was an inquest of the "Ward, followed by a summons to attend before the "Chamberlain, and show cause why a prosecution "should not take place. If the party did not appear "after being summoned three times, the Chamberlain "directed a prosecution in the Lord Mayor's Court, "to recover the penalty of 5*l*. The right of ex- "clusive trading was abolished by an Act of the "Common Council of the 18th December 1856."

4692. It had become impossible, in fact, to enforce it?—I believe that to be the case.

4693. Now, trading is open to any one?—Now, trading is open to any one. It was never enforced except as against retail trade, as far as I know, though the custom appears to have been large enough to have extended to wholesale traders if the City had chosen to enforce it.

4694. And the customs of the City apply only to freemen?—Only to freemen.

4695. That custom of market overt?—No, that is a local exception to the common law; also customs connected, for instance, with the City Courts, like the custom of foreign attachment, such customs as relate to the processes of the Court; but wherever the custom confers a privilege or is personal to any man, then I think it is confined to the freemen, who alone are citizens, other persons being regarded, at any rate formerly, as foreigners and strangers.*

4696. You say the Corporation can disfranchise as well as enfranchise?—Yes, that is a power at the common law.

4697. Is that exercised?—It has been. It is exercised by the Lord Mayor's Court. The jurisdiction is in the Lord Mayor's Court.

4698. Recently?—I am not aware that it has been. I should think not.

4699. For what kind of cause?—I remember cases in which it was held that the cause was not sufficient—for instance, insulting an Alderman was held not to be a sufficient cause for disfranchisement.

4700. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose it is not practically exercised, or very rarely?—I think the last case was the case of a broker, who contravened the rules of his profession; but I do not distinctly remember.

4701. Do you know whether the number of freemen is increasing or diminishing? Do you know as a matter of fact?—I do not know.

4702. What real, actual advantage has a freeman now, either in the way of privilege or power or property?—Well, if he is also a liveryman, you know, he has the Parliamentary franchise, and, of course, also, he elects the Lord Mayor—if he is a liveryman; but as a freeman alone, I am not aware that there is anything.

4703. (Mr. Smith.) He is eligible to offices that the City have?—Oh, yes; that is so.

4704. That is an important thing?—Yes.

4705. (Chairman.) His widow may be a recipient of——?—As far as property goes, there are things of course which I should have mentioned. I did not realise the scope of your question. There are various schools,—there is the Freemen's Orphan School; and there are many almshouses and charities, which are confined entirely to freemen. They obtain advantages in that way.

4706. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so; under special trusts or appropriations?—Yes; although largely supported out of the general property of the Corporation.

* See also Kemp, 5910–34.

Mr. J. Kemp.

7 Dec. 1893.

4707. (Chairman.) Voluntary benefactions?—Yes. The money expended upon these schools, although to some extent it may be obligatory under a trust, is generally largely in excess of what there is any obligation to spend.

4708. (Lord Farrer.) And I suppose the City might, if they had pleased, have spent a great deal more upon freemen than they have?—Yes.

4709. There is nothing to prevent them doing so?—Nothing.

4710. (Mr. Smith.) Is there a freemen's roll in existence?—Yes, I believe there is; but I have never seen anything about it except extracts from it of distinguished persons who are on it. But I take it that it is a roll which applies to all the freemen, and contains the names of all the freemen of the City.

4711. So that we could know how many there were?—I must not state this positively; I do not know.

4712. (Chairman.) Well, now, we proceed to the City Courts. Here we shall have to take your evidence in some detail. The most ancient is the Court of Hustings?—Is the Court of Hustings.

4713. What can you tell us about that?—"It consists of two divisions. 'The Husting of Pleas of "of Land,' and the 'Husting of Common Pleas.' "The Judges in both divisions are the Lord Mayor "and the Sheriffs. The Husting of Pleas of Land "had cognizance of all real actions, and the Husting "of Common Pleas had cognizance of all mixed "actions except ejectment. All real and mixed "actions within the jurisdiction of this Court were "abolished by the Common Law Procedure Acts, "1852." That is to say, all mixed actions except ejectments. "The City of London is not specially "named in that Act, and there may be a doubt "whether such actions could not still be lawfully "brought in the Court of Hustings. But the ques"tion is not likely to arise, for if those actions have "not been abolished by Statute they have become "obsolete because of their inconvenience. The Court "of Husting of Common Pleas was also the Court "of Appeal in Error from the Sheriff's Court. This "jurisdiction has also been lost, as the jurisdiction "of the Sheriff's Court has practically been limited "to the statutable powers now exercised by the City "of London Court, and appeals lie to a Divisional "Court of the High Court of Justice. The Court "of Hustings is the proper Court for the enrolment "of deeds and wills in the City of London, but no "wills have been enrolled since 1668, and the deeds "enrolled are few, and consist principally of deeds of "gift for founding scholarships at the City of "London School."

4714. Is there any reason why those should have been enrolled?—No, not that I know of. This statement I take from the book that is published by the Corporation of the City of London: "The Calendar "of all the Wills enrolled in the Court of Hustings," and it states the date at which they stopped, and in the Introduction it is also stated, what I have said here, that the only deeds now enrolled are such as I have described.

4715. Had that suspension of the enrolment of wills anything to do with the transactions between the Crown and the City before the Revolution and the Statute passed on the accession of William and Mary, or was it accidental?—I do not know.

4716. Now, it may be held that the Court of Hustings is quite obsolete?—I think so. I do not know of any power that it really exercises.

4717. The Corporation have introduced Bills formerly to abolish it?—They have twice introduced Bills for that purpose, but they did not pass.

4718. You have no information to give us at all why they did not pass?—No.

4719. Parliament could scarcely have been reluctant, I should think?—There was a proposal, a clause in the Mayor's Court Procedure Act of 1857, which was rejected by the House of Lords.

4720. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know why?—No.

4721. (Mr. Crawford.) What Bills are you referring to as being introduced in 1867 and 1871, Mr. Kemp?—I do not know more about them than that at this moment. That is stated in the introduction to the Calendar of the Wills enrolled in the Hustings.

4722. I only wanted to know. You do not mean Bills simply for the purpose?—I should think not.

4723. Certain Bills may have been introduced in those two years, and they may have contained clauses for the abolition of the Court of Hustings; but you cannot give us any further information?—At present I cannot. I have not looked at the titles of those Bills.

4724–5. (Chairman.) It would be well, I think, to have them looked up, because we can quite understand a Bill of a multifarious character being opposed and being dropped?—Yes.

4726. But a simple Bill for the abolishing of an obsolete Court, even the decrepitude of Parliament would be equal to that?—I will look for these Bills.*

4727. (Lord Farrer.) At any rate it shows that the Corporation have entertained the idea of abolishing it?—Yes. What was in my mind was that apparently they do not regard it as of importance to preserve it.

4728. (Chairman.) Then tell us what the next Court is—the Lord Mayor's Court?—"The Lord "Mayor's Court, the legal style of which is 'The Court "of our Lady the Queen holden before the Lord "'Mayor and Aldermen in the Chamber of the "'Guildhall of the City of London,' is a customary "Court of Record existing from time immemorial. "It has jurisdiction both at common law and in "equity. On the common law side the Court con"sists of the Recorder or the Assistant Judge, trying "with a jury. Originally there were by custom four "common pleaders, but their privileges were put an "end to about 1852 by arrangement. There were "also by custom four attorneys entitled to exclusive "practice. They held their offices by purchase, with "right of alienation."

4729. Pleaders and attorneys were both possessed of exclusive privileges?—They were; yes. "In 1843 "an Act was passed for consolidating and amending "several of the laws relating to attorneys and solici"tors practising in England and Wales. By section "27 of that Act persons duly admitted in one of the "Superior Courts at Westminster, were declared to "be capable of practising in any of such Superior "Courts of law, or in any inferior Courts of law in "England and Wales, upon signing the roll of the "Court. In 1847, in the case of 'The Queen v. "The Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of "London' (13 Q.B. 1), it was held that the Lord "Mayor's Court was an inferior Court within the "meaning of the Act last referred to. The Court "was in this way practically thrown open to all "attorneys who had been admitted to practice in one "of the superior courts at Westminster, though "the judgment was reversed on appeal upon other "grounds of a purely technical nature."

4730. Was it not acted upon between 1847 and 1852? In 1852 those exclusive privileges were put an end to by arrangement?—Yes; in the case of the four common pleaders. But I then give an explanation of the abolition of the rights of the attorneys.

4731. Then the common pleaders were compensated?—I think they were.

4732. (Lord Farrer.) And that case, though reversed on appeal, has been held operative on the point in question?—It had the effect of a decision that the Lord Mayor's Court was an inferior Court, which has since been held in other cases, notably the case of "Cox v. The Mayor, &c. of London."

4733. (Chairman.) The reversal did not touch the substantial question?—No, it did not.

4734. (Mr. Crawford.) But the Corporation itself, did it not, by making an arrangement with the attorneys and buying up their offices when they could, practically throw the Court open?

* See also Kemp, 6156–7.

4735. (Mr. Smith.) Was not the Court thrown open before by the admission of attorneys?

4736. (Mr. Crawford.) No, not necessarily so. It was simply held that the Court was an inferior Court. And then that decision was reversed. But in 1853 the Corporation itself threw the Court open, and had to pay compensation in order to do it.

4737. (Chairman.) Did it compensate the attorneys as well as the pleaders?

4738. (Mr. Crawford.) They were compensated certainly?—All the attorneys?

4739. Certainly?—My information is that this is how the attorneys got into the Court—that it was under the power of that Statute, of section 27, of 6 and 7 Victoria, chapter 73—that that did legally enable any attorney who had been admitted in the Superior Courts to practise in the Mayor's Court on the ground that it was an inferior Court, and therefore within the words of the Statute.

4740. Yes; but I think you will find that what were then called the attorneys of the Mayor's Court had peculiar privileges, which, notwithstanding the admission of the large body of attorneys to the Court, were not overridden. With a view to getting rid of these exclusive privileges, I think the Corporation itself threw the Court open, and in order to do so had to make arrangements with those attorneys.

4741. (Chairman.) Something analogous to pre-audience.

4742. (Mr. Smith.) Pre-audience I was going to say?—That may be.

4743. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find that was so. I am not aware that the pleaders were compensated. But I know, if you look at the accounts, you will find with regard to the Mayor's Court attorneys that they were?—I have not said anything inconsistent with that, so far as I know, here. I have merely pointed out the manner in which I think the Court really became, under this Statute, open to the practice of any attorney who had been admitted in the Superior Courts.

4744. (Chairman.) Well, now, the Mayor's Court has been taken in hand by the Legislature, and there have been several Statutes passed dealing with this organisation?—Yes. The principal Statute is the Act of 1857, 20 and 21 Victoria, chapter clvii., Local. By this Act—the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act—"certain functions and jurisdictions of the "Sheriffs' Court were abolished, and the powers of "the Mayor's Court were extended, and its practice "and procedure simplified."

4745. I think you might proceed to the result without going through the several points of change?—Unless, Sir, I might point out what I have at the bottom of page 21, a practical inconvenience that arises from the history of the appeals from that Court—that by section——

4746. The Exchequer Chamber was made the Court of Appeal in place of the Special Commissioners?—The Exchequer Chamber was made the Court of Appeal in place of the Special Commissioners of St. Martin's-le-Grand. That is, it was made the Court of Appeal in Error. Then at that time, "on all matters of law, and the admission "or rejection of evidence, an appeal was given to two "puisne Judges or Barons of any of the Superior "Courts at Westminster." "By section 18, sub-"section 4, of the Judicature Act, 1873, the juris-"diction and powers of the Court of Exchequer "Chamber were vested in the Court of Appeal, and "by Order LVIII., r. 1, proceedings in error are "abolished, and all appeals to the Court of Appeal are "required to be by way of re-hearing, and brought "by notice of motion in a summary way. The result "is that the grounds of an appeal from the Mayor's "Court have to be carefully considered in order to "determine the proper tribunal to which the appeal "lies. If the ground of appeal is a defect appearing "upon the record" (which would formerly have been dealt with by proceedings in error) "the appeal "lies to the Court of Appeal, but in all other cases to "a divisional Court." Since one has ceased to consider the question of whether an appeal is an appeal in error or upon other grounds, it obviously lays you open to mistake.

4747. (Mr. Crawford.) But you do not complain of that surely, as a member of the Bar, do you?—There was this case in which it happened.

4748. I should think, though, that was rather an advantage, Mr. Kemp, than otherwise?—Oh.

4749. (Chairman.) To bewilder the appellant?—The most important and peculiar power that was, or is possessed, by suitors in the Mayor's Court is the process of foreign attachment. "The evi-"dence given by commercial men before the Com-"missioners in 1837 shows a great difference of "opinion as to the value of this process; but the "Commissioners reported with regard to it that it "cannot be expedient that the law on this subject "within a small district should be different from that "which is the general law of the land, and the in-"convenience of such a difference must be greatly "aggravated when it exists between adjacent quarters "of the same commercial town."

4750. (Mr. Crawford.) Might we not come down to a little nearer the bottom of the page, because I think you sum it up—"the result is that the custom "has became of little value," because of certain difficulties?—Yes.

4751. We hardly need go through all the causes which led to that?—That is as the Commissioners think.

4752. (Lord Farrer.) It is practically at an end?—It is not at an end.

4753. (Mr. Crawford.) It is not at an end; but the Court has held that you must absolutely follow the custom, and there is such extreme difficulty, particularly since the introduction of limited liability companies, that practically it has fallen into disuse.

4754. (Lord Farrer.) Practically it is not used now?

4755. (Mr. Crawford.) It is not used now?—The principal use of it, I suppose, was to attach a man's balance at his banker's, if he owed you a debt; and as most bankers now are Corporations, and it has been held that the process did not apply to a Corporation, of course such cases as that are excluded. Then it was generally more or less a fictitious proceeding. You called a man and he did not appear, but just like many of the old proceedings in the Superior Court, it was a fiction—the summonses and much of the intermediary part of the process were fictitious. The Courts have held now that that will not do, and that you must really observe strictly and truly every part of the customary process.

4756. (Lord Farrer.) Did the fact that the debt was owing by somebody within the City give jurisdiction?—Formerly the City contended for a very wide jurisdiction in this respect. They said that "it "was the custom of the City to sue any person "whether he was in the City or out of the City for "any debt whether it had accrued within the City or "out of the City, and for that purpose to attach any "garnishee, whether resident in the City or not "resident in the City, if they could catch him within "the City."

4757. That is to say if they found a man had a balance with a banker within the City, that of itself was alleged to give jurisdiction?—If he was within the City, though his bank and the balance were outside, it was still enough; at least, it was held so.

4758. (Chairman.) If they could catch the bankers.

4759. (Lord Farrer.) If they could catch the banker inside.

4760. (Chairman.) If they could decoy the banker?—Yes, that is the meaning.

4761. (Mr. Smith.) So that if they could catch Sir Thomas Coutts within the City they could attach the banker's balance in the Strand?—Yes.

4762. That was only the contention?—But it has been done.

Mr. J. Kemp.

7 Dec. 1893.

4763. (Mr. Crawford.) It is all summed up in the short judgment of the Lord Chancellor in that case which you refer to—"The London Joint Stock Bank v. The "Mayor, &c. of London." "Nothing," said the Lord Chancellor in his judgment, "which has taken place "in the case will, in my opinion, throw any doubt "upon the validity of the custom if duly and properly "followed in cases which really fall within it?"—That is a very negative way of stating it, because, of course, when you look at it positively you will find that the result of the decisions is that practically everything——

4764. (Chairman.) There is great difficulty in following a custom exactly?—Very little good.

4765. There is a very living and real process analogous to it in Scotland, is there not?—Arrestment, yes. You can arrest wages, for instance, in Scotland.

4766. Yes, and you could bring an action against a newspaper here by arresting any money due to that newspaper in Scotland?—You found jurisdiction in that way; yes, that was done in the Times case.

4767. And the Saturday Review—"Campbell v. "The Saturday Review?"—Yes.

4768. (Lord Farrer.) Practically this custom has so far fallen into disuse that it is of no importance?—I do not think it is of much.

4769. (Chairman.) What other special jurisdiction exists in the Lord Mayor's Court?—There is a power of sequestration—a customary power; it was a power where a debtor absconded and left property locked up in a house or warehouse with nobody in charge; you could get the Sergeant-at-Mace, I think, to take possession of it, and then you got, after several days—I think after four days—you got a warrant by which you could obtain possession of it, and have it valued and sold for the debt, giving an undertaking to restore it if it should turn out that the debt was not due. I think that is a correct description. Its jurisdiction in disfranchisement is its jurisdiction as a court to exercise the power of taking from a man, for reason, his freedom of the City.

4770. The presiding officer is the Recorder?—Is the Recorder.

4771. And he now cannot exercise judicial functions without the sanction of the Crown?—No, that is under the Act of 1888—the Local Government Act.

4772. So that is a local court now more directly connected with the Crown than formerly, although the Corporation nominate, the Crown's consent is necessary?—Under the same Act the Crown now appoints the Judge of the City of London Court.

4773. (Lord Farrer.) There is no limit to the amount?—Oh, no.

4774. And what gives jurisdiction in the Mayor's Court? Under what circumstances can an action be brought into the Mayor's Court? Is it when the defendant is within the jurisdiction?—Yes.

4775. (Mr. Crawford.) Or the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction?—Or the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction.

4776. (Lord Farrer.) If the contract has been made in the City?—If the contract has been made in the City, yes.

4777. Then upon any contract made in the City proceedings may be taken in the Mayor's Court?—In the Mayor's Court, yes.

4778. Are suits about very large transactions ordinarily taken in the Mayor's Court?—I have no personal knowledge of the practice of that Court.

4779. Of the enormous quantity of business that arises in the City is there any very large proportion that causes litigation in the Mayor's Court?—I do not know what proportion.

4780. (Mr. Crawford.) If you turn to the Blue Book of the Corporation, you will find that the amounts are large.

4781. (Lord Farrer.) Very large?

4782–4. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly. It is a very favourite Court, because you have the advantage of a special jury, and you get good Queen's Counsel down there, and their fees are allowed, and certainly the jurisdiction of that Court and the business of the Court is increasing. That is followed by a tabulated statement of the number of actions and showing the increase of the business. Page 90, I think, gives you the latest details.

4785. (Lord Farrer.) Now that the custom of foreign attachment is practically at at end, has a plaintiff any special advantage in the Mayor's Court.

4786. (Mr. Crawford.) He has a special advantage in the Mayor's Court, over an ordinary County Court, as I explained to you before.

4787. (Lord Farrer.) Over an ordinary County Court?

4788. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, he has a special jury, if he wishes it, and of 12 good men on a common jury.

4789. (Lord Farrer.) He has a very superior judge—the Recorder.

4790. (Mr. Crawford.) I am afraid you must not ask me to say that, because the Recorder of the Mayor's Court is one of our officers.

4791. (Lord Farrer.) The Recorder is generally a superior lawyer, is he not?

4792. (Mr. Crawford.) We have always prided ourselves on our Judges in the Mayor's Court; certainly in regard to our Recorders. Page 90—you will see it summed up there, Lord Farrer. It gives you the different amounts and the number of actions for the last four years.

4793. (Chairman.) Now, there is another Court, formerly called the Sheriff's Court?—It was formerly ——

4794. Now the City of London Court?—"The "City of London Court. Prior to the County "Court Act, 1867, this Court was known as the "Sheriff's Court of the City of London."

4795. That is a County Court practically, within the City?—Its jurisdiction now is practically except——

4796. It is a County Court for all intents and purposes, but the Judge has not been appointed by the Queen?—The Judge is appointed by the Corporation; he is now appointed by the Crown.

4797. He will for the future?—He has not hitherto been.

4798. The receipt of fees and the payment and fixing the salary—those are within the authority of the Corporation?—Of the Corporation. The fees are the same as in the County Courts.

4799. But might be different?—No; they are declared by Statute; section 185 of the County Courts Act of 1888 consolidated the provisions of the County Courts Act relative to the City of London Court.

4800. (Mr. Crawford.) That contained a special reservation of certain of the City's privileges in regard to that Court?—Yes, it did contain a special reservation, and I think the principal point which makes the difference is the use of the word "employment" in section 39 of the Act of 1852, which enables you without leave to issue a writ against a person who does not reside in the City, but who has employment there.

4801. It enables you to sue clerks employed in the City where you do not know their private address?—Yes.

4802. But the section I was referring to—I have it here—is the 185th section of the County Courts Act, 1888—I will read it for the information of the Commissioners—"The Court held by virtue of the "London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, "shall be held by the name of the City of London "Court, and shall be a Court of Record, and its "decisions shall be subject to appeal in the same way "and on the same conditions as the decisions of a "County Court are subject for the time being. The "Judge and officers of the City of London Court "shall respectively have and exercise the like "jurisdiction, power, and authority in all respects, "except the power of appointing officers, as are for " the time being possessed and exercised by the " Judge and officers respectively of a County Court " The rules and orders in force for the time being for " regulating the practice of and costs in the County " Courts, and forms of proceedings therein, shall be " in force in the said City of London Court to the " exclusion of any other rules and orders; and the " same fees shall be taken for proceedings in which " jurisdiction is hereby given to the Court as upon " similar proceedings in the County Court, and such " fees shall be applied in the same manner as the " fees taken under the provisions of the said London " (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852; provided " that nothing in this Act shall take away, lessen, or " diminish any of the powers, rights, or privileges of " the Judge of the said Court or the authority of the " Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of " London in Common Council assembled in relation " to such Court, or to the Judge or officers thereof, " or to the fees taken therein, as such powers or " authority heretofore existed." That was the reservation clause I was drawing your attention to.

4803. (Chairman.) That is modified by the important provision placing the appointment of the Judge of the Court in the hands of the Crown?—Of the Judge.

4804. (Mr. Crawford.) Except that the Corporation, you see, can give a salary and then take the fees, whereas in ordinary county courts it is different?—Oh, I think I have stated the property.

4805. (Lord Farrer.) There was one difference in what you read from what there is in Mr. Kemp's paper: " Nothing in this Act shall take away, lessen, " or diminish any of the powers, rights, or the autho- " rity of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the " City of London "; you read it " the powers of the " Judge of the Court."

4806. (Mr. Crawford.) So it is; that is how it is in the Act—" the rights or privileges of the Judge of " the said Court." Probably it is a printer's error that those words were omitted.

4807. (Lord Farrer.) It is a printer's omission?—It is; I have omitted some words here.*

4808. (Chairman.) The connexion between the Corporation and the City of London Court now can scarcely be called vital?—Except as regards property; it is a valuable source of revenue.

4809. (Lord Farrer.) Fees?—Yes.

4810. There was a surplus of fees, was there not?—Oh, yes; they go under the Statute for certain purposes connected with the Court first of all.

4811. But they belong to the City cash?—But they belong to the City, and of course the surplus is there applied. The right to hold a court was a valuable privilege.

4812. (Chairman.) We proceed to the Court of the Borough of Southwark. Is that a living Court?—I think it is practically obsolete. " This Court has " cognizance of all personal actions at common law " without any limitation of value or amount arising " within the Lord Mayor's jurisdiction in Southwark." That, as I have not had an opportunity of explaining, is not the whole of Southwark as it is now known. It was in an earlier part of my paper. I may, perhaps, here explain that " the Southwark in which the City of London " have or had any rights, consists of the three manors, " the Guildable Manor (the ancient town); the " King's Manor, formerly belonging to the Archbishop " of Canterbury; and the great Liberty Manor " formerly belonging to Bermondsea Abbey. At the " time of the Reform Acts there were added the " Liberty of the Clink and the parishes of Christ- " church, Bermondsea, and Rotherhithe." There is a map in the Report of 1837 which show those boundaries. So that the jurisdiction, such as it is, in Southwark is confined to the ancient Southwark and not to what we now speak of as Southwark. " The process of the Court is excluded from the " Liberty of the Clink, but the jurisdiction extends " over the Southwark Manor. The Steward of " Southwark is the sole Judge of the Court, " with power to appoint a deputy in his necessary " absence. The proceedings of this Court are " not subject to review by any of the ordinary " City Courts, but they may be removed to the " Supreme Court by certiorari or habeas in cases " where the debt or damages to be recovered exceed " 20*l*. The jury panel is made out by the High " Bailiff from the more substantial inhabitants of " Southwark. The Commissioners of 1837 reported " that very little business had for many years been " done in this Court, and that it ought to be abolished. " (See 2nd Rep. M.C., 1837, p. 132.) It has practi- " cally fallen into disuse."

4813. The Parliamentary Borough of Southwark is of considerable antiquity. Do you know whether that was co-extensive before 1832 with the Southwark under the jurisdiction of the City?—I know that these portions were added, but I am not sure whether it was co-extensive with the rest.

4814. You proceed to make some statement as to the judicial powers of the City Chamberlain?—" The " City Chamberlain has power to hear and deter- " mine all cases or complaints between masters and " their apprentices, and in that capacity he may com- " mit either master or apprentice to Bridewell."

4815. Bridewell does no longer exist, does it?—Yes, for this purpose it does, sir.

4816. Or is it transferred?—The old Bridewell has ceased?—The present one where they send apprentices I believe to this day is still there in Bridge Street.

4817. In Bridge Street?—Yes.

4818. (Mr. Crawford.) It is in close proximity to the Temple.

4819. (Chairman.) I have been there, but I was under the impression that it was a very large and fine building, and empty; in former years an occasional apprentice was put there?—My informant was the warder at the gate. I asked if he still received apprentices, as I could scarcely believe it without, and he said that he did.

4820. (Mr. Smith.) Did he tell you when he received the last?—No; he said he received them still.

4821. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, you may take it that they are still committed.

4822. (Mr. Smith.) Are they; you have not had a master committed for some time I should think. It is a jurisdiction peculiar to London. As far as I know nothing of the kind exists anywhere else.

4823. (Chairman.) But these cases never go before the magistrates at Guildhall or Mansion House?—I think not; it is a special jurisdiction in the Chamberlain. It is believed that there is an appeal to the Court of the Mayor and Aldermen, but in practice no appeal takes place.

4824. Is this an open court that is held?

4825. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, it is an open court?—There were formerly regular court days.

4826. (Chairman.) But now?—The practice is to take the cases when they arise. The great majority of cases are treated simply by admonishing or giving judicious advice to the apprentice, threatening him with imprisonment.

4827. (Lord Farrer.) A paternal jurisdiction?—Yes, I think so.

4828. (Chairman.) I gather from an expression before me that there is a concurrent jurisdiction at the police court; the Chamberlain's authority is not exclusive.

4829. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find that is so; there is a saving clause preserving this?—If an apprentice commits any offence that is an offence by Statute or at the common law no doubt he would be amenable to the ordinary courts, and therefore to the police court, but I should think the jurisdiction of the Chamberlain is wider than that and may be exercised

* See also Kemp, 5898–9.

Mr. J. Kemp.
7 Dec. 1893.

when there would be no offence that the police court could take notice of.*

4830. (Chairman.) Any breach of indentures?—As a rule it is misbehaviour. Questions upon indentures come in the Lord Mayor's Court. I think that the cases before the Chamberlain are cases of conduct.

4831. (Mr. Crawford.) Conduct which may amount to a breach of some of the covenants in the indentures?—Yes.

4832–5. (Mr. Smith.) He can only punish by committal to prison, I suppose?—That is the only punishment, yes. He cannot interfere with his indenture.

4836. (Chairman.) An unruly apprentice may be committed to Bridewell for a period not exceeding three months?—Yes.

4837. Usually 7 or 14 days?—Yes, I wish to correct what I said a moment ago about the authority of the Chamberlain as regards indentures. He may "if he pleases discharge the apprentice from his "indentures, or may, even against the master's will, "turn him over to a new master"; but if it is sought to recover any part of the premium, that must be in the Lord Mayor's Court.

4838. There is still an institution of a quasi-judicial character, the Chamber of Arbitration, of very recent origin?—That has been very recently founded.

4839. In what way is that connected with the City?—The management is in the hands of a committee of 12, who are appointed by the Corporation and the London Chamber of Commerce. The arbitrations are held at the Guildhall, and a book of rules of procedure has recently been published.

4840. Now, Mr. Kemp, will you tell us briefly what you know of the organisation of the police within the City?—The City Police force was created soon after the introduction of the new system of police in the Metropolis, well, 10 years after the introduction. The new system in the Metropolis was introduced in 1829, and the City Police force was created by an Act of 1839. With a few exceptions it is organised upon a plan nearly uniform with that established for the rest of the metropolis.

4841. Do you know anything of the organisation of the police within the City before that?—They were under the City Marshal, who was the head of the police. There was a day and a night watch.

4842–3. We hope to get that further information when the City reappears before us; we will deal only with what exists now. In 1839 the present force was established?—Was established. "By section 3 "of the Act a Commissioner was directed to be "appointed by the Court of Common Council, subject to the approval of the Queen, as the head of "the City Police force. He is removable by the "Queen or the Court of Aldermen, for misconduct or "other reasonable cause.† If the Commissioner is "not a justice of the City, it is enacted by section 6 "that it shall be lawful for the Queen on petition of "the Court of the Mayor and Aldermen and the "Court of Common Council to appoint him to be a "Justice of the Peace for the City and liberties," but his authority is limited.

4844. It means two petitions?—These are the words of the Statute, but whether that means two petitions, or one in which they concur, I am unable to say.

4845. I suppose it is correctly quoted from the Statute?

4846. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, the Statute is: "And "be it further enacted that in case the said Commissioner shall not be a justice of the said City, it shall "be lawful for Her Majesty, if she shall be so "pleased, on petition of the Court of Mayor and "Aldermen, and the said Mayor, Aldermen, and "Commons in Common Council assembled, to appoint "the said Commissioner to be a justice of the peace "in and for the said City and liberties, but no such "appointment shall authorise the said Commissioner "to act as a justice of the peace at any Court of "General or Quarter Sessions, or in any manner out "of sessions, except for the preservation of the peace, "the prevention of crimes, the detection and commital of offenders, and in carrying into execution "the purposes of this Act; and in case the Commissioner shall be appointed a justice of the peace as "aforesaid, he shall take all the oaths usually taken by "a justice of the peace: Provided always, that whenever any such Commissioner shall resign or be "removed from his office of Commissioner of Police, "he shall cease to be a justice of the said City and "liberties as aforesaid." So it looks like a joint petition—a petition of the Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council.

4847. (Chairman.) One petition, but both bodies must agree; a petition from the Court of Common Council is not sufficient?—No, it is both Courts.

4848. (Mr. Crawford.) So it appears.

4849. (Chairman.) When he resigns, or is removed from his office, he ceases to be a justice of the peace?—He cannot be a Member of Parliament, or carry on any business or profession. He is exempt from serving on juries and inquests. The Commissioner and members of the police force are prohibited from voting for the election of Members of Parliament for the City of London or the adjoining counties, or within the Metropolitan Police District.

4850. That is a disability which still exists?

4851. (Mr. Crawford.) That was removed, surely, in 1889, was it not, Mr. Kemp?*

4852. (Chairman.) It was removed with respect to policemen elsewhere.

4853. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, it was removed in 1889 by the 50 Victoria, chapter 89.

4854. (Mr. Smith.) It has been removed, as far as municipal voting is concerned, by an Act passed in the last Session of Parliament.

4855. (Chairman.) And county voting too; it must have been removed with respect to the City also.

4856. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, you may take it that it was so?—The Common Council is to fix the number of the force, and they are be appointed by the Commissioner. The men so appointed are sworn in as constables for preserving the peace. "The force "consists, at present, of a Commissioner, an Assistant "Commissioner, 2 superintendents, 4 chief inspectors, "8 first-class inspectors, 22 station-inspectors, 12 "detective-inspectors, 67 sergeants, 7 detective-"sergeants, 21 detective-constables, and 782 constables "exclusive of those constables on private service "duty. The Commissioner, with the consent of the "Court of the Mayor and Aldermen, has power to "make regulations for the route to be observed by "carts, carriages, and persons, and for preventing "obstruction in the streets within the City at all "times of public processions, public rejoicings, or "illuminations."

4857. (Lord Farrer.) Has he the power of making rules to prevent obstruction generally, or is he confined to those particular occasions mentioned in the Statute?—He has certain powers under the Act of 1867.

4858. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the Act for regulating the traffic of the Metropolis?—Yes.

4859. 30th and 31st Victoria, chapter 104?—Yes, I am looking for it.

4860. (Lord Farrer.) Is that an Act relating to the City traffic?—It applies to both the forces; to the Metropolitan Police and the City Police.

4861. (Mr. Smith.) They are very similar words to those contained in most borough Statutes; sometimes a little wider; ours are a little wider.

4862. (Lord Farrer.) Does the Act give power to direct the course of traffic, for instance, to divert the omnibuses, as they have been diverted near the Mansion House?

4863. (Mr. Crawford.) That is, omnibuses which are brought within what are called special limits, special limits being set out by the Commissioners after

* See also Kemp, 5900.
† See also Kemp, 4630–3.

* See also Kemp, 5900.

notice published. Then, as regards those special limits, the omnibus drivers must obey the regulations of the police.

4864. (Lord Farrer.) Under a penalty?

4865. (Mr. Crawford.) Under a penalty.

4866. (Chairman.) The Statute?—By section 23 it was provided that the warrants of the City Justices may be executed.

4867. You are not going to tell us anything more about this regulation of traffic. I thought you were referring to the Statute about that?—They have the powers of the Act of 1867 for regulating traffic in the Metropolis, as amended by another Act of that year.

4868. (Mr. Crawford.) And also amended by 1867?—1867, I think.

4869. In the 1867 Act there was a slight amendment?—Under that Act they could prohibit a scavenger scavenging except within certain hours, and they have authority to prevent the deposit of goods in the street so as to cause obstruction or inconvenience to the passage of the public, and they can prevent the driving of cattle through the streets between certain hours—between 10 in the morning and 7 in the evening, except with the permission of the Commissioner of Police. They also make regulations as to the Metropolitan stage carriages; that is, the omnibuses, about stopping; that they are not to stop except for the purpose of taking up or setting down passengers, and they can interfere with advertisements carried or deposited in any street within the limits by any person riding in a vehicle, or on horseback, or being on foot. There is power in the Commissioner of Police to make special limits within the general limits of the Act, that is, to direct that any street, or portion of a street, within the general limits shall be within the special limits; and there are further powers given with regard to streets so affected. Within the special limits the Commissioner of Police in the City, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, may make regulations.

4870. And with the consent of the Mayor and Aldermen?—And, with the consent of the Court of Aldermen, may make regulations to be observed by all persons with respect to the route to be taken by carts, carriages, or vehicles, with power to prohibit any cart, carriage, or other vehicle from coming into any street or part of a street within the City limits for the purpose only of passing to its destination in some other street or part of a street, and, secondly, with respect to the line to be kept by persons riding or driving, and they vary these rules.

4871. Then you find section 14 deals with Metropolitan stage carriages?—Yes, within the special limits of this Act no driver or conductor of a Metropolitan stage carriage shall take up or set down passengers at any place where he may for the time being be prohibited by regulation of the Commissioner of Police from taking them up or setting them down, and any driver or conductor contravening this section of the Act is liable to a penalty. Then he has power to order, within certain hours, and with regard still to the special limits, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the morning and 6 in the evening—no, this is a general enactment with regard to the special limits—between these hours no coal is to be loaded or unloaded on or across any pathway within the special limits and between the said hours; and within the said limits no casks, whether empty or full, shall be lowered or drawn up by means of ropes; and then there are powers that except with the permission of the Commissioner no person shall, within the special limits, and within the hours of 10 in the morning and 7 at night, drive or conduct any cart with timber of a certain length and size (35 feet long), or metal, or any other article which exceeds 35 feet, or carry in any way along the street any ladder, or scaffold, or pole, or other article which exceeds 35 feet, or is of a certain breadth, or drive or conduct along any street any cart or waggon used for conveying goods or merchandise, and drawn by more than four horses.

4872. Well, I think you will find he has certain powers in regard to dogs and shoeblacks. I do not think there is anything more in the Act that one need trouble about?—Yes.

4873. (Chairman.) You have not mentioned in any of those provisions any regulation in regard to movement of persons?—No, I do not think I have.

4874. (Mr. Crawford.) You must go back to the City Police Act of 1839 for that.

4875. (Mr. Smith.) Are these powers, Mr. Crawford, similar to those other?

4876. (Mr. Crawford.) The Act Mr. Kemp has been quoting from extends to the Metropolis generally as well as to the City. I do not think you need trouble very much in regard to this matter.

4877. (Mr. Smith.) If it is common to the two bodies that we have to deal with it is not so very important.

4878. (Mr. Crawford.) Except that in our City Police Act of 1839 there are one or two matters which I think are special to the City, which I think they have not in the metropolis. But I think they are very small.

4879. (Mr. Smith.) For the purposes of amalgamation it is only necessary to see the difference, I think.

4880. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not think it is of sufficient importance at the present stage to go further into the Acts.

4881. (Chairman.) Well, now, we will proceed to the question of pay?—The Corporation have to pay out of their general revenues one-fourth part of the expenses of the police force, and the remaining three-fourths of those expenses are to be met by a rate which the Corporation are authorised to levy in the several Wards of the City upon every person who inhabits or occupies any house within the several Wards respectively, or within any precinct or place within the boundaries of such wards or adjoining thereto and not included within the limits of the Metropolitan Police District. "All precincts and "places within the City of London or liberties "thereof, and not included within the limits of the "Metropolitan Police District, are, for the purposes "of the Act, deemed to be parts of the City of "London, and of the wards which the same respectively adjoin."

4882. (Lord Farrer.) Does that apply to the Temple?—Yes, to any parts of the Temple that are within the limits of the city. Then there is a provision with regard to ward rate, which has nothing to do——

4883. (Chairman.) Which we need not enter upon. A larger proportion of this expense has to be raised by rates than is common with police expenses; I think three fourths apparently?—Three fourths have to be raised. I think it is five ninths that is paid not by rate in the rest of the Metropolis.

4884. I am not sure whether it is four ninths or five ninths. One pays four and the other pays five.

4885. (Lord Farrer.) The Government pays four and the other pays five?—Yes.

4886. (Chairman.) In the Acts of the Municipal Police throughout the country, the Government pay one half certain expenses, not the total expenses, but nearly the whole.

4887. (Mr. Smith.) It is practically half the general expenses.

4888. (Lord Farrer.) Did the Police Superannuation Act of 1889 increase the pensions, do you know, of the City Police?

4889. (Mr. Crawford.) It gave them certain privileges which they had not before; it really put them almost on a similar footing to the Metropolitan Police.

4890. (Lord Farrer.) And that would fall upon the rate, would it?

4891. (Mr. Crawford.) The pension, it always did, you know; it always came out of the police rate. It contains a special power of appeal which is not given to the Metropolitan Police.

Mr. J. Kemp.

7 Dec. 1893.

4892. (Lord Farrer.) But are the pensions included in the sum of which the City pay, out of their cash, one fourth?

4893. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, certainly.

4894. (Lord Farrer.) It is the whole. It is treated as a whole?

4895. (Mr. Crawford.) It is treated as a whole, certainly?—This Act also deals with the ward rate, which has nothing specially to do with the police, except that it is collected in the same way.

4896. Well, the account has to be distinguished?—The account has to be distinguished. It is for the purpose of ward expenses.

4897. (Lord Farrer.) That is the expense of the wardmotes; because, I think, we had in evidence the other day that the wardmotes can spend no money; there is no money placed at their disposal out of this rate; is that not so?

4898. (Mr. Crawford.) No; I do not quite agree with that. I gave an instance where they did spend money. The words of the Act are "and for other "local purposes connected therewith."*

4899. (Chairman.) You have another section in your paper on the regulation of trade. I think the result of it is that it is all ancient history?—Most of it is. They appear to have very little, of course, except that they have the markets.

4900. We will consider those separately?—And they still have the right to metage on fruit and edible roots.

4901. (Lord Farrer.) But not a compulsory one?—I suppose it is not exercised compulsorily. But I do not know of any Act that takes away the right to do so compulsorily.

4902. Compulsion exists?—As far as I know, the right exists.

4903. (Chairman.) The right exists, but it is not exercised compulsorily?—The right exists, but it is not exercised compulsorily. In the case of grain it is merely a voluntary charge, because that has been taken away by the Act of 1872.

4904. (Lord Farrer.) And these rights, if compulsory, are exercised under old custom?—Yes. The Grain by Charter.

4905. On Coal and Grain by Charter?—Grain by Charter.

4906. (Mr. Crawford.) Charter of James?—I think some of them were earlier than that, were they not—in consideration of the Corporation forgiving a debt of 7,000*l.*

4907. That was in the time of Henry VIII.?—Yes; well, I think that included some of the metage dues.

4908. I think you may take it generally, Mr. Kemp, that all our rights have really been paid for?—Probably.

4909. (Mr. Smith.) I see both Commissions recommended their abolition.

4910. (Lord Farrer.) And the City do not seem to exercise them?

4911. (Chairman.) The next heading, Mr. Kemp, in your memorandum refers to the City markets?—Yes, the earliest Charter which refers to the City markets is the Charter of 1327—the first year of Edward III. It grants that no market shall be erected within seven leucas of the City.

4912. That is a negative Charter?—Yes.

4913. (Mr. Smith.) That was a common form, was it not, in those days?—That was the common law limit.

4914. It was an exclusive market?—Yes, but I understood you to refer, Mr. Chairman, when you said negative, that it was not a grant on the part of the City to erect markets.

4915. (Chairman.) As so recited it is not?—But the whole of the City of London, I take it, by custom, itself at that time would be open market—which is to say that every shop in the City would be open market for the kind of goods commonly sold there, and that every day, except Sunday, would be market day within the City.

4916. But the right over a market, so far as it is valuable, generally involves the right to levy tolls?—Yes.

4917. As well as the right of rating in the market?—Yes.

4918. There was nothing of that kind in the City that one knows of?—I remember no positive grant of that kind. This is the form in which it appears.

4919. That the grant so far assured whatever right the City had within the City, but prohibited any market being erected with seven leucas?—Yes.

4920. That is a league, is it not?—I thought a league in England was 3 miles.

4921. That may be, but a league is a word commonly used throughout Western Europe?—It is, I believe, the same word.

4922. Why do you attribute to this leuca 2,000 paces?—My authority for that was the evidence given before the Markets Commission of 1887–88.

4923. A league in France is about 2½ miles; 4 kilometres would make just a league, according to the best notion I have of a French league?—Yes, the common law distance is 7 miles.

4924. In that case a league is taken to be a mile?—Yes, but it is not exactly so.

4925. (Mr. Smith.) Nearly a mile, would it not be, 2,000 paces?—Yes; well it is very nearly a mile.

4926. (Chairman.) The Charter was interpreted—at least the opinion of the Judges was given upon it before a Private Bill Committee in the Lords?—Yes, and the principal points which they determined with regard to that were, first, that the Charter would have the effect——

4927. What is that procedure—getting the opinion of the Judges before a Private Bill Committee?—It was a Committee of the House of Lords. I had not considered it; I thought it was a general power of the House of Lords to take the opinion of the Judges upon any question that came before them. I do not know that they sit otherwise as a court of law, than simply as the House of Lords; so that sitting as a Committee I should assume that they had the same power; but I have no special information on the point.

4928. A Committee of the Lords could not command the attendance of the Judges. The Lords themselves might perhaps do so. Of course it was the custom to do so when the Lords were sitting as a Court of Appeal, but this was before a Private Bill Committee?—Yes, it was.

4929. (Mr. Crawford.) It was in connexion with the Easements and Cattle Market Bill of 1835; they were called in to advise?—Yes.

4930. But I think you get a more authoritative decision with regard to the Corporation market rights in the later case of "The Great Eastern Railway Company v. Goldsmid"?—Yes, "The Great Eastern Railway Company v. Goldsmid."

4931. (Chairman.) Of course the opinion of the Judges, however worthy of respect, would not necessarily command our adherence. The House of Lords has more than once given a decision absolutely in conflict with the opinion tendered by the Judges?—Yes; but in this case—I have not got the report with me, but my recollection is that the Chancellor shortly expressed his agreement with the opinion of the Judges, and added that of course it did not interfere with the authority of the Lords, because they were going to proceed by Statute, and whatever rights or powers the market might have would be subject to what the action of Parliament should be. But this is a statement of the principal findings of the Judges, as to what in law was the position of the markets in London.

4932. Well, let us take them one by one?—"(1) "That the Charter had the effect of a local Act of "Parliament, so that the Crown would have no right

* See also Monckton, 2778–92.

" to grant another market within the common law " distance of 7 miles of the City."

4933. But the Crown cannot derogate. I do not wish to contest the opinion of the Judges; but the Crown cannot derogate from its own right, from its own grant, can it?—That would be so. It would be taken to be deceived in its grant; but in this case the reason for saying the Crown cannot grant a market would be the opinion of the Judges that this is a grant, a Charter, which had the effect of a local Act of Parliament, and it is found in the Rolls of Parliament, I think, this Charter.

4934. For that purpose it would have been enough to have found that it was a Charter?—I think they found that it was something more; that it was a local Act of Parliament.

4935. I mean it is not necessary for that conclusion?—For that conclusion it would not have been necessary. It is as you say.

4936. The conclusion would have followed without carrying that Charter to the length of being an Act of Parliament?—That is so. The Crown could not have derogated from its own grant, and it would have been held to have been deceived. " (2) That the " grantee of a market may hold it anywhere he " pleases within certain limits, or in more places than " one, and may change the place in which it is held, " but that an obligation is cast upon him to provide " convenient accommodation for all who desire to buy " and sell in the public market, otherwise there will " arise a good defence to an action brought by the " grantee of the franchise against any person for " selling out of the market to the prejudice of his " right, provided that such person had been prevented " from selling in the market by want of convenient " room."

4937. That establishes the obligations of a grantee?—It establishes the obligations of a grantee and also his powers as to moving the market and holding it where he pleases, and extending its limits—which have been questions which have been very much open to doubt and difficulty in London, and not yet free from doubt, I should think. " (3.) That this breach " of duty on the part of the grantee might operate as " a forfeiture, and furnish a ground for a scire facias " to repeal the patent by which the market was " granted, even if it did not lay him open to an " indictment for a misdemeanour. (4.) That so long " as the grant remains unrepealed, any default in " providing proper accommodation for the public " could not of itself operate in point of law as a " ground for granting a new Charter to another to " hold a market within the common law distance, " which should be injurious to the existing market."

4938. That is you must obtain a repeal before proceeding further, by scire facias or some other process?—Yes. A default is limited to exposing the grantee to the procedure mentioned in the section before.

4939. He might amend?—Probably he might.

4940. And so avoid forfeiture?—Yes, and it would not be an offence.

4941. Yes?—" (5) That in the case of a grant of a " market being one of metes and bounds and the " grantee being incapable of enlarging its limits, this " circumstance coupled with the fact that it would be " for the advantage of the public that a new market " should be erected would be a sufficient ground for " the Crown to take such steps as, according to law, " would have the effect of erecting a new market to " such an extent as would remedy the inconvenience " without affecting the rights of the owners of the old " market, and for that purpose a writ of ad quod " damnum might issue."

4942. (Lord Farrer.) The Crown might take steps which would have the effect of erecting a new market, but it must not be more than would fill up a gap caused by the default of the original market?—Yes, assuming it is a market which is limited to one being a market of metes and bounds, which they had no power to extend, and if it was for advantage of the public that a new market should be erected that would be a sufficient ground for the Crown to take such steps as would lead to the erection of a new market, but only to the extent to which the necessities of the public were not satisfied by the existing limited market.

4943. (Chairman.) To give that in concrete form, if the grant to the City was that of a right to a market within the area of a square mile, and the City could not extend those limits, and that produced an inconvenience to the public outside that area, that would be a ground for enabling the Crown to grant a new Charter to a market outside the area, so far as was necessary to remedy the inconvenience of the public?—If the grant to the City was a grant to hold a market within one mile, that would not be a market within metes and bounds, that would be a grant of the large power of holding markets anywhere. It means, I think, a limited actually defined small space within which the market must be held. A space covered by the market, wholly covered by the market, or perhaps its approaches, which are sometimes included as being part of the market. The City had several, one or two or three in the City, markets the limits of which it could not extend and the extent to which these did not supply the needs of the public, the Crown might have interfered with the restriction upon other persons, and erected a market to supply the deficiency only, but a grant to the City to hold a market within the whole of the City is the largest grant that they can have, coupled with the restriction upon other persons of holding markets without the City, and within 7 miles.

4944. (Mr. Smith.) Excuse me one moment to get that clearly into my head. You distinguish then between the grantee of an ordinary market that may be held anywhere and the grantee of a special market of metes and bounds where it was to be held in some particular place?—Yes. " (6) That damage done to " the owner of a franchise of a market within the " common law distance may form a fit subject for " compensation."

4945. (Chairman.) Common law distance is seven miles?—Is seven miles.

4946. That is different from the distance of seven leagues?—It seems to be different; I should think it was. Yes; there is a difference between the two distances.

4947. It may be that the term in the Charter was adopted from the common law, but still it rests on a different ground?—Yes.

4948. One is an expressed limitation and the other is a limitation arising out of common law?—It may be, as I think was often the case in many countries then, that the distance of a mile or of a league was not perhaps accurately ascertained; they may have been intended to mean the same thing.

4949. (Mr. Smith.) A pace is 30 inches, is it not?—I think it is.

4950. (Chairman.) The original mile is a thousand paces.

4951. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, of course; one ought to know that.

4952. (Chairman.) That of course is much more than 30 inches.

4953. (Mr. Smith.) I do not know when our mile was fixed at 1,760 yards. I think this would be very nearly 1,760 yards.

4954. (Chairman.) Yes?—The Corporation claimed a general power to erect markets anywhere within the City.

4955. That has not been so exercised, has it?—The City is all one market; the City markets have not been shifted about from place to place?—Well, they have been very frequently removed. In older times there were markets in many parts of the City where they do not exist now, and whence they were not removed specially by Act of Parliament, although many later ones of course were moved by Act of Parliament.

Mr. J. Kemp.

7 Dec. 1893.

4956. Have they died out, or have they been shifted from the place where they were originally held to some other place?—Generally they have been moved to places where they now exist.

4957. By Acts of Parliament; but otherwise you said in old times there were markets where they are not now. Were those in old times in places where they are not now, and have they disappeared, or have they been altered?—Some of them have disappeared, but there seems to have been a great change after the great fire, when places were laid out specially for markets in the City by the second Act for the rebuilding of London, which is the 22nd of Charles II., chapter 11. It was enacted that: "'The Mayor, " 'Aldermen, and Commons of the City in Common " 'Council assembled shall and may and are hereby " 'empowered to employ such places and portions of " 'ground within the said City and Liberties thereof " 'as by and with His said Majesty's approbation now " 'are, or before the 10th day of March 1669 shall be, " 'set out and adjudged necessary and convenient for " 'public places there.' One of the principal markets " established under that Act was called Honey Lane " Market, and it was with reference to the estab- " lishment of that market, and the allegation that " notwithstanding this Act the Corporation had no " power to levy tolls, that Judge Jeffreys advised that " the City Charters should be forfeited, as they were " till 1689, after the Revolution." That forfeiture of the franchises, I may, perhaps, observe, was afterwards held not to be an extinction of the City Corporation as was generally supposed, but merely taking from it all its franchises. If there had not been the word "of" in the judgment it would have extinguished the Corporation.

4958. (Mr. Smith.) We should not have been here.

4959. (Mr. Crawford.) That was not the definite or the indefinite article.

4960. (Mr. Smith.) It is astonishing by how little you have hung once or twice?—Oh; they were reconstituted by Act of Parliament—their Charters were restored to them by Act of Parliament of William and Mary.

4961. (Chairman.) It was more than being restored, was it not?—And confirmed.

4962. A declaration that they had not been properly forfeited. It went that length?—Yes.

4963. Not restoration, but nullification of what had been done.

4964. (Mr. Crawford.) It was a setting aside of the judgment, was it not?—Yes. But during the time that the judgment was valid or existed, if it had ever had the effect of extinguishing the Corporation, those effects would have operated during that time, and the point that I was leading to was, what was decided in the case of an Alderman of the City, a certain Sir James Smith, who did not take the oaths when William came to the throne, and he was removed from his position as Alderman by the authorities in the City for failing to take the oaths which an Alderman was required to take, and then there came 2 William and Mary, the restoration of the franchises, and he applied to be reinstated, saying that he had been wrongly removed, because at the time when he was required to take the oaths the Corporation had been abolished and he was not an Alderman. So it was that the question came to be tried, and it was held that he was rightly removed because the Corporation was never destroyed, and he was an Alderman then.

4965. But the preamble of the Act to which you have last referred recites the fact that the judgment was illegal, does it not?—Oh, yes, but still during the time which it held, it would have had that effect if it had been a fact.

4966. (Mr. Smith.) Your objection is that the recital was perhaps to meet this particular case?—Oh, no; the case did not arise till after the Statute, you see.

4967. (Chairman.) That case after all does not really affect the point, does it?—It is a decision that the Corporation of London——

4968. Survived?—Yes.

4969. But the point I was suggesting was that there was not a restoration then of the privileges of the Corporation quite apart from the existence of the Corporation itself, which according to that decision existed all through; there was no real restoration of its privileges, but a declaration that they had never been properly taken away?—At any rate it confirms in most definite language. It says that "the Mayor, " Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London shall " for ever hereafter remain, continue, and be, and " prescribed to be, a body politic, in re, facto, et " nomine by the name of 'the Mayor and Commonalty " 'and Citizens of London,' and by that name, and all " and every other name and names of incorporation, " by which they at any time before the said judgment " were incorporated, to sue, plead, and be impleaded, " without any seizure or forejudger of their franchises, " liberties, and privileges, upon pretence of any " forfeiture or misdemeanour heretofore or hereafter " to be done, committed, or suffered, and shall " have and enjoy all their rights, gifts, charters, " grants, liberties, privileges, franchises, customs, " usuages, constitutions, prescriptions, immunities, " markets, duties, tolls, lands, tenements, estates, and " hereditaments, whatsoever which they lawfully had " at the time of the recording or giving of the said " judgment."

4970. That is as far as the Legislature can go in wiping out what had historically happened.

4971. (Mr. Crawford.) You left out the rather important words "or at the time or times of the said " pretended forfeitures." You ended up at the word "judgment"?—Yes. I have not got that here. "In " 1692 the Court of Aldermen instructed the City " Surveyors, appointed under the Fire Acts, to make " a survey of the several markets of the City. This " appears to have been completed by the following " year, and the farmers of the markets petitioned the " Court to take steps with a view to perpetuating the " testimony of the surveyors as to the boundaries and " other rights of the markets. A bill was ordered " to be exhibited in Chancery for that purpose, but " it does not appear from the City records whether " this was carried out. It shows, however, that there " existed some doubt as to whether, although the " whole City was market overt, and all under the " control of the Corporation, it was possible legally " to move any existing market.

4972. (Chairman.) And the question was not raised as to whether the Court of Common Council by any act of its own could ratify of itself?—Could ratify?

4973. The setting out of bounds of the market?—Not that I am aware of—no.

4974. They thought they must go to Chancery for the purpose?—It appears that that was the course they took.

4975. (Mr. Crawford.) That may be in connexion with the injunction to restrain.

4976. (Chairman.) The jurisdiction under Chancery?—The perpetuation of testimony it was, merely.

4977. (Mr. Crawford.) That was the object of the City evidently?—Yes. The Corporation formerly farmed the markets, and they opposed all grants for the erection of new markets. The farmers were got rid of about 1771, and since then the markets have been in the hands of the Corporation themselves. But there are other markets in the Metropolis which have in some way come into being, especially the two principal markets of Spitalfields and Covent Garden. In the case of Spitalfields Market, it was said in the case of "The Great Eastern Railway v. Goldsmid," that it must be taken that the Corporation assented to the grant in this case, because there was no question about the nature of their rights under the Charter, that it could not have been done without their consent; but that the effect of the Charter, even an enrolled Charter that had the force of a local Act of Parliament, was to confer a benefit, and not to prevent a person from allowing by consent, infringements of it that could not have been made against his will.

4978. (Chairman.) Was there any trace of the origin of the market at the time when it came into existence; Spitalfields?—I do not think there is.

4979. It could not have been antecedent in date to the date of the Charter?—No.

4980. (Mr. Crawford.) It is clear from the judgment that it could not have been?—No. In any case the Charter of Covent Garden Market was in Charles II.'s reign. I do not remember in the case of Spitalfields whether there is any information about the origin of it. Covent Garden was created by Charter in the reign of Charles II., and as far as I know, there is no record of any action taken by the City. I suppose it would be said that in that case also they assented to the grant.

4981. A Charter given to——?—I think to the ancestor of the present Duke of Bedford; but I am not quite sure about that.

4982. It was their property, but the then representative was not in favour of Charles II., who scarcely wished to cut off his head one day and grant him a Charter the day after.

4983. (Mr. Crawford.) Lord Selborne in his judgment on that case of the "Great Eastern Railway v. Goldsmid," said: "The Court of Appeal thought, and "in my opinion, quite rightly thought that if the "City, down to the 34th of Charles II., had unim-"paired, and still existing, the privilege which is "expressed in the terms which I have read from the "Charter of Edward III., there was amply sufficient "ground for presuming that the City had consented "to the erection of this particular market"—that is Spitalfields Market, by the Charter 34 Charles II., so probably the Spitalfields Market was a Charter market of 34 Charles II.?—That, I think, must be so.

4984. (Mr. Smith.) Spitalfields became prominent about that time, if I remember rightly, through the weavers.

4985. (Mr. Crawford.) Have you not found in the course of your research, Mr. Kemp, that the assent of the Corporation was constantly required to be shown under seal where an application had been made to found a new market; have you not discovered that the consent of the Corporation was asked for and required to be shown under the seal of the Corporation?—No, I have not. I do not know of any existing market in London, except these two, that have been created otherwise than by Act of Parliament. I do not suppose the consent under seal would be required in such a case as that. In that case, I think, the Charter under which Covent Garden Market was erected was of the 22nd year of Charles II., and the other was a later market the 34th of that reign.

4986. (Chairman.) It would be 10 years after the Restoration?—Yes.

4987. There was a market which existed until recently, Hungerford Market?—Hungerford Market, yes, I think that is Stratford Market.

4988. No; it is the site of the Charing Cross Hotel.

4989. (Lord Farrer.) Just where the station is now. One used to go through it.

4990. (Mr. Crawford.) The consent of the City was given to the erection of that market.

4991. (Mr. Smith.) What was Clare Market?—Clare Market is merely the name of a place. It does not mean a market.

4992. (Mr. Crawford.) I see that Pulling in dealing with the question you have just referred to says: "Indeed it has been usual to require the formal "consent of the Corporation under the City seal, "before any new market can be erected even by an "Act of Parliament; in a modern instance, a clause "of compensation was inserted in the Act, and the "rights of the City in other respects expressly "reserved."

4993. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know whether the consent of the Corporation has been given to the markets that are now held in the New Cut and at Tottenham Court Road?—Street markets.

4994. Street markets?

4995. (Mr. Crawford.) These would be retail markets. The Corporation never opposed them.

4996. (Lord Farrer.) They never have, have they?

4997. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact I do not think the Corporation has opposed any market that has been considered to be reasonably required.

4998. (Lord Farrer.) Those retail markets they have never opposed.

4999. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, no, no; merely street markets.

5000. (Chairman.) There was the hay market?—The hay market at Smithfield?

5001. (Lord Farrer.) And one near Regent's Park?

5002. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly, and there is one now, a very flourishing one, in the East End, as well as Smithfield.

5003. (Lord Farrer.) Is that what you call a retail market, the hay market?

5004. (Mr. Crawford.) The hay market is a wholesale market.

5005. (Lord Farrer.) Was the consent of the Corporation given to that?

5006. (Mr. Crawford.) I really cannot give you the date of the one in the East End; but Smithfield Market still continues.

5007. (Chairman.) You can tell us what the existing markets are?—"The existing markets which "are the property of the Corporation are—

"1. The London Central Markets, including—
"(a.) The London Central Meat, Poultry, "and Provision Market.
"(b.) The London Central General Market.
"2. Smithfield Hay Market.
"3. The Metropolitan Cattle Market."

That is the market at Islington.

"4. Leadenhall Market.
"5. The London Coal Market."

The Corporation is also the local authority under section 9 of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 74.), as they were under the repealed Act of 1869, for the whole Metropolis as far as relates to foreign animals. Under the authority of the Act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 70.) they erected the Deptford Foreign Cattle Market. The Corporation say that they do not regard this market as a City market, or consider that the property in it vests in them as in the case of other markets. (See First Report of the Royal Commission on Market Rights and Tolls, 1888, Vol II., p. 34.)

That was the evidence, Sir, given by the City officers, I think, before the Markets Commission.

5008. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you have summed it up rather too briefly?—Too briefly. I thought these were his very words; I only mean by it that he says "not in the same sense." Of course there can be no doubt under the Act that they have applied the tolls of the markets as the Act provides.

5009. And that after the payment of the debt?—And that after the payment of the debt upon the Cattle Market at Islington the tolls would continue to be the property of the Corporation, so that I myself am rather at a loss to understand quite how it is distinguishable from the other property of the City, except in its origin—distinguishable, I mean, from the other markets as property, except in its origin.

5010. I think it is clear that in this particular market the tolls and profits have to be applied in a particular way. That is so in connexion with the other markets?—Indeed it is; surely to some large extent it is; the tolls of all the other markets are appropriated by Statute to the purposes for which they were authorised to be raised.

Mr. J. Kemp.

7 Dec. 1893.

5011. Under all those Statutes the Corporation were authorised to erect markets, and were authorised to apply the tolls to their own use, but naturally in the erection of markets the tolls were given as security to the bondholders. But if the Corporation had been rich enough to erect the markets without borrowing money they would not have had to trouble anybody about it. My only reason for interrupting you at that stage was, I did not want this to be taken as a complete summing up of the evidence given by the City officers?—Oh, no, I do not say it is, I refer to it as a special thing which they said and which rather struck me. I think they said that they did not regard it on the same footing as the other markets which belonged to the City. As to the London Central Markets, "the site of Smithfield Market was cleared "under the provisions of the Metropolitan Market "Act of 1851, and the London Central Meat, Poultry, "and Provision Market was erected upon a portion "of that site. The building and regulation of the "London Central Markets have been carried out "under the provisions of the Acts of 1860, 1862, "1864, 1875, 1882, and 1886."

5012. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not want to interrupt the witness, but it does occur to me that we have already had an admission from Mr. Kemp that he has had the advantage of correcting his statement with the aid of the Blue Book. Might we take it very shortly that if he has read through the statement which appears here in regard to the Corporation markets, and he believes that statement to be correct, surely that is sufficient for our purpose without going through all this. I do not wish to stop Mr. Kemp, because he clearly has given a great deal of attention to this matter, but I think, practically, as it already appears in the Blue Book, and if Mr. Kemp has satisfied himself that the statements, as they appear in this Blue Book are accurate, it would save a great deal of time, if he confined himself to pointing out anything which is inaccurate.

5013. (Chairman.) We did not advance in the examination of this Blue Book so far did we.

5014. (Mr. Crawford.) No, except that the Blue Book has been put in, and Mr. Kemp has had the opportunity of carefully looking at it and comparing that with his own statement, and if he considers the information given in this Blue Book in regard to the markets is accurate, it is hardly necessary to repeat that here, the Blue Book being before us, but if there is anything in the Blue Book which Mr. Kemp considers inaccurate, then by all means let it be pointed out.

5015. (Lord Farrer.) Or anything that it is desirable to add.

5016. (Mr. Crawford.) Or anything that it is desirable to add or any omission; or if the case has been presented in too strong a light.

5017. (Chairman.) I think we had better go on?—"First there was established the Central Meat "Market, subsequently the Central Poultry and "Provision Market, thirdly, a vegetable and fruit "market, which was afterwards changed by Act of "Parliament into a fish market as an experiment, "and subsequently abandoned as a fish market as "entirely unsuccessful, and now used as a general "market, including fish, fruit, vegetables, and any "marketable commodities. At the London Central "Meat, Poultry, and Provision Market, the market "days are every day except Christmas, Good Fridays, "and Sundays. It is under the control of a clerk "and an inspector who look after the arrangements "of the markets, but the supervision of the meat is "carried out by the Commissioners of Sewers. "Great expense was incurred in providing railway "accommodation for the Central Markets, but this "accommodation is scarcely used at all. The great "bulk of the enormous quantity of meat that comes "every day into London is brought to the market by "horse and van and taken away in the same "manner."

5018. (Lord Farrer.) Does that appear in the City case?—No, that was the evidence before "the "Market Rights and Tolls Commission, 1888."

5019. (Chairman.) Evidence on the part of the City?—On the part of the City that was. I think they said that the railway accommodation which they had provided had turned out not to be used, and in spite of their anticipations the meat was brought by vans.

5020. Brought by horse and van from the ordinary termini of the station?—Of the stations.

5021. And not by the connecting railways?—Not by the connecting railways.

5022. What can be the motive of that do you know; is it the greater cheapness—I suppose there is greater cheapness in that mode of conveyance over going on by a link railway?—I do not know. I do not know why the railway accommodation has not turned out to be used.

5023. (Mr. Crawford.) Does not a great deal of this frozen meat come by water up the Thames and then gets to the market by cart?—That is true of the imported meat, and that is, I suppose, increasing constantly. That would not have a communication by railway at all. "The London Central Fish "Market for the sale wholesale and retail of rail-"borne fish was established under the Act of 1882 "above referred to, although the actual building was "constructed under the powers of the Central "Markets Act, 1875. It was not a success, and "under the Act of 1886 it was reconverted into a "general market for fruit, vegetables, and general "produce, and the fish market was removed to "another and much smaller part of the Central "Market buildings."

5024. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know for what reason it was not a success. The fish dealers preferred to go to the old Billingsgate Market. Is that so, Mr. Crawford?

5025. (Mr. Crawford.) I have no doubt about it. I think that Billingsgate got the name of being the place for the sale of fish wholesale, and the result was that this market, which really was started at the request of fish salesmen, did not prove the success which was anticipated, although it is only fair to say the Corporation did not anticipate its success but it acceded to the demands of the fish salesmen.

5026. (Chairman.) This of course refers to railway borne fish. What the proportion may be between the rail-borne fish and river-borne fish you do not know?—I do not know, but I know that a large part—a considerable part of the fish coming to Billingsgate—is rail-borne fish also, which if what had been anticipated had happened might have been expected to come here.

5027. (Mr. Crawford.) It comes in specially constructed vans—what they call tanks?—Yes, from Grimsby and other places, I think. Inspectors of fish are appointed by the Fishmongers' Company. They are called fish meters.

5028. (Lord Farrer.) Is that under an Act of Parliament?—No, it is not under an Act of Parliament, it is a power that they claim as belonging to their Company.

5029. (Mr. Crawford.) It is in the Charter?—It is in the Charter of theirs.

5030. Of the Fishmongers' Company?—That is probably so. I know at any rate that it is a right that they claim as a right of their Company; it is not under any Act of Parliament.

5031. (Chairman.) And is exercised in a very practical manner?—I should think so, yes.

5032. We see a record from week to week and month to month of quantity of fish condemned by their inspectors?—Yes, at these markets.

5033. (Mr. Crawford.) And prosecutions too?

5034. (Lord Farrer.) But that is not under the control of the Corporation but under the control of the Fishmongers' Company?—Under the control of the Fishmongers' Company.

5035. Is there any other instance in which Companies exercise such powers?—They also appoint the inspectors of fish at Billingsgate—the Fishmongers' Company do. No, I do not remember a Company exercising similar powers. The inspectors of the different markets are appointed by different bodies. As you will observe, the Commissioners of Sewers inspect the meat at the General Meat Market, not the Corporation themselves, but the Commissioners of Sewers. At the fish markets the Fishmongers' Company appoint the inspector. At the cattle markets the Privy Council* appoint the inspectors, but I do not know any other case in which the Companies exercise any similar powers.

5036. (Chairman.) The Fruiterers' Company do not exercise any similar power about fruit?—I do not think so; I think not.

5036*a*. (Mr. Crawford.) Except the annual presentation which is made to the Lord Mayor?—"Under the provisions of section 5 of the Newgate "Market Abolition Act, 1861, Newgate Market, the "old market for the sale of dead meat, was discon-"tinued from the date of the opening of the London "Central Meat and Poultry Market. Farringdon "Market was the old vegetable market which was "erected under the Act for the removal of Fleet "Market in 1824. The London Central Markets Act, "1875, provided for its removal to where the Central "Fish Market was afterwards placed." That Act was for building a part of the market which was not then intended to be used as a fish market, but as a vegetable market; therefore it provided for the abolition of the Farringdon Market. "When it was "determined to erect an inland fish market instead of "the fruit and vegetable market contemplated by the "Act of 1875, Farringdon Market was continued by "the Act of 1882, and when the fish market proved a "failure the provisions of the Act of 1875 relative to "Farringdon Market were re-enacted and made "applicable to it by the London Central Markets Act, "1886, section 8. It was discontinued upon the "opening of the part of the London Central General "Market for fruit, vegetables, and flowers in 1892."

5037. (Lord Farrer.) The moral of all this seems to be that it is extremely difficult to force markets; that they grow.

5038. (Mr. Crawford.) That they grow. But in connexion with this last market, I do not know whether you are aware that the Great Northern Railway Company are materially increasing their railway accommodation, anticipating a large influx of fruit?—I do not know.

5039. (Lord Farrer.) And doing it successfully.

5040. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, it is not completed.

5041. (Lord Farrer.) They think that it will be a success?

5042. (Mr. Crawford.) They have taken a basement of the Corporation at an annual rental of 3,500*l.*, and they have laid out a very large sum of money in connexion with the railway accommodation.

5043. (Lord Farrer.) They expect to do the work.

5044. (Mr. Crawford.) They anticipate that the market will be a success?—The next market is Smithfield Hay Market. "Smithfield Hay Market is an old "market outside the site of old Smithfield Cattle "Market. It was not removed by the Act of 1851, "and is regulated by the general Act of 36 George III. "as to the sale of hay and straw." That is an Act which still regulates the sale of hay and straw in London, and for 30 miles round. It compels you to sell it in trusses of a certain weight and contains certain other provisions. "By section 8 of the "Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market Act, 1860, "as modified by section 12 of the Metropolitan Meat "and Poultry Market (Western Approach) Act, 1862, "the site of this market is declared to be an open "public place for ever subject to the use of it as a "market for the sale of hay and straw in carts and "waggons."

5045. I see that is almost verbatim with the statement that appears in our Blue Book?—That and the statement that Farringdon was ultimately discontinued in 1892 are the only two points as far as I remember that I was indebted to your statement for, I had not come down so late as that to 1892.

5046. There is an Act you have not referred to, the Act of 1856, in regard to the weight of the hay or straw offered for sale in the case of complaint, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 114.?—Is not that provided for under the Act 36 George III.; it does provide for the weighing.

5047. This extends the power in the case of complaint. And under that you can take proceedings in the event of insufficiency of weight?—Yes.

5048. Or adulteration?—Yes. "The trade done "is exceedingly small, the great bulk of hay and "straw sold in London being sold at the railway "depôts."

5049. (Lord Farrer.) How does the sale at the railway depôts differ from the sale in the market?—You mean legally.

5050. Yes?—I do not know that it does differ, and in the case of the Great Eastern Railway when they established depôts for the sale of vegetables they had to come to an arrangement with the owners of Smithfield Market.

5051. (Mr. Smith.) It is going on all over the country this question of sales at railway stations; it is rather an awkward problem. Depôts we get a good many of at Birmingham.

5052. (Lord Farrer.) Then that is practically a market.

5053. (Mr. Smith.) I think so.

5054. (Chairman.) I suppose a good deal of the hay consumed in London is brought by river, is it not?—I do not know.

5055. (Mr. Crawford.) A large quantity of it.

5056. (Mr. Smith.) Lately a good deal has, I think?—The next market is the Metropolitan Cattle Market. "The Metropolitan Cattle Market at "Islington is a market for the sale of live stock of "all sorts. It was established under the Act of 1851, "which provided for the removal of the cattle "market from Smithfield. That Act was amended, "and in great measure repealed by the Metropolitan "Market Act, 1857, which is the Act under which "the market is conducted at present, although the "powers of building, leasing, and borrowing were "altered, and the name of the market was changed "by the Metropolitan Market Act, 1865, and the "Metropolitan Cattle Market Act, 1875. The in-"spector of this market is appointed by the Privy "Council: the Corporation also appoint a veterinary "inspector. It is said to be the largest cattle "market in the world."

5057. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know what the reason was for the Privy Council appointing the inspector rather than the Corporation?—Oh, they have, under Act of Parliament, got powers with regard to cattle disease which gives them this power: they inspect cattle for all purposes.

5058. That is the object?—That is the object.

5059. (Chairman.) It is not peculiar to this market, I think?—Oh, I do not think so.

5060. (Lord Farrer.) It is not for the purpose of protecting the consumer of meat so much as for preventing the spread of cattle disease.

5061. (Mr. Crawford.) That was the object?—That was the object.

5062. (Chairman.) This was a market, over the original construction of which there arose that expression of opinion by the judges?—No, it is not.

5063. Not legally; I know it was not at that time a City market, but is it not the building that the City took over?—I think it is not the same place; it was a Company.

5064. It was then, I think, opposed by the City, and for 15 or 16 years lay in a dormant state, and then was taken over by the City?—It does not appear from the Acts, and I am afraid my knowledge is limited rather to them.

5065. It was Islington Market?—It was Islington Market, and for cattle.

5066. For cattle, which was the foundation of the Islington Market case?—Yes. Leadenhall Market is a very ancient market formerly held by prescription and used for the sale of meat, poultry, game, skins, hides, and other articles, but it was extended and regulated by an Act of Parliament in 1871 which empowered the Corporation to extend the site of the market and to make byelaws for the regulation and government of it, and by such byelaws to prohibit the sale therein of skins or hides or of any other articles which they might think fit, such byelaws to be allowed by the Board of Trade. This market was abolished in 1879 by the Leadenhall Market Act, 1879. This Act empowered the Corporation to improve the lands occupied by Leadenhall Market, to discontinue the market, and construct a new one for the sale of meat, fish, and poultry, a short distance from the old site. The new market was not to be less than 25,000 square feet in extent, and the Corporation have the power to enlarge the limits of it from time to time and to charge stallages, rents and tolls for the use of shops, standings, and other conveniences in the market and to borrow on the credit of the stallages, rents and tolls, and other payments to be received from the market and of their estates and revenues any sum not exceeding 99,000*l.* for the purposes not only of erecting the market, but of carrying out somewhat extensive street improvements in the vicinity. The next market is Billingsgate Market. It is one of the oldest markets in London. The first Act of Parliament dealing with it is an Act for making Billingsgate a free market for the sale of fish (10th and 11th Wm. III. cap. xxiv.)

What is meant by a free market?—It does not mean a market which is exempt from tolls, but a market where all persons may buy and sell.

5067. (Mr. Crawford.) The words are "free and "open market for all sorts of fish whatsoever." Those are the words of the Statute?—Yes.

5068. (Chairman.) That there should be no privilege in the way of access, is that what is meant?—Yes, that the rights of buying and selling in it are not limited to any special class.

5069. There are tolls taken, I suppose?—There are tolls taken and rents charged.

5070. Although the same stall is let to two persons?—That provision about the letting, that after a man has done his business for the day the clerk of the market shall have the power of letting his stall to someone else, is said to be a provision in connexion with the obligation that the Corporation feel to provide market room for all persons who apply. Then there are a large number of Acts affecting Billingsgate Market more or less which were all repealed, so far as they relate to or affect the supply of fish to and the regulation of Billingsgate Market, by 9 and 10 Vict. cap. cccxlvi. This Act settles the tolls and is generally for the conduct of the market.

5071. (Lord Farrer.) I think the Court of the Fishmongers' Company are recognised by an Act of Parliament as authorities in the market. They have power to make byelaws by the Statute of Anne, chapter 26?—I have not observed that.

5072. That is in the Corporation's statement?—Yes.

5073. (Chairman.) You refer to that Statute?—I do.

5074. (Mr. Smith.) You said that the supervision and inspection is carried out by the Fishmongers' Company, and give the effect of it?—I think I stated a short time ago that I was not aware of any Act of Parliament which gives them any authority, but I thought it was only a power claimed by the Company under their Charter.

5075. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find that the Statute has been since repealed; there has been a clause put in; certainly there is a clause in the Act of 1871 which recognises the right of the Fishmongers' Company.

5076. (Chairman.) If it was once mentioned it is sure to be repeated.

5077. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, sure to be reserved?—It probably is so. I ought to correct what I said; I did not remember that there was any allusion to it in the Acts, I thought it was a power that they had under their Charters. The lettings in the market are weekly and are upon the terms that, as soon as in the judgment of the clerk and collector of the market the business carried on by the tenant is finished for the day, it shall be lawful for the clerk and collector to place any other person in the stall to use the same for the rest of the day for the sale of fish. The reason of this provision is that Billingsgate is a free market, and the Corporation consider themselves bound to provide accommodation for any person who wishes to sell fish, the accommodation, however, is very inadequate and the approaches most inconvenient.

5078. (Mr. Crawford.) Was that last remark of yours made in view, or rather with the knowledge, of the large sum of money recently expended in connexion with Arthur Street improvement, that was expressly made for the purpose of giving a better approach to Billingsgate Market?—May I ask how recently?

5079. Within the last three years. I think three or four years?—Very well, this was not made with reference to that; that was founded upon the evidence in 1888.

5080. (Chairman.) In 1888 apparently, according to the book, a petition was sent in mainly from tenants of Billingsgate Market. The Corporation thereupon acquired land and put up a block of buildings.

5081. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the erection of Billingsgate Buildings. But the improvement I am referring to is an improvement carried out by the Commissioners of Sewers, which has given a very capital approach to the market, although of course in the immediate neighbourhood of the market, as we know, Lower Thames Street is rather narrow?—Yes.

5082. Probably you were not aware of that alteration?—No.*

5083. (Lord Farrer.) But the Corporation have been willing and anxious to have other fish markets in other parts of London, have they not; they have given their full assent; they have endeavoured to establish one themselves, and they have given their assent to others; is not that so?

5084. (Mr. Crawford.) That was clearly stated in the evidence before that Commission?—They opposed in the case of Shadwell.

5085. It is very likely they may have opposed Shadwell for special reasons?—Well, but that, as far as I know, is the only other fish market; well, there was the South London Fish Market, about that I do not know whether they opposed or not.

5086. There have been a good many Bills promoted, but they have not got very far on. As a rule, the promoters come to the Corporation for the purpose of getting their assent; if they get their assent they go a little step further; and I believe sometimes the Bills are used for purposes which can best be understood.

5087. (Chairman.) Hungerford, to which allusion was made just now, was a fish and poultry market?—Yes.

5088. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, that was a fish and poultry market, certainly fish—that was a failure.

5089. (Chairman.) Then the Coal Market, Mr. Kemp?—The Coal Market is on a somewhat different footing from those markets that I have already referred to, and indeed I notice in the City's statement that they do not treat it on the same footing, but I find it is a free and open market, which by statute they are authorised and directed to hold, and it is vested in them, and I have found it convenient to give an account of it here.

* See also Kemp, 5901.

5090. (Mr. Crawford.) It is more in the nature of an exchange, is it not, Mr. Kemp, for the coal trade? It is really an exchange?—Yes, well, I found certain provisions with regard to the rents and tolls of it.

5091. (Chairman.) It is the property of the Corporation?—It is vested in them; but the profits from it, as far as I have been able to gather, are still applicable to improvements in the metropolis.*

5092. (Mr. Crawford.) Which profits?—The rents and profits of the market.

5093. Of this market?—Of the Coal Market.

5094. Are you not referring to some Statute which has since been repealed?—Well, I shall come to it in its turn.

5095. (Chairman.) Before going to the rents and profits, does the place belong to the Corporation?—It is vested in the Corporation.

5096. (Mr. Crawford.) It is called the Coal Exchange, Mr. Kemp?—No, sir, it was formerly the Coal Exchange, and its name was changed by Statute to Coal Market.

5097. You have given me information I was not aware of. I only know it as the Coal Exchange.

5098. (Mr. Smith.) They were empowered to purchase the Coal Exchange.

5099. (Mr. Crawford.) The Exchange may have been used as a market, but I think it has always been called the Coal Exchange. I have never heard of the Coal Market?—By 1 and 2 William IV., chapter lxxvi., it was enacted "that the Coal "Exchange should remain vested in the Mayor, "Commonalty, and Citizens of London, and that "there should continue to be in the City of London "a Coal Exchange, a free, open, and public market "for the sale of coals brought into the Port of "London, which market should be called the Coal "Market."

5100. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not dispute that, but I mean to say the building itself is known, and always has been known, as the Coal Exchange, and is used at the present day as the Coal Exchange.

5101. (Lord Farrer.) What is the difference; is it not that the coal is not actually—physically—there, but being somewhere else it is bought and sold there?

5102. (Mr. Crawford.) Besides, there are no tolls taken at the present day. I am afraid you will have to go into the history of the Coal Duties Acts if you want to get to the bottom of this.

5103. (Lord Farrer.) There is no toll taken.

5104. (Mr. Crawford.) There are no tolls taken.

5105. (Chairman.) Are there no rents?

5106. (Mr. Crawford.) There are rents, certainly.

5107. (Lord Farrer.) The rents about pay the expenses.

5108-9. (Mr. Crawford.) I could not tell you without reference to the accounts. In the last two years I think there has been a deficit in consequence of the repairs to the markets, but I think there was about 500*l.* of profit three years ago. The first statute is 43 Geo. III., chap. cxxxiv., which provides that the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London should be empowered and required to establish and hold a free market for the sale of all coals that should arrive in the port of London. They were empowered to purchase the Coal Exchange in Lower Thames Street in the City of London and other lands, and to lay out the site so obtained as a free market, and to erect the necessary buildings and conveniences. The power of purchasing was limited to 12 months (section 3). By section 17 the Corporation was empowered to demand and take one halfpenny per chaldron, or per ton if the coal should be sold by weight, upon all coal arriving in the port of London westward of Greenwich, and this halfpenny was to be collected and paid in the same manner as the existing coal duties. The money thus obtained was to be applied in defraying the expenses of establishing the Coal Market, which at that time was called the Coal Exchange, and in paying the salaries and allowances of the persons employed in the execution of the Act and other expenses. By section 18 it was provided that this duty was to be reduced when more than sufficient for the purposes of the Act had been collected. By section 25 it was provided that immediately after the laying out and establishing of the said market it should for ever thereafter be and become a free, open, and public market for the sale of coals brought into the port of London. By section 30 it was provided that from and after the opening and establishment of the market, all coals brought into the port of London were to be sold in the market, within the market hours, and not elsewhere. By section 65 the Corporation was required to lay yearly accounts of the duty of one halfpenny per chaldron or ton granted by the Act before both Houses of Parliament.

5110. (Chairman.) You might perhaps proceed to the repealing Act?—Yes; except, Sir, that the next Act imposes a further duty of a halfpenny for the same purposes. Then by 1 & 2 William IV., all these Acts were repealed. This Act, after declaring that the Coal Exchange should remain vested in the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of London, and that there should continue to be in the said Coal Exchange a free, open, and public market for the sale of coals brought into the port of London, which market should be called the Coal Market (s. 4), empowered the Corporation at any time to remove the said market to any other place which they might think more convenient, and also to enlarge the Coal Exchange or other place where the market should for the time being be held (s. 6). Section 7 empowered the Corporation to purchase lands for enlarging the present or any future market. Section 19 vested any new coal market in the Corporation subject to the same regulations as the present market. Section 20 provided that when any new market-place should be opened, no market should any longer be held in the place from whence the said market had been removed. By section 23 a duty of 1*d.* per ton on all coals, culm, and cinders was authorised to be levied for defraying the expenses of carrying the Act into execution, and for paying the compensation authorised by the Act to be made, and repaying the money authorised by the Act to be borrowed and the interest thereon, and for creating a fund for the purposes mentioned in the Act. Section 24 provided that when the expenses of executing the Act should have been paid, and provision made for defraying the compensation, and the salaries to officers, the duty was to cease, but might be raised again in whole or in part, when and so often as should be necessary for the purposes of the Act. Those purposes were principally compensation to the coal meters, I think it was, whose occupation was taken from them by the change from measuring to weighing coal.

5111. (Mr. Holt.) Do there not seem to be two things there, the Coal Exchange and the Coal Market. "There should continue to be in the Coal Exchange "a free and open market."

5112. (Mr. Crawford.) The market is held in the Coal Exchange. It is known as a Coal Market, but the market is held in the Coal Exchange.

5113. (Mr. Holt.) It is held inside, and you speak still of the Exchange?

5114. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

5115. (Mr. Holt.) It does not seem abolished by that.

5116. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, the Coal Exchange still exists, and the market goes on there, only there is no toll now levied.

5117. (Chairman.) It looks rather as if the Act of Parliament had not been effectual to alter the usages of man and their modes of speech.

* See also Kemp, 5901–2.

Mr. J. Kemp.
7 Dec. 1893.

5118. (Lord Farrer.) Is the greater part of the coal sold in London sold at that market, do you know, or is it sold very largely at the railway stations or elsewhere?—Oh, there are large depôts at the railway stations.

5119. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find all the large sales really take place at the Coal Exchange.

5120. (Lord Farrer.) Do they really take place at the Coal Exchange?

5121. (Mr. Crawford.) You see the coal trade is divided into various sections, coal factors, coal merchants, and others, and it goes through various hands before it ultimately reaches the consumer.

5122. (Lord Farrer.) So all the great coal merchants meet there?

5123. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes. I think their regular day of meeting is Monday, but occasionally they meet more often.

5124. (Lord Farrer.) And whether it comes by water or rail it is equally sold at the Coal Exchange?

5125. (Mr. Crawford.) I believe all the large transactions in coal take place at the Coal Exchange.

5126. (Mr. Holt.) And the railway stations are distributing centres.

5127. (Mr. Crawford.) Exactly?—"This duty of "one penny was taken away from the Coal Market "by an Act of 1845." That is the Act dealing with the coal duties. It contained the general clause extending the duties to all rail-borne coal coming into London. It is 8 & 9 Vict. c. 101. "The penny "was directed to be invested in the names of the "Commissioners of Works along with the accumulated "funds and the future rents and profits of the Coal "Market for the creation of a fund for Metropolitan "improvements." I can only say I have not been able to trace that further than the gift of them by this Act to the Commissioners of Works to create a fund for Metropolitan improvements.*

5128. That was for a certain period, was it not, Mr. Kemp?—I do not think so with regard to the future rents and profits.

5129–30. Yes, but the coal dues were extended for a certain period, and during that period they were to be paid over to the Commissioners of Works?—It is not a coal duty; it was the rents and profits of the market and the accumulations.

5131. (Chairman.) You referred to the provisions of the Coal Market Act of 1845 which dealt with this penny duty, and directed it to be invested along with the accumulated funds and the future rents and profits of the Coal Market?—That is what I was referring to.

5132. Consequently the application of the future rents and profits of the Coal Market is undisturbed by what has happened to the penny?—It appears to me to be so.

5133. Has there ever been a change of site of this Coal Exchange or Coal Market?—Yes, at least it was enlarged.

5134. On the same site?—I think on the same site.

5135. I am puzzled by finding—whereas it is in Lower Thames Street, the last Act appears to provide "an enlarged site for rebuilding the Coal "Market in the City of London, and to make con-"venient streets in the vicinity thereof, and also to "make a clear way or street from the south end of "Whitefriars Street to Tudor Street," which is half a mile off.

5136. (Mr. Crawford.) That was to make a better approach to Upper Thames Street.

5137. (Lord Farrer.) That is a separate purpose, I think, in the same Act quite separate, "and also to make"——

5138. (Mr. Crawford.) At the south end of Whitefriars Street and Tudor Street might have been in connexion with the approach to Lower Thames Street leading to the market. I do not think so.

5139. (Chairman.) It is a long way off.

5140. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a long way off. I should think advantage was taken of that Act to get in another clause.

5141. (Mr. Smith.) And for other purposes.

5142. (Mr. Crawford.) And for other purposes.

5143. (Mr. Smith.) A common expression.

5144. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a very favourite way of getting over a difficulty?—Yes, the title of that Act of 9 of the Queen is an Act for providing an enlarged site for rebuilding the Coal Market in the City of London, and for widening the avenues in the vicinity thereof, and for effecting other improvements in the said City.

5145. (Chairman.) You might strike out "the said," it has no relation?—I will strike it out. By the Act of 31, section 25, the Corporation was empowered to raise a sum not exceeding 20,000*l.* upon the security of the penny duty, and to make byelaws to regulate the market. Compensation was directed to be paid to the land coal meters and other officers whose functions were rendered unnecessary by the Act.

5146. That is rather strange, is it not; 1831, you are going back again?—I was tracing the subsequent history of the duty, but the market is still under this Act of 1831. By section 43 it was provided "that "all coal, cinders, and culm, which should be sold "from and out of any ship or vessel in the port of "London, or at any place within the Cities of London "and Westminster, or within a distance of 25 miles "from the General Post Office, in the City of London, "should be sold by weight and not by measure," and there were other provisions regulating the sale of coal by weight which were directed to the prevention of fraud. By the City of London Coal Market and Improvement Act of 1846 it was enacted "that the Corporation should be authorised "and empowered to provide an enlarged site for "rebuilding the Coal Market in the City of London, "and to make convenient streets in the vicinity "thereof, and also to make a clear way or street "from the south end of Whitefriars Street under the "provisions of 1 and 2 William cap. lxxvi., s. 4." That you observe does make a new charge upon the fund which appeared to have already been transferred to the Commissioners of Works by an Act of the preceding session, but of course it is a charge upon the accumulated funds which had been transferred and would be met out of it. Probably it is not a charge upon the future rents and profits of the market which I do not find any dealing with. The next market is Deptford Cattle Market. This market was established in 1869, the Corporation having purchased the old Admiralty Dockyard, and turned it into a market. The market was enlarged in 1881 under the powers of a Provisional Order of the Local Government Board, confirmed by 44 & 45 Vict. c. lxi. The market days are Mondays and Thursdays, although the market is open every day. Foreign cattle are received into this market only to be slaughtered. None pass out of it alive. The inspection of the cattle is by persons appointed by the Privy Council.* The history of this market is worth giving. In 1848 an Act was passed empowering the Privy Council to prohibit by Order the removal of cattle from one place to another. This Act which was temporary, was renewed from time to time down to 1866. In that year the power of enforcing the orders of the Privy Council within the Metropolis was conferred upon the Metropolitan Board of Works, who were to appoint inspectors of diseased cattle. The Court of Aldermen were to appoint inspectors for the City districts, but all the expenses of the Act were to be paid out of the Metropolitan Consolidated Rate, to which the City contributed. In 1867 an Act was passed empowering the Privy Council to regulate the landing of foreign cattle. The passing of this Act is said to be due to the discovery made by one of the Board's inspectors, in 1867, that the principal cause of the cattle plague in the Metropolis was the importation of disease into the City by cattle brought from Holland. In 1867 the Metropolitan Board of Works were asked if they were prepared to undertake the task of establishing and maintaining a landing place and market for foreign cattle. On the 2nd of December the Board passed a resolution expressing their willingness to undertake this duty, and the terms of the Resolution were communicated to the Privy Council. On the 6th of December the following reply was received:—

"Downing Street,

"Sir, 5th December 1867.

"I have submitted to the Lord President of the Council the resolution of the Metropolitan Board of Works of the 2nd December instant, intimating their willingness to undertake the duty of erecting and maintaining a market for foreign cattle, and I am directed by his Grace to express the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the readiness with which your Board have agreed to co-operate with Her Majesty's Government in the promotion of this object. Since the receipt of the letter from your Board his Grace has received from the Town Clerk of the City of London a copy of a resolution this day passed at a Court of Common Council, stating, with reference to the contemplated Bill for the erection of a separate market for foreign cattle, that 'the Court are 'prepared to appropriate funds for that object with-'out having recourse to the imposition of rates 'for the purpose other than what may be derived 'from the tolls of the market itself, from the wharf-'age, and from the rents of the other premises to 'be erected in conjunction with the market.' The Lord President feels that this public spirited offer on the part of the Court of Common Council is so manifestly calculated to lessen the difficulties connected with an undertaking involving so large an expenditure of money, that it would not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to reject a proposal tending as this does so largely to promote the interests of the public; and I am therefore instructed to inform you that in the Bill to be presented to Parliament an option will in the first instance be given to the Corporation of the City of London to undertake the works connected with the creation of the market in question.

"I am, &c.

"(Signed) E. Harrison.

"Sir John Thwaites.

"&c. &c."

"A Bill was introduced giving the Corporation power to erect and maintain a market, as proposed, but after passing a Select Committee it was withdrawn. In 1869 the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act was passed, and section 28 made special provisions for the Metropolis, and provided that the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London should, for the purposes of the part of the Act relating to foreign animals, be exclusively the local authority in and for the Metropolis. The Lord President of the Council described the offer of the Corporation as a public-spirited offer, so manifestly calculated to lessen the difficulties connected with an undertaking involving a large expenditure of money, that it would not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to reject it, but the terms which the Corporation obtained under the Act of 1869 were very favourable to them.

5147. (Chairman.) That is the same language as his predecessor used?—It is my reference again to the letter I did not intend to say——

5148. (Mr. Crawford.) The same letter.

5149. (Chairman.) But in 1869 there was a different Lord President?—Oh, I did not intend to imply that it was the Lord President then, but referring back to the letter I said, this was the reason why.

5150. Perhaps it would be well to have it clearly brought out. A casual reader might suppose that was connected with the Act of 1869?—Yes. "The "offer of the Corporation was to appropriate funds "for the object in question without having recourse "to the imposition of rates for the purpose, other "than what might be derived from the tolls, &c., of "the Market. By section 28, sub-section 2, they are "empowered to borrow the necessary money on the "credit of the property on the credit whereof "they are authorised to borrow by the Metropolitan "Market Act, 1865, and the money so borrowed "may be secured in the way authorised by that "Act. That is to say, the money for the new "market is to be borrowed on the credit of the lands, "tolls, rents, and payments held by or accruing to "the Corporation in connexion with the Metropolitan "Cattle Market at Islington. By sub-section (4) of "section 28, it is provided that as soon as the new "market is opened, the maximum tolls to be charged "at the Metropolitan Cattle Market at Islington, "shall be those mentioned in the Fifth Schedule to "the Act of 1869, instead of those specified in "Schedule A. to the Metropolitan Market Act, 1857.

5151. Those had considerable increases?—Those had considerable increases. "A comparison of "these schedules shows that the effect of this pro-"vision was to enable the Corporation to increase the "tolls at Islington, in the case of sheep, from 4*d.* "per score to 1½*d.* per head, and in the case of beasts, "from 2*d.* to 6*d.* per head, in the case of calves from "1*d.* to 3*d.* per head, and in the case of pigs from "6*d.* per score to 1½*d.* per head. These tolls specified "in the Fifth Schedule to the Act of 1869, are also "the maximum tolls to be taken at the new market. "By subsection (3) of section 28, all money re-"ceived by the Corporation from charges made by "them under that part of the Act is to be applied by "them, first, in payment of the interest on and re-"payment of the principal of money borrowed for "the new market; secondly, in repayment of the "principal of money borrowed under the Metropolitan "Market Acts, 1857 and 1865; that is to say, in "paying off the debt on the market at Islington; "and thirdly, in discharge of the expenses incurred by "them in the execution of the part of the Act of 1869 "relating to foreign cattle. The effect of acceptance "of the offer of the Corporation is to enable the "Corporation to increase enormously the tolls "charged upon all sheep, cattle, and pigs, both home "and foreign brought into London, and to hand over "those tolls to the Corporation for the discharge of "the debt upon the only two cattle markets permitted "in the Metropolis. In 1869 considerable sums "were payable by way of compensation in respect of "foreign animals, and the City was liable to a rate to "be levied by the Commissioners of Sewers under "section 10 of the Act."

5152. Payable to whom?—When they were ordered to be slaughtered after inspection, compensation to the owners of cattle was payable.

5153. By the market authority?—By the authority; it was not the market authority.

5154. (Mr. Smith.) The sanitary authority?—Yes, the sanitary authority, the local authority who were appointed to execute the Act.

"In 1877 cattle disease broke out, and was traced "to the landing of a cargo of animals from Hamburgh "at the Foreign Cattle Market. This led to further "legislation, and in 1878 the Contagious Diseases "(Animals) Act of that year was passed, enacting "that all foreign cattle were to be slaughtered at the "port of landing, unless the Privy Council should "otherwise order. The City thus escaped a heavy "liability for compensation, and yet continued to "receive all the tolls of the market."

5155. (Mr. Crawford.) But these tolls would materially decrease, would they not, if the cattle were slaughtered before they reached the market?—I beg your pardon.

5156. Those tolls would materially decrease. You draw attention to the fact that the Contagious

Mr. J. Kemp.
7 Dec. 1893.

Diseases (Animals) Act of 1878 directed that all cattle must be slaughtered at the port of landing unless the Privy Council should otherwise order?—Yes.

5157. Do you mean by that "the port of landing" the market itself?—Yes, I mean the market.

5158. The market itself, because you know that recently most of the orders have prohibited the landing of live cattle at all at this market; they come in slaughtered, and therefore the City gets no tolls whatever except as dead meat?—I knew that there was a large increase in the importation of dead meat and a decrease in the bringing in of live cattle recently, but I did not know that that was anything but just a change in trade. I did not know that that was by prohibitory orders.

5159. It was by prohibitory orders?—Yes?

5160. But all this is the result of Parliamentary action, Mr. Kemp?—Yes.

5161. You surely do not wish to blame the Corporation for Parliamentary action?—Of course, it is a statement; it is only my way of looking at it. But I am pointing out this letter. The Metropolitan Board of Works made their offer to do this work, and the City offered to do it, and the offer of the City was accepted on the understanding that they were offering such good terms to the whole of London that it could not be rejected by Parliament, and, in my opinion, I think they got exceedingly good terms at the expense of the rest of London.

5162. That is your way of looking at it, but you will not object if I refuse to look at that matter through your spectacles?—Oh, no, I have only stated it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson.

Mr. W. H. DICKINSON recalled.

5163. (Mr. Dickinson.) May I ask a question before we leave?—We have been requested by some of the newspapers to supply them with copies of the documents that we have submitted to the Commission up to the present moment. Not knowing exactly what view the Commission themselves take of their proceedings, we have not acceded to this request; but if we could have the views of the Commission as to whether the documents which we have handed in to them could properly be shown to the public, and to the Press, I should be very much obliged to the Commission.

5164. (Chairman.) I am not sure that it would be convenient for us to lay down a universal rule. The Corporation have apparently conveyed their volume to the Press.

5165. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes. I do not think that our volume is of such a controversial nature as some of the volumes of the London County Council.

5166. (Chairman.) I do not know that we should have you up for breach of privilege for communicating it, but it is not, I think, desirable that we should intimate to any authority our own opinion on the subject.

5167. (Mr. Dickinson.) We may take our own course. You will have no objection to whatever course we take?

5168. (Chairman.) We shall not summon you for whatever course you take.

5169. (Mr. Crawford.) I think Mr. Dickinson had better consider how far he would be justified in circulating the analysis of Mr. Gomme. I mean there is such a thing as an injunction.

5170. (Mr. Dickinson.) Of course, we shall seriously consider anything in that relation in this matter.

5171. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a document which deals with the City's accounts from your point of view, and some parts of it might have a serious effect upon bondholders, for instance; and therefore I only suggest that the greatest possible care should be exercised before you put forward a document the accuracy of which is not altogether admitted.

5172. (Mr. Dickinson.) If I gathered that even one member of the Commission has any objection to our putting forward any of these documents, I should not do it.

5173. (Mr. Crawford.) I think each body should take its own course, and act upon its own responsibility.

5174. (Chairman.) Are newspapers consciously desirous of having these documents to print?

5175. (Mr. Dickinson.) No; but I think some of the papers would like to know what we are putting before the Commission (that is probably what it has arisen from) in the same way as the City.

5176. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not think it should be under the patronage of the Commissioners. You had better follow your own course.

5177. (Mr. Dickinson.) I only mentioned it to the Commissioners to see whether they had any objection to it.

5178–81. (Mr. Smith.) We were not in any way consulted about the statement of the City, which I saw was published.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 8th December 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

Mr J. Kemp.
8 Dec. 1893.

Mr. JOHN KEMP, Secretary to the Special Committee of the London County Council, recalled and further examined.

5182. (Mr. Crawford.) There was one point, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to clear up in Mr. Kemp's evidence yesterday. I had not the advantage of seeing his statement, which was handed in by Mr. Dickinson before we met yesterday, therefore I had to put questions in the best possible way I could. But

I have had an opportunity of looking at the Coal Duties Acts, and there is one point I should like to clear up. It arises on page 31, about two-thirds down where Mr. Kemp uses these words*: "This duty "of one penny was taken away from the coal market "by an Act of 1845, and was directed to be invested "in the names of the Commissioners of Works along "with the accumulated funds and the future rents "and profits of the coal market, for the creation of "a fund for metropolitan improvement. The penny "was transferred to the Thames Embankment and "Metropolitan Improvement Fund by the Coal and "Wine Duties Continuance Act, 1861, and this fund "was transferred to the Metropolitan Board of "Works by their Loans Act of 1869. This duty "was continued along with the other coal dues by "various Acts down to 1889, when it ceased with "the rest. The rents and profits of the coal market "would seem to be still applicable to metropolitan "improvements." Now, Mr. Kemp, if you will kindly refer to section three you will notice that you have mixed up the Continuance Duty of one penny with the accumulated fund of the former penny duty, and also the rents and profits. If you will kindly turn to the third section of the Act of 1845?—I am sorry. I had the Act with me yesterday. I thought we had passed it, and I have not brought it to-day.

5183. I will just read it to you. It commences:—"And in order to provide a fund for the opening "of poor and densely populated districts." Then it continues—the duty of 1*d.* per ton—"for the "execution of such improvements in the metropolis "as Parliament may hereafter direct or sanction"?—Yes.

5184. That is so far as the penny duty is concerned. Then it goes on to say, "And the public stocks or "funds in which the residue or overplus of the "produce of the said duty of one penny per ton on "coals, cinders, or culm has been from time to time in-"vested in the names of the Chamberlain, Town Clerk, "and Comptroller of the Chamber of the said City, "in pursuance of the said Act of the first and second "years of the reign of King William the Fourth, and "the dividends and interest thereof, and also the "rents and profits to be derived from the coal market, "shall from time to time be applied to the same "purposes as the said duty of one penny per ton on "coals, cinders, or culm is now applicable by virtue "of the said Act." That is the Act of William IV., not this Act of 8 & 9 Vict. chapter 101, so that I think you will admit the true construction is that the continuance of the penny duty is to be applied for metropolitan improvements, but it leaves untouched, so far as the amounts are concerned, the accumulated dividends and interest on past duty, and also the rents and profits; I think you have made a mistake?—I followed it carefully as you read it, and I am afraid you are right; I think I have made a mistake.

5185. I think you have made a mistake there?—I think I have.

5186. (Chairman.) The duty of a penny from that time forward is for Metropolitan improvements?—That is so.

5187. The rest is for the antecedent trusts?—Yes.

5188. We proceed, Mr. Kemp, to examine the property of the Corporation, and you draw a distinction as to the character of the possession of that property by the Corporation, and the character of its possession by other municipal corporations?—Yes, it has been held that the Municipal Corporation Act of 1835, created a trust of the property of the municipalities with which it dealt which did not exist with regard to the property of unreformed corporations before the Act. This would apply to the property of the City of London. There is the case of Parr v. the Attorney-General, in which Lord Campbell lays that proposition down rather specifically, I think. It is reported in 8 Clarke and Finelly—Parr v. the Attorney-General. It was a question as to the application of the borough fund in a reformed municipality, and Lord Campbell said in his judgment, "Before the "Municipal Corporations Regulation Act passed, "certainly the Corporation property was not subject "to any trust; the Corporations might do with it "whatever they chose; and, generally speaking, no "relief could be obtained, either at law or in equity, "for any misapplication of that property." The rest of the judgment deals with the Act of 1835, and its application to the corporations with which it deals.

5189. That was an obiter dictum about it, not necessarily a decision in the case?—No, it was not the ratio decidendi of the case.

5190. You start from the position, however, that the Corporation does not possess its property from any trust which can be enforced from the Court of Chancery?—That is what I think is the position.

5191. What are the estates, described roughly, of the City?—I have very little information about them; I believe they largely consist of freehold land in the City. This I take from the Report of 1837, where it was said that they lay principally in the neighbourhood of Broad Street, New Broad Street, Broad Street Fields, Fenchurch Street, Aldgate, and the Minories. It is said that much of the property at one time consisted of the site of the old walls, or the site of the old walls, and gates, and fortifications of the City, and that tracts of moor land, in the neighbourhood of the City, were from time to time built under by the special provisions of Acts of Parliament. Another part of the estate of the Corporation called the Conduit Mead Estate, situated in the parish of St. George's, Hanover Square, was acquired at a much later date, in connexion with the efforts of the City to supply water by conduits to London. As far as I know there is no published information as to the City's estates, as the accounts deal only with the revenue.

5192. That is the Stratford Place property, is it not—the Conduit Mead Estate, Stratford Place?—It is in Conduit Street, Bond Street, and South Molton Street.

5193. Opposite Stratford Place?—Stratford Place, I do not know.

5194. The Earl of Stratford holds it on a perpetual lease from the City, does he not?

5195. (Mr. Crawford.) Formerly, I believe he did.

5196. (Chairman.) What does that reference to an Act of Parliament mean; it does not give the date of the acquisition, I presume?—No, it refers to the end of the sentence before; it was an Act under which building upon Moor Fields was authorised.

5197. (Lord Farrer.) You have no information as to the mode in which the City deal with their estates; whether they are let out on long leases, or the renewal of leases, or in what way?—On the Conduit Mead Estate I think the prevailing custom is that they are all let on renewable leases; perpetually renewable, I think.

5198. Perpetually renewable?—Perpetually renewable.

5199. With rents?—With fines.

5200. And with rents?—With ground rents.

5201. Are those rents determined according to the value of the property for the time being; do the rents change on the expiration of the lease, do you know?—I do not know.

5202. I will tell you my object in asking; it was not in any way invidious to the Corporation, but merely to know how a Corporation which is possessed of very large landed estates, finds it desirable to deal with them?—Yes.

5203. (Chairman.) We shall get the information from the City, we may hope. Probably they deal with their property in many manners, some in one way and some in another?—Yes.

5204. (Mr. Crawford.) I think in the majority of instances you may take it that the property is put up to tender; though this is not the case with the

* See Kemp, 5127, sqq.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

Conduit Mead Estates, the leases of which, as Mr. Kemp has explained, are perpetually renewable.

5205. (Lord Farrer.) They get the highest rent they can get for them?

5206. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

5207. (Chairman.) The principal estates are the Bridge House Estates; what are those?—They are estates which have been vested in the City of London in trust principally for the maintenance and repair of London Bridge, and for other analogous purposes to which they have been applied by Acts of Parliament. Part of these estates came by grant from King John, who gave certain void places in London to build upon, the profits thereof to remain towards the charges of building and repairing London Bridge; and it is said by Stow that many charitable men gave lands, tenements, or sums of money towards the maintenance of London Bridge. At other times grants have been made from the Crown, and purchases have been made out of the surplus rents and profits of the Bridge House Estates, and property has also been given by will for the same objects.

5208. I think we had in evidence that some part of that property was probably obtained as the result of a collection by a preaching friar?—Yes. I think I have read that, and also that there was a chapel on the Bridge at one time to which gifts were made, that, I think, went to the maintenance and for the purposes of the Bridge.

5209. That was a circumstance attendant upon many bridges and ferries?—Yes.

5210. These you regard as strictly trust estates?—These the Corporation keep separate.

5211. They are regulated by Act of Parliament, but the Act of Parliament did not exhaust the purposes of the estate; there would still be a power of getting the trusts regulated or defined under supervision through the Court of Chancery?—No doubt there would.

5212. And how are these managed?—They are managed by officers who are elected in the Court of Common Hall—the Bridgemasters—and there are auditors of Bridgemasters' Accounts, who are also elected in the same Court.

5213. (Mr. Crawford.) Are you quite correct there, Mr. Kemp; surely the Bridge House Estates are not managed by the Bridgemasters; the bridges are supervised by the Bridgemasters, but the management of the estates is with the Bridge House Estates Committee of the Corporation?—Yes, well, I suppose I am incorrect about that.*

5214. (Chairman.) There have been several Acts of Parliament authorising loans to be raised and expenditure to be incurred in respect of these estates for other bridges, Blackfriars Bridge and Southwark Bridge?—Blackfriars Bridge and Southwark Bridge.

5215. And the Tower Bridge?—Yes, also for a free ferry, and the Tower Bridge was the last.

5216. And so far as Parliament is concerned, it sanctioned the application of those estates for ferry or bridge purposes over the Thames?—Yes, it sanctioned the special application of them for these bridges.

5217. Wholly within the jurisdiction of the City, on the Middlesex side, on the north side. I am not sure about the Tower Bridge; it is outside, I think?—It is outside, I think; just outside.

5218. The other bridges so far are within the City limits?—I think they are within the City.

5219. There appears to be a separate account kept with respect to the Blackfriars Bridge Estates?—I think that is the explanation of the estates referred to as the Blackfriars Bridge Estates; it is the only way I have been able to trace their existence. I see that by the Blackfriars Bridge Act of 1863 the Corporation were given compulsory powers for five years to take lands for the purpose of rebuilding Blackfriars Bridge. They were also empowered to sell surplus lands and to borrow on the security of the Bridge House Estates for the purposes of the Act. Their borrowing powers were enlarged by the Blackfriars and Southwark Bridges Act, 1867. By section 25 of the Act of 1863 the Chamberlain is directed to keep separate accounts of all moneys received under the Act. The net revenue arising from the price obtained for surplus lands, or balances of capital money borrowed under these Acts, now exceeds 800*l.* a year; and as the maintenance and lighting, &c., of Blackfriars and Southwark Bridges are separately charged upon the Bridge House Estates, there is nothing payable out of this revenue, which is carried forward from year to year and added to capital.

5220. Going back a moment, does the Corporation work a free ferry under the Act of 1884?—I am not sure.

5221. I think that has been put into operation?—They had an Act empowering them to purchase this undertaking, but as a matter of fact whether they now work it I do not know.

5222. (Mr. Crawford.) They do not at the present moment.

5223. (Chairman.) They superseded that by the Tower Bridge. Now we proceed to the Gresham Estates. What was the nature of the connexion of the Corporation with these?—Sir Thomas Gresham, by his will dated the 5th July 1575, devised one moiety of the Royal Exchange and all the various shops, cellars, vaults, messuages, tenements and other hereditaments, parcel of or adjoining to the said Exchange, after the death of his wife, to the Corporation of London for 50 years, and the other moiety of the same premises to the Mercers' Company for 50 years, upon the trusts declared in the will. The trusts were, as concerned the Corporation's half, that the Corporation should pay 50*l.* a year to each of four lecturers appointed by them who should read lectures in divinity, astronomy, music, and geometry, in his dwelling-house in Bishopsgate Street, and should pay 53*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly, to eight almsfolk, whom they should appoint to inhabit his eight almshouses which he gave to the Corporation, that is to say, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to each, and to give 10*l.* a year to each of the prisons of Newgate, Ludgate, the King's Bench, the Marshalsea, and Wood Street Compter, for the relief of poor prisoners. And as to the Mercers' half, it was left to the company upon trust that they should pay 50*l.* a year to each of three lecturers on law, physic, and rhetoric respectively, and 100*l.* a year for four dinners for the Company in Mercers' Hall on their quarter days, and to give 10*l.* for the relief of poor persons and prisoners, to each of the hospitals of Christ, St. Bartholomew, Bethlem, the Hospital for the Poor in Southwark, and the prison of the Poultry Compter. The testator devised his mansion in Bishopsgate Street, after the death of his wife, to the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company as tenants in common for 50 years upon trust, to permit the lecturers above referred to to occupy the same, and to read their lectures there, and directed that no lecturer should be married. And the testator further directed that if the said Corporation and Company should obtain sufficient licenses to hold the said premises in mortmain they should have and enjoy the said Royal Exchange and dwelling-house and all the other premises for ever in equal moieties upon the trusts aforesaid.

5224. The term of 50 years was adopted because he was unable to devise them in fee without this license of mortmain?—They would be unable to take.

5225. To accept?—To accept.

5226. Yes?—Sir Thomas Gresham died on the 20th November 1579. Questions arose between Sir Henry Nevill, who had married a niece of the testator, and Lady Gresham, and they were settled by an agreement which, together with the will, was confirmed by Act of Parliament in the year 1580. Lady Gresham died in 1596, and the Corporation and the Mercers' Company took possession of the Royal Exchange and the house in Bishopsgate Street, and appointed professors and fixed the times for the reading of lectures. Though a resolution was passed in the time of Elizabeth to petition the Queen for a license in mortmain, none appears to have been obtained till the 12th year of James I. (1614), when a license was granted by letters patent, bearing date the 3rd of May, to the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company, to hold the property devised to them by the will of Sir Thomas Gresham upon the trusts of the will.

* But see Kemp, 5903.

5227. Have you any information as to the extent to which these gifts exhausted the revenue of the property?—At that time, no, I have not.

5228. When added up, do the charities amount to much the same in each case or not?—No, it is not quite so.

5229. It is less charge in the Corporation than in the Mercers' Company?—It is less in the case of the Mercers' Company, I think; they have only three lecturers instead of four.

5230. They are exempt from the almsfolk?—They are exempt from the almsfolk.

5231. Then they have got 100*l.* for four dinners, which itself makes up that difference?—Yes, it almost exactly does; it comes to very nearly the same charge.

5232. Well then, the other gifts are different, they may be the same in total?—Yes, the 10*l.* gifts are the same in number.

5233. The charges are very nearly the same in each case?—Yes.

5234. You do not know what proportion these charges bear to the revenue?—No, I do not. I see I have here the accounts in the Parliamentary paper of the Gresham estate, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed in 1892, so it is a very recent paper.

5235. That is Mr. Roby's return, is it not?—Yes, it is.*

5236. And does that give the estates at the time of the foundation—the revenue?—It gives accounts of the income and expenditure relating to the Gresham estates, but it appears to be quite recent expenditure.

5237. Well, you can give us some history of this property during succeeding centuries?—During the Civil Wars Gresham College was used as a place of imprisonment. At the Restoration the College seems, for a time at least, to have revived. Among its Professors were Sir Christopher Wren, Barrow, Hooke, Sir William Petty, and other men of science. The Royal Society originated within its walls, and Charles II. signed its charter there in 1663.

5238. The Royal Society really began to exist before the Restoration. Perhaps it did not become Royal until after that period. Hooke and Wells and Wren were associates together under the Commonwealth.

5239. (Lord Farrer.) It became the Royal Society then.

5240. (Chairman.) It got its charter after that date. However, you can go on?—In the——

5241. Why do you say the lectures were suspended—were not lectures given?—Lectures were given, but, as far as any information goes that I have been able to obtain, they have never been very fully attended.

5242. (Mr. Crawford.) What, the lectures at Gresham College?—I think not.

5243. (Chairman.) You are speaking historically now, not at the present time?

5244. (Mr. Crawford.) I thought he brought it down to the present time.

5245. (Chairman.) You do not bring it down to to day, that statement?—No; I do not know at the present time.

5246. (Mr. Crawford.) I mean at the present moment they have to have recourse to the City of London School, because the Gresham College is not large enough for the audience?—Yes.

5247. (Mr. Smith.) Yes, but he is dealing with the period before the Fire of London now.

5248. (Mr. Crawford.) He said "never"; I thought he was dealing with the present day. In the olden days, with some of the old professors, there was very good reason why the attendance was very sparse?—In the Fire of London the Exchange, which formed the sole endowment of the College, was destroyed, though the College itself escaped. During the rebuilding of London the College was used by the citizens for their court and chamber, and for other public purposes, and during this time the lectures were suspended.

5249. (Chairman.) There were lectures therefore?—Yes, there were lectures.

5250. Yes?—I have said it was probably rather a place of resort for the learned than the seat of academical instruction. I really have not got much information on the point beyond what I have actually put down here. But I understood that to mean that it was resorted to by men of such distinction as those whom I have mentioned, and that that was really what was its principal credit at the time——

5251. Well, the lectures at that time and long after were delivered in Latin?—Yes.

5252. Down to our own time I must say that the attendance was not very great?—Possibly not, although I suppose more people understood Latin then than would understand such lectures now.

5253. Sir Thomas's idea was that Latin lectures would be understood by foreigners coming here as well as by Englishmen?—Yes.

5254. Yes?—After the Fire, however, before the new Exchange was built, the Corporation continued to pay the stipends of the professors, and it was not until 1699 that it occurred to them to convert part of the College itself into a source of income.

5255. (Mr. Crawford.) What do you mean by that?—Well, I mean that after various petitions they ultimately obtained leave to sell the site.

5256. That is only to make a source of income in connexion with the trust; you do not mean by that that the Corporation desired to make a fund for their own purposes?—No, I do not for a moment say that they took money from the trust, but they very much altered the trust at this time.

5257. I mean to say you agree with what Mr. Gomme has told us, that so far as he has been able to trace it, the Corporation have always regarded this as a trust, and have so treated it?—Yes. I have not followed the accounts very much.

5258. (Chairman.) They sought to convert part of the property into an income—producing property for the purpose of carrying out the trust?—Yes; well that may be, and was so to some extent, but there was a long period during which the trust was very inefficiently carried out, because——

5259. (Mr. Crawford.) Because why?—Because the lectures were held in a small room, inconvenient to get at, in the Royal Exchange.

5260. That was the origin, was it not, of the petition to pull it down; however, I do not think we need go into the earlier history. I do not want to leave the impression on anyone's mind that the Corporation had done anything else than look at this as a distinct trust.

5261. (Lord Farrer.) It is a question of the management of the trust, not of any attempt to defeat the trust?—Oh no, I think I was right about that, Mr. Crawford. It was not in connexion with a desire to move it from the Royal Exchange, but to pull down the old Gresham College and sell the site that the petition was made to Parliament. In 1701, and again at later dates in 1717, the trustees petitioned Parliament for authority to pull down the college, but without success. In 1759 the project of pulling down the college was revived. An estimate was made by which it appeared that an income of 461*l.* a year might be obtained from the site.

5262. (Lord Farrer.) You say that an income of 461*l.* a year could be obtained from the site. Does it appear how the income was to be applied when it was obtained, from anything that you have learned?—It was to be applied to the trusts, no doubt, of Sir Thomas Gresham's will, and the Act by which the agreement to sell the site was ultimately sanctioned makes certain provisions altering the terms of the trust The Government of the day in 1767 being in want of an Excise office, entered into an agreement with the Gresham Committee for the sale of the site of Gresham College to the Government in consideration of an annuity of 500*l.* to be paid to the Corporation and the Mercers' Company, who were to contribute 1,800*l.* towards pulling down the building. A Bill was introduced to confirm the agreement, and the lecturers petitioned that the restriction contained in the will of Sir Thomas Gresham with respect to their marriage might be taken off. The Act of 8 George III., cap. xxxii. was passed, and it provided that by reason of the professors being deprived of their lodgings their salaries should be raised from 50*l.* to 100*l.* per annum, that the trustees should provide a place for the delivery of the lectures, and that it should be lawful for the professors to marry notwithstanding any restriction in the will of Sir Thomas Gresham. This Act of Parliament changed the nature of the Gresham foundation altogether, and destroyed its collegiate character. The professors ceased to possess a place where they could together inhabit and study. A room in the Exchange was, however, set apart for them for their lectures, capable of containing about 100 persons. It was difficult to find and not easy of access, which was a matter of consequence in the case of lectures attended by an audience almost entirely casual. Little is to be found about the lectures till the year 1815, when the attendance appears to have dwindled to about 10. Then as to the almshouses, one was erected by the City in Whitecross Street for the habitation of the almsfolk, where the City Greenyard now is.

5263. (Chairman.) There were almshouses?—There were almshouses.

5264. Bequeathed by Gresham himself, were there not?—Yes, they were. When they were discontinued I am afraid I have not got a note of.

5265. And you do not know the site of them?—Situate in the parish of St. Peter's le Poer at the back side of the said Mansion House. That was the Mansion House which was in Bishopsgate Street. The almshouses have been removed to Brixton. In 1838 the Royal Exchange was again burnt down, and the lectures were transferred to the City of London School, which at that time was, of course, not where it is now, but on the site of the Old Honey Lane Market.

5266. It was built about that time, was it not?—The Act was in 1834, I think. In this year a petition on behalf of the professors was presented to the House of Commons, urging the reconstruction of a college on a footing somewhat similar to that which had been destroyed in 1768. In 1843 a site was provided by the Corporation and the Mercers' Company on the north side of Gresham Street for a new college, and on this site the present Gresham College was erected, at an expense of 7,000*l.*, making, together with the cost of the site, 12,760*l.* In 1852, the building erected on the old site of Gresham College, for the purpose of an Excise office, was sold by the Government, together with the land attached to it, for 108,000*l.*

5267. (Mr. Crawford.) The Government made a very good thing out of it, Mr. Kemp?—The Government made a very good thing out of it.

5268. (Chairman.) And the Gresham Trust a very bad thing?—Yes.

5269. (Mr. Crawford.) It is now known as Gresham House. The Government made a very good thing out of it.

5270. (Chairman.) The new college somewhat restored the collegiate character of the place. It contains some lodgings for professors, does it not?—I think not, but I am not sure of that, whether the professors reside there.

5271. (Mr. Crawford.) No, they do not reside there.

5272. (Chairman.) There are some bedrooms, are there not?

5273. (Mr. Crawford.) Not in the present Gresham College. In re-building the Exchange considerable improvements were made in the approaches and in the neighbourhood. By the Act of 1 & 2 Vict. cap. c., the Corporation were authorised to raise for the purposes of the Act a sum not exceeding 150,000*l.* on the credit of the London Bridge Approaches Fund (that was the fund formerly the orphans' fund; it came to be called by that name), and by 5 & 6 Vict. cap. ci. they were empowered to borrow a further sum of 40,000*l.* The City contributed a sum of 23,337*l.*, and upwards of 20,000*l.* was obtained from sales of surplus grounds and old materials, and in this way was raised the sum of 234,386*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, which was the cost of the new site. The building cost 169,875*l.*, but 45,000*l.* was received from the insurance companies, and 2,763*l.* for the old materials, leaving a balance of 122,111*l.* for the new building to be paid by the two Corporations, making upwards of 61,000*l.* for each of them.

5274. (Mr. Crawford.) Did you get these particulars from the Corporation Report, Mr. Kemp?—No, I have taken them from this Parliamentary return.

5275. But that is information returned by the Corporation?—Oh, yes, no doubt; I think it was. I think I took, as far as I remember, everything from this. Sir Thomas Gresham did not pay for the original site of the Royal Exchange. It was purchased by the companies and the citizens by subscription. In his report to the Charity Commissioners in 1837 Mr. Martin says that the site of the Exchange was no part of Sir Thomas Gresham's gift. If this is true, then the whole endowment of the College was gone when the old Exchange was burnt in the Fire of London. But the site appears to have been conveyed to Sir Thomas by deed dated the 14th May, 8 Elizabeth, and the language of his will would seem to include it, and his widow took the whole rents during her life.

5276. (Chairman.) Do you know anything about that deed; who conveyed it to Sir Thomas?—Yes. It is true that it was purchased by subscription, but the subscribers conveyed or the conveyance was taken; it was purchased with their money, but the conveyance was taken to Sir Thomas Gresham.

5277. At their instance?—At their instance, yes. But whether he held it as his own or in trust——

5278 It can only appear by way of recital in that deed; the subscribers themselves could scarcely be parties to it?—No. I mean that it was not his money with which it was bought, but that the conveyance was to him when it was purchased.

5279. He treated it in his will as if it were his own?—As if it were his own.

5280. Who is Mr. Martin; a Charity inspector?—He was a Charity Commissioner, I think.

5281. He was ultimately, but he was an inspector at that time?—Yes; he is the author of the summary which is returned here of all the information in the possession of the Charity Commissioners as to the will of Sir Thomas Gresham and the estate.

5282. The Rebuilding Act of the 1st and 2nd of the Queen recites apparently that the site of the Royal Exchange was vested in the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company?—That the site of the Royal Exchange was vested in the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company upon the trusts of Sir Thomas Gresham's will. However this may be, there is no doubt that the Corporation and the Company have been put to great expense in twice rebuilding the Exchange; and although they have continued to pay the salaries of the professors and the other charges, they have long claimed that the Gresham Trust is, in fact, deeply indebted to them. The Commissioners of Inquiry of 1729 reported that a balance of 201,318*l.* 17*s.* 8½*d.* was owing to the two Corporations; but Mr. Martin reported in 1857 (I must have made another mistake, sir, about Mr. Martin. He is not the author of this, but his report is referred to largely in it) reported in 1857 that a mistake had been made, and that the amount owing to the two Corporations in 1729 did not probably exceed 80,000*l.*

5283. But who are these Commissioners who inquired; we have had no reference to them before, have we?

5284. (Mr. Smith.) There was an application to Parliament in 1717.

5285. (Chairman.) Without success, and in 1759 again.

5286. (Lord Farrer.) When you speak of the claim for a debt, you do not mean that there is any claim now made by the Corporation against the Gresham estates? I ask that question because I do not see any statement of the kind in the City case which has been put in.

5287. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh yes, Lord Farrer, there is, on page 130 there is 73,800*l.* owing.

5288. (Lord Farrer.) Charged on the City's moiety of the estate. Oh yes, a charge repayable to the City out of the funds of the Gresham Funds?

5289. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly.

5290. (Lord Farrer.) They have advanced the money?

5291. (Mr. Crawford.) They have advanced the money, and there is a debt owing to them.

5292. (Lord Farrer.) On the security of the estate? Oh, quite so.

5293. (Chairman.) Then that is being gradually paid off?

5294. (Mr. Crawford.) That is being gradually paid off as is shown by the accounts.

5295. (Lord Farrer.) But they apparently have ample security for it in the Gresham estate.

5296. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I should hope so with the increase in value of property; it was not thought so at one time, but of course property has enormously increased in the City, and therefore the security itself would increase in value.

5297. (Chairman.) Well, if the income is sufficient to give from 3,000*l.* to 4,000*l.* a year towards the capital, it will not take very long to pay that off.

5298. (Mr. Crawford.) No, but I did not want Lord Farrer to think there was nothing owing.

5299. (Lord Farrer.) I did not mean that; I meant that over and above this debt, there is no claim from the City estates.

5300. (Mr. Crawford.) Only you will not forget what I told the Commissioners the last time, that the Mercers' Company take a totally different view of that trust to what we do, and therefore it would not be fair to assume that they would admit the accuracy of the trust fund as detailed by Mr. Kemp, or even as admitted by the City; they take a totally different view.

5301. (Chairman.) You cannot affect their rights on the point. I confess I derived from reading these words the opinion that this was a burdensome trust to the City, that the City had out of its own money supplied money beyond what the Gresham estates were security for?—I think at one time they certainly did.

5302. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh yes, that appeared in the evidence we gave before the Commissioners in 1837, that it was a burdensome trust.

5303. (Mr. Smith.) That is how this money accumulated?

5304. (Mr. Crawford.) No doubt.

5305. (Chairman.) At the present moment, if that is a correct statement of the estates, the Gresham trusts afford ample security for it and the debt has been renewed.

5306. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you may safely take it that in course of time the whole of this indebtedness will be paid off; it will take some time.

5307. (Mr. Smith.) It is carrying interest?

5308. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh yes.

5309. (Mr. Smith.) Then it is an investment now?

5310. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, at one time it had not sufficient to pay the interest.

5311. (Mr. Smith.) It was a burdensome trust then, but now there is a good income.

5312. (Lord Farrer.) And when it is paid off there will be a surplus of income applicable to the purposes of the Gresham trust.

5313. (Mr. Crawford.) Applicable to the purposes of the Gresham trust. I see that the Town Clerk, Serjeant Merewether, gave evidence upon this subject in 1854, and he spoke of it then at that time as being burdensome, and that the City had out of their own funds to augment the funds of the trust.

5314. (Chairman.) There has been quite recently a project for developing Gresham College, has there not?—Yes. In January 1892 the Gresham Committee passed the following resolution: "That this "Committee are willing to co-operate with Uni- "versity and King's Colleges, and the medical "colleges of the great hospitals of London, in the "establishment of the proposed University in and "for London, on the understanding that it be called "The Gresham University." The other parties concerned have assented to the condition, and petitions have been presented under the College Charter Act, 1871, for the grant of a Charter for a University in and for London to be called the Gresham University.

5315. A Royal Commission is now sitting which pays attention to that amongst other matters?—Yes.

5316. Next amongst the City estates comes its Courts?—Yes. The Courts of the City of London exist by charter or prescription, although their procedure is now regulated by statute. They arose from the special favour of the Crown, and are an essential part of the Civic franchises. The fees of the Courts belong to the Corporation as part of their general revenue. That is, of course, to say, after paying the expenses which are charged upon them by certain sections of the Act. The Charter of 23 Henry VI. grants to the citizens and their successors all fines and forfeitures for misdemeanours committed within the City or suburbs, wherever the offender is tried; and by the Charter of 14 Car. I. the grant of fines for misdemeanours is extended to those inflicted by justices of the peace. Formerly the officers of the Court received their remuneration in fees, but now they are all paid salaries. In the case of the City of London Court, the maximum amount of the fees to be taken is fixed by statute (they are the same as those of the county courts). And the expenses connected with the Court and principal and interest of money borrowed for the purpose of providing the Court-house are made a first charge upon the general fund of the Court, which is to be raised by special fees authorised by the Act. The surplus belongs to the Corporation.

5317. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know how the case stands in other large municipal corporations, whether they take the charge and receive the fees of the courts in their respective localities?—Where there are local courts?

5318. Yes, where there are local courts?—I think the local courts were all rights of property; they belong to someone, and in all probability—my knowledge does not extend to details—but I suppose they do principally belong——

5319. (Chairman.) Perhaps one of the Commissioners can tell us in what position the Court of Passage is?

5320. (Mr. Holt.) I am afraid I cannot tell you that. It is a Liverpool Court, as we all know. It is under the Corporation in some way.

5321. (Lord Farrer.) I think the Corporation take the fees?

5322. (Mr. Holt.) Oh yes.

5323. (Lord Farrer.) And pay the expenses?

(Mr. Smith.) We have no special courts in Birmingham. There are the magistrates' courts; those in Birmingham are a source of considerable profit to the Corporation?—You had a local court; I think its jurisdiction is excluded. There are powers to exclude the jurisdiction of any local court in all matters in which a county court has jurisdiction. You can do it by Order in Council by petition. That was done in the case of Birmingham, and in several other cases.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

5324. You are doubtless right. But it was done long ago. It is of no practical value?—It was done as long ago as 1852.

5325. It was a Manorial Court, I think?—Yes.

5326. We bought out some of the rights of the Lord of the Manor?—Yes.

5327. (Chairman.) Then as to the property in market tolls?—The market tolls have all been applied by statute to the payment of interest and repayment of principal of loans raised on the credit of the tolls of the various markets under the Acts which establish or regulate them. A statement of the borrowing powers under the Market Acts will show how this portion of the City's revenues is, and will for many years be, appropriated. The loans are all charged contingently upon the general revenues and estates of the Corporation.

5328. Taking all the markets together, is that an actual charge at present, and, if so, will it be an increasing or diminishing one?—The charge upon the estates?

5329. The residuary charge upon the estates of the Corporation?—The receipts from the markets, taken together, are more than sufficient to meet the payments in respect of interest, at any rate; so that, I think, there is no charge at present falling upon the general estates of the Corporation.

5330. Suppose you take into account any obligation for repayment of capital, it might be different?—It might be; but, of course, there is none.

5331. (Mr. Crawford.) You say there is none. There is, is there not, in connexion with the foreign cattle market and the Islington cattle market?—The Islington cattle market? I think not now. There was.

5332. Surely, if you have to construe the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, it says that after you have paid off the debt on the foreign cattle market, you ought to apply any profit in payment of the debt on the Islington Cattle Market. It must be so applied?—Oh yes. I beg your pardon; that is true. I was thinking of the Metropolitan Cattle Market Acts, under which at one time there was the necessity to have a sinking fund, because, in the Act of 1851—the Metropolitan Cattle Market Act of 1851—the clauses of the Commissioners' Clauses Act of 1847, with respect to mortgages, are incorporated in the Act; and under those clauses a sinking fund was necessary. And, again, in the Metropolitan Market Act of 1857, authorising further borrowing, the clauses of that Act of 1847 were again incorporated. But, at a later date, by the Act of 1865, the manner of borrowing was changed, and it was provided that all money—section 25 of the Act of 1857, authorising the Corporation to borrow money upon mortgage on the rates, tolls, rents, and payments belonging to them under the Act is repealed; and by section 8 it is provided that "all money borrowed under this Act may be secured "by bonds under the common seal of the Corporation, "and in such form, and containing such stipulations "and conditions as the Corporation shall think fit." And thus the necessity for a sinking fund under the Commissioners' Clauses Act is got rid of, and that market is put upon the same footing as all the others with regard to which I think there is no special obligation to pay off debt within a particular period.

5333. (Lord Farrer.) Supposing that the market tolls should fall off, as we have been told they are falling off at Deptford, the markets might become a considerable charge upon the City estates, might they not?—Oh, if the tolls became insufficient the debt is contingently charged upon the City estates.

5334. (Chairman.) On the other hand, if the debt were paid off, the tolls would have to be diminished?—There have been provisions in, I think, more than one Act—I know in one—that after certain moneys borrowed under the powers of the Act were paid off, the special tolls on which they were charged should cease. But I do not think that section is now in force, because the debt upon the whole of the Central Markets was amalgamated and charged, not only upon the tolls, but the rents of the markets, which in the first instance were separated and had separate charges upon them; and I do not remember any section in the Acts which would oblige the Corporation to take off, or even to reduce, the tolls when the debt is paid off.

5335. At the top of page 39?—That is the section.

5336. That is the section you had in your mind?—I think it is section 34. By section 37—that is of the Act of 1860, the Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market Act, 1860—"the tolls which may be received under "Schedule A., together with the rent received from "any railway company for the use of the underground "station, are directed to be applied, first, in defraying "the costs and expenses of collectiug the same; "secondly, in the payment of the interest and prin-"cipal of the money expended in the purchase or "acquisition of land for the site of the market, and "of the roads or streets forming the approaches "thereto, and in making the improvements authorised "by the Act; and it is provided that when such "principal moneys shall be repaid, with all interest "accrued in respect thereof, the tolls in Schedule A. "shall cease and determine, unless Parliament shall "in the meantime otherwise direct." That was the section that I had in my mind.

5337. (Mr. Crawford.) Parliament has "otherwise determined," has it not, since?—It is rather a difficult question of construction. I would not like to say positively that it is so, but that is my impression, that there is not any provision at present for diminishing or causing the tolls to cease upon the repayment of debt being completed.

5338. (Chairman.) I do not think we need go through these minutiæ of these City markets.

5339. (Mr. Crawford.) I think Mr. Gomme gave this information?—Well, he gave the information. These are the borrowing powers under the Acts.

5340. (Chairman.) The financial situation has been explained to us already?—Yes.

5341. Well, then, the Grain Duty is the next property?—The Grain Duty was a duty which was imposed by the Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872. It is a duty of three-sixteenths of a penny per hundredweight upon all grain brought into the port of London for sale. That is a limitation, I understand. If you import grain for your own use in your own business, that is not, I think, liable to the duty; it is only grain "brought into London for sale" that is dealt with by the Act. I think there was a case.

5342. Grain in transitu, is that liable to duty?—I think not. Not only that, but not even grain——I am sorry I have forgotten the name of the case.

5343. (Lord Farrer.) Is there not a case Combe v. The Corporation of London?

5344. (Mr. Crawford.) That went up to the House of Lords, but before it was reached a settlement was come to.

5345. (Lord Farrer.) Quite so; it was the case that was proceeding when the Thames Conservancy——

5346. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, but that turns on a question of Fellowship Porters; the right to have the grain measured by our own men and put in warehouses.

5347. (Lord Farrer.) Combe were brewers, but imported their own grain for their own purposes.

5348. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes. The case to which you are referring is the case of Seth Taylor; that is the case to which you are referring?—Yes, I think it was. I think it decides that the duty is limited to grain brought in for sale.

5349. That is to say that, assuming a brewer chooses to bring in the grain and then uses it for his own purposes, and not for sale, he is not liable to the duty?—That is so; he is not liable for the duty.

5350. And that was the gist of the judgment in the case?—Yes.

5351. This duty was a kind of composition for more lucrative sources?—For the right of metage of grain which the Corporation had by ancient charter.

5352. (Mr. Smith.) It must be grain sold as grain. I mean it must be all sold as grain?—As grain, I take it.

5353. That is rather in contravention of the saying, "Either in meal or in malt," is it not?

5354. (Lord Farrer.) It is not upon flour?

5355. (Mr. Crawford.) It does not come in as flour. I have never known it come in as flour, not sea-borne grain. Of course, we know that there is an enormous importation at the present moment from Austria and other places, of flour—But the whole of this is applicable, as you know, to open spaces.

5356. (Chairman.) Then we shall go on to that?—This duty was, by the Act of 1872, directed to be held by the Corporation for the preservation of open spaces in the neighbourhood of London not within the metropolis. Section 9 of the Act gave the Corporation power to borrow 99,000*l.* on the credit of the duty. The City of London Various Powers Act, 1877, empowered the Corporation to borrow the additional sum of 50,000*l.* on the credit of the same duty. By the Corporation of London Open Spaces Act, 1878, the Corporation was given power to make an agreement with the Dean of St. Paul's for the acquisition and management by the Corporation of the Churchyard of St. Paul's as an open space. I may, perhaps, observe, with regard to that Act, that the agreement, I notice, is to be made with the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. It has already been given in evidence that the Lord Mayor is a trustee of St. Paul's. I did not know that at the time and I tried to find out about it. I could not come to any certainty of knowledge. I suppose it is meant that under one of the Acts for the rebuilding of London the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London and the Lord Mayor were directed to apply part of the coal duty that was authorised by the Act in rebuilding St. Paul's Cathedral. I have not been able to find anything else. I should not myself have thought that that constituted them permanent trustees of the building or vested it in them. But in the City Commissioners of Sewers Act, 1851, where there is a power given to enter into agreements with reference to this churchyard of St. Paul's, I find that the power is to agree both with the Dean and Chapter and with the trustees of the fabric of St. Paul's, who are described as the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and the Lord Mayor of the City, but under this Act of 1878, which is the one under which they actually did lay out the churchyard, the only parties who are directed or authorised to "agree" are the Dean and Chapter.

5357. But that did not affect the fabric at all?

5358. (Mr. Smith.) No, that is the point?—No; but neither does the Act of 1851, I think; it only has reference to the churchyard.

5359. (Mr. Crawford.) Need we go into that, Mr. Kemp?

5360. (Chairman.) It is an interesting point. You have got it there. You may look at it. It is a very curious point?—Well, I have heard it alleged that the Lord Mayor was a trustee; and I should have thought, primâ facie, that the Dean and Chapter had the Cathedral, and I tried to find out why it was.

5361. The past Lord Mayor did not appear to remember any call upon him to act in respect to that.

5362. (Mr. Smith.) It did not make any great demand on his time, I think.

5363. (Mr. Crawford.) You find in the 46th section of the Act of 1851—of the Sewers Act of 1851:—"And whereas it may hereafter be thought desirable "to open and lay into the public street the ground, "area, or space in the west front of the Cathedral "Church of Saint Paul, now enclosed with an iron "rail or fence, or some part thereof: Be it therefore "enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commis- "sioners to treat and agree with the Archbishop of "Canterbury, the Lord Bishop of London, and the "Lord Mayor of London, the trustees of the fabric of "the said Cathedral Church, or any two of them, and "with the Dean and Chapter of the said Cathedral "Church (who are hereby severally authorised and "empowered to contract, if they shall think fit to do "so, with the Commissioners accordingly) for open- "ing and laying into the said public street all or any "part of the ground, area, or space lying westward "of the great steps leading up to the said church "(except that part encompassed with the iron rail "whereon the statue of the late Queen Anne is "erected), and in the event of any such agreement "being entered into as to all or any part of the said "ground, area, or open space, the Commissioners are "hereby authorised and empowered, by and out of "the moneys arising out of the consolidated rate, to "make such compensation for the same to the said "trustees as shall be mutually agreed upon, and "thereupon to cause the said ground, area, or space "(except as before excepted), or so much thereof as "shall be so agreed for, to be opened and laid into "the public street, any law or prescription to the "contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding." So that, at all events, up to 1851, Mr. Kemp, Parliament has looked upon those three worthy gentlemen as trustees of the fabric of St. Paul's?—I said so. I found the reference in this Act. But I was rather surprised to find in the later Act, with which you dealt with what seemed to be very much the same property, the same ground, not the building, no reference to the trustees of the fabric.

5364. I think you will find there was an interference with steps under this Act of 1851.

5365. (Mr. Smith.) Those old railings, perhaps; the Sussex iron was not part of the fabric, perhaps?

5366. (Mr. Crawford.) The land round about was not dealt with as part of the fabric itself.

5367. (Chairman.) That, I suppose, involved no charge upon the Grain Duty; although it may have been a little departure from the original trust?

5368. (Mr. Crawford.) There was a particular clause authorising the expenditure?—I have the Act. There is a charge in the accounts, I see, of the year, of a sum of 200*l.* and 300*l.* for the churchyard of St. Paul's.

5369. (Mr. Smith.) They had distinct statutory authority for it in 1878 apparently?

5370. (Mr. Crawford.) The way in which it works out is this: There was authority given to enter into the agreement, and the moment the agreement was carried out, it became one of the open spaces of the Corporation, and came under the provisions of the Open Spaces Act of 1878. The actual alterations were done out of the City's cash, and not out of the Grain Duty; but the moment it became an open space under the control of the Corporation in pursuance of this Act, of course the charge for maintenance was properly chargeable to the Grain Duty.

5371. (Chairman.) That Grain Duty, by the original Act, was directed to be held by the Corporation for the preservation of open spaces in the neighbourhood of London, not within the Metropolis?

5372. (Mr. Crawford.) Perfectly true; but in this Act there was a special clause put in for this purpose.

5373. (Chairman.) Authorising the charge in fact?—By Section 4 of the Corporation of London Open Spaces Act of 1878, the Corporation were empowered to acquire by purchase, gift, or otherwise, any common or commonable land, or open space not within the metropolis, but within 25 miles from the nearest point of the boundary of the City, and to preserve the same as open space, carrying to the credit of the City of London Grain Duty all rents and profits arising therefrom; and for the purposes of the Act the Corporation are empowered to borrow a further sum of 50,000*l.* upon the security of the said duty. By the Epping Forest Act of 1878, the Corporation of London are made the Conservators of Epping Forest; and by Section 39 it is enacted that the Corporation of London shall from time to time contribute to the capital and income of a fund to be called the "Epping Forest Fund," such moneys as shall be necessary out of the City of London Grain Duty, or from other sources. By the Highgate and Kilburn Open Spaces Act, 1886, certain lands at Highgate and Kilburn are transferred from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to the Corporation of London, to be preserved by them as open spaces. By Section 5 the Corporation is empowered to borrow on the credit of the City of London Grain Duty, and of their estates generally, any sum not exceeding 15,000*l.* for the purposes of the Act. Of course I have not stated nearly all the open spaces which the Corporation has under its authority. I have only stated the Acts which give them power to borrow upon the security of this duty for the purpose.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

5374. (Lord Farrer.) Then there are other spaces that are within the 25 miles?— Oh, yes.

5375. (Mr. Smith.) Mr. Gomme mentioned a good many of those.

5376. (Lord Farrer.) Yes.

5377. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, Mr. Gomme mentioned a good many of them.

5378. (Chairman.) Burnham Beeches.

5379. (Lord Farrer.) Coulsdon.

5380. (Mr. Smith.) A place on the river.*

5381. (Lord Farrer.) Yes.

5382. (Chairman.) Then there is a small revenue, insufficient, apparently, to meet the expenditure of the fruit metage?—Well, the fruit metage and the voluntary grain metage. The fruit metage is, I believe, in practice only voluntary, though the right to measure fruit and edible roots compulsorily still exists.

5383. (Mr. Crawford.) Under the Charter of James?—Under the Charter of James.

5384. (Chairman.) It is too troublesome to exercise by compulsion?—That, I suppose, is the reason.

5385. Is it any advantage to anybody—this metage—except the officer?

5386. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes, so far as the trade is concerned?—Seeing it is voluntary, I presume it must be an advantage to the people.

5387. (Mr. Smith.) There is no obligation on the part of the Corporation to continue it unless they wish?—That is a right of property—a franchise. Then the next point is, the fees and fines on admission to the freedom. All the revenues derived from the fees and fines payable on admission to the Freedom of London are appropriated to the support of the Freemen's Orphan School, by an Act to which I shall have occasion to refer to a little later. The Library, Museum, and Art Gallery are under the management of the Library Committee. The Art Gallery was opened by the Lord Mayor on the 24th June, 1886. It then consisted of 100 works of Art, for the most part presented from time to time by aldermen and others to the Corporation, and previously hung up in the Council Chamber and at the Mansion House. The cost of the Library, Museum, and Art Gallery are paid by the Corporation out of their general revenues, and in exercise of their general powers.

5388. (Chairman.) That is entirely voluntary?—Yes, entirely.

5389. And there is no statute dealing with any part of it?—No.

5390. (Lord Farrer.) And the Library and Museum are open to the public—quite open?—I do not know.

5391. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes, quite open to the public?—Yes.

5392. (Mr. Smith.) Are the Loan Exhibitions conducted in the same way under this assumed trust, or rather this obligation that they have taken upon themselves?

5393. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, yes; they are free to the public.

5394. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, yes, I know they are.

5395. (Chairman.) But it is a voluntary office undertaken by the City—holding a Loan Exhibition; and the cost of it is defrayed out of the City's cash.

5396. (Mr. Crawford.) Out of the City's cash.

5397. (Chairman.) The Corporation has some ecclesiastical patronage?—It has some. They are the proprietors of the advowsons of St. Peter's, Cornhill; St. James's, Duke's Place, and St. Catherine Cree, alternately with Magdalen College, Cambridge.

5398. Those two latter are alternately with Magdalen College? According to the punctuation it is so—there is a semicolon after "Cornhill"?—Yes.

5399. St. Peter's, Cornhill, is absolute?—Yes.

5400. St. James's, is that alternate with Magdalen College?—That and St. Catherine Cree are held alternately with Magdalen College, and St. Margaret's Pattens, at the bottom of Rood Lane, alternately with the Crown. St. Bartholomew's, Bethnal Green, St. Mark's, Victoria Docks, St. Peter's, Bethnal Green, and St. Mark's, Clerkenwell. They present to these livings by election by the Common Council.

5401. That last sentence refers to all?—I intended it to do so.

5402. These four last suburban churches probably arose out of the removal of some City churches?—I do not know how that is.

5403. With the application of some of the funds to suburban churches—City churches being those in which the Corporation had previous interest.

5404. (Mr. Crawford.) It was so, under a Commission issued?—I do not know how they became——

5405. (Lord Farrer.) Just before we leave this—to go back to the markets for one moment. I did not quite gather what was your opinion with regard to the ultimate destination of the tolls of the markets. If the tolls of the markets are not sufficient to pay the charges upon them, then the charge not so paid all falls upon the City estates. Well, supposing that the market tolls are more than sufficient, or that the debt is paid off, I did not quite gather what was your opinion with regard to the ultimate destination of those market tolls—whether the City was bound to reduce them, or whether the City would be able, supposing it wished, to make a profit by them?—I think that they would belong to the Corporation.

5406. As property of the Corporation?—As property.

5407. (Mr. Smith.) No obligation to reduce them, I understand?—I understand so.

5408. You rather referred back to a section, and then you differentiated?—Yes. There was in the case of one loan, a provision that a toll authorised by the Act should cease upon the repayment of the loan.

5409. (Mr. Crawford.) I can give you the reference. It was section 23 of the London Central Markets Act of 1875. I think the Chairman will remember this, because I remember it came before you, sir:—"All money borrowed or advanced by the "Corporation before or after the passing of this Act "under or for the purposes of the following Acts "(namely)—

"The Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market Act, 1860;

"The Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market (Western Approach) Act, 1862.

"The Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market "(Borrowing) Act, 1874; shall be and the same are "hereby charged without distinction on all tolls, "rents, estates, and property in those Acts made "security for money borrowed or advanced there-"under, and for that purpose all those tolls and rents "shall be carried to a common account, and the "accounts of receipts, expenditure and liabilities in "respect thereof shall be amalgamated." And the Acts which have been passed since 1875, the Act of 1882, and the Act of 1886, were to be read as if they contained a similar clause, so that from that time the accounts were all amalgamated. That does not apply to the Foreign Cattle Market nor to the market at Islington?—To the market at Islington.

5410. (Chairman.) There are several institutions with which the Corporation is connected. The first are the Royal hospitals?—The first are the Royal hospitals. The suppression of the monasteries by Henry VIII. gave rise to many difficulties with regard to the relief and management of the poor and sick, and it was in connexion with the attempt to cope with these difficulties in the City of London that the Royal hospitals came under the control of the Corporation. In 1538 the Corporation of London petitioned the King to grant them the rule and governance and the rents and revenues of the hospitals called St. Mary Spittal, St. Bartholomew Spittal, and St. Thomas' Spittal, and the New Abbey at Tower Hill, for the relief of the poor, sick, and needy persons. The King granted St. Bartholomew's, Christ Church, and Bethlem, then near Bishopsgate, and endowed the first of these with 500 marks a year, on condition that the Corporation should provide an equal sum. The hospital of St. Thomas in Southwark was purchased by the Corporation, and Edward VI. confirmed and granted it to the City, with the before-mentioned hospitals of Christ Church and Bethlem and the King's Palace of Bridewell. The Charters of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. gave the Corporation of London complete control of the poor of the City, but the general system of poor laws established by Elizabeth introduced a change, and the hospitals were diverted from their original purposes. St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas's were devoted exclusively to the sick, Bethlem became a lunatic asylum, Christ Church a school, and Bridewell a prison for vagrants and apprentices. The Governors of these hospitals are incorporated, and have a common seal, which is kept by the City Chamberlain.

5411. What is St. Mary Spittal?—It was not a hospital which was granted, although it was in the petition. I do not know what it was. In 1782 an Act was passed which still regulates the rights of the Common Council to appoint Governors of these hospitals, with the exception of Christ's Hospital, which is now managed under a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners which came into force in 1891. The Act recites that disputes and differences had arisen between the Corporation of London and the Presidents, Treasurers, and Acting Governors of the Hospitals of Christ, Bridewell, and St. Thomas the Apostle, and the House of the Poor in West Smithfield, near London (that, of course, is St. Bartholomew's), and the Hospital of Bethlem, touching their respective rights and privileges in the management and government and disposition of these hospitals, and their estates and revenues, and that terms of agreement had been arranged between them. The Act sets out the agreement and confirms it. The 4th Article of the Agreement empowers the Court of Common Council to nominate 48 of their number to be Governors of the Hospitals of St. Bartholomew, Bridewell and Bethlem, St. Thomas, and Christ Hospital; 12 to each, who are to act so long as they remain members of the Common Council; their places are to be filled up by election if they become vacant. The Common Council appoint Governors of all the Royal hospitals, except Christ's Hospital, under the authority of this Act, and the election of these Governors is carried out under regulations of the Court of Common Council dated the 24th February 1870, and the 19th of March 1891. The Lord Mayor for the time being is the head of the Royal hospitals, except Christ's Hospital, by the ordinance made by the Mayor and Commonalty and citizens of London in 1557, and all the Aldermen are ex officio Governors.

5412. That is in addition to the Governors appointed by the Common Council?—In addition to the 12 sent to each of the four by the Common Council.

5413. There are now 36. Is it 48 reduced to 36 in consequence of Christ's Hospital being put under a separate scheme, or is it 60 reduced to 48?—It is now 36. When giving the terms of the Act I included Christ's, but it is now excepted.

5414. Bartholomew's, 12; Bethlehem and Bridewell, 12; and St. Thomas's, 12?—Yes. Under the scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 1890, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London are made ex officio Governors of Christ's Hospital, provided that if at any time the number of Aldermen of the City of London shall be increased, such increase shall not operate to increase the number of ex officio Governors of the foundation; but the Lord Mayor and 25 senior Aldermen only shall thenceforth be ex officio Governors. The Common Council of the City are authorised by the scheme to appoint 12 Governors who shall be members of the Common Council, and shall be appointed as often as there may be occasion. These Governors are to be appointed for the term of six years, but so that two shall go out of office at the end of each year.

5415. That preserves the same proportion as in 1782?—Yes.

5416. That agreement separates the estates of each of the hospitals? Each has its own endowment?—The agreement in the Act of 1782?

5417. 1782—yes; or did it exist before that agreement—each hospital had its own endowment?—I do not think the Act dealt with endowments at all; it was simply a dispute as to the right of appointing the Governors.

5418. (Mr. Crawford.) I think Bethlem Hospital, which is now joined on to Bridewell, was really founded by a former Sheriff of London, was it not, in 1247, and then it was subsequently joined on to Bridewell?—To Bridewell.

5419. (Chairman.) Henry VIII. seems to have granted it?—It was granted I think by ——

5420. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, it is very likely that Henry VIII. may have taken possession of it; but it does not do away with the original foundation.

5421. (Chairman.) Oh, well, all these hospitals were religious foundations before the suppression of the monasteries, and were re-granted?—Yes, they were religious foundations before the suppression of the monasteries.

5422. (Mr. Crawford.) This was founded originally for distracted people?—I was going to add that, as I think I am not perfectly clear when I say here that the Hospitals were diverted from their original object, because although they were obtained in connexion with the relief of the poor, that also included the relief of sick persons, and in the case of Bethlem Hospital, distracted persons were specially treated there.

5423. There is one thing you have not told us, and that is, that the Lord Mayor is entitled always to have a child on the foundation. That is the only thing that is left to the Corporation out of Christ's Hospital?—Oh, in connexion with Christ's Hospital.

5424. Formerly all the Aldermen had presentations, but under the scheme that was taken away from them, and the only thing that was left was to let the Lord Mayor always have a child, a boy or girl, on the foundation.

5425. (Mr. Smith.) A presentation?

5426. (Chairman.) One nomination to each Lord Mayor.

5427. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, to each Lord Mayor; and I think the Duke of Cambridge was treated in exactly the same way; and ever since the scheme has come into operation the charity has gone down; it is in an awful state at the present moment.

5428. (Chairman.) The City of London School?—The City of London School was constituted by a private Act of Parliament, 4 & 5 William IV., c. 35. This Act recites "That the Corporation are desirous "of establishing a school in the City of London for "the instruction of boys in the higher branches of "literature; that the yearly sum of 19*l.* 10*s.* had for "many years been paid by the Corporation out of "the rents and profits of lands and tenements belong-"ing to them which are usually called the estates of "John Carpenter, formerly Town Clerk of the City, "towards the education and clothing of four boys, "sons of freemen of the City, and that such payment "is believed to be made in pursuance of the will of "the said John Carpenter, but that the will cannot "be found."

5429. The estates of John Carpenter were recognisable then, do I understand?—Yes, and they are now.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

The Act further charges these said estates with 900*l.* a year endowment of the City of London School.

5430. And they have been kept separate?—They were known; yes, they have been kept separate. "That the Corporation are willing, instead of paying "the said sum, to charge the said lands called the "Carpenter Estates, together with other hereditaments belonging to them, with the payment of the "perpetual annual sum of 900*l.* towards the support "of such a school; that the market called Honey Lane "Market, belonging to the Corporation, has of late "years been very little used, and that the Corporation "are willing that it should be abolished, and the site "appropriated for the purposes of such a school." By section 1, Honey Lane Market is directed to be discontinued, and by section 3 the site of it is appropriated as a site for a school, and the Corporation are directed to erect a school. The Corporation are bound to maintain this school in perpetuity, for the religious and virtuous education of boys, and for instructing them in the higher branches of literature, and all other useful learning. The Common Council are empowered and required to make rules and regulations respecting the number and qualifications of the masters, the salaries to be paid them, the admission of boys, the subjects in which they are to be instructed, the hours of attendance, and otherwise for the conduct and management of the school.

5431. The fees to be paid are not mentioned; that is within their power?—Yes.

5432. We recently discussed a question of altering them.

5433. (Mr. Crawford.) They are fixed by the regulations.

5434. (Chairman.) Yes; but it is within their power to alter the regulations from time to time. It is not mentioned in this?—No; I should have included that. The rules are to provide that the authorised version of the Bible be used and taught in the school, and that every morning and evening prayers be read. The Corporation is to appoint the masters, but as regards the two principal masters, subject to the restrictions that no person shall be appointed unless he shall have been examined by the Professors of Divinity and of Classical Literature and of Mathematics at King's College, London, and the Professors of Greek, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, and Astronomy of the University of London. The lands and hereditaments belonging to the Corporation specified in the schedule to the Act, being the lands devised to them by the said John Carpenter, are charged with the payment of 900*l.* a year for ever, to be applied towards the maintenance and repair of the school. The yearly sums payable by the Corporation, in pursuance of the will of John Carpenter, are discontinued. The Corporation are authorised to appoint a Committee to carry out the Act.

5435. Are those restrictions about the appointment of two principal masters still observed?—I suppose they are. I do not know.

5436. They must be modified by subsequent events. There are no Professors in the University of London. What was then called the University of London is now the University College.

5437. (Mr. Crawford.) So far as they can be carried out, I may say they are. We recently had to elect a head master, and also a second master, and this clause, so far as it applied to the present day, was trictly carried out.

5438. (Chairman.) I should have thought candidates would have objected now to have undergone that quasi humiliation; it must have been merely formal.

5439. (Mr. Crawford.) No. There was an examination, because there was competition. You see that they are at liberty to return so many. From the number returned the election takes place.

5440. (Chairman.) It is not stated here.

5441. (Mr. Crawford.) It may not be set out there; but it is set out in the Act.

5442. (Chairman.) Are they bound to return more than one?

5443. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes; they are bound to return three—the three best qualified.

5444. (Mr. Smith.) After examination?

5445. (Mr. Crawford.) After examination. It is possible for a dozen to go in for the examination; but they have to return the three best qualified in their opinion.

5446. (Mr. Smith.) An examination of head masters?

5447. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes. It is strictly carried out.

5448. (Mr. Smith.) It sounds like retributive justice, does it not?

5449. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I should think the boys rejoice?—It is also provided in the section that deals with the appointment of the masters that it shall be, "in case the said professorships or any of them "shall be altered, by such three Professors of the said "College and such three Professors of the said Uni-"versity, respectively, as shall be deemed by the "said Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons in Common "Council assembled to correspond nearest with the "Professors herein-before mentioned."

5450. That is the proviso of section 7?—Yes. That, however, does not provide for the case of their ceasing to be professors in such a university at all.

5451. Perhaps you may find a way out of the examination, Mr. Kemp?—By the City of London Schools Act, 1879, the Corporation are empowered to appropriate to the purposes of the school an acre and a half of the lands facing the Victoria Embankment, belonging to the Corporation, and to erect a building with stables, offices, playgrounds, yards, approaches, conveniences, and appurtenances, for the purpose of transferring thereto and maintaining thereon the school, and they are directed, when the new premises are ready, to remove the school to them. All the money charged by the Act of 1834 on the hereditaments named in the schedule to that Act are to continue applicable to the maintenance of the new school, and the provisions of that Act, and any rules and regulations made under the authority of it with respect to scholarships, exhibitions, and endowments, and all rights, powers, and privileges belonging to the school shall apply, belong, and attach to the school when removed. The value of the new site was estimated at 184,075*l.*, and the cost of the new school, opened in 1882, was 111,721*l.*, and was paid out of the reserve fund of the Corporation. The site and the new school were a gift by the Corporation, and the 900*l.* is a charitable endowment which the Corporation are legally bound to continue, but, subject to this, there is no reason in law why the fees of the school should not be so regulated as to make it self-supporting.

5452. (Chairman.) What was the value of the old site and the building thereon?—I am afraid I have not got that.

5453. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find it stated in the Corporation statement, and under the latter part of section 8, all the moneys arising from the sale were to be carried to the credit of the General Estates of the Corporation. The latter part of section 8 of the Act of 1879?—Yes.

5454. "All moneys arising from time to time from "any such sale, lease, or disposal, shall, after payment "of all expenses incident thereto or connected there-"with, be carried to the credit of the Corporate "funds, and shall form part of the same"?—Yes; that is the provision of the Act of 1879, that powers are given to the Corporation to "sell, lease, or other-"wise dispose of the old premises" and the site, and the moneys arising therefrom are, after the payment of all expenses, to be carried to the credit of the Corporate fund and form part thereof.

5455. (Chairman.) The statement put in by the Corporation says that even after allowing that, there will be a balance of over 200,000*l.* expended in consequence of the removal?—Yes.

5456. (Mr. Crawford.) And the same liability remains to the Corporation to maintain the school?—I read that.

5457. Did you read that? I thought you did not. I thought you cut section 5 rather short?—I thought you were going to say to pay the 900*l.*

5458. The same provisions apply?—Oh, yes, the same provisions to maintain the school.

5459. In perpetuity?

5460. (Chairman.) But there is no obligation to contribute towards the maintenance?—There is no obligation.

5461. Beyond the 900*l.*?—Beyond the 900*l.* there is no special obligation. What the meaning of "maintaining the school in perpetuity" might be is another thing.

5462. (Mr Crawford.) The words are, "Carry on "the school in like manner in every respect" under the Act of 1879; and therefore the Corporation would hardly like to let it go down.

5463. (Chairman.) I suppose the Corporation is not under legal obligation to continue the school upon such terms of fees and outlay as to make it a burden upon their expenses. Before that Act, and that Act left it unchanged, they were still free to regulate the fees so that the schools shall be self-supporting?—That they may certainly do. But assuming that they were not able to obtain fees that would make it self-supporting, the question that I was thinking of, and which, perhaps, is one of some little doubt, is, what is the meaning of maintaining the school in perpetuity; and if the Act of 1879 has——

5464. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not think you need trouble yourself with that point, Mr. Kemp, because the matter was thoroughly threshed out recently in litigation with the Inland Revenue as to a liability to pay certain duty, and the Court held that this was distinctly in the nature of a charity, and must be perpetually maintained, and therefore that there was no duty payable. There was a very long argument, and a very long judgment given.

5465. (Chairman.) No succession duty, you mean?

5466. (Mr. Crawford.) No, it was in connexion with the land tax, the Queen's taxes, and the corporation duty.

5467. (Chairman.) The Guildhall School of Music is a voluntary institution?—The Guildhall School of Music is a voluntary institution. It was established by the Corporation, in 1880, for the purpose of supplying instruction in the art and science of music at moderate cost to the student. The Corporation has erected and furnished a new building on the Victoria Embankment at a cost of 25,930*l.*, paid out of the reserve fund, and provided funds for establishment charges. It was opened in 1886. Besides all branches of music, instruction is given in Italian, French, German, and elocution. There is a large staff of masters of the highest reputation. Forms of nomination, when filled up, must be signed by an Alderman or a member of the Common Council. Students are admitted at the commencement of the term, or at the half-term. The fees vary according to the section, and the number of subjects in which the students arrange to take lessons, and also according to the professor selected by the principal. The principal is Sir Joseph Barnby, and the school is managed by the Music Committee, consisting of the Lord Mayor, six Aldermen, and 29 Common Councilmen. There are numerous prizes of ten and five guineas a year. There is an exhibition given by the Corporation of London of 200*l.* a year, another given by the Trustees of the Mitchell City of London Charity of 150*l.* a year, and several others of 10*l.* and 20*l.* a year, given by several of the City Companies. The school has no charter or Act of Parliament constituting it, and the funds for carrying it on are supplied by the Corporation in the exercise of their general powers of disposing of the corporate property. There is no reason why it should not be made self-supporting.

5468. (Lord Farrer.) They have spent some considerable sum upon it, I think?—Yes, I think it is about 28,000*l.* a year.

5469. 2,700*l.*, I think.

5470. (Mr. Crawford.) It is 2,700*l.* a year. You are mixing up the original expenditure.

5471. (Mr. Smith.) The original expenditure was 26,000*l.*, apparently.

5472. (Chairman.) What is that, Mitchell's Charity?

5473. (Mr. Crawford.) It is in connexion with technical education.

5474. (Chairman.) The Freemen's Orphan School?—The Freemen's Orphan School was constituted by a private Act (13 & 14 Victoria, c. x). By 13 & 14 Charles II., c. 12, the President and Governors of the Poor for the City of London were incorporated with power to hold lands of the yearly value of 3,000*l., and under that Act the London Workhouse was established for the reception and employment of destitute persons frequenting the City, but turned out a useless institution.

5475. (Chairman.) How long did it last? It is a great jump from Charles II. to George IV.

5476. (Lord Farrer.) What the City case states is, that "In the course of time the London Workhouse, "founded in the reign of Charles II., which served a "very useful purpose for nearly two centuries, "became unnecessary for the purpose for which it "was established, owing to the removal of the labour-"ing poor to the outskirts of London."

5477. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact it was continued up to 1829.

5478. (Lord Farrer.) 200 years?—That would be the tenth of George IV. By 10 George IV., c. 43.

5479. (Chairman.) It "turned out a useless institution" apparently—the City case is accurate—very late, not long before George IV., in consequence of the removal of the poor from the City by natural causes?—That was the reason of its becoming useless. Perhaps I have stated this too sweepingly.*

5480. (Lord Farrer.) And the House of Correction and Parochial Workhouse were erected within the City?

5481. (Chairman.) Well, go on?—By 10 George IV., c. 43, the powers of the former Act are extended, and the Governors are authorised to sell the lands and pay the purchase money into the Bank of England to the credit of the charity estates of the London Workhouse.

5482. Can you tell us what the constitution of this President and Governors may be?—The President and Governors of the Poor in London were incorporated by the Act of Charles II., "The Lord Mayor "of the City of London for the time being was "made the President of the Corporation Workhouse, "established by the said Act for the relief and "employment of the poor in the said City, and the "Governors or assistants were the Aldermen of the "said City of London for the time being, and 52 other "citizens chosen by the Common Council of the said "city; and upon the vacancy by death or otherwise "of any Governor or assistant, the power to elect in "their room was given to the said Common Council."

5483. (Mr. Crawford.) That is set out in the preamble of the Act?—Yes, in the preamble of the Act of 10 Geo. IV.

5484. It is also repeated in the recent Act that you referred to—the Act of 1850?

5485. (Mr. Smith.) You seem to have had more than 100 Governors there; all the Aldermen of the City, 65 citizens, and 25 benefactors?—Yes.

5486. It is a rather over-managed institution, I should think?—The interest arising from these estates was available for the purpose of apprenticing Freemen's children, and of maintaining a school for the support and education of poor and destitute children. In 1850 the Governors of the Corporation of London Workhouse consisted of the Aldermen of the City, 65 citizens, and 25 benefactors of 20*l.* each. The sum of 6,450*l.* was standing to the credit of the account in the Bank of England. In that year the Corporation petitioned the Lord Chancellor as to the appropriation of these funds. It was referred to a Master in Chancery to report whether it was desirable to apply to Parliament for power to establish a school for the orphan children of Freemen with this money, and the Master's report being favourable, an application was made to Parliament, and, by the Act already referred to, the Freemen's Orphan School was constituted. The Corporation of London was by the Act empowered to purchase a site for the school in Brixton or elsewhere; and by section 2 it is provided that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens shall for ever thereafter maintain a school for the maintenance of religious and virtuous education of orphans of Freemen of the City of London. In addition to the funds above referred to, the Act makes applicable to the school the fees and fines payable on the admission of Freemen, and the fines payable by persons refusing offices, and the establishment of the school was intended by the Corporation to be an inducement to persons to take up their freedom.

5487. (Mr. Crawford.) I see you quote from the evidence of Mr. Hale?—In 1854.

5488. And Mr. Hale, I see, on turning to the evidence, says that the Corporation ought really to be thanked for having undertaken this school. I mean to say you do not mean this in any way as a reflection?—As a criticism, not in the least.

5489. It would be no benefit to the City that persons should take up their freedom. There can be no pecuniary benefit to the City that persons should take up their freedom, because the fees go entirely to the school?—Yes; but still, it is a school for Freemen.

5490. What Mr. Hale says is: "I think the public "feel much indebted to the Corporation for the estab- "lishment of that school. It is a great accommoda- "tion to that class of persons who object to boarding "schools, and it affords a great accommodation to "those who have not the means of sending members "of their families to boarding schools"?—Well, but it is confined to the children of Freemen of the City of London.

5491. Perfectly right; and you know it is not very difficult for a person to take up his freedom and get the advantage?

5492. (Mr. Smith.) It is to the interest of the City that persons should take up their freedom. Suppose there were no Freemen, what would become of the Corporation?

5493. (Mr. Crawford.) The words I used, Mr. Smith, were "pecuniary interest."

5494. (Mr. Smith.) Well, pecuniary interest?—The school is managed by a committee, consisting of the Lord Mayor and six Aldermen, and 29 Common Councilmen. Admission is confined to the children of Freemen of the City of London, irrespective of where they lived. It is a considerable charge upon the Corporation property. The Freemen's Orphan School is, of course, entitled, under the Act above referred to, to have the rents and profits of the lands formerly belonging to the London Workhouse, and to the fees and fines appropriated to it by the Act, but it has no legal claim to the further annual payments made by the Corporation for carrying it on.

5495. (Mr. Crawford.) You had better finish reading from your statement, Mr. Kemp, and then test it.

5496. (Mr. Smith.) Have we not rather excluded matter of this kind hitherto?

5497. (Mr. Crawford.) It was only the last two lines, Mr. Smith, which I thought were rather important.

5498. (Chairman.) We have cut out debatable matter.

5499. (Mr. Crawford.) One would like to have the opinion of Mr. Kemp that it might be "argued with "much plausibility that the Freemen of the City "were entitled to have the same provision made for "their orphans and widows as heretofore"?—I merely say that if the property of the Corporation were dealt with upon the same principles as the Act of 1835——

5500. I am not disagreeing with you in your statement?—Oh.

5501. (Chairman.) But we have refrained from examining Mr. Gomme upon any of these debatable questions. We are seeking for information upon facts rather than speculating.

5502. (Lord Farrer.) And the facts concerning this expenditure are given in the City case?—Yes, they are.

5503. (Chairman.) Do you know whether the proceeds of the lands held for the workhouse are kept apart—separate accounts for that endowment?—No; I do not know that.

5504. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you will find in the accounts that they are treated under the heading "Public and Trust Funds."

5505. (Chairman.) Go on with these Charitable Trusts?—The institution of the London Almshouses. The history of that, as far as I have been able to find it, is as follows: After the passing of the Reform Bill of 1832, it was thought by some in the City of London that it would be better to erect some substantial commemoration of the event than to have a mere illumination, and it was suggested that Reform Almshouses should be established. The public was appealed to, but did not respond liberally. The Corporation of London subscribed 1,500*l.* The projectors purchased ground and erected sixteen cottages or almshouses, with two sets of apartments in each, for the purpose of accommodating an equal number of widows and married couples. There were no funds to carry the matter further, and the Corporation was applied to to take over the concern. In 1847 the Corporation took over the almshouses and rebuilt them, adding eight more. 843*l.* 15*s.* was repaid to original subscribers, who would not consent to the transfer, and from henceforth the almshouses were employed for the reception of nominees of the different wards of the City. The almshouses are in Shepherd's Lane, Brixton. They are for the reception of both married couples and widows or spinsters. The men must have been freemen and householders within the City for seven years. The single women must be the widows or daughters of such freemen householders.

5506. Are single men ineligible?

5507. (Mr. Crawford.) No; married couples and widows and spinsters.

5508. (Chairman.) They do not cover single men; are they ineligible? Is a widower ineligible?—I have found no regulations as to single men. I presume they are not elected.

5509. (Mr. Crawford.) I remember just recently that one old man got leave of absence on purpose to marry, and he married a very young wife, who, I think, declined to enter the house afterwards. So that I think single men are eligible?—The right of nomination and election is in the Aldermen and Common Councilmen of each of the wards in rotation, and the persons elected are to be "persons of good "character and repute, whose circumstances have "been reduced not by idleness, extravagance, or "wilful default, but by those casualties which human "foresight or prudence cannot avert." No married men are admitted under the age of 60, no married women under the age of 45, and no single woman under the age of 55, other than the widow of an inmate dying there, who is permitted to remain in occupation of a single woman's apartment. The married couples receive 16*s.* a week and two tons of coals a year; the single women receive 12*s.* a week and two tons of coal a year. The management is by a Committee of the Corporation, and the number of inmates authorised is 20 married couples and 20 single inmates, a number which is as nearly as possible maintained. There are no special funds applicable to the support of these almshouses.

5510. (Mr. Smith.) Do you happen to know how many the Committee of the Corporation consists of?

5511. (Mr. Crawford.) That is given in our statement?—It is given in the Blue Document.

5512. (Mr. Crawford.) Page 135, you will find it. Six Aldermen and 29 Commoners.

5513. (Mr. Smith.) And the Lord Mayor, I suppose.

5514. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not think the Lord Mayor is ex officio a member of that.

5515. (Mr. Smith.) It seems to me an enormous number of people to look after such a trifling thing as this.

5516. (Mr. Crawford.) But you forget, Mr. Smith, the same Committee look after the Freemen's Orphan School?—Yes, it is the Lord Mayor and six Aldermen——

5517. (Mr. Smith.) I noticed there were 36 to look after that, and if there were 36 more to look after the almshouses——

5518. (Mr. Crawford.) No; it is the same Committee to look after both.

5519. (Lord Farrer.) It is not stated in the case here, at page 135; it is only the Freemen's Orphan School Committee.

5520. (Mr. Crawford.) I think if you turn to page——

5521. (Mr. Smith.) If you tell me it is so, I accept it. I am only struck with the size of the Committees even for large business.

5522. (Lord Farrer.) No; there is no statement about the management here.

5523. (Mr. Crawford.) No; but it is, as matter of fact, Lord Farrer, the same Committee.

5524. (Chairman.) There are other almshouses which the City administer?—Yes, Rogers' Almshouses at Brixton. William Rogers left 600*l.* to the Corporation of London to build an almshouse in the City for six aged couples who should be freemen or freewomen of the City.

5525. You do not give the date of that bequest?—No, I do not know it.

5526. (Lord Farrer.) In the reign of James I.?—I should have noticed that. The almshouse was formerly in Hart Street, Cripplegate, but this was pulled down in 1856, and the present almshouses built upon land belonging to the City at Brixton. The allowance made to each couple is 41*l.* 12*s.*, and to each single inmate 31*l.* 4*s.* per annum, and is, for the most part, paid out of the City cash. Each inmate also receives two tons of coal a year.

5527. (Chairman.) Are those single inmates survivors of couples? There seems to be a different provision for couples?—I am not sure.

5528. (Mr. Crawford.) I am told that the single inmates are the survivors of couples?—The Gresham Almshouses have already been referred to. They arise under the provisions of the will of Sir Thomas Gresham, who directed that the Corporation should pay out of their moiety of the Royal Exchange 53*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to eight almsfolk whom they should appoint to inhabit his eight almshouses which he gave to the Corporation, that is to say, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to each. The Corporation erected an almshouse in Whitecross Street, where the City Greenyard now is, but in 1883 new buildings were erected at Brixton. The inmates each receive 32*l.* 10*s.* per annum.

5530. I suppose those were burned down at the time of the Fire?—The dwelling-house was not burned at the Fire; it remained, and was used by the City during the rebuilding of London.

5531. When did the City build in Whitecross Street?—The almshouses at the back of the Bishopsgate House I take it—I am not quite certain—were sold with the dwelling-house to the Excise office. I think they adjoined it.

5532. All those three sets of almshouses are in Brixton. Are they massed together there, do you know?—No, I do not know. It is property that belongs to the City of London there; but I do not know whether they are together.

5533. (Mr. Smith.) There is not a separate committee for this, I hope?

5534. (Lord Farrer.) No; it is the Gresham Estates Committee—in the City case.

5535. (Mr. Crawford.) The whole of the Gresham Trust, you know, is under the control of a joint committee composed of members of the Corporation and members of the Mercers' Company.

5536. (Mr. Smith.) Is it what they call the Joint Grand Gresham Committee?

5537. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

5538. (Chairman.) Are these almshouses contiguous?

5539. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, all together; and it so happens that the Clerk who represents the Corporation on that Joint Grand Committee is also the Clerk that practically does the work of the Freemen's Orphan School Committee, so that when he goes down he attends to the inmates of all these several almshouses.

5540. (Chairman.) There are several other small charities that the City are trustees of in one way or another, the Wilson Loan Charity, for instance?—Yes. Under a scheme settled in 1868, the Lord Mayor, the two senior Aldermen, the Recorder, and the Chamberlain for the time being, are trustees of the charity, which was founded by Samuel Wilson, who by his will dated 27th of October 1766, bequeathed 20,000*l.* to the City Chamberlain for the purpose of making loans at a low rate of interest to young men who have been in business in the City of London, or within three miles thereof, between one and two years. Loans are made of from 100*l.* to 300*l.* to tradesmen under 30 years of age.

5541. (Mr. Crawford.) 40 it should be?—In the City of London or within five miles.

5542. (Lord Farrer.) Three miles?—It was three miles by the will, but it is five by the scheme, my Lord,—who have succeeded in and have carried on business for one and not more than three years.

5543. (Chairman.) Has the capital been well preserved, do you know? Was it in 1868 much the same as it was in 1766, after a century?—I do not know.

5544. (Lord Farrer.) It is 41,000*l.* now.

5545. (Chairman.) Then Ward's City of London School for Girls?—William Ward, of Brixton, left 20,000*l.* to the Corporation in 1882, to be expended upon building and maintaining a high school for girls. In an administration action the Corporation were ordered to submit a scheme for carrying out the testator's intentions, before the money should be paid over to them. The Corporation found that they had no suitable land, and therefore Ward's City of London School for Girls Act, 1885, was passed to enable them to acquire a site, and to apply Ward's bequest in providing a school for girls.

5546. (Mr. Crawford.) That is not quite so, Mr. Kemp; a difficulty was that the Bridge House Estates Committee had no power of sale or exchange, and to enable the Bridge House Estates Committee to exchange a site with the City that Act was passed; but the City has not availed itself of the Act. It has gone to the site on the Thames Embankment.

5547. (Chairman.) A site has been granted.

5548. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a gift of land on the Thames Embankment.

5549. (Chairman.) Are they building?

5550. (Mr. Crawford.) Oh, it is nearly built now.

5551. (Chairman.) And meanwhile the fund is dormant?

5552. (Mr. Crawford.) Is in the Court of Chancery?—Yes, the Act empowers the Corporation, as the Trustees of the Bridge House Estates, to sell or exchange lands for the site of the school; but I was under the impression that it had been carried out under the provisions of that Act.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

5553. (Chairman.) Will that be under the same management as the City of London School, the same Committee?

5554. (Mr. Crawford.) The Committee is not selected yet. The scheme which is mentioned here is being carried out by the same Committee who had the litigation—the Law and City Courts Committee.

5555. (Lord Farrer.) I see by the City case that it would probably cost the City something; that it would be an expense out of pocket.

5556. (Mr Crawford.) It will be?—That I do not know. Emanuel Hospital. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London are the Governors of Emanuel Hospital, James Street, Westminster. The hospital was founded in 1594, by Lady Anne Dacre, who appointed her executors during their lives to be the Governors, and after their death the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. Its object is to provide a home for 20 men and women, and pensions for 10 men and women belonging to Westminster, Chelsea, or Hayes. Admission is by appointment of the Governors. The in-pensions are 25*l.* and the out-pensions 10*l.*

5557. (Lord Farrer.) That at the present moment is subject to a scheme.

5558. (Chairman.) Recently a scheme has been authorised to pull down these buildings and to remove the hospital?—I was not aware of it.

5559. (Mr. Crawford.) The site has been sold, and a scheme is now before the Chancery Division providing for out-pensions.

5560. (Chairman.) That same bequest of Lady Dacre's is the origin of the next—the United Westminster Schools?—Yes, of a part of the next. The Lord Mayor, the Recorder, and nine nominees of the Court of Aldermen, are Governors of these schools. Ten Governors are appointed by the members of the London School Board for Westminster—that should be the members for Westminster of the London School Board. The schools were formed under a scheme of the Endowed Schools Commissioners in 1873, and included with other charities in Westminster the school branch of Emanuel Hospital. The Mitchell (City of London) Charity. The Corporation appoint four out of the nine representative trustees of the charity, three being appointed by the London School Board, and two by the Governors of Christ's Hospital. There are also six coöptative trustees. The income is applicable under a scheme of 1883, as to one-third for the relief of the poor of the City of London, and as to the remaining two-thirds for the advancement, education, and benefit of the children of poor parents connected with the City of London.

5561. Is it a new scheme of an old foundation?—No, it is not.

5562. Was that the Mr. Mitchell who left his property to the Board of Works?—To the Board of Works, and there was a litigation about it. He left it to the First Commissioner of Works, or the Chairman of Her Majesty's Board of Works, and there was a doubt. The Metropolitan Board of Works thought he intended to leave it to them, and there was litigation about it in consequence.

5563. And it was settled by a scheme?—Yes. The Chairman of the Board of Works, I think, disclaimed all interest in it, and a scheme was settled by which the City have partial control over it.

5564. (Mr. Crawford.) I think the scheme provides in what way the relief of the poor is to be given. "By clause 7, all future coöptative trustees "were to be competent persons resident or carrying "on some profession, business, or occupation within "the City of London. Clauses 22 and 23 of the "scheme directed how the income of the Charity was "to be applied, namely, as to one-third thereof, for "the relief of the poor of the City of London, by "monetary assistance, grants to dispensaries, &c., "workmen's clubs, and pensions to deserving and "necessitous persons"?—"Morden College. Two "Aldermen of the City of London are trustees of this "Charity, which was founded by Sir John Morden "in 1695. By his will, dated the 15th of October "1702, and proved in 1708, he left most of his "property for the endowment of the college he had "erected near Blackheath. The charity is regulated "by a scheme settled in 1871. In-pensioners receive "100*l.* per annum, 6*l.* 10*s.* for washing, 2*l.* 2*s.* candle "money, 28 sacks of coal, firewood, and furniture to "the value of 25*l.* on admission if required. There "are also a number of out-pensioners who received "80*l.* per annum."

5565. (Chairman.) You are not quite up to the last information about the position of the Aldermen in relation to that charity, are you?—The will provided that the Governors should be members, I think, of the East India Company, and, failing them, of the Turkey Company.

5566. (Mr. Crawford.) The Turkey merchants?—Yes, the Turkey merchants, and, failing them, the Aldermen of the City of London, and, failing them, gentlemen of Kent. I forget whether there was any qualification with regard to them.

5567. (Chairman.) We need not go beyond the Aldermen of London. The Aldermen of London are available, the Turkey merchants being a decaying or an extinct body?—The Turkey merchants are decayed, the East India Company is extinct, and for the future the Governors will be all appointed from the Aldermen of the City of London.

5568. Presently it will be exclusively aldermen?—Exclusively aldermen.

5569. When the other trustees die out, they will be replaced by Aldermen of the City of London; so that they will be exclusively Aldermen of the City of London?—Yes. Sir John Soane's Museum. Under 3 & 4 William IV. c. 4, s. 16 (private) the Court of Aldermen appoint one of five additional trustees of this museum, the other four being appointed by the Royal Academy, the Royal Society, the Royal Society of Antiquaries, and the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce in the Adelphi. Aske's Charity, Hoxton, is a charity which belongs to the Haberdashers' Company. It is a school. The Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council each appoint one of the managers. The foundation was in 1688. City of London Parochial Charities. The Common Council appoint four members of the governing body created by the central scheme of the Charity Commissioners, 1890. There is an income, I believe, arising from a number of other bequests for charitable purposes, which are administered by the Corporation, and they make annual contributions out of their own general funds for the support of the widows of freemen.

5570. (Chairman.) We then come to the Irish Society?—Yes, to the Irish Society.

5571. Which is at this moment the subject for litigation?—In Ireland, yes, sir.

5572. You had better briefly lead up to that?—The origin of the Society was in an agreement which was entered into with the City of London to grant to the Corporation lands in the province of Ulster, in order that "the Corporation of London, burning with flagrant "zeal to promote the pious intentions of the King, "should undertake some part of the task he set "himself, of stirring up and recalling the province "from superstition, rebellion, calamity, and poverty "which theretofore had horribly raged therein, to "religion, obedience, strength, and prosperity." By this agreement it was stipulated that 20,000*l.* should be advanced and expended on the undertaking.

5573. How was this agreement formulated; it could not be by law by deed between the Crown and the City; was it by charter with recitals; or how was it done?

5574. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find it at page 149 of the City case.

5575. (Chairman.) There was a charter to the Corporation giving—— ?—That comes a little later. I do not remember.

5576. (Mr. Crawford.) There was an agreement first executed?—There was an agreement.

5577. (Chairman.) There is rather a legal difficulty in an agreement between the Crown and even such an authority as the City?

5578. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, the articles of agreement were entered into between the Privy Council and the Corporation?—The Privy Council——

5579. The 28th January 1610?

5580. (Chairman.) The Privy Council, after a deputation had been sent out to inquire into the condition of Ulster.

5581. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, that was so?—20,000*l.* was to be advanced and expended on the undertaking under this agreement. The City compulsorily levied this money upon the incorporated Companies of London, and the King afterwards granted a charter, dated the 29th of March 1613. By this charter the Irish Society was incorporated, the members thereof to be from time to time appointed by the City for the management of the colony, and the lands were thereby granted to the Society for ever.

5582. (Chairman.) How was that money levied; under what power?

5583. (Mr. Crawford.) It was by Act of Common Council.

5584. (Lord Farrer.) Did the Act of Common Council claim the power then to tax the Companies?

5585. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation by making Acts of Common Council claimed the right to make these levies upon the City Companies. The first of these acts is dated the 22nd of December 1609. That was the first levy of 5,000*l.*

5586. (Chairman.) That was in December 1609?

5587. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, the first Act of the Common Council?—The 22nd of December 1609.

5588. (Lord Farrer.) The articles of agreement were signed on the 26th January 1610, and the money was levied afterwards.

5589. (Chairman.) I suppose 1609 means 1609–10 there?

5590. (Mr. Crawford.) I may explain that the dates were according to what is known as the old style; the year began on the 25th of March.

5591. (Chairman.) So that is 1609–10, according to our modern times. Go on, Mr. Kemp?—The Society divided the greater part of the lands granted between the Companies, more or less in proportion to the amount of the contributions which had been levied upon them; but the town lands, ferries, fisheries, and other property, which it was not easy or possible to set out in severalty to the different Companies, were retained by the Irish Society in their own hands.

5592. All the money had been raised from the Companies, you understand?—I think that the whole of the 20,000*l.* had been raised from the Companies.

5593. (Lord Farrer.) Eventually, it is stated in the City case, it exceeded 60,000*l.*

5594. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, there were further levies under the same act of Common Council.

5595. (Chairman.) However it was, the whole fund was raised from the City Companies, with no contribution from the City's cash; is that what we are to understand?

5596. (Mr. Crawford.) To the best of my belief that is so, Mr. Chairman.

5597. (Chairman.) Go on?—"The Society afterwards became involved in disputes with the Crown, "and its charter was forfeited and its proceedings "annulled in the time of Charles I. The charter "was re-granted by Charles II. after the Restoration, "and under this charter the Society now exists. The "property of the Society has been administered since "the time of Charles II. by a committee of the Corporation of London, no member of which, except "the Governor, can continue to be a member for more "than two years consecutively. The original purpose "for which the Society was established, that of "colonising and civilising a large tract of country in "the North of Ireland, has long ago been fulfilled. "Its revenues are now used partly for the expenses "of management, and partly in grants for municipal "institutions and educational and other charities "connected with the district in which the estates "lie."

5598. (Chairman.) That does not exhaust the revenue, does it; do you mean that it does; is there any surplus after expenses are paid and grants made to municipal institutions?—The estates of the companies of course do give a considerable revenue beyond anything of that kind, but the City does not receive any income from the Irish Society.

5599. (Mr. Crawford.) Except as purchasers of two small portions, I think, of land held by one or two minor Companies?—Oh——

5600. (Mr. Smith.) May I ask, just as a matter of information, do the great estates of the Mercers' Company in Derry come under this?—I think they do. Most of the estates are in Derry.

5601. I was not sure whether that was a purchase of their own, or whether it passed under this incorporation?

5602. (Chairman.) There was a surplus revenue, I see, at one time over those charges up to 1837, and that revenue was distributed amongst the companies?—Oh, yes, before the decision in the Skinners' case. "At one time the Society was in the habit of dividing "its surplus revenues among the companies which "had originally contributed to its funds. This "practice, however, was discontinued about 1837."

5603. (Lord Farrer.) The City case makes the Skinners' Company action commence in 1832?—I have got about 1837.

5604. (Mr. Crawford.) That was when the first attempt was made, and the litigation lasted, I think, right up to 1838, or longer than that, because I think that was when the Master of the Rolls first gave his decision—1838—and that went to the House of Lords. According to the judgment, it states distinctly they had been in the habit, speaking of the Society, of paying all surplus funds in "round" sums, I think were stated; however, they had been paying over the surplus funds to the different companies in proportion to their original contributions, so that there must have been surplus funds according to that.

5605. (Chairman.) The City does not expressly say that an action was commenced or a suit instituted in 1832?

5606. (Mr. Crawford.) An attempt was made and a Chancery suit was commenced?—It is 12 Clarke and Finnelly.

5607. (Chairman.) However, the Master of the Rolls' judgment was in 1838. The House of Lords case would be after that?—It was after that. "It "was held by the House of Lords, affirming the "decision of Lord Langdale, that the Society was "constituted trustee for permanent public purposes, "independent of the Companies, and had a discretion "in applying the funds arising from the property "retained by it, to these purposes; that though it "was accountable to the Crown for any neglect of its "duty as trustee and also to the City of London for "misconduct in the management of the property, it "was not accountable to the Companies. The argu"ments and judgments in this case show that the "Corporation of London have never claimed any "beneficial interest in the revenue of the Society."

5608. Is that practically free from dispute? What did they do after they ceased to distribute the surplus?—I am afraid I do not know what they did.

5609. (Mr. Crawford.) The Irish Society is governed distinct from the Corporation; the Corporation only exercise a visitorial jurisdiction over it; it is a corporation by itself, and has its own officers quite distinct from the Corporation of London.

5610. (Mr. Smith.) Perhaps you can tell us whether you do claim any beneficial interest?

5611. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation of London?

5612. (Mr. Smith.) Yes.

5613. (Mr. Crawford.) Except in the way I have stated?

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

5614. (Mr. Smith.) As visitors.

5615. (Mr. Crawford.) We stepped into the shoes of one or two small Companies. We bought up their interests. I think the Butchers' was one.

5616. (Mr. Smith.) But quâ Corporation not?

5617. (Mr. Crawford.) No.

5618. (Mr. Smith.) Only as representing those small Companies.

5619. (Lord Farrer.) I see it is stated in the City case that the City exercise a species of visitorial power over the Society?

5620. (Mr. Crawford.) That is so.

5621. (Lord Farrer.) Do they make themselves practically responsible?

5622. (Mr. Crawford.) They have the right to call for an account, and also to investigate any case of complaint against the Governors in their management of the Society.

5623. (Chairman.) And they appoint members of the Society from time to time?

5624. (Mr. Crawford.) Certainly; the Governor must be an Alderman, and they appoint the DeputyGovernor.

5625. (Chairman.) Perhaps it is too delicate a question to ask. What is the view of the Society or the Corporation as to the balance which at one time was distributed among the Companies. Are they bound to expend it all on the management of the estates or grants to municipalities, or have they discretion as to the balance to hand it over to the City? —I do not think there is any obligation to pay it over to the City.

5626. I did not say obligation; have they discretion? —I do not think now that it can be said that they have. I do not know what view they may have taken of it, but the judgment in the Skinners' Company case seems to define the position of the Irish Society as a trustee for permanent public purposes, independent of the company, but it had a discretion in applying the funds arising from the property retained by it to its own purposes. I think that is meant to be within the trust.

5627. That is the exact point which is to be decided by this suit in the Irish Court of Chancery?—It is. I refer to that a little later.

5628. (Lord Farrer.) Do you know if the amount is large; the property is considerable?—The property of the Companies is large.

5629. It is?—Oh, yes.

5630. (Chairman.) But the property of the Society? —The property of the Society, I do not think it is large, but I do not know. It was these rights of a nature that are not easily divisible that were transferred to it, and I do not know. I said that was the point to be decided in the litigation, but I think I was not quite accurate in saying that. The point was the question whether the City Companies, with regard to their property, are in the same position as the Irish Society was held in the Skinners' case to be. I think that is it.

5631. No; the question in litigation in the Skinners' case was between the Irish Society and the Skinners'. It decided nothing as to the duties of the Irish Society to British inhabitants. If observations were made on that subject they were quite beyond the necessary purposes of the case?—Of course, the question in dispute was as to the rights of the Companies against the Society, but does it not come almost necessarily within the scope of deciding that case, that you must decide almost positively what is the position of the Irish Society?

5632. Only as regards this company, the Master of the Rolls and the Lords might have said specifically, we are not bound to say what the company is under an obligation to do with this money; what we are required to say is that it owes no obligation to the companies in respect of it.

5633. (Mr. Crawford.) That was distinctly the judgment. The Society was not in any way amenable to the Companies.

5634. (Chairman.) That was the judgment. Of course, observations were made which may be construed as going beyond that, but they were unnecessary observations for the purposes of the judgment? —Yes.

5635. (Mr. Smith.) The litigation in the Irish courts seems to be rather of a different character; that has reference to the purchasing tenants. However, we will not anticipate that?—There were recommendations made by the Commissioners of 1854 to the effect that the Irish Society should be dissolved, and its charter repealed by Act of Parliament, and its property vested in a new set of trustees, whose number and character should be defined by the Act. It was further recommended "that the trustees be appointed " by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and that he " have power to fill up vacancies as they occur from " time to time. A general scheme for the guidance " of the trustees in the management of the property " ought to be laid down in the Act, but as it may be " difficult to define once for all every portion of a " scheme of this kind, and as it may be desirable as " circumstances require to alter the provisions of the " scheme to meet them, power should be given to the " Lord Chancellor of Ireland to modify or vary the " provisions of the scheme within certain limits."

5636. (Chairman.) Nothing has been done upon that report?—Nothing more was done. "In 1890 a " Select Committee of the House of Commons was " appointed to inquire as to the terms of the charters " or other instruments by which their estates in Ire- " land were granted to the Irish Society and to the " London Companies, and as to the trusts and obliga- " tions, if any, attaching to the ownership of such " estates, and as to the mode in which the sale of " their estates has been effected, or can be effected " consistently with such trusts and obligations as may " be shewn to have existed or now exist. The Com- " mittee took evidence and heard counsel, but they " were unable to conclude their investigation, and " agreed to report the evidence already taken, and " to recommend that a Committee on the same " subject should be appointed in the next session of " Parliament. The Committee was re-appointed in " January 1891, and reported on the 4th of May in " that year. They recommended that the Irish " Society should be dissolved, and its charter re- " pealed by Act of Parliament, and that its property " should vest some of it in the Corporations of Derry " and Coleraine, and the rest in the elective county " authority, which the Committee understood that " Parliament was shortly about to create. With " regard to the sale of their Irish estates by the com- " panies, they say: 'Your Committee are of opinion " ' that a primâ facie case exists for the proposition, " ' that inasmuch as the Courts have declared that " ' public purposes are permanently attached to the " ' lands preserved by the Irish Society'":—the Committee thus taking that view of the judgment in the Skinners' case—" permanent public objects still " follow the lands conveyed by the Irish Society to " the companies, and the proceeds of the sale of such " lands. In a matter of such gravity your Committee " consider that the intervention of the Attorney " General is required. Meanwhile, the conclusions " established by the Royal Commission on the Com- " panies, presided over by Lord Derby (1882–84), in " respect of the endowments of the City Companies, " generally appear to be entirely applicable to the " portion of those endowments existing in Ireland. " It would be unjust to exclude the Irish tenants of " the companies from the benefits of the policy of " land purchase, but it is indefensible to allow the " vendors, by means of the Purchase Acts, to divest " themselves of all the great local responsibilities par- " ticularly attached to their Irish estates. Your " Committee consider that the proceeds of the sales " constitute a fund, the benefits of which should, in " conformity with the principles of the Commission of " 1882–84, accrue wholly for the purposes and objects " described by Lord Langdale as territorial, that is to "say, local and Irish." What was that, 1882-84?—That is the date of the Commission on the Livery Companies.

5637. (Mr. Crawford.) And their recommendations have never been acted upon?—Not yet.

5638. They have never been acted upon?—No.

5639. (Chairman.) This was rather a narrow decision of that Committee. You do not go behind the decision to find by what force it was recommended—the Select Committee.

5640. (Mr. Crawford.) It was a very small majority, I think you will find. We might, Mr. Kemp, have on the notes the fact that the Committee in 1889 reported to Parliament that from the evidence of the witnesses examined there was no complaint as to the manner in which the Irish Society performed its duties?—I have not got it here, if you are reading that.

5641. I read it from the Committee's report. You referred to the Committee of 1889; it is just as well to have it on the notes?—I have no doubt.

5642. (Lord Farrer.) You say it appeared there was no complaint as to the manner in which the Irish Society performed its duties and the City Companies. It was admitted that till recently they had acted very liberally?—I do not see any signature to that, perhaps it is not put in the case of a Committee.

5643. (Chairman.) It would be in the report of their proceedings.

5644. (Mr. Smith.) Do you remember, Mr. Crawford, perhaps you can tell me, how it was that the recommendations of the Commissioners of 1854 were not carried not. You were good enough to give us a paper from the City showing why those recommendations were not carried out; perhaps there may be some reason.

5645. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, perhaps I can tell you.

5646. (Mr. Smith.) It would appear from that that it really has very little to do with the City of London.

5647. (Lord Farrer.) The Irish Society, their estates?

5648. (Mr. Smith.) We may just as well know why they did not adopt that suggestion.

5649. (Mr. Crawford.) The suggestion was "that "the Irish Society should be dissolved, and its "charter repealed by Act of Parliament, and that its "property be vested in a new set of trustees, whose "numbers and character should be defined in the "Act. We recommend further that the trustees be "appointed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland," and the observation of the City upon that is "this recommendation has not been carried into effect. The "Corporation still appoints the Irish Society, and has "always exercised a species of visitorial or superintending power over the conduct and proceedings of "the Society."

5650. (Mr. Smith.) But they give no reason for not adopting that suggestion.

5651. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I assume the reason would be that they thought it unnecessary; there is no complaint against the Irish Society. The object of this litigation is not in connexion with any complaint against the Society.

5652. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, no, I quite follow that, only it occurs to me as a practical man that you have got quite enough to do, you say, to manage the City. I say to manage London, and it is a pity to be hampered with things that the Commissioners say should be taken from you.

5653. (Mr. Crawford.) You see there is no resolution passed by the Select Committee of the House that the constitution of the Irish Society should be changed; the object of the litigation, as I understand, is more particularly in connexion with the City Companies.

5654. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, I daresay.

5655. (Mr. Crawford.) And I think the complaint was that some of the Companies were disposing of their estates.

5656. (Mr. Smith.) The Commission of 1854 recommended that it should be dissolved, and from what I see I should be inclined to agree with them?—The Committee of 1891 especially agreed with the recommendation of the Commissioners of 1854.

5657. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, but Parliament has not acted upon it?—No, it has not.

5658. (Chairman.) That is the situation; there were 13 members, two were absent, six voted for, four against, and the chairman declined, the two absent belonging to the same parties as the minority—six to six. Then as to the Commissioners of Sewers. We had the chairman of that body before us, who has given us rather large information. Have you seen his evidence?—I have.

5659. Is there anything you wish to supplement or that you think your evidence supplies?—I deal in this part also with the relation of the Commissioners of Sewers to the Metropolis.

5660. Apart from the City, the Metropolis?—Yes, that is so. With regard to the central authority that is exercised over the whole Metropolis by the London County Council, I go to that upon page 56, but there is, of course, on pages 53 and 54 introductory matter, partly historical and partly, I am afraid, controversial.

5661. (Mr. Crawford.) Has not a great deal of what you give us on page 57 already been given in evidence by Mr. Rotton? He explained to the Commissioners the position of the Commissioners of Sewers, and also the position of the Vestries and District Vestries and District Boards which discharged similar duties, and also pointed out what were the powers and duties in respect of similar matters, and the London County Council.

5662. (Mr. Smith.) Is there not another reason for taking in this very generally, that we are in a position to get this information primarily from the Commissioners? We are not at present in that happy position with regard to the Corporation of the City of London, therefore we have taken Mr. Kemp rather fully into matters which are really not within his purview in regard to the City, but in regard to the Commissioners of Sewers, we are in a position to get primary evidence on all points, I think.

5663. (Mr. Crawford.) I am going to suggest that if Mr. Kemp can point out any matter which has been either incorrectly stated on the part of the witnesses called by the Commissioners of Sewers, or any omission that might be useful; but it looked to me like travelling over the ground again?—I am not at present aware of any inaccuracy in their book, but of course their position and powers might be looked at from different points of view.

5664. (Chairman.) I think where we can get evidence at first hand we ought to get it at first hand, therefore most of this we have either got already or can get by an examination of the Chairman of the Commissioners of Sewers. The part which I thought we might possibly have entered upon is the really introductory part, showing the relation of the City to the supply of water, showing what the City never has undertaken to do.

5665. (Mr. Smith.) I think it very interesting to get its early history, and perhaps the Commissioners of Sewers would not object to that; it is rather of antiquarian interest; but when it came down to practical work at the present time it would be only courteous to ask the Commissioners of Sewers, who have come here and given us evidence, to ask them rather than other people?—This summary of their powers is their own, I may say.

5666. Yes, we have probably got it, but I think the introductory part we might fairly have from you, looking at it in the antiquarian light upon which you have given us so much information.

5667. (Lord Farrer.) That is continued on page 56, showing how municipal functions have grown up; that is interesting, I think.

5668. (Mr. Smith.) Quite so; but the really practical work we have had from the Chairman and the other officers whom he brought with him.

Mr. J. Kemp.

8 Dec. 1893.

5669. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, I think so.

5670. (Chairman.) Well, then, I think we may go on with page 53. Your view of the ancient municipal functions of the Corporation may be stated?—Yes. I think in ancient times that the municipal functions of the Corporation were confined principally to fostering the trade of the City and safeguarding and regulating the mercantile interests and the social relations of the citizens. "The Corporation had power to "prevent nuisances, as nuisances were then con- "ceived, and was regarded under some obligation to "provide for the common wants of the citizens; for "example, to provide them with a free supply of "water, and all the citizens were bound to contribute "according to their ability to the cost of the govern- "ment of the City; but a glance at the history of "the law of public health will show that municipal "corporations throughout England took a very narrow "view of the nature and extent of their duties and "obligations with regard to those matters which "are now looked upon as among the principal concerns "of municipal government."

5671. Proceed on to what the Corporation early allowed?—"The Corporation allowed the right and "the profit of supplying the City with water to drift "into the hands of private adventures, with a "financial result that is only now being fully "realised. For centuries all the water required for "domestic purposes in London was supplied by "water carriers, who brought it from the Thames, "the Fleet, Wallbrook, and other places." There were in addition certain wells sunk in the gardens of religious houses such as Bridewell, Holywell, Clerkenwell, Clementswell, and others. In 1236 water was first brought into London in leaden pipes from the village of Tyburn, and afterwards from Hampstead, Paddington, Marylebone, Islington, Hoxton, Hackney, and other places.

5672. Who did that, let us understand that?—That, I think, was done by the Corporation. If I am wrong I will take an opportunity of correcting it, but I think that even at this period that the earliest supply was in the hands of the Corporation—"By 35 Henry VIII., c. x, the Corporation "was empowered to enter into the grounds as well "of the King as of every other person where they "should find any springs, and there dig pits and "ditches, erect heads, lay pipes, make vaults, and "do all other things necessary for the conveyance of "water to the City. The supply thus contained was "distributed to the public by means of leaden "conduits or cisterns raised in the middle of the "principal streets. The largest stood in Westcheap, "and was erected in 1285."

5673. How do you mean by that date?—How did I arrive at it?

5674. I mean you follow 35 Henry VIII. with that date, that must refer back to the previous action?—Yes, the 35 Henry VIII. is an extension of powers that they had long exercised.

5675. The supply thus obtained does not mean the supply obtained under the Charter of Henry VIII., but after that had been done before.

5676. (Mr. Smith.) It sounds like the origin of the Parish Councils Bill, "Utilise any supply of "water"?—"Other conduits were erected in Alder- "manbury, Fleet Street, Glass Street, Holborn, "Bishopsgate, London Wall, Aldersgate Without, "Lothbury, Coleman Street, and Dowgate. The "estates which the Corporation possess in the neigh- "bourhood of Bond Street and Conduit Street were "originally acquired in connexion with their attempts "to supply the City with water. The supply thus "obtained was, however, inadequate, and the next "step taken was the erection of the London Bridge "waterworks. These works were erected in pur- "suance of the scheme devised by Peter Morrys, a "Dutch engineer, for supplying the City with "Thames water by a mill worked by the ebb and "flow of the tide at London Bridge."

5677. (Chairman.) What date is that?—The company was formed in 1703.

5678. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, but this was in 1581?—One moment.

5679. The time of Elizabeth?—1582 is the date of its erection.

5680. (Chairman.) There was no suggestion before that of private action for private gain?—I think the only attempts to bring water into London before that were by the Corporation.

5681. That statement that the Corporation early allowed the right and profit of supplying the City with water to drift into private hands does not go further back than 1582?—I did not intend it to go so far back as that; I mean the New River Company.

5682. (Mr. Crawford.) And even in 1582 the Corporation were assisting Morrys by financial grants?—That is the meaning of my last answer; I mean the New River Company.

5683. (Chairman.) Yes?—"The company was "formed called the London Bridge Waterworks "Company in 1703, and continued in existence to "the year 1822, when the works were destroyed, and "the powers of the proprietors transferred to the "New River Company by 3 George IV. c. cix.; from "the time of its erection in 1582, it was obvious that "the London Bridge Waterworks would be in- "sufficient to supply the City, and an attempt to "meet the difficulty was made about a quarter of a "century later in 1606. By an Act passed in that "year the Corporation of the City were empowered "to take water for the supply of the citizens from "the neighbourhood of Ware (4 Jac. 1 c. 12), but "after an ineffectual attempt, the Corporation "abandoned their rights to Sir Hugh Myddleton in "1609. The work proved more difficult than had "been expected, but Myddleton embarked his whole "fortune in the enterprise and received scarcely any "return for it during his life. The City declined to "give him any pecuniary assistance, but the King "came to his aid and gave him both money and "patronage upon the condition that he should receive "in return a half interest in the concern. The work "was completed in 1613, and the New River Company "was incorporated in 1619 by Letters Patent of "17 James I. The supply of water thus provided "was greater and better than anything which had "preceded it; for 100 years it was the only satisfac- "tory water supply of London. The other London "water companies were established at later dates; "but it is beyond the scope of this Memorandum to "refer to their history. It is enough to say that the "Corporation of London has never since had any- "thing to do with the supply of water to the City, "with this exception, that the Commissioners of "Sewers have one artesian well only completed last "year.* The Corporation is the authority for the "City of London under the Metropolis Water Act, "1871."

5684. (Mr. Crawford.) When you say "Has never "since had anything to do with the supply of water "to the City," you do not mean by that that the Corporation has not endeavoured to assist the citizens of the whole metropolis to have a better water supply?—You mean introduced Bills with reference to the Water Companies.

5685. Yes and held inquiries and spent money?—Oh, yes, the meaning of the sentence is perhaps a little ambiguous. I only meant that they never really had anything to do with the water supply themselves.

5686. (Mr. Smith.) They have never been undertakers?—No.

5687. (Mr. Crawford.) And you do not mean that the City in common with the Metropolitan Board of Works and the London County Council, have not endeavoured from time to time to procure good terms for the consumers of London?—No.

* See also Kemp, 5904–10.

5688. (Lord Farrer.) You do not mean to enter upon that at all?—No I was not alluding to anything but the direct supply of water.

5689. (Chairman.) Lighting in the same way was at one time feebly attempted by the Corporation?—Lighting at one time with oil lamps. I think they were one of the properties of the City that were given to the Orphans' Fund; but that was also lost and after the invention of gas the Gas Companies were incorporated.

5690. Did the Corporation light the City by its own undertakings with oil lamps up to the invention of gas?—At one time they did. I think up to the invention of gas, but I am not quite sure of the period over which their work extended. They had a lamp; it was a special invention which they used to sell, and there were profits arising from it that were devoted to the Orphans' fund. I remember that in the Act of William and Mary.

5691. (Mr. Smith.) You seem to say that they had that power and exercised it up to 1810, apparently—up to the establishment of the Gas Light and Coke Company?—Then I think that is probably correct, although I do not remember at this moment.

5692. (Lord Farrer.) There was a period, was there not, when all over England enterprises of this kind—special enterprises requiring skill and capital—and new inventions fell very much into the hands of companies, and out of the hands of municipal authorities, and that not only in London but elsewhere throughout England?—I think so.

5693. And the early supply of gas to the towns of England was by companies?—Yes.

5694. (Chairman.) In fact it was a risky business, being an unknown process?—Yes. I have, perhaps, put it rather in a form as if it were a reproach to them.

5695. (Mr. Smith.) I think we must admit that the municipalisation of gas and water is an affair mainly of the last 25 years?—Yes.

5696. There were one or two exceptions that I know?

5697. (Chairman.) Well, then, you tell us that the Commission of Sewers were known and issued under the authority of the Crown for the purpose of draining the country in different parts and maintaining sea walls?—In those days, of course, really more for the control of surface water, not so much with the reference that they now have to sewerage.

5698. Making not sanitary drains, but drying drains to dry a country, and protecting it by sea walls?—Yes.

5699. Then after the great Fire a Commission of Sewers was established in the City?—Yes, the powers are conferred by the Act upon the Common Council of the City to be executed,—I think the words are "By persons to be appointed by them," and that is the origin of the City Commissioners of Sewers.

5700. Well, we have had that evidence before, and we need not go into it. You might proceed to page 56 and give us some information as to what was going on outside the City?—"The large districts which "had grown up outside the City had no general "municipal organisation, and were, for the most "part, quite independent of each other. The sewer-"age of the larger portion of those districts was "under the control of Commissioners appointed "under 23 Henry VIII. c. 5, the Commissions "being seven in number, namely, for Westminster "and part of Middlesex, the Tower Hamlets, St. "Catherine's, Poplar and Blackwall, Holborn and "Finsbury, Surrey and Kent, and Greenwich. They "were all subject to the general Statutes of Sewers, "and several of them had obtained special Acts "extending their powers."

5701. And those extended all along the River apparently, and back from Chelsea down to Blackwall?—Yes, there was also the Regent Street Commission.

5702. That was much later?—Yes, that was 5 Geo. IV. "With respect to the paving of this "district outside the City, and the suppression of "nuisances, the Metropolitan General Paving Act, "commonly known as Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, "was passed in 1817. This Act consolidated and "reduced into a sort of system many of the pro-"visions as to paving and the regulation and improve-"ment of streets, and the prevention of nuisances "which were contained in the special Acts of par-"ticular parishes. The operation of the Act was "limited to the streets and public places then paved, "or which might thereafter be paved, within the "Cities of London and Westminster and Borough of "Southwark, and the other parishes included within "the weekly Bills of Mortality, and within the "parishes of St. Pancras and Marylebone with "certain specified exceptions."

5703. The City of Westminster covers a very considerable extent of ground?—Yes.

5704. (Lord Farrer.) Weekly Bills of Mortality, do you know what the limits of those were?—They varied at different times, I think. I have a map here that would show what they were about that time (map produced). This is a map which shows the variation in the size of the district within the Bills of Mortality between 1506 and 1847.

5705. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that in Loftie's work?—It is in Loftie's work.

5706. (Lord Farrer.) This is Loftie?—Yes.

5707. (Mr. Smith.) The last extension is pretty well coterminous with the County Council district, is it not?—It is exactly the same, I think, with this exception, that it includes Mottingham, and excludes Penge.

5708. Yes, I notice the Penge question.

5709. (Lord Farrer.) Mottingham, where is that?—It is east of Penge, further along.

5710. Towards Beckenham?—Yes; but of course the Registrar-General gives statistics as to the larger district, which is co-extensive with the district of the Metropolitan Police.

5711. (Mr. Smith.) But before the establishment of the Metropolitan Board of Works the only way of speaking of London was London defined within the Bills of Mortality?—Yes. "The powers of im-"proving and regulating streets and for the sup-"pression of nuisances contained in this Act were "extended to the whole Metropolis by the Metro-"polis Local Management Act, 1862, but those pro-"visions of the Act which deal with the suppression "of nuisances were repealed by the Public Health "(London) Act 1891. In 1843 the Poor Law Commis-"sioners drew attention to the defective state of the "sewerage and drainage of the Metropolis and the "inadequacy of the existing law on the subject. "The Commissioners for inquiring into the means of "improving the health of the Metropolis, reporting in "1847, recommended that the administration of the "laws of sewers in the separate districts should be "confined to one body of Commissioners for the "whole Metropolis, and suggested a general survey "of the metropolitan district. In September 1848 "the Metropolitan Sewers Act, 1848, was passed. "By this Act the Queen was authorised to issue one "Commission for the whole of the parts comprised "in the then existing separate Commissions, and to "include within it the districts subject to the Regent "Street Commissioners acting under 5 Geo. IV. c. c., "and any other parts, not more than 12 miles distant "from St. Paul's Cathedral, which might be named. "All local Acts relating to the former Commis-"sioners were repealed. The persons to be named "in the Commission, together with the Lord Mayor, "and four others to be appointed by the Common "Council, were constituted the Metropolitan Com-"missioners of Sewers, and were empowered to "require the Commissioners of Sewers for the City "of London to execute works within the City "limits."

Mr. J. Kemp.
8 Dec. 1893.

5712. (Mr. Crawford.) Were their powers limited to that, or was it their own business which affected that?—No, I think it was expressly so. I am sure it was. I looked at the Act this morning.

5713. (Chairman.) I think we might proceed to 1853 and 1854?—"The Commissioners appointed in 1853 to "inquire into the state of the Corporation of the City "of London recommended the creation of the Metro- "politan Board of Works, to be composed of a "limited number of members deputed to it from the "Council of each of the Metropolitan Municipal "bodies which they advised should be constituted, "including the Corporation of the City, and that to "this Board there should be confided the manage- "ment of all public works in which the Metropolis "had a common interest; and, further, that the "Board be empowered to levy a rate, limited to a "fixed poundage, for public works of general metro- "politan utility over the metropolitan district. In "1855 Sir Benjamin Hall, the President of the "Board of Health, introduced a Bill for the better "local management of the Metropolis, which carried "out many of the views expressed in the report of "the Commissioners of 1854, and also embodied other "provisions for the local management of the Metro- "polis. The Bill was passed in the same session, and "became law as the 'Metropolis Local Management "'Act, 1855," and under this Act and the Acts amend- "ing it, the local government of the Metropolis was "carried on down to the year 1888."

5714. (Mr. Crawford.) The Commissioners of 1854 also recommended that the rest of the Metropolis should be divided into districts for municipal purposes, did they not?—Yes, I have referred to that here. Representations from the metropolitan municipal bodies which they recommended should be established.

5715. I did not notice those words?—I think I read those words.

5716. (Chairman.) You proceed to give an account of the constitution of that Board and of its work?—First of the central powers that it had over the whole—its powers over the whole, and its powers which were limited to the vestries and district boards outside the City.

5717. Then you proceed to give the work which was thrown on it from time to time?—By various statutes.

5718. Until it was absorbed by the County Council?—And throughout the manner in which Parliament dealt differently with the vestries and district boards, and with the Commissioners of Sewers in the City. And coming down to the time of the London County Council, I follow the same course with regard to Acts which have been passed since they came into existence.

5719. (Mr. Crawford.) I think that is evidence which was given also by Mr. Dickinson, was it not? I do not think it has been given in this form by any one.

5720. It may not have been given in this form, but I fancy we had this information from Mr. Rotton, and also from Mr. Dickinson.

5721. Starting from page 65 that is a repetition of the third statement, is it not?—It is the same thing; it was originally part of this; it has been revised since then. There were several corrections.

The witness withdrew.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 14th December 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary

Mr. JOHN KEMP, Secretary to the Special Committee of the London County Council, recalled and further examined.

Mr. J. Kemp.
14 Dec. 1893.

5898. (Chairman.) Have you any observations to make with reference to the evidence you gave last time, or any part of it?—I should like to mention certain inaccuracies that arose, which I suppose I shall be at liberty to correct in this memorandum. On page 8, I should like to correct an inaccurate statement about the Ward of Bridge Without*; on page 15 to delete the statement that the Lord Mayor is Chairman of every committee that he attends †; page 23, there were certain words omitted in quoting a section of the County Courts Act of 1888‡; page 8, by virtue of various acts and byelaws of the City the senior alderman who has passed the Chair may remove to the Ward of Bridge Without; if he declines, the next in seniority has the option, and, if all who have passed the Chair decline, the Common Council may appoint any freeman.*

5899. (Mr. Crawford.) That is the way you wish to put it?—Yes, the way I wish to correct it. Then on page 15 I wish merely to delete the words at the bottom of the page, "He is chairman of every committee which he attends."* On page 23 certain words were omitted in quoting a section of the County Courts Act of 1888 in the paragraph upon the City of London Court, the words were, about seven lines from the bottom of it, "powers, rights, or privileges of the Judge of City Court."†

5900. Those words were left out before?—Were left out before. On page 24,‡ about the jurisdiction of the City Chamberlain, I was asked whether that jurisdiction was concurrent with the jurisdiction of the police courts. I do not think I gave a very intelligible answer. The fact is, I did not know of the statutory jurisdiction with regard to settling disputes between masters and apprentices that the justices and police magistrates have. The powers of the City

Chamberlain appear to go further, to be more extensive than those of the police courts, but so far as they exist they are, I think, concurrent and not exclusive. On page 25,* about the police, I have said that they are prevented from voting; that was removed by the Police Disabilities Removal Act of 1887.

5901. I called your attention to that at the time?—Yes, to most of these, I think. On page 30† I should like to make a small alteration about Billingsgate Market, because I did not know of the improvement in the Approaches which have been made quite recently. On page 31,‡ I have looked again at the Act of 1845, and I am satisfied that I made a mistake and that the rents and profits are not devoted to the Improvement Fund, but still belong to the Coal Market.

5902. The property of the Corporation?—The property of the Corporation devoted to the repairs.——

5903. Of the Coal Exchange?—Of the Coal Exchange, yes. Then on page 35 § I have made a mistake about the management of the Bridge House Estates, I said they were managed by the Bridge Masters; I wish to correct that and say it is by the Bridge House Estates Committee of the Common Council. On pages 38 and 45 there are two small corrections that are purely verbal.

5904. What are the verbal alterations on page 38?||—I was asked by Lord Farrer to insert a reference to the Parliamentary paper on Gresham College, and on page 45,¶ I think it was suggested by the Chairman—in any case I think I have gone too far in line 5 in saying that the London workhouse turned out a "useless institution." I would like to delete those words. On page 54 is perhaps the most important correction. I have not yet made it; it did not arise at the time. I stated near the end of the first paragraph on page 54 that "It is enough to say that the Corporation "of London has never since had anything to do with "the supply of water to the City," and so on. I think that is not accurate, although, of course, what the Corporation have had to do with the supply has been very small.

5905. It is a little too strong?—Well, the City aqueducts were not discontinued on the creation of the New River Company, the profits of them were given to the Orphans' Fund by 5 & 6 William & Mary, chapter 10. That was in 1694, and the Paddington spring was sold to the Bishop of London; the springs at Hampstead and Marylebone were leased to private persons, so that they ceased to be a source of supply to the City. But there was a certain supply from surface wells, with public pumps connected with them, and four of these were in existence as recently as 1875.

5906. But the Hampstead Ponds were leased to the New River Company, were they not, Mr. Kemp?—I have not found out who they were leased to. I have only said here that they were leased.

5907. Were they leased to the New River Company?—I have not found out that; there were four of these pumps in existence in 1875, but the water became contaminated, and they were discontinued after that.

5908. (Chairman.) Were those pumps maintained by the City or by the parishes within the City?—By the Corporation.

5909. (Mr. Smith.) They have now been closed by the sanitary authorities?—There is a report of the City medical officer of health, which I have not seen reporting that the water was not fit for use.

5910. They may be treated as non-existent?—I think so. Then there is one matter about which, if I may, I should like to amplify the answer that I gave to a question; it is upon the subject of market overt.†† I was asked, I think, by Mr. Smith, if I knew any practical disadvantage arising from the existence of that custom.

5911. (Mr. Smith.) Practical advantage I put it, I think? I thought so. But it appeared in the proof as disadvantage.

5912. I meant to ask whether there was any practical advantage in the continuance of the custom?—Well, I thought it might be useful if I stated very shortly what seemed to be the principles which lie at the bottom of the custom, so that it might appear whether they still are applicable to the continuance or existence of it in the City of London. It is on page 14, I think, of Thursday, the 12th day.

5913. (Mr. Crawford.) 4695 I think; is it where you refer to Mr. Attenborough and Messrs. Spink?—Yes.

5914. (Mr. Smith.) It is just at the bottom of one of these pages, it is 4547. I asked the question, "Do you know any practical difficulty from the "custom existing inside the Griffin, and not existing "outside." I think that is the point, is it not. You say that you have heard that that is the reason why there is a pawnbroker's shop at the corner of Chancery Lane. That is quite so? It seems to me that there are two principles which are the basis or origin of this custom. One is the convenience of merchants. In the olden days, if a man went into a town where he was not known, and there was no one to answer for him, he could not have sold his goods at all, or only at a very great loss, because no one could tell that he was not a thief. So it was for the convenience both of the purchaser and of the seller that some mode of sale should be devised that would confer a good title upon the purchaser. When you look at the kind of sale that was devised to meet this end, then you see that another principle comes in—the protection of the true owner of the goods. Because what is provided is that there shall be a sale as notorious as possible, a sale in open market, a sale where all the people from round about collect, and the owner or his friends may have an opportunity of seeing the goods if the thief tried to dispose of them. That this principle really does come in is illustrated by the circumstance that there were special laws with regard to particular kinds of chattels. For example, horses; if a man stole a horse, and rode it to the nearest market, well, the owner without the horse followed on foot; he arrived too late, and therefore it was the law that you had to keep the horse a certain time in the town in public stables before you could sell it at all. I may perhaps mention, as an analogous case to this, and which illustrates the same two principles of the law as to negotiable instruments, where you have on the one side the convenience of merchants and the custom of merchants as the origin of it, that it was necessary for facilitating commerce that there should be certain means provided for transferring property easily from one man to another, and on the other hand you have the protection of the true owner of the property; because special forms of instruments are required, and a man knows that if he makes one in that form he must take special care of it or he may lose his property. Well, turning to London; it does not appear to me that the conditions are such that these principles really have any application now. It cannot very well be said that this means of getting a good title is any longer required for the convenience of tradesmen, at any rate that it is specially required in the City of London. People sell and buy easily enough in shops everywhere else. And then looking at the second aspect of it, the protection of the true owner, it does not appear to afford any protection, because it affords no greater notoriety than if you sell anywhere else. If I sell a jewel in Mayfair, there is perhaps more notoriety and publicity in the sale if I sell it in Bond Street than if I sell it in Gracechurch Street, but the one confers a title and the other does not. I have no evidence, and I do not for a moment believe that any tradesmen in the City, relying on this custom, really do buy carelessly from persons whom they have reasonable cause for believing are dishonest possessors of goods; but if by accident they have done so, then they plead the custom, and then they get what appears to me an unfair advantage.

Mr. J. Kemp.
14 Dec. 1893.

5915. I suppose relatively to the state of the country and the population of the country, there is less retail trade now in the City of London than there was when this custom probably was instituted?—I should think very much.

5916. (Mr. Crawford.) But you do not suggest that the custom of market overt was mainly in connexion with the dishonesty of persons, do you?—No.

5917. I mean to say, take the preamble of the statute of Philip and Mary, where Parliament recognised the custom of market overt. Did it not show that really there had been a great decay in trade, and that the principal reason of it was because persons could not sell in market overt, and therefore it declared that every fair should be considered a market overt, and that was passed for the express purpose of increasing trade?—Yes, but I think that just illustrates what I have said, because the only reason why trade had fallen off would be that if a stranger came and tried to sell not in market overt, probably he could not do so, because no one would trust him. I said on the one hand it is for the convenience of merchants, therefore for the advancement of trade; on the other side the protection of the owner of the goods appears from the nature of the sale that is required.

5918. But is it not an advantage to City tradesmen to have a legal title in such a case?—It is an advantage.

5919. Why do you suggest that they should be deprived of that?—They have not it anywhere else, and the sale in a shop in the City of London has ceased to have the publicity and notoriety which was required of a sale in market overt when it began.

5920. But there are a good many other matters which they have in the City which they do not have outside, and that is the very reason why people come into the City, Mr. Kemp. I understand you simply give it as your reason why you think that this custom of market overt either should not be continued in the City, or should be extended everywhere; is that what you suggest?—Not exactly. I think I have gone further than that. I cannot see that, existing merely in shops and not in the open market place, the custom in the City fulfils the conditions which were meant to attach to the sale in market overt.

5921. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any reason whatever for the existence of any such custom now; is any inconvenience found from the sale of goods retailed in places where there is no market overt?—Not so far as I am aware.

5922. Is there ever a case—do any cases ever appear in the courts where there is any question about the title to an article which is bought in a shop outside the City? Are there any such cases as throw any uncertainty on the purchase of goods outside the City?—Oh, no; if a shopkeeper outside the City purchases from a thief he does not get a title.

5923. But does that ever happen; does it ever happen in practice that anybody hesitates about a purchase outside the City on that account?—I think that all honest tradesmen, if they have any reasonable ground for suspecting the honesty of the person selling, would refuse to deal with him, but in general there is not any difficulty now on account of persons being strangers.

5924. (Chairman.) There are frequent cases?—Oh, yes.

5925. Not relatively very numerous, but still there are frequent cases in the police courts of pawnbrokers who are ordered to deliver up goods which they have bought from a person who had not got a title to them?—Yes, there are special provisions in the Police Acts empowering police magistrates to order that.*

* But see also Savill, 7707.

5926. (Mr. Smith.) Might not this special custom occasionally work to great disadvantage? I take the case of Messrs. Spink and Sons; if they had bought the jewels from Mrs. Osborne in the shop instead of upstairs they might have kept them as against the rightful owner?—Certainly, but in that case it would not very likely have mattered, because Mrs. Osborne's relations paid everything.

5927. That is an accident?—It is quite an accident. In that case it would have been very hard.

5928. Most criminals' relations are not equal to paying?—No.

5929. (Chairman.) In any case it would be a question which of two honest persons lost?—Yes; well, but the general rule is that the purchaser takes the risk.

5930. (Lord Farrer.) As matter of law, supposing I go into a jeweller's shop in Oxford Street and buy something out of the window there, and it proves that the jeweller had bought it from somebody who had stolen it, can the original owner of the goods follow it into my house and get it back?—I believe he can.

5931. (Mr. Crawford.) If he had a knowledge of the thief. First of all, there must be a conviction, must there not, Mr. Kemp. You have got to convict the offender, have you not, first of all?—I mean, you do not get a title.

5932. The probability is that by the time the conviction is obtained, the article would not have been left in the house. I do not see how you are to detain it unless you can get the aid of a police constable at once. There must be a conviction, must there not, in order to gain a title to possession?—I meant that you would not get a title.

5933. Mr. Kemp, does it not come to this, you are giving us the benefit of your opinion as a lawyer, but you do not speak from any actual experience of commerce or otherwise of the advantage of this custom?—That is quite true.

5934. (Lord Farrer.) I think you can answer this, not as a lawyer. Does anybody have any doubt as to having sufficient title to retain any goods that he buys in a shop in Oxford Street?—No, I do not think so.

5935. (Chairman.) Have you any more corrections?—Nothing more, sir.

5936. You wish to lay before us some observations upon the constitution of the county of London?—Yes, my object has been not so much to speak, of course, of counties in general or to give information about them, as to point out respects in which the county of London differs from others owing to certain institutions, such as police courts, that exist within it.

5937. The City of London has been a county in itself for centuries?—Yes, there is no document that shows when it became a county, but it appears to have been separate from Middlesex as far back as history goes.

5938. And then outside the City there was an area, or two or three areas I may almost say, which were metropolitan areas, an area for the metropolitan police?—Yes.

5939. One area of a quasi metropolitan character for the Central Criminal Court, and an area for the Metropolitan Board of Works?—Yes, for the Metropolitan Board of Works.

5940. Then what did the Act of 1888 do?—In 1888 the Local Government Act took those parts of the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, which were within the limits of the metropolis as defined by the Management Act of 1855, out of those counties, and created a new county—the county of London—which consisted of the whole area of the Metropolitan Board of Works, with the exclusion of the City. The Act provided that a sheriff might be appointed for the county, and that it should be lawful to grant a Commission of the Peace, and a Court of Quarter Sessions, and that it should be subject to all laws and usages, with respect to counties in England and Wales, and to sheriff, justices, and quarter sessions.

5941. And that was, in fact, the creation of a new county?—Of the new county of London, yes. There is a third area, the administrative county of London. That is the area of the county of London with the addition of the City, so that you have within the area of the administrative county of London the county at large and the county of the City.

5942. Is there anything like that in any other administrative county in England?—Yes, there are certainly counties which contain towns that are counties of themselves.

5943. (Mr. Crawford.) And more than one town is a county by itself?—I daresay that is so. I have not looked at the position of the towns that are counties to be sure of it, but it is quite likely. Of course, the difference is that in those cases you have a rural county; in this case you have, whatever it may be called, what is practically a town, and inside the town there is another town which is a county in itself.

5944. (Chairman.) Then you say—I do not know whether it is the case with Exeter; Exeter is a county of itself?—Exeter is.

5945. Exeter is a city and county of itself, within what is called the rural county of Devon?—Well, within the county at large, which is itself a rural district.

5946. The county of Devon at large would be looked upon as the rural area?—Yes.

5947. The county of London at large is a city or a civic area?—Yes, it is a town.

5948. (Lord Farrer.) Is there not another difference in these cases, that in London the jurisdiction of the County Council extends for certain administrative purposes to the City, in the matter of main sewers, for instance; is that the case in any other place where the county includes the county of the city?—I think so, because that depends on this, if the county of a city is also a county borough, then it will be entirely excluded from the administrative powers of the County Council of the adjoining county.

5949. It is entirely excluded?—If it is a county borough, except with reference to some obligations that have arisen before its creation.

5950. (Mr. Smith.) And which can be redeemed?—And which may be redeemed; but there are several counties of cities which are not county boroughs.

5951. Yes; upon that I wanted to ask you what functions does the county of Devon, that has been given as an illustration, what functions does the county of Devon exercise over the city of Exeter?—Well, Exeter is a county borough, is it not?

5952. Exeter is, I believe a county borough; it certainly is a county of a city. I will take another case, if you like.

5953. (Lord Farrer.) Take Bristol, which is decidedly——

5954. (Mr. Smith.) Yes; well, take Bristol if you like?—I understood that you wanted to take——

5955. I wanted to take an illustration.

5956. (Chairman.) Take one under 50,000, which is not a county borough, which is more important?—That is what I thought. Well, one that is not a county borough, but is a borough having a court of quarter sessions and a population exceeding 10,000.

5957. (Lord Farrer.) Take it of the highest kind; one that has a sheriff of its own?—Has a sheriff of its own.

5958. (Mr. Crawford.) How about Poole, Mr. Kemp. That is not a county borough, is it?—No.

5959. (Chairman.) Has it got a sheriff?

5960. (Lord Farrer.) Bristol, Norwich, Nottingham, York, Haverfordwest, which are given in Sir Henry Jenkyns' paper?—Yes; but that is not a complete list, however. Ipswich, for example, is a county of a city, and is not a county borough.

5961. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, those towns are merely mentioned as examples, I see?—Yes.

5962. (Mr. Smith.) Worcester is another.

5963. (Lord Farrer.) What I want to get at is, a borough which is most completely independent of the surrounding county; one which has the highest and most complete self-governing jurisdiction of its own, including a sheriff.

5964. (Chairman.) Not being a county borough.

5965. (Lord Farrer.) Not being a county borough. In that case does the council of the surrounding county exercise any jurisdiction whatever within the borough?

5966. (Mr. Crawford.) Take Northampton?—Yes, it does. I am afraid I am not really at the moment prepared to make an answer.

5967. (Mr. Smith.) I wanted to take the case of something comparable with the City of London, not in point of view of not being a county borough, but in point of size. I was taking a big town?—Well, the case which is the same, which is comparable, is a quarter sessions borough with a population exceeding 10,000. Section 41 of the Act of 1888, deals with the case of the City of London. Those powers and duties of the court of quarter sessions and justices of London, which in the case of a quarter sessions borough, with a population exceeding 10,000, would have been exercised by the council of the borough, are transferred to the Common Council of the City, and those of them which would have been exercised in that case by the County Council, are transferred here to the County Council.

5968. (Mr. Crawford.) To the Common Council?—No, I will re-state it, but I have stated it quite correctly. The effect of the last provision is to transfer to the London County Council, as far as I know, one power only, and that was the power with regard to music and dancing licenses.

5969. In respect of three houses, I think?—I do not know.

5970. (Mr. Smith.) It is comparable to the case of an ordinary borough with a population of over 10,000 and under 50,000?—Yes, because 50,000——

5971. (Chairman.) I could give you an example. I think Penzance is a quarter sessions borough of a little over 10,000?—Yes.

5972. And the County Council of Cornwall is in respect to Penzance what the County Council of London is in respect to the City?—Yes.

5973. (Mr. Crawford.) Penzance has no sheriff.

5974. (Chairman.) No sheriff, I admit?—Well, then, in that respect there would be a difference, because the Sheriff of Cornwall would have jurisdiction.

5975. (Lord Farrer.) Then in Bristol, it has a sheriff of its own.

5976. (Chairman.) That is a county borough?—We get a step further, that is a county borough; and it is absolutely cut off.

5977. (Lord Farrer.) Absolutely cut off?—With certain exceptions which Sir Henry Jenkyns mentions here, and which may be got rid of. On page 5 of his memorandum he says that "since 1835 many boroughs "have been created which had not this ancient "exemption."

5978. That is exemption from county rate?—Yes. "To some of them Letters Patent have granted a "court of quarter sessions, and thereby given an "exemption from contributing towards the cost of "executing new administrative powers conferred on "quarter sessions. But this grant did not exempt "the area of the borough from contributing for matters "for which the area of it was anciently liable, e.g., "county bridges, judges' lodgings, lunatic asylums, "prosecutions at assizes." And I thought he said somewhere that there might still exist liability in regard to some of these things which had been incurred before they were made county boroughs.

5979. It depends upon the grants and old charters, does it not?—Yes.

5980. (Mr. Smith.) If the borough had what they called a non-intromission clause in the charter, or something of that kind, the county justices had no power to levy a rate? That was the point, was it not?—The county justices had no jurisdiction at all.

Mr. J. Kemp.

14 Dec. 1893.

5981. It turns on some old question of that kind, I remember. But, in point of fact, the purport of your answer is that the City of London, as a city, containing the population that it does, has been treated pari passu with others of the same kind, under the Local Government Act?—It has been treated on the same level.

5982. As a quarter sessions borough of a smaller population in the rest of the country?—Well, I think you know that any other borough, being a county of itself, and having the population of the City of London, would probably have been made a county borough. It does not seem to have been treated upon so high a footing.

5983. Taken not upon the night population, it obviously would have been a county borough?

5984. (Mr. Crawford.) That is probably the reason why a special clause has been put into the Local Government Act in connexion with the City?—About the transfer?

5985. On various points?—This clause 28 applies in an important manner.

5986. (Chairman.) This county of London, apart from the administrative county of London, is in all respects like any other county?—Like any county at large.

5987. But its governing body—its County Council; of course, that extends to the administrative county?—To the administrative county; and the county at large differs from other counties, by reason of the existence within it of several institutions which are peculiar to London, like the Metropolitan Police Courts and a special system of quarter sessions.

5988. What have you to tell us about the police and justices in the metropolis?—That the powers of justices in London are made different from those in all other counties at large by reason of the existence of the Metropolitan Police Courts within the Metropolitan Police District.

5989. Which is not coterminous with the county?—With the County of London. I may perhaps hand you a map, of which I do not know if the Commissioners had copies.

5990. We have had it.

5991. (Mr. Smith.) Mr. Harrison handed it in.

5992. (Chairman.) You may refer to it?—Do you wish me to state the history?

5993. I think you need not go through the history. There were in 1885 23 of these magistrates (page 66) to sum up the existing position?—Yes; there are at present 25 police magistrates in the City.

5994. (Mr. Crawford.) Twenty-six it was?—Yes, but when I said 26, I was including West Ham; the magistrate there is, of course, a stipendiary magistrate.

5995. You mean in the metropolis outside the City; you mean outside the City?—Did I say in the City?

5996. (Mr. Smith.) You mean in the county of London?—Yes; their jurisdiction extends beyond the county of London in some respects.

5997. (Chairman.) The Metropolitan Police district?

5998. (Mr. Smith.) The Metropolitan Police district,—Yes, I beg your pardon.

5999. (Lord Farrer.) The area of the jurisdiction of the stipendiary magistrates, does that agree with the area of the Metropolitan Police?—Yes; in some respects it does, but in other respects divisions of the Metropolitan Police district have been assigned to each court as police districts. But I will explain the concurrent jurisdiction, which is rather a complicated question, perhaps, more fully.

6000. (Mr. Smith.) Just to clear the ground. You mentioned West Ham. West Ham is now a borough?—It has been a borough since 1886.

6001. Has the stipendiary of West Ham any jurisdiction outside the borough?—No; his jurisdiction is confined to the borough; but he has there all the powers of a Metropolitan Police magistrate under the Metropolitan Police Acts.

6002. We may really dismiss him, as he does not extend beyond the borough, may we not?—Well, I think we have to consider his case, which is analogous to that of the powers of justices in a part of the Metropolitan Police district which has not been assigned to any police court, and he, as the stipendiary magistrate for West Ham, will be in the same position with regard to his area as two justices in those parts of the Metropolitan Police district are.

6003. (Chairman.) The justices at Highgate for example?—At Highgate.

6004. Or Hampstead?—At Hampstead and Penge, and there is a small part of Bromley that is really outside the police district, but, I believe, is practically treated as if it were within the district of Worship Street. It is a very small part. I think you need to consider, in order to understand the concurrent jurisdiction of the police magistrates and the justices of the county of London, or of the neighbouring counties within the Metropolitan Police district,—you need to take four cases. First, you have to take the case of those parts of the Metropolitan Police district which were assigned—have been assigned—as divisions to police courts which were established before 1840. These were Bow Street, Westminster, Marylebone, Marlborough Street, Worship Street, Clerkenwell, Thames, Southwark, and Lambeth. Then you have to take the case of the parts of the Metropolitan Police district that have been assigned to police courts created under the Act of 1840 by Order in Council—the districts assigned to them by Order in Council. Those parts are in a different position. Thirdly, you require to take those parts of the district which have not been assigned as divisions to any police court, but which are under the jurisdiction of justices, or in one case of a stipendiary magistrate, whose ordinary place of sitting or petty sessional court is within the area—within the Metropolitan Police district. That is the third case. And finally, you have to take the case of parts of the Metropolitan Police district which have not been assigned as a division to any police court, but which are under the jurisdiction of justices who ordinarily sit outside the district altogether. If you confine your attention to the case of the county of London, then the fourth case does not arise, because there is no such case.

6005. That is a case of part of the Metropolitan Police district lying outside the county of London?—The instances of this fourth case all occur in parts of the Metropolitan district which lie outside the county of London, because they are cases of parts of the Metropolitan Police area which have not been assigned to a police court, and which have no justices usually sitting within it, but come under the jurisdiction of justices who sit without the area altogether.

6006. (Mr. Crawford.) Would Hornsey be an instance of that?—I do not know.

6007. It is within the Metropolitan Police area, of course?—Yes. I do not know—I cannot tell you what the instances of that fourth case are, but they do occur. But they do not occur if you are confining your attention to the county of London. Of course, obviously, there are no cases there in which the justices would be sitting outside the very much larger area of the Metropolitan Police district. The first case was the case of the police courts before 1840.

6008. (Chairman.) Yes?—You have there a daily attendance of magistrates which is compulsory. Their powers are the same, I think, as the powers of all the other police magistrates. That is, cases one and two. They have the power to adjudicate with respect to offences against the Metropolitan Police Acts, in whatever part of the district they arise or are committed, and they have the power of two justices with regard to all matters and offences at common law, and against statutes, arising or committed within the Metropolitan Police district. The next point is—this applies also to the first two cases, to all the police magistrates:—no person residing within that part of the Metropolitan Police district which has been assigned to a court can be required to appear to answer for any offence or matter arising within the Metropolitan Police area outside it—he cannot be required to appear outside the Metropolitan Police area with regard to any matter which arises within the area.

6009. (Chairman.) What you said at first refers to the qualification of the magistrates trying, not the liability of the person to be tried?—No, sir; because I am speaking now of persons who reside in that portion of the Metropolitan Police district which has been assigned to some police court. But then there are parts of it which have not been so assigned, and persons who live there may be required to appear outside the district altogether, being in the jurisdiction of magistrates whose usual place of sitting is outside the district.

6010. What did you say first as to the power of one of these magistrates to try or hear any case arising within this district?—He has power, but no exclusive jurisdiction.

6011. His power is a good one, whatever court he sits in?—His power is good, whatever court he sits in, and in whatever court he is sitting, he might, although as a matter of convenience I do not think he does, hear a matter that arises quite outside the district of the court that he is sitting in.

6012. In another district?—In another district, or in any other part of the Metropolitan Police area.

6013. That means not merely that the magistrate at Westminster could go to Worship Street and hear a complaint there, but he could at Westminster adjudicate in a case which arose in Worship Street?—He has jurisdiction to do so.

6014. At Westminster?—At Westminster.

6015. (Lord Farrer.) Then what is it that practically limits his jurisdiction?—Oh, where the person accused is arrested, for example, he is taken to the police station in that district. And when summonses are issued, I suppose the convenience of the persons is considered, and they are not brought to a police court further from where they live than conveniently may be.

6016. (Mr. Crawford.) You do not mean to say that a prosecutor would have his choice of courts?—No, I do not think so. But I simply mean that as to the jurisdiction. I have stated that as a matter of practice and convenience the magistrate is confined to the cases which arise within the part of the district which is assigned to his court. But his jurisdiction certainly extends to the same offences anywhere within the Metropolitan Police area.

6017. (Mr. Smith.) Within that area the criminal is interchangeable?—Yes. Then the next point was that no person residing within this part of the district, the parts mentioned in the first and in the second case, all parts assigned to police courts, can be required to attend outside the district to answer any information or complaint touching any matter arising in any part of the district which is assigned to any police court.

6018. (Chairman.) That is not that a man cannot be summoned to attend ouside the divisional district, but he cannot be summoned to attend outside the district as a whole?—Yes. The next point is confined to the first case, that of the police courts founded before 1840. In them no justice of the peace who is not a police magistrate or a clerk of such justice, is allowed to take fees for any act done by them within that portion of the district, but this does not apply to the fees which the magistrates are empowered to take at a police court under the Metropolitan Police Acts. These are scheduled to the Act. Of course the real fact is that as you have a court where compulsory daily attendance exists, and where when a magistrate is present he is the sole judge in his court, the justices practically are excluded, but it does not appear that their jurisdiction has been taken from them. If they could exercise it they still seem to have concurrent jurisdiction within this part of the area with the Metropolitan Police magistrates, only they cannot take fees.

6019. Might they go and sit by the side of a police magistrate?—No, he is the sole judge in his own court, while he is there. The second case is in a different position. In the second case, any two justices of the peace, within the limits of their commission, while sitting publicly at the police court, have all the powers and privileges of a police magistrate. That is in the second case. The case in those parts of the district which—— 6020. After 1840?—After 1840, I am not clear that I mentioned, for it is the real point of distinction between the first and second case, that although the justices still have in theory concurrent jurisdiction with the police magistrates in the old courts, yet there they would not have the powers that are given to the police magistrates under the Police Acts, but only the powers that they would have as a court of summary jurisdiction anywhere else. Outside that first case, they have all the powers under the Metropolitan Police Acts; they can sit, but whenever the daily attendance of a magistrate has been directed, then, when he is present, he is the sole judge in his court, and the result is that there also their jurisdiction is practically ousted.

6021. They are ousted again?—They are ousted again; so that you come to the third case, which, so far as the county of London is concerned, has not much application, though it has a little. A portion of the Metropolitan Police area has not been assigned as a division to any Police Court. It is under the jurisdiction of county justices whose ordinary place of sitting is within the Metropolitan Police area. The cases are part of Hampstead, Penge, and a small part of Bromley; and if you wish to take the case, there is also the jurisdiction of the stipendiary magistrate at West Ham, which is in the same position. In this case, two justices, having jurisdiction within the district, have, while sitting together in the court used for petty sessions, all the powers, privileges, and duties which a police magistrate has while sitting in a police court under the two Acts of 1839 and 1840, with one exception, they have not the power to give possession of deserted premises; an exception which applies also, I think, to the City of London, and which is almost the only exception from the jurisdiction of the Aldermen there.* Persons charged with offences committed within this part of the district may also be charged before police magistrates sitting in any other part of the district.

6022. Is that ever exercised, that last provision, that prisoners are brought from parts outside?—I do not know in practice whether it is, but this jurisdiction in Hampstead, at any rate, is exercised by justices. This is a living case.

6023. Yes, but is there any case of a man who is accused of something in Hampstead being taken down to Bow street?—I do not know. Persons arrested south of Lambeth, and outside the district of Lambeth Police Court, are in practice frequently brought to be tried there. The fourth case was the case of offences committed in that part of the Metropolitan Police area which lies outside the divisions which have been assigned to police courts, and is under the jurisdiction of justices who sit habitually outside the police area. In that case the offences committed in this portion of the district against the common law, or general law, may be heard or determined by the county justices, but persons charged with offences against the Metropolitan Police Acts must be brought to a police magistrate sitting at a police court, and dealt with by him under his jurisdiction under the Metropolitan Police Acts; because, you see, these justices there have none of the powers under the Metropolitan Police Acts.

6024. How large is that fringe of land?—I am afraid I have already said I do not know the cases in which the justices sit outside the area.

6025. Justices sitting outside the area and trying cases?—And trying cases.

* But see also Douglas, 7673–4; Savill, 7707.

Mr. J. Kemp.

14 Dec. 1893.

6026. And offences at common law within the area?—Within the area.

6027. But not statutory offences under the Police Acts?—No.

6028. (Mr. Crawford.) In order to make your statement complete you had better now, so that we may have it on the notes, just tell us what is the effect of these Acts within the City, just to make your statement complete?—The Lord Mayor or an Alderman sitting at the Guildhall or Mansion House Justice Room, sitting alone, has all the powers of a metropolitan police magistrate within the City, therefore not quite as extensive as his powers; the metropolitan police magistrate's jurisdiction extends to the whole area of the metropolitan district, but within the City they have all the powers of the metropolitan Police Magistrate, I think, with the exception of that power about giving possession of deserted premises, and of course excepting certain very special powers under particular statutes that are conferred upon them; for example, they are named as the arbitrators under the Telegraphs Act.

6029. Oh, yes, but that is outside the ordinary summary jurisdiction?—Yes, quite outside the ordinary jurisdiction. Then in the case of extradition, the warrant of the Home Secretary issues to the chief magistrate at Bow Street.

6030. And to him alone?—And to him alone, I think, yes.*

6031. (Lord Farrer.) Have the police magistrates of the area outside the City jurisdiction with respect to any offence committed within the City?—No, I do not think they have.

6032. The jurisdictions are mutually exclusive?—I think so.

6033. (Chairman.) Well, then, perhaps, we had better go to the consideration of Quarter Sessions?—Perhaps I may mention first to show what jurisdiction still remains to the ordinary justices that the police magistrates have no power to do anything which is specially directed to be done by special sessions, that is to say sessions directed by statute to be held, in a petty sessional division by the justices within it. There are some purposes for which the Petty Sessional divisions are treated as units, and powers are conferred upon the justices with regard to their own petty sessional division, whereas, as a general rule, the justices' powers, although they may be usually exercised only in the petty sessional division, of course apply to the whole county in which his commission gives him jurisdiction. The particular cases of special sessions are for the purposes of granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, granting licenses for dealing in game, for certain purposes under the poor law, valuation appeals, and the revision of the jury lists.

6034. (Lord Farrer.) What are these valuation appeals—valuation appeals in individual cases?—Yes, not affecting the total.

6035. (Mr. Smith.) Not appeals against the rate so called, but against individual assessments?—Yes, that is it; the other appeals are to the general assessment sessions. I do not know whether you wish me to go into these different cases. I mention them really rather to show that this is part of the general jurisdiction of justices which remains in the Metropolis in the justices of London.

6036. (Mr. Crawford.) And in the City in the Aldermen as justices?—And in the City remains in the Aldermen.

6037. (Mr. Smith.) They are more of an administrative character than judicial strictly?—They are; yes. Then there are also certain powers under the Lunacy Act of 1890, which the justices specially appointed by the justices in quarter sessions exercise. The Act does not exclude the jurisdiction in this respect of the police magistrates, but it directs that the county court judges and police magistrates shall not be required to exercise any power under the Acts so as to interfere with or delay the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction. The Home Secretary ha power to make regulations to prevent interference with their ordinary jurisdiction, their doing of their ordinary business.

6038. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that in connexion with the adjudication of settlements, or the removal of lunatics?—There are certain justices to be appointed under the Act by quarter sessions to have judicial authority under the Act, and the principal duty of those justices is hearing petitions for the confinement of lunatics not so found, and the granting of orders for their reception into an asylum.

6039. (Chairman.) And the justices of London, have they appointed a certain number of their body to discharge these functions; you presume they have?—I think they have.

6040. And would the Court of Aldermen appoint a certain number of their body in the same way?—They could do so, they may do so under the Act.

6041. (Mr. Crawford.) It is so stated in the Corporation statement?—The Home Secretary has the power to make rules to prevent the interference in the exercise of these functions with the duties of police magistrates and stipendiary magistrates.

6042. Mr. Kemp, you were proceeding to tell us about the Quarter Sessions?—"As regards the Court "of Quarter Sessions for the County of London, the "Local Government Act provides that the London "County Council may from time to time submit to a "Secretary of State a scheme for regulating the "holding of courts of quarter sessions in London, "either at any one place or at different places, and in "the latter case either at the same time or at different "times, and for determining the character of the "sessions so held, that is to say whether quarter, "general, original, or adjourned sessions, or otherwise: "and for making such regulations respecting com-"mittals for trial, recognisances, depositions, and "other matters as are necessary or proper for giving "effect to the scheme, and any such scheme when "approved by a Secretary of State is to be published "in the London Gazette, and shall thereupon have "effect as if it were enacted by the Act. There is "a scheme at present in force for regulating the "quarter sessions of London."

6043. (Mr. Crawford.) That does not apply to the City?—It does not apply to the City, I have dealt throughout with the City separately.

6044. (Chairman.) The London County Council have prepared a scheme?—They have prepared a scheme.

6045. And it is in operation?—I can hand you a copy of it if you wish to see it, sir.

6046. Does it present any special feature apart from other quarter sessions, except in respect of the presiding officers?—Well, the frequency with which the sessions are held, and that they are held at two places often at the same time.

6047. There being two presiding officers?—Yes, they are held by the existing assistant judge and deputies.

6048. (Chairman.) The existing assistant judge of the Middlesex sessions was continued as the chairman of the quarter sessions of the county of London, and he had power to appoint a deputy, and that power is continued as regards him personally, but in future the deputy chairman will be appointed by the Council.

6049. Appointed by the Crown, is it not?—By the standing Joint Committee.

6050. Will be appointed by the standing Joint Committee?—Excuse me one moment. Will be appointed by the Crown on the petition of the London County Council.

6051. The Crown usually appoints judicial officers?—Yes.

6052. And has the Crown any power in respect to the payment, the remuneration of these officers?—The petition of the County Council mentions the amount of the remuneration which they are willing to give, and the Crown approves.

† But see also Douglas, 7670–2.

6053. The County Council submits a scheme?—The County Council submits a scheme. The Crown may or may not act upon it?—May or may not approve it.

6054. (Lord Farrer.) There has been a good deal of trouble about the present salary, has there not?—I believe there has been.

6055. (Chairman.) Quite apart from the special circumstances of the present holder or the present salary, is the scheme in future that the County Council is to determine the amount of the remuneration of these two officers, with or without check of any kind.

6056. (Mr. Crawford.) I see that sub-section 3 of section 42 apparently provides for that, "There shall "be paid to him out of the county fund, as a general "purpose, such yearly salary not exceeding that "stated in the petition, in consequence of which the "appointment was made, as Her Majesty directs?"—Yes.

6057. (Mr. Smith.) It is very similar to the appointment of a Recorder, who is appointed by the Crown, and paid by the Council.—In the petition the Council name the salary.

6058. (Mr. Crawford.) If the salary were an insufficient one, probably that would be a ground for refusing the petition.

6059. (Mr. Smith.) Yes, probably, and there is no power in the Crown for increasing the salary without the sanction of the Council. My recollection is that the words are, there shall be paid such salary not exceeding that mentioned in the petition as the Crown may approve.

6060. (Mr. Crawford.) Under the Act?

6061. (Chairman.) Have you the Act there?

6062. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, I am reading from sub-section 3 of section 42.

6063. (Chairman.) Will you read it again, please.

6064. (Mr. Crawford.) "There shall be paid to "him, out of the county fund, as a general purpose, "such yearly salary not exceeding that stated in the "petition, in consequence of which the appointment "was made, as Her Majesty directs."—That is exactly what I said.

6065. (Mr. Smith.) You have quoted it, Mr. Kemp, on page 68, where you refer to the paid chairman or deputy chairman being given a sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the petition?—Yes.

6066. (Chairman.) And if the County Council submitted a scheme, with what some persons might think an inadequate salary, would there be any power, except that of refusing to appoint a judge, to counteract their proposals?—Except the power of refusing to approve the scheme, there would be no other, as far as I know.

6067–8. (Lord Farrer.) Is it not a fact that the County Council may appear before this judge as a plaintiff or defendant, in respect, for instance, of valuations under the Metropolitan Valuation Act.

6069. (Mr. Smith.) As appellants or respondents.

6070. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, appellants or respondents; not plaintiffs or defendants.

6071. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, they have recently appeared, Mr. Kemp, surely in a good many cases?—Yes, they did do so.

6072. I think, Mr. Chairman, if one reads that section, the sub-section I have referred to, it seems as if Her Majesty practically directs the salary to be paid, but the salary is not to exceed that stated in the petition.

6073. (Lord Farrer.) Yes.

6074. (Chairman.) What I submitted was, in the event of the amount stated in the petition being, in the judgment of certain persons, inadequate, what the remedy was?—As far as I know, I do not think there is any means of counteracting that, except by refusing to approve the petition.

6075. (Mr. Crawford.) That would be refusal on the part of the Crown.

6076. (Chairman.) Is the scheme, once submitted, unalterable?—No; from time to time a new scheme for holding quarter sessions may be submitted, and since the County Council have been appointed several have been submitted, at least, I know it has been altered.

6077. But I suppose, so far as any person appointed to hold the office is concerned, the salary could scarcely be altered during his tenure?—It could not be decreased.

6078. He might not object to the other.

6079. (Lord Farrer.) Is there not an anomaly in a body practically fixing the salary which may be interested as a plaintiff or defendant, or as a respondent or appellant, before the judge?—By anomalous do you mean that there are not other cases in which the same thing happens?

6080. Well, at any rate, there may be an awkward position if a body which is a party to an important process before this judge has to fix his salary; if, for instance, they should fix his salary at what he considers an inadequate sum, and he should make decisions on important points which they may think are made against them?—That is an unfortunate position.

6081. That is an unfortunate position.

6082. (Mr. Smith.) But may that not be the reason, Mr. Kemp, for the terms in which his salary is fixed, that it is not to exceed a sum named in the petition because one might put the converse of the case. A body might pay such a large salary to a judge that he might always decide in their favour.

6083. (Lord Farrer.) That would be an equally awkward position.

6084. (Mr. Smith.) Do you not think that is the object that the salary should be fixed in the petition, and that then the judge has no possible interest one way or the other?

6085. (Mr. Crawford.) But if you take the whole of the section 42 it clears itself. There are arrangements for a paid chairman and an assistant chairman of quarter sessions, and then it names the maximum salary you are permitted to pay. Then the petition has to be approved, and, having been approved, then comes the appointment. I suppose the man would not take it without he was satisfied with the pay.

6086. (Mr. Smith.) You are not to increase it without a fresh petition.

6087. (Mr. Crawford.) No; distinctly it says a sum not exceeding——

6088. (Chairman.) Neither increase nor diminish it without a fresh petition?—Yes? I think it is similar to the case of appointing stipendiary magistrates in boroughs, is it not, you mention the salary?

6089. (Mr. Smith.) Oh! yes, we are quite in the same position, and we are constantly before our stipendiary in police cases, prosecuting generally, not often as defendants, I am glad to say.

6090. (Chairman.) This new county has got a sheriff who is nominated like the sheriffs of other counties?—Yes; and his duties are like those of the high sheriff of all counties now; his duties are principally ceremonial, or not of any very great importance. His duties are even lighter than those of others.

6091. All sheriffs are now appointed in the same way, except the sheriff of the City of London?—No, not in other cities that are counties of cities.

6092. (Mr. Smith.) They are appointed by the Council on the 9th of November immediately after the Mayor.

6093. And there is also another, Oxford. I think the City of Oxford appoints a sheriff although it is not a county.

6094. (Chairman.) Then the county has got a lord-lieutenant?—There is a lord lieutenant of the county of London. His duties are the same as those of other lords lieutenant. He appoints the deputy lieutenants, and he has the nomination to first commissions in the militia, and he is, in fact, I think, though not necessarily, the custos of the county.

6095. (Mr. Smith.) Has there not been some little alteration as to the militia lately. Are the commissions any longer in the lord-lieutenant?—Only the first commissions.

Mr. J. Kemp.

14 Dec. 1893.

6096. You distinguish that, I see; only the first commissions?—Otherwise the militia is under the War Office, and is part of the territorial army, and connected with the regiments according to the locality. It is upon his recommendation that the Lord Chancellor appoints the justices of the county, and beyond these duties and privileges I do not think there is very much that attaches to the office of lord lieutenant except that of dignity and position.

6097. (Chairman.) He is not distinguishable from the lord lieutenant of any ordinary county?—Of any ordinary county.

6098. Is there anything special about the coroners of the county of London?—There is nothing special; but there are different kinds of coroners in the county of London as there are in other counties frequently.

6099. Franchise coroners?—Franchise coroners.

6100. Special liberties?—That includes all coroners who were prior to 1888 appointed otherwise than by the election of the freeholders in the county court.

6101. We have been speaking, so far, of the county of London, which is part of the administrative county, which is made up of the county of London and the county of the City of London?—Yes.

6102. The City of London is a county in itself; it has its own sheriffs; those sheriffs derive their office in a peculiar way, do they not?—Sheriffs of London have been appointed, as long as we know anything of its history. There are charters granting the right of appointing the sheriffs of London, but only by way of confirmation, because the right existed before. The shrievalty of Middlesex was purchased by the City of London for the purpose, it is said, of enabling them to pursue bankrupts and felons and others who fled from the city into districts round, and down to the year 1888 they still paid the fee farm rent at which they had purchased the office of the shrievalty of Middlesex.

6103. (Mr. Crawford.) And have paid it since then?—There was a resolution in 1888 that it should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund?

6104. Yes; unfortunately there was a resolution which was not acted upon?—But to some extent. I see from Sir Henry Jenkyns' paper that I was not quite accurate about that, and the whole amount was not paid out of the Consolidated Fund, upon the ground that the City had paid this rent not only for the office of sheriff, but for certain other privileges that were granted to them at the same time. What part was repaid to the City I do not at present know.

6105. (Chairman.) The annuity is in the possession of some private purchaser?—Yes; the Crown parted with it.

6106. And some portion of it is still paid by the City?—I believe that is so. It is so stated on page 16 of Sir Henry Jenkyns' paper.

6107. (Mr. Crawford.) That note is not quite accurate, because the ground upon which the Corporation paid 315*l.* a year was that by one or two of the charters the shrievalty of the county of the City of London had been mixed up with the shrievalty of Middlesex, and therefore it might be taken that the Corporation was paying the fee farm rent in respect of both shrievalties; and, inasmuch as only the shrievalty of Middlesex had been taken away from the Corporation, the Consolidated Fund ought only to bear a portion, and the portion that was ultimately arranged to be charged was 175*l.*?—Well, the charter of John, of course, did class the two together, and although it is true that the City, at a much earlier period, elected the sheriffs of London, of course the right might have been taken from them and regranted for a consideration.

6108. (Chairman.) Although they have lost the shrievalty of Middlesex, they still elect two sheriffs for the City?—Of London, yes; who formerly, in practice, acted as the one sheriff of Middlesex.

6109. (Mr. Crawford.) You are aware, Mr. Kemp, that it would have been quite within the privilege and power of the livery to have elected other persons as sheriffs of Middlesex?—Yes. I said in practice the sheriffs of London did act together as the sheriff of Middlesex.

6110. As a matter of convenience?—Yes.

6111. (Chairman.) What is the ordinary administration of justice within the City?—The City is divided into two parts, and there are two Justice Rooms, one at the Mansion House, and the other at the Guildhall. The Lord Mayor commonly sits at the Mansion House, and the aldermen by rotation at the Guildhall; and sitting in these Justice Rooms they have practically all the powers of the Metropolitan Police magistrates.

6112. So far as regards the area of the City?—So far as regards the area of the City.

6113. (Mr. Crawford.) There is one point you had better correct, perhaps; I think you have gone a little wrong as to the division of the City, have you not?—I have corrected it here. If you have my present paper before you, you will see. I do not know when the change as to the division of the City took place; the other appears to have been the former division, the division into two districts, east and west, instead of north and south.

6114. (Chairman.) The court of Quarter Sessions of the City?—Is the court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; but it seems to be slightly differently constituted from the court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Inner Chamber, because it only requires—it is constituted by—the attendance of the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, and four Aldermen, whereas the court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Inner Chamber requires the presence of the Lord Mayor, or his locum tenens, and 12 Aldermen.

6115. Is the Recorder equal to eight men?—Well, I do not know, but it is rather a curious circumstance, because when you look at the Local Government Act of 1888, you find that although it was the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Inner Chamber that exercised nearly all the administrative functions of the justices in the City, there they are transferred to the Common Council from the Court of Quarter Sessions and Justices of the City of London, and therefore it struck me as rather peculiar that the two should not appear to be quite the same Court.

6116. (Mr. Crawford.) But the work of the Court of Quarter Sessions was never done in what was called the Inner Chamber of the Court of Aldermen, Mr. Kemp?—No, but the administrative business, which was transferred—that is what I say.

6117. That was under special directions under particular statutes, referring to explosives, petroleum and those matters?—Yes, but what I say is, if you look at section 41, sub-section 1, of the Local Government Act, all those powers are transferred from the Court of Quarter Sessions and Justices of the City of London.

6118. Omitting the Inner Court of Aldermen?—No, describing them.

6119. What are the functions of the Inner Court of Aldermen?—Well, they exercised all the administrative——

6120. You have not gone far enough. Turn to section 100, which is the Definition Clause, and you will see what the term "Quarter Sessions" includes?—I have not the slightest doubt.

6121. This is the explanation. The draughtsman of the Act, for brevity's sake, has used the term "Quarter Sessions," and then he relies upon his Definition Clause as to what he includes in "Quarter Sessions"?—Yes; he says "and as respects the City of London" it means "the Court of the Mayor and "Aldermen in the Inner Chamber." That must have been, I presume, because the draughtsman assumed that they were the same thing. I do not suppose that he would call it by a name——

6122. I am afraid the draughtsman had not the full knowledge that you now have.

6123. (Chairman.) There is no lord lieutenant of the City?—No, the lieutenancy of the City of London is in Commission. The Lord Mayor is the head of the Commission, and I think it is the outgoing Lord Mayor who has the right to insert names in the Commission. The City of London Militia is now a battalion of the Royal Fusiliers, the City of London regiment. The Commissioners of Lieutenancy levy the Trophy Tax, which is levied, I think, not every year, but once in three years, for the costs which they are empowered to incur, the costs of the City Militia.

6124. Then there is a somewhat peculiar court, the Central Criminal Court?—The Central Criminal Court takes the place of the assizes for London and Middlesex, and some portions of Surrey, Essex, and Kent, and there is a permanent commission, a standing commission, and the Court sits every month. The judges include the Lord Mayor and the Aldermen of the City of London,* the Recorder, the Common Serjeant, the Judge of the City of London Court, the Judges of the Supreme Court, and such other persons whose names are put on the Commission, who have been Lord Chancellor, or a judge of any of the Superior Courts, or any other persons whose names are put on the Commission. The Central Criminal Court district is, for the purposes of the Court, a county.

6125. (Lord Farrer.) What is the district?—It includes the whole of Middlesex, the county of London and nine parishes in Essex, Mottingham in Kent, and Merton, Mortlake, Kew, Richmond, and Wimbledon, in Surrey.

6126. It corresponds to no other municipal division?—It corresponds to no other area.

6127. (Chairman.) Then under certain statutes prisoners could be tried at that Court for offences committed outside that area?—Yes. If it is thought that from local feeling or other causes they are not likely to obtain a fair trial where the offence was committed, the case may be removed to the Central Criminal Court by certiorari.

6128. (Mr. Crawford.) That is under Palmer's Act, is it not?—That is under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16.

6129. Yes, it is commonly called Palmer's Act.

6130. (Chairman.) Then there is another Act?—Yes; also "Any person out of the jurisdiction of the "Central Criminal Court who is accused of committing "murder or manslaughter in England or Wales, and "is at the time subject to the Mutiny Act" may be tried at the Central Criminal Court.

6131. (Lord Farrer.) There is also a winter assize?—There is also a winter assize.

6132. (Mr. Crawford.) And offences on the high seas?—The whole criminal jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty was transferred to this Court.

6133. There is one little mistake you may find it convenient to correct. On page 72 of your statement you refer to Quarter Sessions. You say: "The power "of this Court was taken away by section 17 of the "Central Criminal Court Act, 1834, in cases of "felony, and misdemeanours partaking of the nature "of felony." I do not know whether you have made the correction?—I have made the correction in the case of the Central Criminal Court. I have made it here also.

6134. Well, I was reading from your first statement on page 8, in which you state the power had been taken away, and I was going to call your attention to the fact that section 17 had been repealed, so that that power still remains with the City Quarter Sessions of trying felony cases?—I corrected it from your statement. I had omitted that this section was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55. But in practice criminal cases within the City are tried at the Central Criminal Court.

6135. The prisoners are committed to the Central Criminal Court on the ground of convenience?—Yes.

6136. (Chairman.) As respects the administrative powers of justices, they differ in counties and in boroughs, and in counties in general, from those of the county of London, especially in respect to police?—Yes, the county and the borough justices differ both as regards the manner of their appointment, and the nature of their qualification, and the extent of their powers. In the case of boroughs, they are appointed by the Lord Chancellor on the recommendation of the Home Secretary; in the case of counties, they are appointed by the Lord Chancellor on the recommendation of the Lord Lieutenant.

6137. Does the Home Secretary recommend?—Well, the moment I read it I began to have doubts, but I took that from what at the time I regarded as an authoritative source.

6138. (Mr. Smith.) In ordinary boroughs?—I thought so.

6139. (Chairman.) It rests with the Home Secretary whether a separate commission of the peace shall issue for the borough; but the recommendation of members of that Commission I do not think rests with him. You had better look into that point?—I give it on the authority of Sir William Anson's Law and Custom of the Constitution; but it may not be right.

6140. My experience is that the practice is not so.

6141. (Lord Farrer.) Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie would tell us in a minute.

6142. (Chairman.) As to the difference in their administrative powers?—In counties, most of the administrative powers of justices have been transferred to the County Councils; but the justices still administer the laws which relate to the licensing of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and jointly with the County Council they fix the numbers and rates of pay of the county police, and appoint the chief constable? The powers with regard to the police do not, of course, apply to the county of London. In boroughs the justices have the same powers as regards licensing, but the police are appointed and managed by the Watch Committee appointed by the council of the borough.

6143. In both cases there is a little check on the part of the central government?—As regards the police?

6144. Yes?—Yes, the powers are local both in the county and in the borough.

6145. Are what?—Are locally exercised.

6146. Yes; but I mean unless exercised somewhat to the satisfaction of the Home Secretary they do not get the money?—Yes, he can withold the contribution. But then since the Act of 1888, that must be to some extent altered, because the police are paid out of the Exchequer Contribution which goes to the County Council.

6147. (Mr. Smith.) Yes, on the certificate of efficiency; and it is provided that it shall be given before the money is found. But the certificate of efficiency itself is no check on appointment; if a man is efficient there is no other check on his appointment?—No.

6148. It is the general efficiency of the police as certified by the constabulary inspector?—Yes.

6149. (Mr. Crawford.) It says here in your statement, the justices and the County Council jointly fix the numbers and the rates of pay of the county police?—Yes, I think to this extent, that the report as to efficiency might contain a statement that the numbers were insufficient, and therefore might prevent the certificate from being given. To that extent, I suppose, the certificate has something to do with it.

6150. (Mr. Smith.) Yes; the efficiency of the force is a very general term. It would bring in the question of numbers?—At Quarter Sessions there is a difference in the powers of the county and borough justices, for the county justices sit as a bench and try, whereas in the borough the recorder is sole judge of the court of Quarter Sessions in criminal matters.

6151. (Chairman.) There is some exception to that, is there not, quoted, I see, in Sir Henry Jenkyns' paper, in the case of a borough with separate quarter sessions,

* See also Fulton, 7498.

Mr. J. Kemp.

14 Dec. 1893.

without a recorder?—If it is so, I think the criminal jurisdiction in that case will probably be exercised by the county.

6152. Haverfordwest—at page 11?—Haverfordwest? There is no recorder, and the justices continue to act in quarter sessions.

6153. (Mr. Crawford.) Perhaps they cannot get one?—Haverfordwest seems to be in an anomalous position.

6154. (Lord Farrer.) It is quite a small town, is it not?

6155. (Chairman.) It is a county.

6156. (Mr. Smith.) The recorder's salary would probably be 10*l.* a year, which would have to be spent in travelling expenses?—There was one small point which I omitted that I meant to refer to at starting. It was the question about the abolition of the Court of Hustings. I mentioned that two Bills had been introduced by the City.* I have not been able to see them, because we do not keep local Bills at Lincoln's Inn that have not been publicly printed; but I referred to the introduction to the book upon the Calendar of Wills, and it gives a fuller account of these Bills than I had abstracted. From it I gather that they really were introduced for the purpose of abolishing the Court of Hustings, and transferring the jurisdiction to the Mayor's Court.

6157. (Mr. Crawford.) Is that the work edited by Dr. Sharp?—Yes, I tried to get a copy of it to bring down, but I could not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. G. L. Gomme.

Mr. George Laurence Gomme, Statistical Officer of the London County Council, recalled and further examined.

6158. There are one or two corrections I have to make and some additional information, sir.

6158*a*. (Mr. Crawford.) Is it in the evidence or in the statement?—It is in the evidence and in my statement, sir.

6159. What day were you examined, can you tell us? The tenth and eleventh days. The first point arises out of the examination on page vi. of the statement.

6160. (Chairman.) What page is it?—Page vi. I wish to add a footnote to explain what would be the effect of the purchase of property for beneficial purposes; that arose out of Mr. Crawford's remarks as to the character of the purchases which I have put down as investments.* The footnote that I propose to add is: "In cases where the purchase of property is "not a beneficial purpose, it cannot in strictness be "considered an investment. The amounts coming "under this head in each year would then be a part "of the expenditure and would correspondingly "increase the revenue deficits (page ii.), and would "form a part of the exceptional expenditure tabulated "above on this page (vi.)." It is just an explanatory note on that point, sir. Then on page xiii.

6161. (Mr. Crawford.) Roman numerals?—Roman still, sir; yes.† I add a footnote to explain the aldermen's expenses in connexion with donations in these words: "This is the heading of the account suggested "by the evidence before the Commissioners of 1854. "The amount yearly expended by the Court of Alder-"men does not in recent years include any item "for widows and orphans of deceased aldermen, but "is wholly applied to freemen." I think that meets Mr. Crawford's point. Then on page xiv. I insert a foot-note giving details of the receipts in aid, as requested by the Chairman of the Commission, under class (a) of the table.‡ I give the details of this under the several heads as a footnote to that page. On page xxii. Mr. Crawford raised the question as to the character of the capital expenditure there set out at the bottom of the page,§ and in a footnote I have described it for each year, distinguishing the capital expenditure for the new markets, and the capital expenditure for the old markets.

6162. By the new markets you mean?—The fish market in 1889, "5,998*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, for new fish market "and 7,000*l.* for works in poultry and provision "section, in 1890, 13,090*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* for new fruit and "vegetable market, and 6,158*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* for works in "poultry and provision section."

6163. (Mr. Smith.) These are things that you propose to put in another print?—Yes; these are things I propose to put in another print.

6164. They are not in at present?—They are not in at present. And then there is a small correction, the figure for 1890 I have quoted at 19,248*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, should be 19,248*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.*; it is a small clerical error. On page xxvi. I was asked a question as to the way in which the deficiencies from the Coal Market were made up,† and I add this footnote to explain that:—"In 1889 the Coal Market began with a "balance of 3,923*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, out of which the de-"ficiencies of the last three years have been met, "leaving a balance of 2,874*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* at the end of "1892." That just explains that point that arose here. On page xxix.‡ I add a footnote to the entry of St. Paul's Churchyard, explaining that this expenditure is incurred under the City Open Spaces Act of 1878.

6165. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, I drew your attention to that?—Yes, Mr. Crawford drew my attention to that. Then on page xxxiv I propose to add a footnote to explain the reason why I adopt the 43,836*l.* as the estimate of debt falling upon the City estates.§

6166. (Mr. Crawford.) Where do we find that figure, Mr. Gomme?—In the middle of the paragraph on page xxxiv. The annuity for 30 years amounts to 43,836*l.*, and then that figure, 43,836*l.*, is used at the bottom of the table to bring out——

6167. The estimated charge deducted?—Yes. This is the footnote. "This is simply the annuity to meet "an estimated present debt of 859,202*l.* The different "dates at which the several loans are payable are not "taken into account, because if the estimate is made "upon minute details as to the present value of the "estimated debt, other considerations which were not "thought necessary to bring into the estimate must "be taken count of. It may be stated, however, "that the three principal of these considerations are "(1) a loan to replace the exceptional items removed "from annual expenditure (see page vii); (2) provision "for capital expenditure on the markets, (see p. xxii.); "and (3) the repayment of the Metropolitan Cattle "Market loan within the period now arranged for, "namely, 10 years, instead of extending this loan to "30 years, because, being for market purposes, and "borrowed so far back as 1852–5 and 1873–6, it has "already extended far beyond its proper limits. The "calculations on the present value of the estimated "debt work out the annuity at 35,974*l.*; or together "with the first and third of the above-named additional "items, the annuity would be 44,453*l.* for the first 10 "years and 35,043*l.* for the last 20 years, instead of "43,836*l.*, the amount used as the estimate for the "entire 30 years. To the 35,043*l.* would then have "to be added the expenses of maintenance of parks "and open spaces which would fall on the general "estates after 1902, amounting to 4,900*l.* As these "several adjustments make the yearly figure nearly "equal to the 43,836*l.* and as it is difficult to estimate "the non-productive capital expenditure which may " be required for markets during the next 30 years, " it was thought best to leave the estimate for loans " falling upon the general estimates at the annuity " necessary to meet an estimated present debt of " 859,202*l." This note is simply to explain why I did not take into account the varying dates at which the loans were really due according to the tables. Then on page xxxvi. the total expenditure of the first table, I refer to as agreeing with pages 36 and 37, and in my evidence I mentioned that there was a slight difference there arising from my method of treatment. It makes no difference to the final calculations. It has refereuce to the sinking fund on the Royal Exchange loan, which I had not included among the ordinary expenditure of the year. I have now inserted that in its proper place, as a part of the expenditure of the year 1892, and certain consequential alterations arise out of that which make these figures correct. It makes no alteration, finally, in the figures, but it simply puts tbe figures on the same basis for each year. Then the paragraph at the end of page xxxvi I read slightly differently; there was some expression by the Commission that that should be re-worded.† The wording was, "the expenditure met by its own earnings," and I think the proper wording would be, "that portion of the expenditure " which is met by its own earnings." Then on page xxxix the figure opposite the Royal Exchange becomes altered in consequence of the alteration in the method I have already mentioned. On page xxxviii I was asked about the Establishment expenses there for the City purposes, if they were wholly for the City, and I would modify the reply I gave to the Commission to this question to this extent ;‡ I would say some part would probably not be incurred by the City if separated from all other expenditure. But then the amount thus released would be used for other City purposes; it would not affect the figures, but it is just possible some Establishment expenditure, if separate from the other, might not be continued. Then, on page xl, I correct two clerical errors pointed out by the Chairman of the Commission on the first table, there ; they did not agree, if you remember, sir.§

6168. (Chairman.) Yes?—And the second table on the same page is altered to include the correction on the Royal Exchange loan still continuing correction noted above. Then on page xli the Commission asked me to add a note explaining the charge for debt there inserted, that is 40,974*l.* to 41,078*l.* I think Lord Farrer requested that information.|| I have added a footnote explaining how that figure is made up. In working this out, I find I had deducted the wrong amount, so I have had to correct that figure. It now stands instead of 40,974*l.* the first year as 35,317*l.*, and instead of 41,088*l.*, the second and third years it stands at 35,431*l.* and for the last year it stands at 35,693*l.* 10*s.* The details of those I give in a footnote. The result of these corrections is that I commence with the same figure as the estimated charge for debt 43,836*l.*, but there is a larger deduction to be made from it in consequence of some of the charges being already included in the expenditure.

6168*a*. Does it affect the totals?—It does not affect the totals to any appreciable extent. I will explain that when I come to the totals in the end; it really does not make any vital correction to the total. Then I bring forward those corrected figures at page xliii; on this page I omitted to charge the extra cost which will fall very shortly upon the Bridge House Estates for the maintenance of the Tower Bridge ;* it is put in the evidence of the City at 6,000*l.* a year; that of course will come out of the Bridge House Estates, and inasmuch as I bring forward the unapplied balance of the Bridge House Estates, of course it is quite proper to charge the future receipts with the new charge, and making the correction that I have just now referred to on page xli, the balance at the end of the year instead of being 6,639*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* will be 6,296*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* in 1889; 20,651*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* will be 20,308*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* in 1890; minus 7,070*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* will be minus 7,413*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* in 1891; and minus 2,927*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* will be minus 3,532*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*

6169. On page xliv I give a table, in obedience to the wish of the Commission, of the scholarships of the City of London School.† I have taken that out giving the names of the scholarships, the amount of the endowment in stock, and the payment in each of the four years in respect of each scholarship, that will go in as an addition to page xliv.

6170. (Mr. Crawford.) That you have extracted from the City Accounts?—That I have extracted from the City Accounts; it is given very fully there; then I put in as continuing page 46 at the end of the book altogether,——

6171. (Chairman.) Arabic 46?—Arabic 46,—a statement of the way in which loans were renewed by the City, that will come in as pages 47 to 49, a new statement altogether. I handed that in in manuscript at the last meeting of the Commission.

6172. (Chairman.) Yes?—Then, on what will be page 50, I wish to add a table of corrections. There are some items of the expenditure given in the analysis which, though they do not affect the totals in the slightest degree, nor do they affect any argument that has been used, still, for the purpose of being correct, I should like to put that in as table of corrections. One or two items are included under a head of the analysis in one year which are not so included in the same way in other years; so for the purpose of making them absolutely correct, I should like to put that table of corrections in. I do not propose to make the corresponding corrections throughout because they really do not serve any important purpose. Then with the index to the book the whole thing is complete.

6173. (Mr. Crawford.) That will really be reprinted, then?—That will be reprinted, with these additional notes and corrections.

6174. (Chairman.) We shall have a revised edition brought out?—A revised edition.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Dickinson recalled.

6175. (Mr. Dickinson.) We take it that you permit these alterations to be made, and we will supply you with new copies immediately?

6176. (Chairman.) Yes.

6177. (Mr. Dickinson.) We let you have 20 copies, Mr. Crawford, of the first edition; perhaps you will let us have them back?

6178. (Mr. Crawford.) They have been distributed, but I will endeavour to have them collected for you, and you will have them back.

6179. (Chairman.) You had better, perhaps, put in a very prominent form, on the outer page, " 2nd edition," or " revised edition," so that there will be no possibility of referring to an old copy.

6180. (Lord Farrer.) With the date.

6181. (Mr. Crawford.) Your second statement was a revised second statement.

6183. (Mr. Smith.) Might I ask, with reference to a promise, that I think Mr. Charles Harrison made, and very excusably forgot, owing to his illness, that we might be furnished with a few of these copies of the maps?—I have got one, but it is a very blurred and indistinct copy.

6184. (Mr. Dickinson.) I understood you had been supplied with them. This one has been made by hand. I think there was some difficulty about getting the map of a proper size that would show it. We will send you one, at any rate.

(Adjourned till Wednesday next at 11.30 A.M.)

FIFTEENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Wednesday, 20th December 1893.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, Secretary.

SIR JOHN MONCKTON, Town Clerk of the City of London, re-called and further examined.

Sir J. Monckton.
20 Dec. 1893.

6189. (Secretary.) To the last letter which I read I have received a reply from the Town Clerk, dated the 18th inst., a copy of which has already been sent to the members of the Commission.

6190. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it would be desirable to have that letter upon the notes.

6191. (Chairman.) Oh, certainly, but I think we will reserve it. Sir John Monckton, we understand that naturally you are very busy to-morrow, and very busy to-day in relation to your work to-morrow, and you would be glad to be relieved from attendance here as early as possible?—Yes.

6192. You are aware probably that we have had under examination a body of evidence covering to a large extent the same ground as your Blue Book in explanation of the City and its functions in respect of the law courts and trusts and many other matters. It may not be necessary, therefore, to go in great detail over this book, inasmuch as we have had evidence very much to the same effect, and the matter is really not contentious, being historical and descriptive. If you have had any opportunity of seeing that evidence, and desire to make any corrections or to give any supplementary evidence in relation thereto we shall be glad to receive it, otherwise I propose that we should go lightly over this book to-day?—I have not had an opportunity of going into detail.

6193. Well, you can have it and consider it between this and the next meeting; otherwise I think we shall go lightly over your evidence to-day. And with respect to the letter which you have communicated to our secretary, although we have all, I think, seen it individually—I have seen it—we have had no opportunity of conferring about it together, and we shall consider it a little later in the day and a reply shall be sent.

6194. (Mr. Crawford.) May I mention that the Corporation has had no opportunity of seeing Mr. Kemp's statement. You will remember that I asked that copies might be supplied, but Lord Farrer thought they should not be given until the Corporation had come to some decision; therefore, it might be desirable that the copies should now be supplied, together with copies of Mr. Kemp's evidence, if the Commissioners would kindly express an opinion upon that. It is impossible for Sir John to form an opinion until he has read the statement, and also the evidence in support of it?

6195. (Chairman.) Yes.

6196. (Mr. Crawford.) May that be done, Mr. Chairman?

6197. (Mr. Smith.) The City having determined to go on, there would be no objection to supplying these documents.

6198. (Lord Farrer.) I think not. Mr. Dickinson, do you see any objection to that being done?

6199. (Mr. Dickinson.) I beg your pardon.

6200. (Chairman.) Do you see any objection to the City being supplied with the documentary evidence you have put in relative to the City, and the report of Mr. Kemp's evidence?

6201. (Mr. Dickinson.) None whatever, sir, it will be done in two or three days, two days, I think.

6202. (Mr. Crawford.) Thank you.

6203. (Chairman.) I think we had got as far as the commencement of the Court of Common Council?—I think we had got as far as the commencement of the Court of Common Council.

6204. (Lord Farrer.) What page?—34, I think.

6205. (Chairman.) We have had evidence from more than one quarter as to this already. You may, perhaps, briefly state who are the present electors of the Court of Common Council?—"The qualifications "entitling a person to vote at an election of Common "Councilman are fixed by the City of London "Municipal Elections (Amendment) Act, 1867 "(30 Vict., cap. i), sections 2, 3, and 4, which are "as follows:—(Section 2.) 'At every election for "'(inter alios) Common Councilman for any Ward "'in the said City, every male person of full age "'not subject to any legal incapacity, who shall for "'a period of not less than 12 months previous to the "'first day of December in any year have been in the "'occupation within the said City or the liberties "'thereof, either solely or jointly with any other "'person or persons, of any house, warehouse, "'counting-house, office, chambers, or shop, or other "'building, and shall in the case of a sole occupa-"'tion be rated in respect of such premises in "'his own name to an amount not less than 10*l.* "'per annum, or in the case of a joint occupation, "'be rated in the joint names of the occupiers to "'an amount which, when divided by the number "'of occupiers, will give a sum of not less than 10*l.* "'per annum for each of such occupiers, to the "'police or any other rate, subject to the provisions "'of this Act, shall be entitled to vote in any such "'election for Common Councilman in the ward in "'which such premises shall be situate.' (Section "3.) 'At every such election every person on the "'register of voters for the City of London, in use

" ' at elections for members to serve in Parliament, " ' and then in force, in respect of the occupation of " ' any house, warehouse, counting house, shop, office, " ' chambers, or other building, subject to the pro- " ' visions herein-after contained, shall be entitled to " ' vote in any such election for (inter alia) Common " ' Councilman in the ward in which such premises " ' shall be situate.' (Section 4.) ' At every such " ' election every person, who if he had resided " ' within the City of London or the liberties " ' thereof, or within any distance therefrom pre- " ' scribed by law, would have been entitled to have " ' been on the register of voters for the City of " ' London for use at elections for members to serve in " ' Parliament, in respect of the occupation of any " ' house, warehouse, counting-house, office, chambers, " ' shop, or other building, but who may be ex- " ' cluded from such register by non-residence, shall " ' subject to the provisions herein-after contained, " ' be entitled to vote in every such election (inter " ' alia) for Common Councilman in the Ward in " ' which the premises for which he would have been " ' so entitled to be on the register shall be situate.' "

6206. There was apparently no interference with any former qualification for electors; this was cumulative?—This was cumulative; the former customary qualifications remained.

6207. Is a list kept of all who are qualified in any way?—Of all who are qualified in any way.

6208. Whether under this last statute or under former customs?—Yes.

6209. And what proportion or what number are left out, not included in this last description of qualifications?—I cannot possibly say; I should say very few indeed.

6210. The mass of electors are included in the definitions you have given us?—The fact is, a 10*l.* rating in the City is a very small rating, in fact, one might fairly remark there, that take the whole of the City through, I should say the average rating would be nearer 30*l.* than 10*l.*, in some cases, of course, it is enormously larger.

6211. (Lord Farrer.) Does the 10*l.* qualification still remain?—It still remains.

6212. What is the effect of section 3 which says that "every person on the register of voters for the " City of London, in use at elections for members to " serve in Parliament, and then in force, in respect of " the occupation of any house" may vote,—which makes that a qualification, has that a retrospective action in doing away with the 10*l.* qualification?—No, I think not; it is cumulative, as the Chairman said.

6213. (Mr. Smith.) I suppose, practically, Sir John, there are very few people rated at less than 10*l.* in the City?—I should say practically none; even in the most remote part of the City, I do not think it can be so.

6214. (Lord Farrer.) So that the abolition of the 10*l.* qualification would make practically no difference?—Practically none.

6215. (Mr. Smith.) All I wanted to ask was—I suppose, you have nominations for the elections of the Court of Common Council—you have some means of telling before the election the number of persons nominated?—Not before the nomination meeting on Saint Thomas's Day.

6216. Oh, not before?—Except the accidental announcement, which, of course, every man puts out to advertise himself, but it is quite open to any man to be nominated, if he is duly qualified, on the election morning without any previous intimation.

6217. How soon does the election take place?—The polling, next day.

6218. The next day; what I wanted to know was, whether you had any means of knowing, without disclosing any secret which you have in your capacity of returning officer?—No.

6219. Is there generally much change in the representation, have you many candidates?—The change is not usually great; out of the 29 wards and sides of wards this year in about 25 there will be no change at all; in about four wards, owing mainly to deaths—well, one or two retirements and two or three deaths—there are more candidates springing up than the vacancies would absolutely require, so that probably there will be a polling.

6220. But what we should call in ordinary boroughs contests are not common?—Are not common. You see the elections are annual, and that rather accounts for it.

6221. (Mr. Crawford.) And the elections are not fought on political grounds?—The elections in the City are never, and never have been, to my knowledge, fought on political grounds in the slightest degree.

6222. (Chairman.) There are contests in comparatively few wards?—Very few.

6223. And where there is a contest in a ward, it generally happens that the bulk of the retiring Councilmen, if they stand again, are re-elected?—Yes; for this reason. There would probably only be one or two new candidates, perhaps two candidates for one vacancy, and even if the two come in only one old member would go out. It is an unknown thing for the bulk of the members of a ward to be unseated, because, as has been remarked by Mr. Crawford, politics never enter into the consideration of the electors in City elections, absolutely never.

6224. If there are 10 places to be filled, it would be a very remarkable case to have 15 candidates?—Oh, very; almost unheard of.

6225. Most probably not more than 12 or 13?—12 at the outside, as a rule.

6226. (Mr. Smith.) Contests generally arise, I think you said, on death or retirement?—Death or retirement. It is very seldom, of course it does occasionally happen but very seldom indeed, that there is a desire to turn out anybody who is in by reason of any particular question that is agitating the public mind.

6227. (Chairman.) But there may be other reasons, personal or what not: there is sometimes a run against one man?—So very rarely, that I cannot call to mind one; there may be; it is possible there may be on the present occasion.

6228. And the wardmotes are held exactly like the old Parliamentary elections were; any person can appear on the hustings and propose a candidate. If there are more proposed than are to be elected there is a poll next day?—Then the Alderman who presides calls for a poll next day.

6229. (Mr. Crawford.) That takes place under the City of London Ballot Act?—That takes place under the City of London Ballot Act.

6230. (Mr. Holt.) What is the distance that a non-resident may reside from the City and retain his vote, at what distance may he reside from the City and retain his qualification?—In municipal elections that does not come in at all.

6231. Any distance?—Anywhere he likes, provided he comes in this rating category, "of any house, " warehouse, counting-house, shop, office, chambers, " or other building."

6232. (Lord Farrer.) If he has a counting-house he may live out in the country or in Scotland?—He may live anywhere he pleases, provided he has this beneficial occupation.

6233. (Chairman.) He must be an occupier?—An occupier. It will be seen later on in the book that the municipal electors have increased since 1852 from 5,903 to 29,337. That you find at page 326.

6234. Do women vote in these ward elections?—No.

6235. Has that question ever been raised?—I think it has never been raised, I am not aware that it ever has.

6236. I see in Section 2 of that last Act to which you referred it runs, "every male person"?—Yes, "every male person of full age."

6237. Sections 3 and 4?—"Every person."

Sir J. Monckton.

20 Dec. 1893.

6238. Every person who has those qualifications would be a parliamentary elector?—It was intended to follow the parliamentary franchise.

6239. But in the old scot-and-lot franchises are there any restrictions; there are freewomen as well as freemen?—Yes, in ward elections for beadles, I think they might vote; I am not aware that they cannot.

6240. You are not aware of any disqualification?—No; they must be freemen householders, you know, and a woman may be a freeman. I believe the Baroness Burdett Coutts is a freewoman.

6241. (Mr. Smith.) Might a woman be an alderman, Sir John?—An alderwoman?

6242. I am not surprised at your hesitating, because I have been puzzled whether they might or not?—I am not aware.

6243. (Lord Farrer.) You are not aware whether any woman has been an alderwoman or not?—No, I think not. Indeed I am sure not.

6244. (Mr. Smith.) I do not think there is anything to prevent it?—I am not aware.

6245. (Mr. Crawford.) Except when you look at 12 & 13 Vict. c. 94., the qualification of Common Councilmen. It says there "every man"?—Yes, but I take it that a woman who has been admitted to the freedom would be included in that.

6246. (Mr. Smith.) He has just said that a woman might be a freeman?—Being a devoted advocate for the enfranchisement of women in every sense, I should certainly take great interest in looking it up.

6247. (Mr. Crawford.) If you read the disqualifying section too, I think you will find the true construction of the Act would contemplate only males and not females?—Very likely, but males sometimes include females.

6248. You have told us that politics never enter into the question of elections; may I take it that that answer will also apply to the Court of Common Council itself, are there what are known as "sides" in the Court of Common Council?—Political?

6249. Yes?—Certainly not; I do not think that anybody knows—I certainly do not—the politics of one-half of the Court.

6250. (Chairman.) You said political, what other sides?—Well, there may be local politics, and the Corporation might be divided, for the moment, by what may be termed market questions, or other matters with regard, say, to asphalt against wood paving.

6251. (Mr. Crawford.) That is not politics; these are local matters?—These are the City politics.

6252. (Chairman.) Every question that turns up would divide the Common Council differently?—Yes; such as the question of giving evidence before this Royal Commission, which the other day divided them very evenly indeed.

6253. There is no organisation of parties?—No organisation of parties, I should say, no organisation involving whips or anything of that sort.

6254. Is there any organisation for or against the livery companies?—For or against their existence?

6255. I will not say for or against their existence, but is there a party desirous of curbing or restraining their powers?—No, I should think not at all; I do not think there is any combination; in fact, I am sure there is no combination of individuals in the Court of Common Council that may be relied upon at any time for any purpose. I think each question is dealt with according to the opinions of individuals which vary from time to time, and in that sense I should claim for it that was a pattern Corporation.

6256. Forty is the customary quorum of your Court of Common Council?—Yes, 40.

6257. And amongst the 40 there must be the Lord Mayor and a couple of Aldermen?—The Lord Mayor or his locum tenens and two Aldermen must be present.

6258. (Lord Farrer.) When was the number of the Common Council determined, does that go back a pretty long way?—Yes; I think we must call it customary.

6259. Did you tell us what the whole number of voters is on that list?—Page 326. I think 29,000; there is a table given, 29,337.

6260. (Chairman.) You have a certain number of standing orders?—Yes.

6261. I see that the first among them announces that the election of officers shall be at the second Court after St. Thomas's Day?—Yes.

6262. I suppose the first Court is occupied with the verification of returns?—No; the first Court is occupied with the election of committees; the returns are handed in to the Court of Aldermen, held on Plow Monday, and if there are any petitions or appeals they are notified then. The first Court is occupied very largely with the appointment of committees for the ensuing year, and such business as may be remaining over.

6263. What is the interval between St. Thomas's Day and the first Court?—St. Thomas's Day is the 21st December, the first Court is about the middle of January; it is on a convenient Thursday; it may be the 14th, 15th or 16th.

6264. (Mr. Crawford.) It is the 18th this year?—It is the 18th this year, but it is always the Thursday in that week.

6265. (Chairman.) And during that month the Court of Common Council is without many of its most important officers?—Not officers; the officers are not then elected; the officers are annually elected until the second Court in the next year, when they are re-elected.

6266. They retain office?—The officers do not go out; they retain office until the day of re-election.

6267. Among the other orders I see one that no resolution of the Court shall be rescinded or altered unless such rescinding or alteration be determined on by a majority consisting of two-thirds of those then present and voting?—That is so.

6268. Does that mean for ever and ever, or after a certain time could a bare majority rescind a previous order?—There is no limit as to time at all.

6269. Would it be necessary to get a two-thirds majority to rescind an order made 10 years ago?—Undoubtedly under this order, unless this order were suspended.

6270. Has it ever provoked any inconvenience?—Not up to now, certainly.

6271. It has never been the case?—It is a comparatively new order. Yes, I should think it is not 10 years old; it has been passed in my time.

6272. What provoked it?—I do not know any particular incident, but I suppose it was found inconvenient, and I think it was on something being rescinded at a later Court by a possible accidental majority of one. I have no doubt if I searched I could find there was some salient reason, and the Court thought that something arrived at after due debate and consideration should not be upset by a vote being snatched.

6273. It is desirable that it should not be open to revision within a certain time, unless a large majority desired it, and in no case without notice; but if after considerable interval notice were given and it were found—— ?—In no case would it be possible to have a motion without notice.

6274. (Lord Farrer.) No resolution would be passed without notice?—No; except with leave of the Court. Occasionally a member may move for leave to bring forward a resolution without notice, and if the Court saw fit it might give it.

6275. They might give it them?—They might give it them.

6276. (Mr. Crawford.) Standing Order 28 relates to the giving of notice.

6277. (Lord Farrer.) With regard to amendments; because an amendment is often as important as the original motion?—It is, but there is no doubt that the ordinary rules of debate are so far followed that an amendment may be moved after a resolution, and without any notice.

6278. Without any notice?—As your Lordship says, it is sometimes the case that an amendment is immensely important; still, the ordinary right of members——

6279. (Chairman.) But the Court would have notice that a particular subject was coming on?—Oh yes, undoubtedly.

6280. Although the particular method of treating that subject might be started at the meeting?—Might be started by an amendment.

6281. (Lord Farrer.) And it would rest, I suppose, with the Chairman to decide whether an amendment was so outside, or beyond, the purport of the original motion as to be out of order?—Absolutely—most absolutely—that would be for the Lord Mayor to decide.

6282. And if it was proposed, for instance, to turn some specific proposal into a general proposal, or to move something that would thoroughly alter the character of the original motion, he probably would take that point and refuse to put it?—It is possible. He would be advised by those who are there to advise him, and, after due consideration, would decide whether the amendment was a good one or a bad one.

6283. Very difficult questions arise sometimes upon amendments?—Oh, very indeed; in fact, the law of debate is one that takes a lifetime to study. In my own case, I have grounded it upon a very careful study of May's Parliamentary Practice, which, to a very great extent, would rule other debating bodies, although not entirely, of course.

6284. But this Standing Order 29 makes it supremely important that nothing should be passed too hastily, does it not?—Undoubtedly.

6285. (Mr. Smith.) Have you anything corresponding to the notice, or agenda paper, that is sent out in most municipal corporations previous to the meeting of the Court?—Oh, yes; the agenda paper—the summons for the Court,—is a very important document, prepared in great detail, and submitted to the Lord Mayor for his perusal and initialling before it is printed and sent out; and it has to be sent out to members three days before the Court.

6286. What I wanted to ascertain was, having such a document, whether it would be possible for a member to ask leave of the Court to introduce at the Court some matter not mentioned on the agenda paper?—It is possible, and it is occasionally done.

6287. And on that a resolution might be passed?—And on that a resolution might be passed. To give you an instance, a few years ago a great calamity—I forget what it was now—occurred, and a member asked leave to introduce a motion that the Court should make a grant to a fund for the relief of the sufferers from the calamity; and there was not going to be another Court for some time. I think it was just before the vacation. The Court thought it was a very fit thing to bring forward; leave was given, and the vote was passed. But the Court is very slow to give leave if it does not appear that it is a matter, not only of reasonable urgency, but also a matter the non-notice of which would not be of vast importance.

6288. Of course, you know that in an ordinary Corporation borough it would be illegal to pass any such resolution; I only wanted to know what your practice was?—Oh, yes; you are speaking now of a money debate, are you?

6289. No, I am speaking of any important resolution, notice of which was not given on the agenda paper?—Yes.

6290. You see you cannot, by the Municipal Corporations Act, transact any business except what is fairly brought within the purview of the subjects mentioned on the notice paper?—Yes, I am aware of that.

6291. (Chairman.) You have strict orders as to notices of votes of money?—Yes.

6292. And as to the absence of interest on the part of any member of the Corporation in any vote given?—That is so.

6293. And as to the disqualification of any member of the Corporation from appointment to an office?—Yes.

6294. Or of any son of a member of the Corporation?—Or of any son of a member.

6295. And you have another resolution that "any "vote of the Court affecting the salary of an officer "of the Court, or the remuneration to be given to an "officer, shall be taken by ballot"?—That is so.

6296. That is always acted upon?—Yes, now and then, if it is somewhat slight—raising a foreman of labourers from a small sum to a sum not much larger, they very often then suspend the order; but in all cases of substantial increases to an officer, whose salary is at all substantial, they most jealously stand by that.

6297. Where they suspend the order, is that where it is voted by acclamation?—It is voted by acclamation, or nearly so, or the order would not be suspended.

6298. Is it necessary, according to the ordinary construction, to take a ballot even where there is no objection to a vote?—Yes, absolutely; it is my duty to remind the Court, where they are ever so unanimous, and ever so agreed, to take a ballot.

6299. Although the result of the ballot may be perfect unanimity?—It never is.

6300. It never is?—Never absolutely—never.

6301. (Lord Farrer.) Can you tell us, on page 45—those are the expenses of Committees—are those expenses entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee?—Do you mean to say, is the money?

6302. Yes?—No, the practice—well, I should go back some years, perhaps——

6303. (Chairman.) These are the sums allowed to the several Committees?—Those are the sums allowed to the Committees for their expenses.

6304. And the expenditure of those sums is left entirely within the control of the Committee?—No, with the Chairman.

6305. With the Chairman?—Some long time ago, longer ago than I remember, it was the custom that in the case of members who attended the Committees and were marked above the line—that is within a certain time of the hour at which they were summoned—money allowances were made to them—fees; something, I suppose, after the character of fees for boards of directors, and so on. However, that was abolished, and in place of that (it was found to be inconvenient), the Court allocated sums to the various Committees according to the importance of their duties, and the consequent number of times that they would have to attend, for what was termed their expenses, expenses of refreshment, and so on; and the Chairman for the time being has the entire allocation of that, especially for the reason that the amount allowed is never sufficient to carry out the Chairman's ideas of hospitality and each Chairman spends more out of his own pocket.

6306. (Lord Farrer.) And what are his ideas of hospitality?—Well, I should say, in the case of the City Lands, where 400*l.* is allowed, his "ideas" run to about 500*l.*

6307. In the form of luncheons, or what?—In the form of luncheons and occasional dinners, to which persons connected with the Committee are invited. The Chairman of the Markets Committee would invite some of the principal market people; the Chairman of the Library Committee (which I see has a very small allowance), gives a big dinner every year to the representatives of literature, science, and art, a dinner of some considerable distinction.

6308. But are these generally for dinners to people outside, or are they for what we may call refreshments and luncheon?—I should say that in all cases, in the case of every committee, the dinners include a number of outside people, according to the work of the Committee, and the position in life, and so on, of the Chairman. If he happens to be a lawyer, he probably asks a number of distinguished members of the Bar to his dinner, and in that way the thing is done. Luncheons are very slight affairs; I mean to say there may be on a side table some sandwiches and sherry, not much beside.

Sir J. Monckton.
20 Dec. 1893.

6309. This is really, then, a case of entertainments following the analogy of the City's hospitalities?—Yes, to an extent you may call it so, certainly.

6310. Are they given in any public building, or at any place of entertainment?—Oh, at some of the usual taverns, the Albion, or the City Terminus Hotel, or the Guildhall Tavern.

6311. Is it a thing generally understood that the Chairman of the Committee shall give a certain ——? —It is a thing understood that the Chairman of the Committee shall, through his year, entertain the Committee and persons whom the Committee would like to meet, having regard to the special work of that Committee.

6312. (Mr. Crawford.) Take the Police Committee; it is the custom to ask all the police magistrates, is it not?—In the case of the Police Committee, all the police magistrates of the Metropolis are asked, and various persons having to do with police matters; in the case of the Port Sanitary Committee, the leading port sanitary people about the country. As you will see, the Port Sanitary allowance is 150*l.*, it probably costs the Chairman another 100*l.* at least.

6313. I believe it is not unusual to see members of the Government Departments at some of these dinners, is it?—I have seen them frequently.

6314. (Lord Farrer.) I am very glad to have asked the question, because primâ facie it appeared as if these were luncheons and dinners to the members of the Committees?—No.

6315. It is really a case of entertainments to outsiders?—Yes; the luncheons to the Committee are really most attenuated affairs.

6316. (Chairman.) There are a great many Committees and Commissions appointed by the Court of Common Council?—Yes; I think two or three and twenty.

6317. (Lord Farrer.) Holding office in the City must be rather a burdensome affair?—In the way of calls upon one's—— 6318. In the way of expense, from the Lord Mayor downwards?—Yes; the Lord Mayor especially. To hold office, do you mean as Chairman?

6319. As Chairman of Committees?—Oh, I think men are pleased to do it. They are fairly well-to-do men, as a rule. It is once in a lifetime possibly; it is a matter of distinction.

6321. (Chairman.) It is very much like appointing a mayor in an ordinary municipal borough?—Very much indeed. We see that in some municipal boroughs there has been great difficulty in getting a man to fill the office of mayor.

6322. Most of the Committees in the City consist of six aldermen and 29 commoners?—There are six aldermen to each Committee and 29 commoners, counting one for each ward or side of a ward, so that each ward is represented.

6323. In the case of the Police Committee, all the aldermen and two commoners from each ward?—Yes, a deputy and a commoner.

6324. It is always a deputy, is it?—Yes; the aldermen and deputy of the ward are members ex-officio of the Police Committee, and 29 commoners are put upon it.

6325. (Lord Farrer.) The ordinary number seems to be 35?—35 besides the retiring Chairman, who always remains on ex-officio.

6326. And what proportion of these 35 generally attend?—Seven is a quorum. I should think you would generally find about half would be a fair average. Of course, when there are important questions arising they come rather more numerously, but as a matter of fact two or three Committees are constantly sitting at one time; in fact, this week we had eight or nine sitting each day of the week to wind up the matters pending, so that men who are members of two Committees have to do the best they can to move from one to the other in adjoining rooms.

6327. (Mr. Smith.) Has the question of reducing the numbers of these Committees ever been considered?—It has never been considered substantially.

6328. They seem to us very large?—Yes; Oh, yes.

6329. We manage great undertakings with Committees of six or eight?—It has been said that a Committee of three is the very best, where two stop away.

6330. (Chairman.) Would the same persons, to any extent, be members of the three Market Committees that you have—Central Markets, Cattle Markets, Billingsgate Market?—No.

6331. They are quite distinct from one another?—Yes; Oh yes, they would be distinct.

6332. And are the Library Committee, and the City of London School Committee, and the Freemen's Orphan School Committee, and the Music Committee, all distinct?—No, I cannot say that at all; I am speaking of the markets. I think it is quite looked upon there, that one man in the ward should be on one Market Committee, and others on the other two.

6333. (Lord Farrer.) I do not quite understand what your principle of division is?—The principle is this: that the wards, on their elections on St. Thomas's Day, meet and suggest the apportionment of the Committees, and I do not think any ward, under any circumstances, would send one man on to two Market Committees, any more than they could send one man on to the City Lands and the Bridge House Committee; there is a special Standing Order forbidding that. They would vary them, because the work being of that character, they would say other men should have an opportunity of serving on the markets, and so on the various School Committees. You would never find one man on the City of London School and on the Freemen's Orphan School—they would divide them; but there is no reason why a man should not be on the Library Committee and the City of London School Committee.

6334. The principle seems to be rather that of giving each man a taste of all sorts of work, than of getting any men who are particularly skilled in any particular work?—The members like the work; they rather seek it.

6335. Seek the varied work?—Yes, they seek the varied work. A would say, "I do not see why B "should have all the three Markets Committees; I "should like markets work; I would do it, too;" as to the Bridge House Estates Committee and the City Lands Committee, being rather leading Committees, there is a standing order to say that no one shall be on the two Committees.

6336. But I understood you that the wards select the members?—Suggest them; they send their names in. The Common Councilmen of the various wards meet together to settle their Committees. There is not very much to settle, because every man is returned for four years to a Committee; a man is on a Committee for four years, then he has to go off, and, therefore, there are only a few vacancies, perhaps, and the wards meet together to suggest to the Court who shall fill those vacancies.

6337. Is that a ward-mote meeting?—Oh, no, no.

6338. A private meeting?—A private meeting of the Common Council.

6339. Of the Common Councilmen themselves?—Yes, quite so; the Common Councilmen of the wards. They send in that list; then those lists are all printed and taken up to the Court at its first meeting in January. It may be that some Common Councilman in a Ward may object to what his fellows have done; he may say:—"I am unfairly treated; it "is my turn to go on that Committee," because there are always favourite Committees, as there are favourite classes of schools, and so on; and he thus can bring that before the Court of Common Council, because the Court of Common Council absolutely appoints the Committees. Where no objection is made, they are appointed at once. Sometimes there are discussions about them. A Common Councilman can say, "Well, "I am particularly anxious for markets work, and I "think it is my turn;" and if he can prove his case the Common Council would probably put him on, and not the one that was suggested by the ward.

6340. Then it is recognised in the Council that the wards, as represented in the Council, are to have a potential voice?—Oh, a strong suggesting voice. It has been for a long time past—as long as I have known it—the custom to do that.

6341. (Chairman.) The allotment of 29 commoners to a Committee means that there shall be one commoner for each ward?—Just so.

6342. And that is always strictly observed?—That is always strictly observed.

6343. Never two commoners from one ward and no commoner from another?—Oh no, certainly not; that is always strictly observed.

6344. Take an instance: if a representative of Billingsgate Ward is wanted on a particular Committee, the Common Councilmen for the Billingsgate Ward may meet together and suggest a particular person?—Yes, they may do so; if they failed to do so the Court would fill it up.

6345. (Lord Farrer.) Suppose you have a man who is pre-eminently fitted for a particular Committee, who belongs to a ward already represented on that Committee—is there any means of getting him on the Committee?—Oh, certainly, the Court may put one man off and take another on; the Court is pre-eminent in that respect.

6346. Do they ever do that?—Never, except by consent. It very, very frequently happens indeed that some man is returned on to a Committee, we will say the Music Committee, and then some time afterwards some fellow wardsman of his has said: "Well, I am "a musical man, and you are not;" and they have given notice of motion. One gives notice of motion that Mr. A. shall be put upon the Music Committee in loco Mr. B., and that Mr. B. shall go on some other Committee in place of Mr. A. That is not at all an infrequent thing, the resettling of matters within the first month or two of the year.

6347. Quite so; but supposing it so happened that there were four or five men in the Billingsgate Ward particularly fitted for a particular Committee, the Markets Committee, they would not all get on. You adhere to the principle that each ward shall be represented on each Committee?—Certainly that would not be done.

6348. (Mr. Crawford.) Do you not find that the Court adds a man specially to a Committee who has particular knowledge upon some particular subject?—For a particular purpose.

6349. (Chairman.) For a particular purpose?—That is so.

6350. Not for a year, but for some special object?—Only for a year.

6351. Oh, for the year?—Because every thing is at an end at the end of the year. They begin again. A notable case was that of Mr. Deputy Bedford, an old member of the Court, who had rendered himself famous in connection with the rescuing of Epping Forest. When his turn came to go off the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, that had for a long time the working of the arrangements for freeing Epping Forest, he was added specially to the Committee.

6352. (Lord Farrer.) The Court of Common Council can always do that?—The Court of Common Council can always add a man to a Committee for a purpose.

6353. As matter of fact, as a general rule, the principle is not to put men on Committees on account of their fitness for that particular Committee, but to have each ward represented on th Committee?—The first rule, no doubt, is to have each ward represented on the Committee; but inasmuch as the suggestions from the wards emanate from the members themselves, so the members try to lay their plans as far as they can to go on the Committees for which they are fitted. The City Courts Committee consists very largely of solicitors; they rather lay themselves out for it.

6354. That is subject to the principle that each ward must have its representative?—Oh, that must be so absolutely.

6355. (Mr. Holt.) I notice Sir John, that you have 25 Committees here, do you think it is necessary that there should be so many, or do you not think there might be a little grouping, amalgamation, if we may call it?—You are asking me now a difficult question, and a dangerous one for me to answer. You might similarly ask me, whether I do not think 18 men would do the work as well as 35. I think it is self-evident that you might perhaps put all the Schools Committees into one Committee. Whether they would do the work I could hardly say without trying, and I suppose one would have to admit that 18 men would do the work as well as 35, but 35 share the work out, and it is found to work very well. I may say this, that there is a case in point now as regards the Markets Committee. About 20 years ago, the whole of the markets, which had formerly been under different Committees, as the markets then existed, were put under one Committee that was called the Grand Markets Committee, and that had the working of all the markets. About two or three years ago that was found to be so exceedingly cumbersome and inconvenient that it was divided up into three Markets Committees, the Central, the Cattle, and the Billingsgate and Leadenhall, and that is found to work a great deal better.

6356. (Mr. Smith.) It might have been met by the appointment of Sub-Committees?—Well, it was met by the appointment of Sub-Committees; that is a very good suggestion of yours because it was adopted. This Markets Committee did appoint Sub-Committees, but then they had all to come and report to the Grand Committee, and the whole thing was found cumbersome and inconvenient.

6357. (Mr. Crawford.) The work was done twice over practically?—The work was done twice over in this particular case.

6358. (Chairman.) Is the ward feeling very strong in the City, the feeling amongst the inhabitants of a ward for maintaining their separate representation, and therefore their right?—I think we shall hear more about that, probably after to-morrow, I suppose. I should say it is, but to-morrow I should imagine I should rather expect that some expression of feeling will be evoked. If there were none, why that would answer your question, Mr. Chairman.

6359. A suggestion to reduce the number of wards would not, you suppose, be very well received?—Oh, you mean to say putting two wards together, or something of that sort?

6360. Yes?—I cannot say that at all; I do not know.

6361. That is what I mean whether the ward feeling was strong?—Two wards have united in having ward schools, which shows a friendly and neighbouring feeling.

6362. In some of the wards the number of resident occupiers is very small?—Very small. Oh, it is a fact that in two or three cases small wards have united together to carry on ward schools, which, as I say, shows a friendly feeling between them.

6363. (Lord Farrer.) Men are proud of belonging to one of these wards whose history goes back for many generations?—I do think that very strongly indeed; I think there is a very strong feeling of that kind.

6364. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact, was there not an attempt made after the last Royal Commission to reduce the number of wards, and the Corporation actually promoted a Bill, but that evoked so much opposition in the City that it had to be dropped?—That was so; that, I think, you will find ——

Sir J. Monckton.

20 Dec. 1890.

6365. On page 7, I think?—That, I think, you will find in this book here; yes it is on page 7; in the second paragraph of page 7, the recommendation being that a number of wards be reduced to some number not less than 12 nor greater than 16, and that their area and population be as far as possible made equal:—"With a view to endeavouring "to give effect to this recommendation, the Court of "Common Council in the month of February 1857, "resolved to reduce the number of the wards to 20, "and even had prepared and introduced into the "House of Commons a Bill to carry out that among "other objects, but an outcry from one end of the "City to another arose. Municipal privileges were "alleged to be affected, local rights prejudiced, and "ward property injured. Even a proposal to readjust "the wards without changing the number of alder-"men or reducing the number of Common Councillors "provoked opposition; the result being that both the "Corporation Bill and the Government Bill of 1858 "had to be dropped, the Government Bill being "withdrawn on the 1st of July of that year. "Similar proposals have always since met with a "similar fate, and the number of wards in the City "remains at 26."

6366. (Lord Farrer.) Do you attribute that to an historical feeling; I asked the question because there are considerable powers of altering the limits of wards you know in the rest of London; powers that are constantly exercised?—I should think it is not only an historical feeling but I think an ordinary clannish and neighbourly feeling that arises in most organisations.

6367. (Chairman.) Your wards are much more important in their organisations and each one has an alderman for itself?—Yes.

6368. And therefore gets a Lord Mayor for itself in turn?—Gets a Lord Mayor and mostly a sheriff. The alderman of a ward at some time or the other becomes sheriff and that gives the ward a little pride in what they term their inheritance.

6369. What is the ward property which you mentioned in that history, you were recounting that ward property was threatened in describing the opposition made to that Bill?—Well, I can hardly say to what extent; it has occurred so long ago.

6370. I think you will find those words?—The idea was—I am only gathering that as anyone who reads may gather—that it was considered that the property in the ward would have its prestige taken away from it by losing its name and its identity.

6371. The property of private persons?—I think so.

6372. Not that the ward itself had property?—No.

6373. (Mr. Crawford.) Except schools?—They have schools, and so on.

6374. (Mr. Smith.) There is no analogy, Sir John, between the case of your wards and those of an ordinary borough, in an ordinary municipal borough the ward is simply an electoral division?—That is all; an electoral division and without a specific head; I suppose the alderman is simply put there to preside at elections.

6375. Assigned for a particular purpose?—No; these wards have had their ward schools; they have taken care of their poor and they have done a great many things you may almost say of a feudal character.

6376. When a man is elected for a ward in an ordinary municipal borough, as soon as he is elected he ceases to consider himself a member of the ward, he is a member of the whole Corporation, that is the view he takes of it?—Yes.

6377. Is that so?—Yes, it is. You find it on page 292 in the statement. The City Ward Schools are set out there, showing in various cases that the wards have united together to establish schools.

6378. (Lord Farrer.) Is there no jealousy on the part of one of the larger wards? For instance, Farringdon Without is an enormous ward, is it not?—That is a very large ward indeed.

6379. Is there never any attempt or desire on the part of Farringdon Without to have a larger share of what we may call the leadership—the aldermen and the principal officers?—Oh, no; not in that way at all. You see Farringdon Without being a very large ward has got a very much larger number of members representing it; and so it is fairly equally represented on the Committees as any other ward; it has got so many more men.

6380. It has got more representatives on the Council?—Yes.

6381. It has only its one alderman?—Well, Farringdon Without has one alderman. There are two Farringdons—Farringdon Without and Farringdon Within, each has an alderman.

6382. So that on the Court of Aldermen its representation is the same as any other ward?—Yes, certainly.

6383. But on the Court of Common Council it has a much larger representation?—Yes, 16 or 18.

6384. (Chairman.) Farringdon Without has 17 times the rateable value of Bassishaw?—Yes, I have no doubt. It is a very large ward indeed.

6385. But it has only got the same turn for the higher posts, and the same one alderman?—In that sense.

6386. And the same one member of each of its Committees?—As Yorkshire or Devonshire or Rutland each would have a Lord Lieutenant.

6387. But they do not work together for any purpose?—No; I know they do not. I mean the size must tell unequally sometimes.

6388. (Mr. Holt.) In relation to that the Common Councilmen are not fixed with any regard to population but more, perhaps, with regard to rateable value; or how are they arranged?—Well, the two would rather go together, Mr. Holt, would they not?

6389. I did not know how it was fixed here?—I cannot tell how it was fixed at that time; but I suppose it would be with regard to rateable value and as to population. I should have thought they both would have entered into the calculation.

6390. (Lord Farrer.) Farringdon Without, I see, has 16 Common Councilmen and Bassishaw has four?—Yes.

6391. But Farringdon Without has 526,000*l.* rateable value, and Bassishaw 30,000*l.*, so that the proportion of Common Councilmen is not at all in proportion to rateable value?—No; I daresay it is not. I suppose that in 1840 probably the Act at that time followed the best calculation that could then be made. But even now-a-days that is to a great extent so with Parliamentary representation in the country.

6392. (Mr. Crawford.) You will find the rateable value has enormously changed in the different wards. If you take, for instance, the figures that you give us for 1852?—Yes.

6393. In comparison with what they are at the present moment they have enormously changed?—It is so, no doubt.

6394. And not changed in a similar ratio in each individual ward?—Some wards have been depopulated to some extent by the invasion, one may call it, of the large railway stations—Cannon Street and Bishopsgate, and so on.

6395. (Lord Farrer.) Have the City under their general powers the power of altering wards?—Yes.

6396. They have that?—I should say distinctly.

6397. They might do it—if there was any desire in the City for doing it, they might do it themselves?—Yes, certainly.

6398. (Chairman.) It has never been done by Parliament?—No.

6399. Always by the Court of Common Council?—Always.

6400. (Lord Farrer.) I should like to ask you, has the Common Council any annual budget? Is there at any time of the year, the whole statement of accounts and estimates put before the Council so as to show at once what the income and expenditure are to be for the following year?—The Chamberlain brings up a report, or rather presents to the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, what may be termed a budget.

6401. Is that a financial statement?—It is a financial statement.

6402. The estimate of the expenses are put, and what the income is to be, applicable to the payment of those expenses?—Yes.

6403. And is that passed? Is it put before the Common Council and passed?—It is put before the Common Council.

6404. And have they to pass it?—And upon that report; upon a portion of the report the sum to be given away in charity during the year is ascertained

6405. But does the Chamberlain put down in that, for instance, so much to be spent upon the Tower Bridge?—Oh, no; that would not be so, because the Tower Bridge are trust funds; it has nothing to do with the Corporation funds at all.

6406. But with regard to the City's cash, does he bring forward a complete estimate?—Yes; he brings forward an estimate. But all that is a matter that I think had better come from the Chamberlain himself. I merely answer generally; and especially with reference to the sum to be given away in charity in the year, in benevolence.

6407. (Mr. Holt.) Did I understand Sir John just now to say that the Court of Common Council can fix the number of representatives, of councilmen, from each of the different wards?—Yes.

6408. Without any reference to a higher power?—Yes. The Act of Common Council that I was reading from just now—the 8th May 1840—fixed the present number of representatives for the wards.

6409. (Chairman.) It is an illustration of the unique position of the City in being able to legislate for itself?—Yes; under the Charter we were speaking of when I was last here.

6410. (Lord Farrer.) Can you tell me how the patronage of livings is exercised?—The City livings?

6411. Yes?—By vote of the Court of Common Council.

6412. Are candidates put forward?—Yes. I am trying to remember one in my time. I do not think I can.

6413. (Mr. Smith.) After hearing a competition sermon?—I do not know. I should think they would. I am trying to recall a case in my own time. I do not think I can. One of the most notable is a man with the historic name, the Rev. Richard Whittington. He has been occupying his excellent living of St. Peter's, Cornhill, ever since I have been there. I should think they would be wise enough to do as you say and hear competitive sermons.

6414. (Mr. Crawford.) They certainly do that in connection with the Gresham lectures?—Yes, certainly.

6415. That was so in the case of the Divinity Lecturer?—Yes.

6416. (Chairman.) It was Sir John Page Wood who preceded Mr. Whittington, was it not?—I do not remember. I only remember Mr. Whittington there. Mr. Whittington has had his Corporation living of St. Peter's, Cornhill, since 1867.

6417. Has he not been lately a master of a City Company?—The Merchant Taylors; he has just gone out of the chair.

6418. And if I am not wrong in thinking, Sir John Page Wood was his predecessor; he was the son of a Lord Mayor or an alderman?—I should think very likely he would be. He was a member of one of the great City families, the Woods.

6419. Lord Mayor Wood's son?—Lord Hatherley was a member; Sir Evelyn Wood is another member; and he himself was Warden of the Fishmongers' Company, of which all the Woods, or nearly all the Woods, I believe, are members.

6420. It is not uncommon for City Companies to have ecclesiastical patronage?—They certainly have it. I know the other day the Haberdashers' Company exercised it in favour of a gentleman with whom I am acquainted.

6421. (Mr. Crawford.) I did not quite catch the question that Lord Farrer put to Sir John; was it as to whether there was competition in connection with those things?—No, in what way the City exercised their ecclesiastical patronage; I say by a vote of the Court.

6422. I might remind Sir John that there was a recent election, and we had several candidates; and you may recollect that some of them received a small vote in order that they might not be out of pocket by the trouble which they had taken to come up to town to attend the Court of Common Council. Some came from as far as Yorkshire and other places?—Yes. You are right, it was so. It had slipped my memory.

6423. (Chairman.) Candidates for a living?

6424. (Mr. Crawford.) For a living, yes; and it was felt that they had taken a great deal of trouble so as to give the Court of Common Council a choice, and a small sum was placed at their disposal to recoup them any actual disbursements that they had incurred.

6425. (Lord Farrer.) With regard to all these officers, how is the selection of officers made? Is it made in the first instance by the Committee who has to deal with it, and submitted by them to the Council?—Well, very much would depend, Lord Farrer, upon the nature of the office, very much.

6426. (Chairman.) There is a preliminary step, is there not, at page 54?—Sometimes, if the office is one of what is called of the first importance—a high officer—the whole of the names go before the Court of Common Council. I do not think they then leave it to the Committee to make a selection.

6427. But is not there, first of all, the examination into the office and its emoluments?—Oh, yes; when you come to the very beginning, if a vacancy arises it is referred to a Committee—usually the Officers' and Clerks' Committee—to report as to the nature, duties, and emoluments of the office. At that time the nature of the office is considered; its duties are considered, first, as to the nature of the office, whether it is desired that there should be a continuance, and then as regards the duties to what extent they should be altered, increased, decreased, or modified; and, third, the emoluments of the office, and what the salary should be. That report is brought up by the Committee to the Court, and dealt with, either agreed or modified; but, at any rate, dealt with.

6428. Not infrequently a revision of salary?—Not infrequently.

6429. (Lord Farrer.) Then after that comes the personal question?—Then comes the personal question. In my own case, I remember, it was recommended that the salary of the office, in 1873, should be 2,000*l.* a year. The Court thought otherwise, and thought it should be 1,500*l.* a year, and so it was. Then candidates come before the Court. They are occasionally first interviewed in private by a Committee of the whole Court, and successively heard.

6430. (Mr. Crawford.) That very seldom takes place with the principal officers, Sir John?—I remember, personally, in my own case, it did occur. The Committee of the whole Court met informally—the Chief Commoner in the chair, not the Lord Mayor at all. They met informally, and merely invited the candidates to appear before them.

6431. (Lord Farrer.) The whole Court of Common Council?—The whole Common Council. The candidates were separately introduced and invited to read their addresses, and make such observations as seemed to them appropriate.

6432. (Mr. Crawford.) That is to say, the Court of Common Council resolved itself into a Committee?—No; certainly not.

6433. Was it specially called for the purpose?—No, it was not so at all. The Chief Commoner of the time, Mr. McGeorge, sent out a private notice inviting his fellows on the Common Council to meet quite informally, no officer attending.

6434. That is exactly what I was asking. If it had been a formal matter the Court of Common

Sir J. Monckton.

20 Dec. 1893.

Council would have resolved itself into a Committee of the whole Court?—They might have done that.

6435. In this case they did not?—The Court met informally. Nothing was done by resolution of any kind. But, at any rate, the members, as I thought very wisely, because I came best out of it, formed their own opinions, and the following Thursday the election took place.

6436. (Lord Farrer.) When a salary is fixed in this way, is it formally fixed for a year or formally fixed as a permanent thing?—It is fixed without any limitation. They might raise it in three months if they pleased. They never do, but they might. The person elected is elected at such a salary.

6437. And is he elected for a year?—Till the next regular period of election of officers, which would be the second Court in the following January. There is a standing order here which says——

6438. Yes, that is what I wanted to get to?—All the elections are to take effect only until the second Court in the following January, being the Court for the election of officers.

6439. I suppose, as a matter of fact, and as a matter of course, the officer, unless there has been anything against him, is re-elected always?—Yes, practically re-elected—practically always; it has not been entirely always, but practically so.

6440. (Chairman.) That does not apply to all officers who are appointed by the Court of Common Council?—No; all those who are subject to annual election.

6441. Those who hold judicial offices?—Persons in the position of judges are not.

6442. And the Commissioner of Police?—The Commissioner of Police is not. But it specifically says, in the form of resolution of the elections, "subject to annual election," subject to the terms of the report of such-and-such a Committee, and subject to annual election.

6443. (Mr. Smith.) I suppose vacancies are generally advertised, Sir John?—Never; not a vacancy for a high officer. I suppose if a technical office somewhat low down on the list were wanted to be filled, such as Superintendent of Forests, or something of that sort, it would be advertised. But the professional offices are matters of such notoriety that there is generally a flood of applicants.

6444. (Lord Farrer.) Is there any system of pensions, or is that in the option of the Council?—Up to quite recently it has been entirely in the option of the Council, but there now is an absolute pension scheme passed, which is law.

6445. And does that give the officers who are comprised in it an absolute right to pensions?—An absolute right to pension. It is done on a system of payment by the officer, which commences this year.

6446. (Chairman.) It is a law of the Common Council?—Yes. I mean to say it is law with us in the City. I mean to say what was a matter, as the cabmen would say, "left to their honour's generosity," is now a matter of absolute right fixing the time of retirement and rate of pension.

6447. (Lord Farrer.) So that if an officer were not re-elected in any year, and he came within the rules of the pension scheme he would be entitled to a pension?—He would be entitled to a pension, unless there was any reason that I cannot foresee against it.

6448. Of course, there is power to dismiss for misconduct?—Yes.

6449. Or incompetency?—I think it is provided for in the pension scheme, namely, that all contributions paid should be refunded.

6450. (Mr. Smith.) The officers' own contributions?—Yes.

6451. (Chairman.) The Common Hall—I think we have had most of the facts before us. It is an assembly of the Liverymen of the Companies?—An assembly of the Liverymen.

6452. In certain prescribed numbers, or with a certain limitation of numbers, and it elects the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs and some other officers?—That is so—the Chamberlain among them.

6453. I see the Livery may also be summoned by the Lord Mayor to meet in Common Hall at other times to discuss questions of public interest?—Yes.

6454. In that way the Livery is held to be representative of the City at large?—Yes, I should think so—as far as it goes. Of course, it is an organised body in the City, a Corporation, so to speak, that does express an opinion. How far the City at large who are not Liverymen might consider itself represented, is not for me to say. But it would be a very large representation indeed, no doubt of the leading men in the City.

6455. And that is at present a formal way of obtaining a presentment of City opinion by the Lord Mayor?—Oh, I think not. I do not think that at all. Now-a-days open meetings of the citizens are called, as was the case the other day on the Navy question. That was not a meeting of the Livery at all. That was a meeting of all who chose to come together.

6456. Precisely. But that would not be a formal presentment of the opinion of the City. Would the presentment of opinion by the Liverymen be at all analogous to a presentment by a grand jury of the county?—Well, to whom?

6457. To whomever the Lord Mayor might be instructed to communicate it?—To a great extent it would, no doubt.

6458. Have there been any recent convocations of the Liverymen upon subjects of public interest?—Occasionally, yes; not very often, but occasionally.

6459. Can you recall any one?—No; I would very much rather refer to the Common Hall Book.

6460. (Mr. Crawford.) In 1884; do you not remember a very important meeting in 1884?—Well, I do not remember.

6461. Do you not remember a very important meeting, in 1884, on Sir Vernon Harcourt's Bill?—I have no doubt there was; I think there was.

6462. And resolutions were passed which were conveyed to the Government?—No doubt.

6463. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose that if you wished to get the formal opinion of the Corporation of the City of London you would go to the Court of Common Council, would you not?—If you wanted the opinion of the Corporation. Of course the Corporation is not entirely the Livery. The Livery would be a more extended representation in another direction. The Corporation directly represents the ratepayers of the City, no doubt; and the Livery represent, as it were, themselves.

6464. (Chairman.) But the Livery elect the Lord Mayor?—The Livery elect the Lord Mayor.

6465. They are the surviving representatives, apparently of the Commonalty of the City en masse?—Yes, the immensa communitas.

6466. (Mr. Smith.) They principally exist, do not they, for the purpose of the election of the Lord Mayor?—That is their principal duty.

6467. And I see the Commission of 1854 recommended that they should cease to have that power?—Yes.

6468. I think they recommended that the elections in Common Hall be abolished?—That the elections in Common Hall be abolished,—No. 9,—the effect of which, we say, would have been to disfranchise some 10,000 of the most respectable and responsible electors in Europe, including merchants and bankers, and so on.

6469. (Lord Farrer.) I think we did ask you whether there is any instance of a poll at the election of the Lord Mayor?—I think I was asked that. I should certainly say yes.

6470. How long ago?—The last, I think, was in the case of Sir James Clarke Lawrence and Mr. Alderman Besley. That would be about 25 years ago. I do not remember a poll for the Lord Mayor since. There was a proposal to re-elect Sir James Clarke Lawrence, that was the occasion of it, and the friends of Mr. Alderman Besley thought that he should be elected, and a poll took place, and the re-election did not take place, and Mr. Alderman Besley, the next in rotation, was elected.

6471. (Chairman.) We have had, I think, almost everything you state here relative to the Sheriffs before us. It is, perhaps, an obscure question. What right or privilege has the Lord Mayor with respect to the nomination of a Sheriff?—The Lord Mayor has the privilege of nominating under forfeiture penalties; "between the 14th day of March and the 14th day "of May in every year, in the Court of Aldermen, one "or more freemen of the City (not exceeding three in "the whole) to be publicly put in nomination for the "Shrievalty to the Liverymen in Common Hall "assembled, such nomination to remain in force for "five years." That was done mainly that there always should be a list for service outside the Court of Aldermen, that there should be no failure in the list.

6472. Is that kept up—that right of nomination?—Oh, kept up most religiously. The Lord Mayor nominates one or more. The Lord Mayor this year nominated two gentlemen, and the effect of the nomination is that they do not require further nomination. It gives them no privilege, or any priority, except that after the aldermen they are put to the Livery; and it is competent for any two members of the Common Hall also to nominate.

6473. And does it often happen that the Lord Mayor's nominee is the second man, or one of the men, or is it only a reserve nomination?—I do not think that very much turns upon it in the way of success. It is rather supposed to imply that at any rate the gentleman nominated is agreeable to the Lord Mayor; but as he is not going to be except for three months the Lord Mayor with whom that particular Sheriff would serve, not very much turns upon that.

6474. As the nomination lasts for five years he might not be even those three months?—It is so. But there is this in it, that it is considered that the Lord Mayor, at any rate, feels satisfied that the person nominated is a fit and proper person, and that Liverymen might regard it accordingly.

6475. (Mr. Smith.) I think it was recommended by the Commission of 1854 that the Sheriffs should be elected by the Common Council. I do not know whether it is fair to ask you whether you see any objection to that yourself?—I think it is better as it is.

6476. It would be conforming more to the ordinary practice of the Sheriff being elected at the same time as the Lord Mayor?—Well, I can only look upon "ordinary practice" as practice prevailing in the City.

6477. (Lord Farrer.) Is the office of Sheriff one that is sought for?—Oh, yes.

6478. Or avoided?—Oh, on the contrary, sought for.

6479. Although it involves considerable expense?—It involves considerable expense. There was a surplus of candidates this year, and I think a very heavy poll. If I remember rightly, there were four candidates this year for the two offices.

6480. (Chairman.) On the Central Criminal Court we have also had a good deal of information?—On the Central Criminal Court and the Old Bailey, I should suggest that the Common Serjeant would be your better witness. He is very familiar with it, having practised there, and now a judge of it, and I am not.

6481. That is as to the organisation of the Court?—Yes; I think so, on the whole subject; I think that is one of the points on which I should say he would be the proper witness. I believe he is prepared to come.

6482. As to the question of the payment of the expenses of the Court he would know very little about that; do you know anything about that?—I know nothing of it at all. It is not within my purview.

6483. On page 66—the County of London pays thirty-five-fortieths; the County of Middlesex, two-fortieths; the County of Essex, two-fortieths; and the County of Surrey, one-fortieth?—Yes; those I have found to be the facts, but I know nothing of the details.

6484. What do you understand the County of London to be there?—The County of London.

6485. The County as constituted by the Act of 1888?—As it is.

6486. The county over which the County Council has authority?—Yes.

6487. You do not know when these proportions were settled?—No, I cannot tell you at all. My knowledge is very small upon that. I can only tell you by research.

6488. (Mr. Crawford.) If the Common Serjeant cannot give us the information, Mr. Avory, the Clerk of Arraigns, would do so?—You could get the evidence from one or other.

6489. (Mr. Smith.) We have had a great deal of evidence about that.

6490. (Mr. Crawford.) I think you may find it necessary to hear the Common Serjeant, not merely on this question, but on other points; the question of magistracy, which has been raised by you.

6491. (Lord Farrer.) If there is anything to correct in the evidence that Mr. Kemp has given, no doubt the City will do it.

6492. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes, when the City has had an opportunity of seeing the evidence they will do so.

6493. (Mr. Smith.) Yes, certainly.

6494. (Chairman.) The Sessions House and the prison at Newgate, the Old Bailey. As a prison Newgate is almost empty, is it not?—It is always empty now, except when the trials are going on, the Central Criminal Court trials, and when cases of capital punishment are being carried out.

6945. And there has been a question of re-erection?—Of the Sessions House?

6496. Of the prison and the Sessions House?—Yes.

6497. Do you know how that stands?—No. That is a matter for the City Lands Committee entirely. Mr. Brand, the Comptroller, would tell you about that.

6498. (Lord Farrer.) You cannot tell us, can you, whether the City have the power to make and levy a county rate for the purpose?—I would rather not tell you without due consideration.

6499. (Chairman.) You have it at page 72.

6500. (Lord Farrer.) Yes, I know we have it there. But there are questions raised about that.

6501. (Mr. Crawford.) I may tell you, as a matter of information, that the point was raised very recently and advised upon by the law officers of the Corporation. Sir John Monckton is not a law officer, therefore the point would not come before him. The law officers of the Corporation advised that there was the power.

6502. (Lord Farrer.) That the City have the power to levy a county rate?

6503. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

6504. (Lord Farrer.) I understand there is a somewhat difficult legal question about it.

6505. (Mr. Crawford.) There is, no doubt; that was the opinion of the law officers.

6506. (Lord Farrer.) It raises the question whether two county rates can run within the same area.

6507. (Mr. Smith.) It is the old question of the non-intromittent clause, is it not?

6508. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.—You will find, Mr. Chairman, that various officials will be your best witnesses on the larger portion of the remainder of this book.

6509. (Chairman.) The organisation of the City Courts?—The City Courts; the Mayor's Court, and so on. The Registrars of those Courts would be your best witnesses.

6510. You do not profess to give the best evidence on that?—No, certainly not. I might give you bad evidence on account of want of knowledge of the Court practice.

6511. And for the Chamber of London?—The Chamberlain. Of course you would entirely depend on the Chamberlain. The City Lands and Bridge House Accounts would be the Comptroller, Mr. Brand.

Sir J. Monckton.

20 Dec. 1893.

6512. (Mr. Crawford.) The Chamberlain and Mr. Payne?—Well, the Chamberlain and his staff.

6513. Mr. Payne is not on his staff now; that is why I have mentioned his name?—No; quite so. The Markets would be my Principal Clerk, Mr. Knott. He entirely attends to them, and he is, so to speak, saturated with the market question.

6514. (Lord Farrer.) And the City Lands Committee?—The City Lands would be Mr. Brand, the Comptroller. He is the Conveyancing Officer of the Corporation, and attends and minutes those Committees.

6515. And the Police?—The Police would be the Commissioner and the Police Receiver.

6516. Open Spaces?—Well, the Open Spaces would be especially the Superintendent of Epping Forest, and the Chairman of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, that has especially the management of it, and Mr. Overall, the clerk to that Committee.

6517. (Chairman.) The Irish Society?—That would be Mr. Durie Miller, the Secretary of the Irish Society.

6518. (Lord Farrer.) The Port of London Sanitary Committee?—Dr. Collingridge. In fact, I would furnish the secretary with the details of all these gentlemen, if you pleased.

6519. I think that would be convenient.

6520. (Chairman.) Yes. Looking through the table of contents, Sir John, do you see any heading as to which you would be the proper person. If so, we could take supplementary evidence now from you?—Well, I do not know whether you want information as to the principal officers that appear down at the bottom of page 4. I could give generally, as secretary of the Corporation, I could tell you as to the nature, duties, and emoluments of their respective offices. But probably you have that in sufficient form.

6521. We have a good deal of that?—In fact, you have it in the book—the Lieutenancy—if anything the Clerk of the Lieutenancy, Mr. Henry Grose Smith, the markets, and open spaces, and Port of London Sanitary, are dealt with. Water supply—there is nothing to be said about it, that is not in this book; it is very much in abeyance in the City.

6522. (Mr. Crawford.) The City Remembrancer can tell us all about that?—On Parliamentary matters, of course, Mr. Goldney would be a very proper witness.

6523. (Lord Farrer.) You can answer this question, the Court of Common Council have recently refused to act upon the recommendation of their Water Committee, have they not?—No. They have not clearly refused to act upon it. It was sent back again for reconsideration. Points were raised that were not entirely answered satisfactorily; they have been sent back for reconsideration.

6524. What was the proposal? Was it to carry out the arrangement?—I think it was merely to carry on the agreed idea you know. But inasmuch as the Remembrancer said that nothing could be done till next November the Court thought it was undesirable to hurry it at the moment, and they could reconsider it and bring it up again.

6525. It is merely in abeyance?—It is merely in abeyance, a little turning on the fact, that it was the last Court of the year, and a great deal of work doing, The Educational Institutions I could speak generally of; but if any details were wanted their respective officials would be the proper persons. The Library and Art Gallery, and so on—the Library, Museum, and Reading Room, nobody would be better than the Librarian. I will give his name to Mr. Gleadowe, if it is thought desirable.

6526. Very full information upon those things is given?—It is; but you might formally like to take it from him to get it on record. I mean you might take half a dozen of those gentlemen and dispose of them in the hour.

6527. You can answer this question—the Library and Museum are quite open to every one, are they not?—Absolutely.

6528. There is no charge and no question asked, anybody may go in?—Quite. I think there is a limit of age; that is all. A child may not go in unless accompanied. That is so absolutely.

6529. And the library; is the library a lending library, or only a reading library?—A reading library.

6530. A reading library?—There is a small lending library for persons connected with the Corporation, the clerks and others; but it is not a public lending library yet. The question of a public lending library is being mooted.

6531. Yes. I should like to ask you one other question about your offices there. You have not at all more accommodation there than you want for your present business, have you?—No, certainly not. In fact, we are always adding, and doing the best we can, as you, Lord Farrer, saw, when you did us the favour to go over it once. The place is in a sense—well, without saying inadequate, it is not more than adequate. We have no spare accommodation of any kind.

6532. You have an extremely handsome Council Chamber; but your offices are not much better than those of the London County Council?—Probably not so good.

6533. I can hardly say anything worse?—We are very cramped for room, there is no doubt.

6534. (Mr. Smith.) And it would be impossible, I suppose, to extend without great cost?—Without considerable cost. It is a matter that has been discussed once or twice, taking property in the neighbourhood; it might be done.

6535. (Lord Farrer.) It is extremely expensive property there, is it not?—Oh, no doubt.

6536. (Mr. Smith.) There is no absolute reason why the administrative offices should be in the same place as the Council Chamber?—There is no absolute reason of the character you suggest. It would be very inconvenient if they were not, you know. I mean to say, one is perpetually sending to the offices—I am myself—for books and papers of all kinds and sorts; in fact, a speaking tube and an electric bell are absolute necessities there for the despatch of business.

6537. (Lord Farrer.) For a certain time the Corporation were good enough to lend the Corporation Chamber to the County Council?—That was in my mind; and you did manage to bring books and papers with you. But I daresay there was some inconvenience.

6538. Very considerable inconvenience?—There must have been.

6539. (Mr. Smith.) Probably when that happened you had not got the offices at present adjoining the Guildhall at your disposal.

6540. (Lord Farrer.) The Council certainly had not?—No. But Lord Farrer's point was, what occurred to me, namely, that the Council Chamber where they met, was away from their offices—namely, a mile away.

6541. (Mr. Smith.) But if, in addition to the loan of the Council Chamber, they could have had a certain number of offices such as you at present have for the purpose of bringing up any papers that they might require, the difficulty would mainly have been got over, I should think?—Well, but you never know what papers and books may be required.

6542. (Mr. Crawford.) If we had turned out and given them vacant possession, that would have been most convenient.

6543. (Mr. Smith.) I mean there would have been no practical difficulty, would there?—Shall I furnish Mr. Gleadowe, then, with a list of the people who can give evidence upon these points?

6544. (Chairman.) If you please?—As I say, half-a-dozen of them might be wanted up here at once.

6545. We shall be glad to have a list, if we desire to call any one of them.

Sir J. Monckton.

20 Dec. 1893

The witness withdrew.

(The room having been cleared, the Secretary read the following letter received by him from the Town Clerk.)

"Guildhall, E.C.,

"Sir, December 18th, 1893.

"Adverting to my communication of the 12th instant, the Special Committee of the Corporation have to-day met to consider the reference from the Court of Common Council of the 11th inst., agreeing with the Committee's recommendation:—'That in 'view of the assurance of the President of the Local 'Government Board, the Minister most responsible 'for the issue of the Royal Commission, that in 'tendering evidence before the Royal Commissioners 'the Corporation shall not be prejudiced in any 'future Parliamentary action, and relying upon the 'willingness of the Royal Commissioners to receive 'evidence upon the convenient practicability of amal-'gamation, it be recommended that the Court do 'accede to the request of the President of the Local 'Government Board, and authorise the Special Com-'mittee to prepare and tender to the Royal Commis-'sioners the fullest amount of evidence procurable on 'the problem submitted for their solution.'

"As the Royal Commissioners are aware, this reference was the outcome of the report of the Special Committee to the Court of Common Council of the 5th instant, printed copies of which were forwarded by me for the use of the Royal Commissioners on Tuesday last, and on page 4 of which will be found set out the main reasons which induced the Special Committee to recommend the Court of Common Council to continue the giving of evidence, the principal reason being the full belief which the Special Committee had that 'The Royal Commissioners will 'give effect to the desire of Her Majesty's Govern-'ment, as expressed by the President of the Local 'Government Board, in the following words:—

'I am most anxious as the Minister most re-'sponsible for this Commission, that the greatest 'amount of evidence should be given.'

"It appears to the Corporation that the evidence placed before the Royal Commission has been mainly directed to the position of the Corporation, and also that of the London County Council, and that the position of the Metropolitan Local Authorities, consisting of 26 Vestries and 13 District Boards, has not been fully dealt with.

"The Corporation ventures to think that, in any future scheme for the Government of London, it is of the highest importance that full attention should be paid to the present position and comparative independence of such Local Authorities, an independence granted to them by Parliament after careful inquiry and report by a Royal Commission, which reported most strongly against the expediency of placing the whole of the Metropolis under a single Municipal Corporation.

"The Corporation respectfully submit that no change in the present County Government of London should be recommended without grave consideration of the present constitution and efficiency of such Local Authorities.

"I am therefore desired to express the intention of the Corporation, in addition to continuing to amplify by verbal testimony the printed statement of the Corporation submitted to the Royal Commission on the 26th day of October last, to submit such evidence upon all or some of the following heads, as may assist the Royal Commissioners in forming a judgment as to the convenient practicability of amalgamation, namely:—

"The area, population, and rateable value of the present vestries and district boards.

"The existing powers and duties of such vestries and district boards.

"The execution by such vestries and district boards of their statutory powers and obligations, and the desirability of their extension or diminution.

"The general relations which exist between such vestries and district boards and the County Council.

"The necessity for the continued existence of powerful local bodies in the Metropolis, to represent their respective localities.

"The undesirability of allowing the County Council to acquire certain minor powers at present vested in bodies other than the County Council, which powers the County Council suggest might, with advantage, be concentrated in the central body. The powers and duties of commissioners of baths and washhouses, also of public libraries, &c., and how such might be assumed by local authorities.

"The transference to local authorities of certain powers and duties now vested in Poor Law authorities.

"The general mode and extent to which the County Council is capable of administering powers, duties, and obligations, in addition to those now granted to or imposed upon it, and the general evidence of the Corporation in regard to City matters.

"I have been instructed by the Special Committee, to hold myself in readiness to continue my evidence on Wednesday next.

"It will, however, be quite impossible for me to attend on Thursday next, being St. Thomas's Day, as the holding of the various wardmotes will necessitate my personal attendance at Guildhall during the entire day. Under these circumstances, and as the Commissioners will doubtless recognise the convenience of the evidence of the Corporation being continued without any long break, the Special Committee suggest that the resumption of evidence by the Corporation may not disadvantageously be postponed until the first meeting of the Royal Commission in the new year.

"Awaiting an early reply,

"I am Sir,

"Yours faithfully,

"John B. Monckton.

"To G. E. Yorke Gleadowe, Esq."

After discussion it was decided that the following reply should be returned by the Secretary to the Town Clerk.

6547. Sir:—Before replying specifically to your letter of the 18th my Commissioners desire me to express their satisfaction at your resumption to-day of the evidence in relation to the Blue Book put in by the Corporation, and at the intimation they have received from you that this evidence may be followed up by similar evidence from other officers of the Corporation specially acquainted with particular subjects treated of in this Blue Book.

Proceeding to your letter of the 18th, I am directed to say that the Commissioners are very unwilling to pronounce decisively at this moment against the reception of any evidence which may be prepared and submitted to them. They would wish to give the greatest latitude possible to the witnesses before them, but they would lay down as principles guiding their action:—

1st. That all evidence submitted must be relevant to the inquiry with which they are entrusted, namely, "the amalgamation of the City and County of London," including evidence referring to convenient practicability.

2nd. That the evidence given should be, as far as possible, at first hand by those persons best qualified to tender it.

20 Dec 1893.

In accordance with these principles the Commissioners would observe that if evidence were tendered respecting the position, powers, and duties of Vestries, District Boards, Poor Law Authorities, or any other authorities within Metropolitan area, such evidence should come from the authorities themselves; and next that inasmuch as the view the Commissioners take of their task does not extend to the thorough reorganisation of the relations between the County Council, or whatever body may ultimately be at the head of the administration of the Metropolis, and such Vestries, District Boards, and other authorities, the Commissioners do not at once perceive how evidence in relation to these local authorities such as is suggested in your letter comes naturally within the scope of their inquiry. At the same time the Commissioners are aware that the problem of amalgamation may be approached from many points, and might be accomplished in many ways, and they cannot give a final answer as to the possibility of receiving any branch of the evidence in question; and it would be a great assistance to them if they could be favoured by the Corporation with any suggestion or outline of a scheme of amalgamation which would show the relevancy of the proposed evidence to the task they have to discharge.

My Commissioners repeat that they are most unwilling to be supposed to put any obstacle to the reception of evidence, and they make this reply to prevent, if possible, the contingency of evidence being prepared at great expense of time and labour which would in the end appear to be inadmissible.

To the Town Clerk.

Adjourned till Thursday, the 18th January 1894, at 11 a.m.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

18 Jan. 1894.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Thursday, 18th January 1894.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.
MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. EDWARD ORFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, C.M.G., Secretary.

6637. (The Secretary.) Since the last meeting I have received the following letters from the Town Clerk:—

"Royal Commission on the Government of London.
"Guildhall, E.C.,
"MY DEAR SIR, January 5th, 1894.

"A SPECIAL Meeting has been to-day held of the Committee having this matter under their consideration, and your letter of the 20th ultimo has been read and considered. In result I am directed to acknowledge its receipt, and to say that for the immediate purposes of the inquiry the officials and others mentioned in the enclosed list, hold themselves in readiness to give evidence on the subjects set against their respective names. The letter generally is so little in accordance with the expressions and assurances of the President of the Local Government Board at the interview with which he favoured the Special Committee on the 30th day of November last, that it is received by the Committee with the greatest disappointment, and they hope its terms will yet be reconsidered so as to admit of the tender and reception of the greatest possible amount of evidence obtainable on the important question of London government.

"I am
"My dear Sir,
"Yours faithfully,
"JOHN B. MONCKTON.

"Additional:—
"The Superintendents of the several Markets."

In reply, by desire of the Chairman, I sent the following letter:—

30, Abingdon Street, S.W.,
"My Dear Sir, January 9, 1894.

"In reply to your letters of the 5th and 9th instant, I am desired by the Chairman to say that he thinks it would be convenient to take the further evidence which the Corporation have tendered upon their statement in two groups, that relating to Law, Justice and Police on Thursday, January 18th, and the remainder on the following day; and he would be much obliged if you would kindly make arrangements for the attendance of the witnesses whose names are given on the lists enclosed in your letters accordingly, viz.:—

On Thursday.

"The Recorder "The Common Serjeant "The Associate "The Registrar	As to the Central Criminal Court and Mayor's Court.
"Mr. Commissioner Kerr "The Registrar	As to the City of London Court.
"The Commissioner of Police.	As to Police.
"Mr. Youle (Clerk to Justices).	Licensing and other Sessions, City Lunatic Asylum.
"The Coroner	Inquests and Fire Inquests.
"The Secondary	Conduct of City Elections.
"Mr. Douglas (Chief Clerk).	Justice Room, Mansion House.
"Mr. Savill (Chief Clerk)	Justice Room, Guildhall.

On Friday.

"Mr. Overall } (Minuting "Mr. Stanier } Clerks)	As to Open Spaces.
"Mr. Renwick (Secretary City of London School). "Mr. C. P. Smith (Secretary, Guildhall School of Music).	As to Education.
"Dr. Collingridge (Medical Officer).	Port Sanitary.

"Additional:—
"The Superintendents of the several markets.

"I am,
"My Dear Sir,
"Yours faithfully,
"G. Gleadowe."

"To the Town Clerk.

Then I got the following letter:—

"Royal Commission, London Government.

"Guildhall, E.C.,
"My Dear Sir, January 12th, 1894.

"In reply to your letter, for which I thank you, I beg to say that neither Recorder nor Common Serjeant can, having regard to their official duties attend on Thursday.

"This being so, I propose to transpose the days, and that your suggested list for Friday shall be present on, as far as practicable, Thursday, and vice versâ. 18 Jan. 1894.

"The numbers seem large to me, but the Chairman, under whose instructions you write, is the best judge of that.

"I am,
"Yours faithfully,
"John B. Monckton."

"To the Secretary,
"Royal Commission, &c.

I have also received—it was just put into my hands as I came here—a letter from the vestry of Saint Mary Abbott's, Kensington:—

"Offices, Town Hall.
"Kensington High Street,
"Sir, January 17th, 1894.

"I am directed by the Vestry of Kensington, to forward you the enclosed copy of a resolution unanimously passed by them at their meeting this evening, and have to ask that you will be good enough to bring such resolution before the Royal Commission now sitting on the question of the Unification of London, at their meeting to-morrow.

"I am,
"Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"Wm. Chambers Leete,
"Vestry Clerk."

"To the Secretary,
"Royal Commission, &c.

"The Vestry of the Parish of Saint Mary Abbott's, Kensington, in the Administrative County of London.

"Extract from the Minutes of the proceedings of the Vestry of St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington, at a meeting held at the Town Hall, Kensington, on Wednesday, the 17th day of January 1894.

"It was moved by Mr. R. A. Robinson, seconded by Mr. George Nelson Watts, and resolved unanimously:—

"That, in the opinion of this vestry, it is highly desirable, with a view to the preservation of the true principles of local self-government, that in any scheme for the better government of the Metropolis, the powers, duties, and responsibilities of local authorities should be enlarged rather than curtailed, and that this can best be attained by the establishment and incorporation of a number of municipalities, vested with full municipal life and privilege.

"That a copy of the foregoing resolution be communicated to the Corporation of the City of London, with an intimation that in the event of a satisfactory scheme being formulated on the above basis, it will receive the favourable consideration of this vestry.

"That the views of the vestry as embodied in the above resolutions, be forwarded to the Royal Commission now sitting on the question of the Unification of London, and to the President of the Local Government Board.

"Certified to be a true extract,
"William Chambers Leete,
"Vestry Clerk."

6638. (Chairman.) We had better proceed with the reception of the evidence now.

6639. (Mr. Crawford.) I desire to mention, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question of evidence, that most unfortunately the City Chamberlain has been confined to his house during the last four days with an attack of influenza, and the doctor prohibits him from leaving his room. I did not think it necessary to furnish a doctor's certificate with regard to the fact, but to save any inconvenience to the Royal Commissioners, the Town Clerk has taken care that a gentleman who was in the service of the Corporation for a period of 45 years, and under whose supervision the accounts have been annually prepared, will take the Chamberlain's place, and will afford the Royal Commissioners every information in his power, and will also deal with the accounts which have been criticised by Mr. Gomme in his analysis of the Corporation's accounts.

18 Jan. 1894.

6640. (Lord Farrer.) Is that Mr. Payne?

6641. (Mr. Crawford.) That is Mr. Payne, who was principal clerk for a great many years.

6642. (Mr. Crawford.) I think with regard to Mr. Payne you might take him shortly over just the preliminary statement that appears in the Blue Book, and then I believe a proof has been prepared for your guidance, from which, perhaps, it may be convenient for you to examine him.

Mr. W. Payne.

Mr. WILLIAM PAYNE, late Principal Clerk to the Chamberlain of the City of London, called in and examined.

6643. (Chairman.) Will you tell us, Mr. Payne, what your position is?—Until recently I held the office of principal clerk to the Chamberlain of London, a position which I had occupied for nearly 40 years. I have been in the employ of the Corporation for a period of 53 years, and have served under six Chamberlains.

6644. When did you retire?—At the end of November of the last year; the last day of November of 1893.

6645. And you are familiar with the Chamberlain's duties and his accounts?—Yes, I am. Part of my duty was to superintend the entering and posting of the various accounts kept in the Chamber, regard being had to the requirements of the various Acts of Parliament and standing orders of the Court of Common Council regulating the same, and to prepare annually for printing the accounts published by the Corporation; also to attend the Commissioners of Sewers and the various committees of the Corporation, and the auditors of the Chamberlain's and Bridge-master's accounts annually, with the accounts for audit.

6646. What is the precise position of the Chamberlain. You need not go into the history of the office; page 99 at the bottom tells you that?—Page 100 at the bottom. The Chamberlain by the latest deed of covenant, entered into by him with the Corporation, is described as having been from time immemorial treasurer or banker of the City, and in that capacity has had the care and custody of the moneys of the Corporation of London, called the City's cash, and of the several funds committed to the management of the Corporation and of the Chamberlain. This Chamberlain's deed to which reference is made goes on to declare, that in his capacity of treasurer or banker, he has received for his own benefit and advantage the profits and emoluments derived from the interests and dividends and use of the securities and cash balances from time to time in his hands and otherwise from the investment thereof.

6647. What is the date of that deed of covenant you refer to there; do you mean when the present Chamberlain was appointed first?—The present Chamberlain's deed—that is the latest deed—is that of the 26th February 1892, entered into upon the appointment of the present Chamberlain, Sir W. J. Richmond Cotton.

6648. The Chamberlain is elected by the Common Hall?—By the Common Hall.

6649. Is he re-elected every year?—Every year; subject to annual re-election.

6650. He does not enter into a separate deed every year?—No.

6651. He no longer has the interest of his balances for his own personal advantage?—They are regarded as his property, but he has covenanted to limit the amount of the profits which he shall take—the proportion that he shall take. They are still his property as Chamberlain, and it is only by agreement with the Corporation that he has disposed of the profits after having received the salary or the allowance fixed by the Corporation.

6652. Although the interest may be in theory his property, he enters into an arrangement by which he receives a fixed sum out of it, and the rest goes to the Corporation?—The balance after paying all the expenses of the office, and after relieving the various trust funds of any charges that would otherwise be made upon them for the management of their accounts, the remainder—the balance—is then transferred to the credit of the City's cash, but specifically for the purpose of reimbursing certain salaries which are regarded as having some interest and part in the earning of the moneys, that is, the salaries of the Town Clerk, the Comptroller of the Chamber, of the City Solicitor, and their clerks.

6653. And do those salaries together exceed the balance so transferred?—Very considerably.

6654. Will it come in relief of charges which would have to be discharged any way?—Which would have to be discharged by the Corporation any way, no doubt.

6655. There is an annual volume prepared, is there not, of the accounts of the City's cash?—There is; that will be stated very clearly in the subsequent evidence.

6656. How are these accounts prepared?—The accounts of the Corporation, called the Chamberlain's accounts, are prepared and stated as directed by resolutions of the Court of Common Council, of the 13th September 1860, and the 16th November 1871, upon reports of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, and they are printed in conformity with the 46th standing order of the Court of Common Council. May I hand in the two reports mentioned upon which the accounts are rendered?

6657. Were these drawn up by Mr. Scott?—By the Committee; by the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee. The report of 1860 was mainly founded upon suggestions made to the Committee by the late Chamberlain (Mr. Benjamin Scott), who placed himself in communication with the seven largest corporations in the country, and also with the then Home Secretary, to whom such corporations were then required to account, the information derived from which communications showed that the greatest diversity existed as to the form, arrangement and mode of rendering the accounts of the different corporations, and that no particular form of account had been prescribed by the Government. The Committee of 1871 stated that having directed much time and consideration to the subject, they approved the system and form of the accounts generally, but came to certain resolutions recommending modifications in the mode of stating the accounts in their printed form, chiefly with the view of rendering them more explanatory to the members, and ultimately passed the following resolution:—"Resolved unanimously that this Committee, having reviewed the system of 'charge and discharge,' upon which the Corporation Accounts are based, desires to express its unqualified approval of the said system, and it further approves the generally efficient and intelligible mode in which the several accounts of the Corporation are kept in the Office of the Chamberlain." Abstracts of the various accounts are rendered under the signature of the Chamberlain, and the account of the produce and expenditure of the City's Cash prepared for the auditors is supplemented by a statutory declaration, that the same is just and true.

6658. The declaration of the Chamberlain is that?—Yes, by an oath or a statutory declaration of the Chamberlain that the same is just and true; the accounts have been so verified for a period of upwards of 100 years.

6659. (Mr. Crawford.) The reason why I think Mr. Payne is going thus fully into it is because there was some adverse criticism made in regard to the mode in which the Corporation accounts were kept; the phrase used was that they were unnecessarily complicated and complex; and the object of the Chamberlain is to show the Royal Commissioners that there has been every desire on the part of the Corporation to keep their accounts in a perfectly intelligible manner, and he wishes to explain at length why it is that you still find the Corporation accounts kept in their present form. I think it is perhaps desirable, seeing that there has been adverse criticism, that we should have the full explanation?

6660. (Chairman.) You have prepared this evidence in view of certain adverse criticism, have you?—Partly.

6661. Have you got that criticism definitely at hand to refer to?—I have not. This has rather reference to previous criticism.

6662. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Gomme's?—The criticism in Mr. Gomme's evidence is dealt with afterwards.

6663. The Chairman's question to you is whether you have before you the criticism to which you refer?—I have.

6664. Will you kindly point it out to the Chairman?—Yes.

6665. It is in Mr. Gomme's statement?—Yes, in page i of the memorandum furnished by Mr. Gomme to the Commission, and the third paragraph.

6666. Read it out please?—"This method of keeping the accounts makes them very voluminous and "unnecessarily complex, a very large number of the "subsidiary accounts being simply transfers from one "account to another, which apparently do not serve "any purpose of great importance."

6667. I take it your evidence is to show that they do serve a useful purpose?—Yes, I have a memorandum giving some further explanation with regard to the system of the accounts, the reason why they are kept in the form that they are kept; it perhaps bears upon that.

6668. (Chairman.) Go on?—The system of accounts is based upon the consideration that the Chamberlain is treasurer and banker as well as the accountant of the Corporation and his accounts are kept and rendered in a form more in accordance with the custom of a banking business, than the practice adopted in mercantile concerns. No banker, however, would furnish accounts in the amplified form in which they are required by the Corporation or Parliament. Then I remark that although no separate capital accounts distinct from revenue accounts are kept, the items of capital are invariably distinguished from those of revenue in the abstract statements by a line being drawn between the items of revenue and capital. The abstract to be found at the commencement of the last published accounts of the Corporation furnished to the Royal Commissioners will show this.*

6669. (Mr. Crawford.) You had better proceed, Mr. Payne. Every year a tabulated statement of receipts and payments of the City's cash during the previous 10 years is printed and circulated among the members of the Court of Common Council under the direction of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, these series of tabular statements were first published in the year 1857, commencing with the year 1847. I produce copies of such statements. These are tabulated statements of the accounts of the Corporation beginning with 1847 and ending in 1893. An estimate of the probable receipt and expenditure of the City's cash for the current year is also prepared, printed, and published annually under the direction of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee framed chiefly upon the averages of the previous three years. I produce prints of estimates for the four years from 1889 to 1892.

6670. (Chairman.) This is an estimate of what will be the receipts and expenditure for the year?—The estimated account for the City's cash alone, of course, for the information of the Corporation with regard to their own funds—City's cash, not for the accounts connected with the Corporation generally; those are dealt with by the various Committees to whom the Trusts are committed; they, so to speak, manage their own finance, although the Corporation is interested. As to the means at their disposal out of the City's cash, constant applications being made to them for money, they desire to know whether their means are likely to be sufficient to meet those applications for extraordinary expenditure.

6671. (Mr. Crawford.) These estimates refer to the City cash, as distinguished from trust moneys?—Yes.

6672. To what date do the City's accounts go back?—We have a complete series of the accounts of the Corporation, that is to say, the City's cash,—in a good state of preservation, the first copy of which is on the table of the Commissioners, I think, commencing with the year 1633.

6673. You have that here?—I have that here.

6674. And you have every account since the year 1633?—1633, yes.

6675. In the same form in which we see that account?—No, by no means in the same form; in the form modified from time to time as the circumstances of the Corporation required modification, I might say that it has been modified partly twice within my own period of service, on reports of the Committee, which have been quoted already, those of 1860 and 1871, mainly 1860.

6676. How long have the accounts been printed as they are now?—Since 1784.

6677. Printed and published?—Printed and published, and circulated to the members of the Court of Common Council, and accessible to any citizen on payment of a small fee.

6678. (Chairman.) And all these accounts are audited also?—Yes.

6679. How are they audited?—The accounts of the City's cash and certain accounts connected with the City's Estate, the Bridge House Estates, the Gresham Fund, the Epping Forest Fund (capital and income), and Ward's People's Recreation Ground Fund are audited by the auditors appointed by the Livery in Common Hall, in pursuance of Act XI. Geo. 1. cap. 18. The Epping Forest Accounts are so audited in pursuance of section 42 of the Epping Forest Act, 1878, and the account of the Ward's People's Recreation Ground Fund, in accordance with a scheme sanctioned by the Chancery Division of the High Court, on the 12th of August 1886. The other Public and Trust Funds are likewise audited by the City Auditors, and are also audited by the several Committees charged by the Corporation with their administration.

6680. Are these auditors appointed annually?—The auditors are appointed annually.

6681. In Common Hall?—In Common Hall.

6682. Do the same persons serve year after year?—No, for two years only; they are changed every two years. Every year two new auditors are elected who serve for two years, they then go out of office, and they may be re-elected after an interval of one year or more, but they go out of office.

6683. How many auditors are there?—Four.

6684. Four, and two go out every year?—Two go out every year.

6685. And are ineligible for one year?—For one year.

6686. You have an annual examination of securities apparently?—In the month of December in every year the Chairman of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, accompanied by a deputation of two or three members, attends at the Chamberlain's Office to examine and check the securities in the strong room belonging to the Chamberlain in his official capacity, and those deposited by bankers and others, as collateral securities for moneys temporarily deposited in connexion with various trusts and public funds the moneys of which have been invested, and to examine the certificates and to verify the registered stocks, &c. in the names of trustees in the Bank of England and elsewhere belonging to the Corporation, and the various trusts connected therewith as shown by the books in the chamber.

* See Gomme, 10,685.

Mr. W. Payne.

18 Jan. 1894.

6687. (Mr. Crawford.) In addition to the public audit that you refer to, is there not a system of "charge and discharge"—will you explain that to the Royal Commissioners—which acts as a further check upon the accuracy of the accounts; I think you give it on page 4?—That is the system which is applied in connexion with the audit of accounts; the Comptroller, who is an independent officer, reports annually to the Court of Common Council, and his report is usually printed and circulated among the members of the Court: he reports the total amount of charge upon the Chamber, so far as the City's cash is concerned, and the Bridge House Estates; and he afterwards at the time of the audit reports to the auditors from his own books the particulars of the amount of the revenues which were receivable—which should have been received—by the Chamberlain in order that the auditors may make them the basis of the examination of the accounts.*

6688. That is to say, the Comptroller, a separate officer, makes his report as to what ought to have been received by the Chamberlain?—Yes.

6689. And before the Chamberlain can discharge himself he has to account for that?—He has to account for what he ought to have received.

6690. That is what you call "charge and discharge"?—Charge and discharge. The Chamberlain discharges himself at the audit by the production of the warrants and vouchers with the receipts attached of those to whom the moneys were ordered to be paid by the Courts or Committees having the control and administration of the funds.

6691. (Chairman.) How is this Comptroller appointed?—By the Court of Common Council; he is one of the high officers of the Corporation.

6692. Not in Common Hall?—Not in Common Hall; by the Common Council.

6693. Annually?—He is subject to annual re-election.

6694. (Lord Farrer.) He always is re-elected, I suppose?—He always has been in my experience—the Comptroller.

6695. (Mr. Crawford.) He is called, is he not, the Vice-Chamberlain or Deputy-Chamberlain?—Yes; he is the Vice or Deputy Chamberlain.

6696. (Chairman.) Does he sit in the Chamberlain's office?—No, he has a distinct office of his own; he has many duties to perform besides charge and discharge; he is the conveyancing officer of the Corporation, and he has custody of all the title deeds of the Corporation, of very great value, which are under his charge and control; but he sits in the Chamberlain's office, that is, in the Chamberlain's chair, when he performs his duties as Vice-Chamberlain, in regard to apprentices, the adjudication upon apprentices; in the absence of the Chamberlain it is his duty to act as his "Vice."

6697. (Mr. Crawford.) But he has nothing to do with the Chamberlain's office in connexion with the accounts?—He has nothing to do with the Chamberlain's office in connexion with the accounts excepting occasional communication between the two departments on the subject of the charge; furnishing particulars of moneys receivable with details of the rents from time to time as settled by the Corporation, and weekly market revenues.

6698 Is there any Standing Order relative to the mode in which the Chamberlain has to honour warrants or cheques for payment of moneys?—Yes; there are several Standing Orders regulating that matter.

6699. Will you give us the principal one, Mr. Payne, you refer to; on page 4, I see you refer to it?—The 50th Standing Order, for instance, of the Court of Common Council requires that no warrant for a sum exceeding 100 guineas is to be honoured by the Chamberlain unless the date of the Order of the Court consenting thereto is inserted in such warrant. The Court of Common Council limits the expenditure of the moneys of the Corporation by the various Committees, and unless, pursuant to the Standing Order, the resolution of the Court of Common Council consenting to the expenditure is inserted in the warrant, the Chamberlain can pay no warrant exceeding the sum of 100 guineas, and that only on the assumption that the purpose for which the money is drawn has been in general terms previously referred to the Committee as part of the business of the Committee to carry out. That is to say, there is no unlimited power of drawing upon the funds of the Chamber by Committees.

6700. (Mr. Holt.) Would it be in the power of the auditors to criticise any payment that was made and to object to any such payment as not coming within the terms of the Trust; have the auditors not the power of criticising that?—I should say certainly, if they found that any payment was not within the terms of the Trust to their knowledge, or was not within the Standing Orders of the Court of Common Council, I should say decidedly it would be their duty to point it out.

6701. It is their duty to examine the nature of the payments as well as the amount, to see vouchers; it is more than simply an audit of payments?—Yes, that they are in conformity with the Acts of Parliament under which the trusts are managed and also with the Standing Orders of the Court of Common Council; it is not held to be the duty of the auditors to criticise the nature of the payment, the amount of the payment, nor to criticise the bills or the accounts thereof, or to object to the expenditure itself; provided that it be Corporation expenditure, and expended under the regulations and rules of the Corporation. They have no power of surcharge like that which is given to auditors, I think, under the Municipal Corporations Act and other Acts.

6702. (Chairman.) The Corporation is completely master of its own cash?—Of its own cash.

6703. And the duty of these auditors is to see that the cash is spent in accordance with the regulations of the Corporation?—Of the Corporation.

6704. (Mr. Smith.) As matter of fact there is no power of surcharge in connexion with Municipal Corporations, you are thinking of Local Government Audit?—Local Government Audit.

6705–6. (Mr. Crawford.) The auditors present their report to the Livery, do they not?—The auditors present their report to the Livery annually. I have copies of the annual reports for the last four years, which have been sent to the Livery, and have been subsequently reported to the Court of Common Council by the Town Clerk, who is the officer of the Livery meeting or Court of Common Hall: and those accounts are usually printed—always, indeed—printed and circulated in the minutes to every member of the Court. These are the minutes, Mr. Chairman, each year containing the reports of the audit of the account of the previous year, the accounts ending 31st December.

6707. (Mr. Crawford.) Those are minutes of the Court of Common Council, and they contain copies of the auditors' reports?—They do.

6708. (Chairman.) How do you keep your securities?—The debenture bonds and other floating securities belonging to the Corporation, the Chamberlain, and the several trusts, are kept in safes in the innermost strong room of the Chamber, those representing investments on behalf of the profit and loss account of the Chamberlain's Office, in safe No. 1 the securities for moneys deposited as collateral securities for moneys lent at interest, subject to withdrawal at call or on notice, in safe No. 2 and in a third safe the securities held on behalf of the various public and trust funds, all of which pursuant to the regulations described above are kept under three locks, the keys being held respectively by the Chamberlain, his chief clerk, and cashier, the presence of all of whom is required for the unlocking of each safe. The registered stocks and debentures which are not strictly payable to bearer only in the case of the profit and loss or banking account of the Chamberlain are registered in the names of the Chamberlain, his chief clerk, and cashier, and all other debentures and inscribed stocks, not being bearer bonds, belonging to the City's cash and the trust funds are registered in the names of the Corporation trustees, viz., the Chamberlain, the Town Clerk, and the Comptroller of the Chamber.

6709. Now, has there ever been any loss of the City funds in recent years?—Not certainly within the present century, nor, I think, has there been any loss, so far as the general funds of the Chamber are recorded, for two or three centuries. I think in one case of a Chamberlain appointed by the Crown, it was reported there was some difficulty, but within living memory there has never been any kind of defalcation in regard to the funds of the Corporation in the Chamberlain's Department.

6710. And so far, irrespective of the subject upon which money has been spent, the money has been always strictly accounted for and strictly kept?—Yes.

6711. You have looked through Mr. Gomme's statement upon your accounts?—Yes, I have carefully read through the statement put in by Mr. Gomme, and also the evidence given by him in support of the same.

6712. What is the first observation you have to make?—Well on page ii the first statement relative to the funds of the Corporation is, that in the four years' transactions on the General Estates a net deficit of revenue of 74,001*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* is shown, made up by Mr. Gomme as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
A surplus balance, 1889, of -	641	16	6
A minus or deficit balance in 1890 of - - -	19,599	14	0
and in 1891 a minus or deficit balance of -	33,574	7	6
and in 1892 a minus or deficit balance of -	21,469	14	5
resulting in a net deficit amount for the four years of - -	74,001	19	5

as mentioned by Mr. Gomme. This is shown by Mr. Gomme at pages 9, 17, 25, and 33 of his statement.* I say I have found it difficult or impossible to trace clearly the way in which this deficit is made up. Assuming that the deficit can be satisfactorily accounted for in the way that has been stated by Mr. Gomme, I have to remark that such a deficit cannot be regarded as arising from normal expenditure. It may be explained in a way, perhaps, more satisfactory than the explanation which is given by Mr. Gomme in the sentence following on the page. And I have also a remark to make which, perhaps, I might make at this time, that the way some of the items of which this assumed deficit is composed are made up is beyond my comprehension. As to the real reason for it, as set out in page 9, for instance, in which he places the net balance, I think I may leave these two pages; the net balance of revenue for the year, I do not object to that, but in page 17, that is for the year 1890——

6713. (Chairman.) Is this Roman xvii?—No, Arabic 17. The deficit amounting in 1890, in his total, is made up of these items:—

	£	s.	d.
Schools - - -	9,413	11	9
Pensions to officers - -	1,012	11	7
Almshouses - - -	1,925	13	1
Donations - - -	7,247	17	7

I cannot understand why those amounts are aggregated together making the balance of 19,599*l.* 14*s.* as they do, unless it is to balance the account of the revenue and expenditure in some form.†

6714. (Mr. Crawford.) You had better deal with the next two years while you are on that—1891 and 1892?—The same thing applies to the next two years: 1891, page 25, and there the amount of 33,574*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* is made up of a balance of revenue, 1,971*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*; Schools, 14,060*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*; Pensions to school officers, 1,787*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*; Almshouses, 1,975*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*; Donations, 6,548*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*; Library Museum and Art Gallery, 7,232*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*, making a total of 33,574*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* for the year 1891.

6715. (Chairman.) You need not go through these, let us understand exactly, do you quarrel with these figures as results?—I am not able to trace really under what heads those deficiencies should be placed. It cannot be these heads; these particular amounts have been paid during the year 1891 by the Corporation, but I do not see that they have any relation to the deficiency which Mr. Gomme has made out. The deficiencies must have arisen from the general expenditure of the Corporation as compared with the general receipts. There have been payments out of the general revenues of the Corporation in aid of schools.

6716. Quite so; but the Corporation does receive annually certain sums in respect of its schools; fees of the City of London School, for example?—Yes.

6717. And it has an annual expenditure in respect of schools?—Yes.

6718. In the year 1891, did the expenditure exceed the receipts by 14,000*l.*?—No, I do not say that it did. Because we had not any receipts from schools so far as the City's cash is concerned. There is expenditure, amounting to 14,060*l.*, in support of schools, but there were no receipts; it must have been paid, undoubtedly, out of the general revenues of the Corporation, but why that particular item should be assigned as the cause of the deficiency I cannot tell; it is one of the items of the expenditure of the Corporation, that is all.

6719. You mean to say the Lord Mayor's salary might have been put down as the cause?—That might have been put down as the cause, or any other item of expenditure might have been put down as the cause with quite as much propriety, I think. I cannot understand; I can only explain that I do not understand this mode of accounting for the deficiency, but I may be allowed afterwards to explain.

6720. Does it amount to this: that you object to the classification of the accounts?—I do, in that respect; to me it is incomprehensible why it should be set down against those items.

6721. If certain branches of expenditure and receipt are distinct in character, and you can say how much the expenditure exceeds receipt or the other way, if you can keep those apart from the general accounts of the Corporation; does it not facilitate a knowledge of the whole transactions to keep them separate?—I do not think it does; I apprehend the reason why perhaps these amounts are set down here is because they come under what are called "optional expenditure" on the part of the Corporation, an expenditure which the Corporation are free to disburse or otherwise. I apprehend the Corporation could limit their expenditure on any other items of their account, if it was their will, in preference to limiting it upon this. Almost all the expenditure of the Corporation may be said to be optional; they are not bound to pay the salaries that they do, and other expenditure to the same extent.

6722. It is not to the discredit of the Corporation that they are shown to be spending a good sum of money upon schools?—I think not.

6723. (Mr. Crawford.) What is the explanation, Mr. Payne, with regard to the deficit?—If I were asked to account for the deficiency I should say it could be accounted for in a more satisfactory way. An amount exceeding the amount which Mr. Gomme has mentioned as expenditure, the total being 86,216*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* made up of the following items—if you would desire me to read them, for the year 1889——

6724. (Chairman.) No, wait a moment; do not go through them all separately?—There are items of special works which are not likely to recur, and were much more of an optional character than those selected by Mr. Gomme; the erection of Billingsgate Buildings, for instance, was not incumbent upon the Corporation, they incurred that expenditure with a view to assisting Billingsgate Market, and they spent that money on the erection of buildings contiguous to the market, consisting of 7,502*l.*, I think, in 1889, 14,983*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* in 1890, in 1891, 4,117*l.* 18*s.* 0*d.*, and in 1892 for the completion, or nearly so, of the buildings, 3,987*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* Those amounts were all entirely optional expenditure and, in fact, of a remunerative character; the buildings were built and are let as offices and for the purposes of the fish trade, and are remunerative; other extra expenditure coming upon the Corporation without perhaps proper notice is here mentioned and other expenditure which has been of entirely a voluntary kind—technical education, for instance, 1,000*l.* each year; equipment of volunteers also 1,000*l.* in that year; and parliamentary disbursements in respect of gas and water which the Corporation has incurred not only for the citizens but for the metropolis at large in the year 1892, 4,703*l.* 7*s.* 0*d.* The total of these expenses, which, if one had to select and say what was the cause of that deficiency, are those which I should select certainly in preference to those which have been selected by Mr. Gomme to account for the deficiency, and the total of those is 86,216*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* being excess of the 74,000*l.* shown as the deficiency.*

6725. You do not quarrel with th final result; the final statement of deficiency is accurate?—I do not quarrel with it because I cannot discover the foundation of it really and how he makes it up.

6726. Is it the final total result that you cannot discover or the allocation?—It is in fact a cash deficiency, from which he separates what to the Corporation is cash, really, received from the reserve fund. For instance, the 20,000*l.* during that period which came into the account as cash represents previous savings; another item also of some 32,497*l.*, which is carried to the credit of the City's cash from the reserve fund, also belonging to the Corporation, came in as cash, being repayment of a loan which had been advanced by the Corporation about 15 years, I think, before to the Kew and other bridge committee at compound interest. They were not to receive the interest year by year because they were not in possession of the Coal Duties until the year 1889. They then repaid the whole, I think, with compound interest at 3¾ per cent.; that amounted to 32,497*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* Now, the Corporation did not apply that towards the above expenditure, amounting to 86,216*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, but they applied the money towards the discharge of a portion of the Holborn Valley debt, which I shall refer to if you will allow me afterwards to show that the Corporation have been in the habit of reducing debt beyond what has been recognised or allowed in Mr. Gomme's statement. But the deficiency, supposing it to be allowed that the statement is correct, is to be accounted for in a different way altogether, and in a more satisfactory way so far as the Corporation's finances are concerned than in the way in which Mr. Gomme has accounted for it.

6727. (Lord Farrer.) Will you allow me to say that I think you make a mistake in thinking that the account No. VIII. is an account of the deficiency; the balance is carried forward from one account to another, and No. VIII. is only the final result of Mr. Gomme's account; as far as I understand it the deficiency may arise in any one of the items contained in the previous accounts, therefore the thing to attack is not the expenditure for optional purposes, that is not what he puts in as the cause of the deficiency; the cause of that deficiency, if there is a deficiency, arises from the whole of the expenditure. The other answer that you give is that the expenditure in these years is exceptional; and that, no doubt, is a good reply if that is an expenditure which will never recur?—I do not contend that; as I say, I am not satisfied with the way in which that account is made up. If Lord Farrer's observations refer to the analysis of the General Funds which are dealt with by Mr. Gomme I think his intention is to show that these are all matters connected with the General Estates of the Corporation. You will see in the statement to which allusion is now made that he mixes up Bridge House Estates and the City of London Grain Duty, and the Gresham Estates and a number of other funds, but I do not think he has carried forward either plus balances or minus balances arising from those funds to his ultimate deficiency. He has dropped those balances in some way which I am not perhaps able to explain.*

6728. You cannot point that out?—I cannot point out that; he has brought all the balances against the general estates of the Corporation, but he shews that during these years there was a deficiency of over 74,000*l.* He says that we have sold property for the purpose of partly making up the deficiency. I can hardly admit that I can account for these items.

6729. (Mr. Smith.) Have you had these figures tested by any independent accountant?—Tested? Well, no. I do not know that any independent accountant has done that. I think many friends have tried their hands at them, but have failed to fathom them.*

6730. (Lord Farrer.) Have you made out any statement of your own of the balance of these four years?—Yes.

6731. Have you got that?—I have subsequently.

6732. It will come afterwards?—If you will allow me, after the criticism of Mr. Gomme's statement.

6733. I only interrupted, because I thought you misapprehended Mr. Gomme's meaning. Mr. Gomme, I am satisfied, does not intend to say that the deficiency has arisen upon this particular account, but upon the whole of the accounts.*

6734. (Mr. Crawford.) No, but if you look, Lord Farrer, at page ii. you will see the statement which is put forward. I think the only deduction is, when you come to explain the items—the deduction which Mr. Payne has drawn. It may not have been the intention of Mr. Gomme, but his observations are open to that deduction.*

6735. (Mr. Smith.) Does it very much matter if you have got the final result admitted?

6736. (Mr. Crawford.) It matters in this way; that Mr. Gomme, although stating that there has been a deficiency, does not, as we say, accurately show how that deficiency has arisen, whereas Mr. Payne is now explaining to you how that deficiency has arisen.

6737. (Mr. Smith.) Mr. Payne does not seem quite capable of doing that, I think?

6738. (Mr. Crawford.) I think he was stopped; he was going to give you items, and the Chairman suggested that he had better not go through them all?—Mr. Gomme has another way of explaining this, how this 74,001*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* was provided; that follows on page 2. This deficit was made up by (1) a reduction of the cash balances from 46,137*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* at the beginning of 1889 to 7,930*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* at the end of 1892, or a total reduction of 38,206*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*; (2) transfers from the reserve fund of 28,821*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, and (3) sales of property, 6,984*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* Then he gives the balances at the beginning of each year, and the balances at the end of each year, bringing out an ultimate balance of 74,001*l.* Well, in that account he admits that he does mix up certain of these accounts, but they are not so mixed up that I could at all object to it; merely these amounts that he adds to the City's estate generally are all connected with the City's estate and all bear upon it. These are brought in; for financial purposes and for necessary purposes these accounts are all kept separate from the City's cash, the City's estate, but these amounts, these balances form an unimportant part of the 74,000*l.* The main deficiency arises from the City's cash expenditure. The reserve fund, for instance, is brought into the account in order to show part of that deficiency. The reserve fund is kept separate from the City's estate. That is a mixture, but it is not so much mixed as I thought at first it was, looking to the way in which the accounts are stated in the pages to which allusions have been made in these several years. In the Arabic figures he has not brought forward any balance more or less either upon the Bridge House estates or upon the City of London Court account, or upon the Gresham account, therefore he has not completely amalgamated these funds in bringing out the balances, he has brought them out after his own method, but it makes it to me equally unsatisfactory as being a true deficiency, excessive expenditure on the City estates for those years. I admit that the accounts of the Corporation from the point of view in which he has stated them somehow or other permit of such a balance being brought out, but the actual figures which I can refer to shew that afterwards the amount of the expenditure in excess of receipts during the four years was 38,200*l.* and not 74,001*l.

* See Gomme, 10,683.

* See Gomme, 10,683.

6740. In all the four years?—But, as matter of fact, it is only a matter of cash between the beginning of the four years and the end of the four years without going into the question whether it was annual expenditure, and whether it was incurred during that period or not 6741. (Mr. Smith.) Your accounts are cash accounts, are they not—they are not assets and liabilities?—They are not assets and liabilities.

6742. Then it would be strictly correct, would it not, to treat the figures as cash, because this only purports, I understand, to be an exemplification of the City Chamberlain's accounts?—It is an analysis of the Chamberlain's accounts, of all the accounts put together.

6743. Substantially, does not your evidence come to this: that while you agree with the total you differ as to the allocation?—I differ as to the allocation, but I cannot say that I agree with the total.

6744. Do you disagree with it?—I could not make it out to my satisfaction; that is all I say.

6745. (Mr. Crawford.) He does disagree with it?—Why should he bring the balance out minus as he has set out here; it could not be so, I think.

6746. (Lord Farrer.) Can you detect the errors into which he has fallen—he gives all his figures in detail?—Well, I do not say that they are errors, he shows the figures, but it does not, I think, truly represent that in the four years the transactions of the general estates and funds, there was a net deficit in income of 74,001*l.*

6747. (Chairman.) Well, now, take the first year, Mr. Payne, page ii of Mr. Gomme's statement. Is it true that you keep in your accounts these separate balances, City Estates, Library Account, School of Music, and so on?—Yes, but they are kept distinct.

6748. They are separate balances?—They are separate balances and separate accounts.

6749. Very well; and does that first column represent the balance shown by your accounts at the beginning of the year?—I have no doubt it does.

6750. And does the second column represent the balance at the end of the year?—I have no doubt it does.

6751. And the third column represents the increase or diminution of balance at the end of the year?—Yes; I have no doubt of it.

6752. Very well, taking these accounts together they show at the end of the year an increase of balance of 641*l.*?—Yes, an increase of balance; that is so.

6753. Do you dissent from that?—I do not dissent from it; I do not dissent from the figures.

6754. And in detail that 641*l.* represents an increase of some of the balances and a decrease of others, and so with respect to the apparent diminution of balances in the next year, 19,000*l.*, the bottom of the same page?—Yes.

6755. Do you dissent from those figures?—No.

6756. Then do you allow that those figures bring out the alterations of balances in the course of the four years?—Yes.

6757. The alteration of balances, therefore, in the course of the four years would show a diminution of 74,000*l.* on the balances?—On the balances, yes.

6758. Then do you quarrel with the explanation by which that diminution has been brought out?—Yes; not here, of course; I do not quarrel with the way in which he accounts for the diminution of the accounts on pages 7, 9, 17, 25, and 33, so set forth, which I have enumerated previously.

6759. Whereas on accounts you admit a diminution of balances of nearly 20,000*l.* in 1890?—Yes.

6760. Mr. Gomme accounts for that by saying that 9,000*l.* was spent over receipts in respect of schools; you would say, "I will account for that by so many "thousand pounds being spent upon buildings at "Billingsgate, and so many thousands elsewhere*"?—Yes, that is my evidence.

6761. That is the purport of your criticism?—Yes.

6762. (Mr. Crawford.) Then you go a little further, do you not; I think Mr. Payne, in answer to Lord Farrer, you stated that you did not agree with the total amount, of the deficit, whereas Mr. Gomme makes it 74,000*l.*, you bring it out with your explanation at 39,000*l.*

6763. (Mr. Smith.) That is only by taking one item out, which is cash.

6764. (Mr. Crawford.) Well, I do not quite understand Mr. Payne's objection, and perhaps you will explain it please?—I shall do so when I get to that item: I think it would be better to go on with Mr. Gomme's analysis.

6765. You want to go on in your own way?—I want to explain subsequently how that 74,000*l.* is made up, and from what accounts. I have furnished the 10 years' statements.

6766. You have gone carefully through the statement, and you have dealt with it page by page, and you want so to deal with it before the Commissioners, is that so?—I should like to do so; I thought at this juncture I might say that with an expenditure during those four years of something like 206,446*l.*, that could not be said to be obligatory upon the Corporation, there is an abundant margin for the 74,000*l.* which is alleged to have been expended beyond our resources.

6767. (Chairman.) How much money?—206,446*l.*

6768. What page are you on?—Page 13, made up of the items of the previous pages, 86,000*l.* and 89,000*l.*, which includes the amount paid off the Holborn Valley debt, which at the time was not obligatory on the Corporation, nor even at that time was the interest obligatory upon them, because the interest would not fall upon them until the whole of the assets belonging to that fund were exhausted. They undertook to pay that interest at once, and the other items mentioned, namely, 9,445*l.* and 21,324*l.* amounted to 206,446*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.

6769. You bring out of what you call optional expenditure certain extraordinary expenses of 86,000*l.* in four years, 89,000*l.* odd paid off the Holborn Valley debt, and certain other charges, some small, but some considerable?—Yes.

6770. The Grain Duty charge?—I did not make a point about expenditure for police because that will be contested, but there have been investments on account of the City of London Grain Duty Sinking Fund towards the discharge of debt, namely, in 1890, 11,872*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*; in 1891, 7,622*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*; and in 1892, 1,829*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* which would be a portion of the 74,000*l.*

6771. (Mr. Crawford.) During the years 1890, 1891, and 1892 there has been 9,445*l.* additional contribution from the City's cash towards the London Police

Mr. W. Payne.

18 Jan. 1894.

Force?—Which might go towards accounting for the 74,000*l.* in preference to the items which are mentioned by Mr. Gomme as accounting for it.

6772. (Chairman.) Well, now, go on. "The plan "of this analysis" Mr. Gomme states, "of the accounts of the Corporation of the City is devised to "show the entire financial operations of the Corporation for the four years 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892." And then, again, I take the next paragraph: "The "materials from which the analysis has been prepared "are the published accounts of the Chamberlain." He enumerates them. My answer to that is: The analysis is prepared with a view to an amalgamation of the accounts in order to show the result of the unification of all the funds at the disposal of the Corporation, whether free or connected with Trusts or funds created by Act of Parliament, or the financial position of the Corporation as a whole. In my judgment it is a misleading hypothesis to assume that in the event of the amalgamation or unification of the City with the rest of the metropolis as regards Local Government or administration, the funds of the City could be consolidated in the manner suggested by the analysis. The property and Trusts must undoubtedly be transferred unimpaired and unaltered to any new Authority to which their future administration may be committed."*

6773. (Chairman.) I am not quite sure that you have understood him there. You say that he brings in Trust funds as well as the ordinary funds of the Corporation?—Yes, funds that the Corporation holds in trust only apparently.

6774. Is it not also the case where the Corporation is under an ultimate obligation in case of the failure of the specific funds of the Trust?—It includes such funds undoubtedly; the whole of them are brought in—he brings the whole of them in, of every character.

6775. (Lord Farrer.) But with regard to all of them the City expends the money and is liable?—But it could not take in all these surpluses from any of those funds; it could not appropriate the surpluses.

6776. (Chairman.) It is liable to make good a deficiency?—It may be liable to make good a deficiency, that is all. It does happen in some funds; it is a complaint. I can point out certain cases.

6777. (Lord Farrer.) Surely you are going a little beyond what we are dealing with when you say "if London were unified." This is merely an attempt to analyse the accounts of the City as they have stood in these years. There is no hypothesis involved in it at all?—He states it himself.

6778. There is no hypothesis involved except that the City has to deal with all these funds, and is liable for deficiencies upon these funds.

6779. (Mr. Crawford.) I fancy, Lord Farrer, you will find later on in his statement that he uses these words, or very similar words himself, if my memory serves me rightly.

6780. (Lord Farrer.) He may state what would happen supposing there were unification—but that statement is quite independent of the analysis itself.

6781. (Mr. Crawford.) At pages 41 and 42, I fancy it is.

6782. (Lord Farrer.) Now, I should like to ask you, you do not dispute the accuracy of the figures as they stand, that is, the 74,000*l.*—you do not dispute the accuracy of the figures as they are taken?—No.

6783. You do dispute what we may call the ledgering—the way in which they are appropriated—the way in which the deficiency is appropriated?—Yes.*

6784. Has the City any ledger account of its own which would show how they would appropriate it?—No.

6785. There is no general account, that is to say?—Of course the City ledgers and the ledgers of he various funds all speak for themselves.

6786. But it is not ledgered into one account?—No; they have never amalgamated or consolidated their accounts together, for the reasons I have stated, that they are separate trusts, they have no direct bearing on one another. The only position of bearing which the trust funds may have upon the funds of the Corporation is the privilege of making up any deficiency that may arise; but they do not assume any deficiency in anticipation.

6787. But you have no account which shows on one page the whole of the receipts and payments of the Corporation from year to year?—Yes. I cannot say that, because a sheet is issued every year.

6788. That is a balance sheet?—Which sheet contains a list of the obligations of the Corporation.

6789. That is the capital?—Many of which have been incurred—all of which have been incurred—in respect of these trust funds, and if there should be any necessity for recourse to the City's cash in consequence of there being any deficiency on the trust funds there are the estates of the Corporation to meet them.

6790. I know that, that sheet—I used a wrong expression—I mean a cash account. You have no cash account which shows how the City stands upon all those operations?—No, there is no such account.

6791. I want to ask you one further question; Mr. Gomme has given, at page vi, a statement of what he considered exceptional expenditure,—do you agree with that, or do you not agree with it? Page vi?—Yes; I agree with that—that that is so far exceptional, but not final. That does not contain the whole of the items, because I have given a number of others.

6792. You think there are other items besides?—There are other items.

6793. You agree that it is exceptional, but you think there are other items which are also exceptional?—Yes.

6794. (Mr. Smith.) That includes the Billingsgate Buildings, which I notice you have referred to?—Yes.

6795. (Chairman.) All those are enumerated in them specially?—They are: those amount to 64,000*l.*; they come very near up to the mark.

6796. (Mr. Crawford.) I notice in the statement which you have handed in to the Chairman—take the year 1889, your figure is 20,107*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* as against Mr. Gomme's 16,740*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; for 1890, 26,753*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, as against 21,425*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*; for 1891, it is 16,540*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*, as against 13,498*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.*; and in 1892, it is 22,814*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* as against 12,957*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.?—That is so, Sir.

6797. (Chairman.) That is partly because you have put in amongst the extraordinary expenditure, such things as contributions towards technical education fund and the equipment of the volunteers?—Yes.

6798. Scarcely capital expenditure that?—No, I regard it as exceptional expenditure, not likely to recur.

6799. In a great Corporation like the City has been and may continue to be, that sort of expenditure could scarcely be curtailed?—The same expenditure would come under some other head if the Corporation could afford it.

6800. (Mr. Smith.) Did not you get some money from the Government for technical education?

6801. (Mr. Crawford.) Not a penny. The Government got some from us.

6802. (Chairman.) We need not go into those details?—Mr. Gomme says, at page 1, paragraph 3, "This "method of keeping accounts makes them very "voluminous and unnecessarily complex." I reply to that, that the apparent complexity arises from the necessity of keeping the produce and expenditure of the City's estate (City's cash) separate from that of public and trust funds regulated by various Acts of Parliaments, deeds, wills, &c. the receipts and expenditure of which cannot be properly amalgamated with one another or with the City's cash.

* See Gomme, 10,683.

* See Gomme, 10,683.

Those only are kept separate which are essentially distinct, and could not be legally consolidated. The revenue from the City markets, however, ought not to be separated from the City's cash, because they form part of the general estates of the Corporation, and are not trust estates but are "at the free disposal of the Corporation."

6803. (Chairman.) That is your remark?—That is my remark. The funds connected with the Bridge House estates, Gresham estates, and the Grain Duty should not be amalgamated with the City's estates, being subject to wills and Acts of Parliament, &c. Those are my remarks about the complexity of the accounts.*

6804. All that amounts to is that they are properly complex or properly divided up, although it may be necessary for that general view to bring them together?—That is my view, yes. Then: "A very "large number of subsidiary accounts being simply "transfers from one account to another."

6805. (Mr. Crawford.) That is a statement by Mr. Gomme?—By Mr. Gomme. My answer, is, that there are no unnecessary subsidiary accounts. Although stated to be a very large number, Mr. Gomme does not instance one; a reason, however, could be given for each of the very few subsidiary accounts (not more than six) which are so kept for convenience or perspicuity; those only are kept separate which are essentially distinct.

6806. (Chairman.) Mr. Gomme did not use the word "unnecessarily"; he did not say they were unnecessarily subsidiary?—No, he did not use that word; he said there were a great number simply transfers, and so on.

6807. You may both be right?—According to his opinion.

6808. Your method of keeping the account may be perfectly right for your own purpose, to show how each branch of expenditure and each account is kept, and yet it may be necessary for the general purpose of considering the financial position of the City to bring them all together?—Yes.

6809. And that is what Mr. Gomme has attempted to do?—Yes. He says:—"One object of the "analysis has been to resolve the whole transactions "into a simple matter of receipt and expenditure, "and the result is to show what a small sphere the "whole financial transactions of the Corporation "occupy in London municipal affairs." If I may be allowed to remark upon that, had the only object of the analysis been to resolve the whole transactions into a simple matter of receipt and expenditure, no objection could be taken. But the analysis does not include the whole financial transactions of the Corporation. If it had done so the result would have been to show that the sphere the Corporation occupies in London is not small as compared with that of the London County Council. The whole financial transactions of the City, including the banking transactions of the Chamberlain, amounted in the year 1892, receipts and payments, to the aggregate of 5,702,091*l.* 17*s.* 7½*d.* (I have put it here pounds, shillings, and pence, I should rather have said about five millions and a half), while those of the County Council, as shown by their published accounts of receipts and payments for the year ending 31st March, 1892 (they include certain transfers made from one account to another, which appear to be objected to by Mr. Gomme), appear to amount to an aggregate of about eleven millions and a half. So that while the City accounts amount to five and a half millions the County Council amount to eleven millions and a half.

6810. (Lord Farrer.) And what are the items which you think Mr. Gomme has left out in this analysis?—He has not brought them in.

6811. Which he has not brought in?—He takes a very limited number of the receipts of the Corporation.

6812. Well, I am asking you what are there which he has not taken into account?—I hardly know what he has taken into account. He says the object of the analysis is to show——

6813. Never mind his object; what I want to know is, what further accounts there are of the City that Mr. Gomme has not taken into account?—He has omitted the reserve fund, for instance, Clerkenwell improvement, and other accounts.

6814. I think that is brought in?—He does not show anything like the amount of the whole of the transactions of the City.

6815. (Mr. Smith.) He would not show movements of capital account. That is what you mean, is it?—He does no show the banking transactions of the Chamberlain.

6816. No; it only professes, you know, to be an analysis of the Chamberlain's book?—Yes.

6817. There is no figure in this that is not in the Chamberlain's book; and I take it that there is no figure in the Chamberlain's book that is not in the analysis.

6818. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes; but what Mr. Payne objects to, Mr. Smith, is the remark of Mr. Gomme that "one object of the analysis has been to resolve "the whole transactions into a simple matter of "receipt and expenditure, and the result is to show "what a small sphere the whole financial transac-"tions of the Corporation occupy in London Municipal "affairs."

6819. (Mr. Smith.) I think you will not find much of that upon the evidence. We have taken very little notice upon controversial information.

6820. (Mr. Crawford.) It has gone out to the world—we know the statement has been largely distributed to the press and commented upon—and this is Mr. Payne's answer on behalf of the Chamberlain.

6821. (Chairman.) Is it so, Mr. Payne? You say the total receipts and payments in the year 1892, of the City, would amount to 5,700,000*l.*?—Yes, sir.

6822 What are included in that?—The receipts and payments of the City's cash proper that are contained in the statements which have been laid before the Commission to day; the receipts and payments of the various trust funds which are kept separate; the receipts and payments of the Commissioners of Sewers; they are all transactions of the Chamber of London, and the Corporation is so far concerned in them, and of the police fund also—the receipts and payments of the police fund, and all the various funds and financial matters which come through the hands of the Chamberlain, through the Chamberlain's accounts, which make the aggregate of the receipts and payments in our books of the amount that is here set out, about five and a half millions. In some years it has amounted to above seven millions, the years that include large loan transactions.

6823. (Mr. Smith.) Do they appear in this book?—Yes, the greater part.

6824. The police?—Yes.

6825. And the Commissioners of Sewers?—Yes.

6826. They all appear?—Yes. I have included a few, say, 7,000*l.* a year, in addition, that are not published in that book, trusts not connected with the Court of Common Council—that is only about, say, 7,000*l.* a year on either side. All the other accounts are included in that book, except the banking transactions, and may be aggregated from those figures to that amount. I take the receipts. If a loan is raised, that is a financial transaction. It involves a great many entries, and receiving money from the various parties who contribute the loan; and, when that is expended, that, of course, involves a further large amount of transactions also. I have the receipts on one side and the expenditure on the other side as transactions of the Corporation.

6827. (Lord Farrer.) Do you include in your 5,700,000*l.* the receipts on account of loans and expenditure on your capital account?—Yes, I include in it loans as repaid by the Corporation on one side:

* Appendix XI., p. 1, par 3.

Mr. W. Payne.

18 Jan. 1894.

all the bonds are cancelled, and the several amounts which are due are paid to the persons who hold those bonds; then, if the bonds are renewed by the Corporation, we make entries of the loan on the other side. I consider that a financial transaction of the Corporation.

6828. (Mr. Smith.) Movements of capital would multiply figures enormously if those were always brought in?—We do not multiply them, but they pass through the Chamber. In my position I felt a responsibility, the receipt of money from a loan, although it is a loan, is a financial transaction.

6829. Commonly called turnover?—Turnover; it is not merely a turnover.

6830. (Mr. Crawford.) You had better go on, I think, Mr. Payne?—I do not know that I need say anything about the area of the City and the Metropolitan Board of Works. A much larger responsibility rests upon them. The rateable value of the City is a little over 4,000,000*l.* and the rateable value of the district under the control of the London County Council exceeds 29,000,000*l.*; therefore the financial transactions necessarily would be supposed to be much larger within the County Council than in the City; but it only shows that they are twice as great as the City; it does not seem to justify the description of so "small a sphere." Mr. Gomme states that "there are two classes of operations; first, "those relating to the general funds at the free disposal of the Corporation; secondly, those relating "to the trust funds, and funds created by Act of "Parliament. The transactions in both of these "classes reveal the total expenditure of the Corporation; but a detailed analysis is necessary to show "the effect of such expenditure upon the revenues of "the Corporation. The balance of revenue remaining "at successive stages, after charges have been paid, "is shown in order to test the capacity of the "revenue to bear the expenditure which has been "placed upon it." This memorandum contains eight particulars——

6831. (Chairman.) You need not go through those, I think?—And then, "the balance of revenue "at each of the eight stages is shown, and those "balances which do not fall into the general funds "of the Corporation are stayed at the point where the "trust fund ceases." I apprehend it is there where Mr. Gomme's analysis is misleading, although he says he only brings forward the balances which concern the City Estates. Well, then, the first item of the analysis consists of "revenues from funded property and dues "and duties." Mr. Gomme, under this first head includes the revenues of General Estates of the Corporation those of the Gresham Estates, the Bridge House Estates, Blackfriars Bridge Estates, bequests, and so he goes on, adding from time to time the various trust funds, grain duty, coal and wine duty; and then brings in the receipts of the Holborn Valley Improvement, Clerkenwell, and all the other funds of the Corporation, all merged and brought together. The division of the receipts and expenditure into eight classes does not appear to answer any useful purpose, while the consolidation of the accounts under these heads appears to be based upon the assumption that all funds could be legally amalgamated; but for this, there can be no justification in law or equity; such accounts being incapable of unification upon any just principle. The results of such experimental consolidation lead only to erroneous conclusions and which cannot possibly be admitted by the Corporation as a reliable basis for estimating its present or future financial position. The separation of the market revenues from the general revenues of the Corporation called City's cash on the one hand and the amalgamation of the trust funds and the funds arising from the rates levied on the citizens on the other hand are equally misleading and fallacious. In the former case, a distinction is drawn between one portion of the City's Estates and the other, and in the latter case there is a mixing of funds which are essentially distinct from the City's Estate and from one other. I wish to criticise that mode of analysis because the Corporation cannot recognise it as being a true statement of their affairs; the several funds ought to be distinguished the one from the other.*

6832. (Lord Farrer.) You said you would come in the end to a statement that you make yourself, of the whole account of the Corporation, did you not?—Yes.

6833. (Chairman.) Go on, Mr. Payne?—As regards the analysis of the revenue and expenditure of the Corporation on page 2 (Arabic Nos.), divided into eight classes, I desire to draw attention to the items of receipt and expenditure, of which these eight classes are composed, and which are set forth for each of the four years, 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892, and are found from pages 2 to 33 (Arabic Nos.), showing gross and net revenues and disposal of balances. (1.) Revenues from real and funded property, and dues and duties. The items under rents, premiums, fines for leases, &c., exclude the revenues from the city markets, and include the revenues from the Gresham Estates, held in trust for the Royal Exchange, &c., the Bridge House Estates held in trust for the City Bridges, the Grain Duty appropriated to Epping Forest and other open spaces, and the Coal and Wine Dues applicable by Act of Parliament to public improvements.* After deducting the charges against gross revenue, the net balances arising from these various sources are carried forward. A further item arising from interest on securities and cash balances is added to the total; the revenues from the Corporation markets (including the Deptford Cattle Market and the Coal Market) are also added. The application of these balances is then shown under the following heads, such heads not corresponding with the headings of the City's cash statements, but being made up by the addition of items derived from the trust and public funds, which are kept separate from the City's cash by the Corporation. Then under these heads—Permanent Works, Justice and Police, Administrative Purposes, Mayoralty and Civic Purposes, Optional Purposes—he shows under their various heads the moneys which have been expended under those heads, which leads to the further remark that the expenditure under these heads is of so mixed a character as to make the analysis of little or no value as an elucidation of City finance, but why the surplus revenue arising from the markets, amounting in 1889 to 4,067*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, should be specially hypothecated to expenditure for "donations" needs further explanation. In the Arabic figures (Mr. Gomme's), page 8, that is a specific case; there you see the 4,067*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, the surplus revenue arising from markets, is disposed of by being placed under the head of "donations." We did not apply it; that has not been applied to donations by the City.

6834. (Mr. Crawford.) Just take Mr. Gomme's account into your hand, and point out to the Chairman to what you are alluding?—The column is in page 9, sixth division; column 85 is the number. Then for the following three years the surplus of the markets is placed under various other heads, as will appear by reference. In 1890 the Arabic figures, page 15, and Roman figures the division is VI.; the column—I have not got the number of the column, "General Establishment Expenses."

6835. 61, the column is?—1890.

6836. Just read out the items so that we can follow them?—1890, 1,812*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, is in column 61. The surplus of the markets of that year, 13,446*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, is shown in column 55, page 14 Arabic, and division VI.

6837. (Chairman.) What year are you in?—1890.

6838. Page 14?—Page 14, yes; and the column, that is in the lower part of the page, it is column 61, and under that column against the line of markets, which is the balance on the markets of column 55, 13,446*l.*, of that 812*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* is accounted for, and then the balance is carried over, 12,533*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*, to the next page.

* See also Gomme, 10,683.

6839. (Mr. Crawford.) You have not told us under what it is accounted for, "General Establishment expenses"?—General Establishment expenses—Yes. It is next carried over to the next page, 12,533*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*, and then further accounted for, under "receptions, honorary votes, and civic functions," 910*l.* 9*s.* 9*d*, in column 72.

6840. That is page 17?—That is page 17, column 72; and then the next item is 1,126*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*, "pensions for civic officials," and the next item, "law "and parliamentary" expenditure 3,043*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*

6841. That is under column 74?—Column 74, The total is then carried forward, 7,452*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.*, and the balance, that is, of the markets, carried down to Division VIII., under the "application "of revenue to optional purposes," and that 7,452*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.* is then disposed of by an amount placed under the column 81, to "library, museum, "andart gallery," 6,317*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*; and 1,135*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, column 82, under the head of "Schools." That makes 13,346*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, the surplus revenue from the markets of the year, which, according to Mr. Gomme's analysis, is being appropriated and applied to those several various purposes. In the year 1891 and 1892, under similar heads, they vary a little.

6842. (Chairman.) This comes to the same thing, does it not? Do you object to the way in which Mr. Gomme explains how the different items of expenditure were met?—Yes. The above mode of absorbing the surplus arising from markets does not appear to be based upon any principle, but to be a fanciful mode of adjusting the City's expenditure. The surplus revenue of the markets forms part of the City's cash, and is applicable towards its general municipal expenditure. That is the remark I make upon that.

6843. Well, that surplus from markets was available for City purposes?—Yes.

6844. And after the funds finally dedicated to those purposes were finally exhausted?—Yes. The profits of the markets are civic property, and they are free to use them for any of their purposes. They are our markets. Any City expenditure would be paid out of these receipts.

6845. Mr. Gomme has suggested for the purpose of accounts, you keep the markets' expenditure and the markets' receipts separate?—He has all through.

6846. All through; and when you find the general expenditure is in excess of the City General Estates he comes to the balance which is available, and takes from that whatever is necessary?—That is what he does.

6847. That is all that it amounts to?—That is what it amounts to.

6848. If anything, you would put the market's income into the general receipts in the first place?—It has always been so. It is always considered part of the general revenue applicable to general expenditure.

6849. To the students of City affairs, does not this show it a little more clearly?—I think not at all. It is incomprehensible to me why those expenses should be assigned to the surplus of the markets. Surplus revenue of the markets forms part of the City cash, and is available towards general expenditure; that is my remark.

6850. Whereas here he keeps it apart until it is wanted to make up a school deficiency or some other deficiency; then he takes so much as is wanted for that purpose, and carries over the balance?—That is so; yes. The revenue and expenditure of the Rating Authorities of the City of London, he speaks of it, page 34, I think. The remarks with reference to the amalgamation of the general revenues apply in a measure in relation to consolidating the Sewers and Police Rates. He puts those two rates together. The rates are levied under the powers of separate Acts of Parliament, and collected and managed under separate authorities. The Commissioners of Sewers are amenable to the Corporation as regards their appointment only. The management (so far as equipment, housing, &c.) of the police is concerned rests with the Committee appointed by the Corporation under the City of London Police Act, 1839, who have joint powers with the Police Commissioner. The duties of the two bodies are completely distinct, and the police rates are in no way chargeable with the debts of the Commissioners of Sewers, or vice versâ. The main objection on the part of the Corporation to the mode in which the Special Committee of the London County Council have caused the accounts of the Corporation to be stated is that the deductions derived therefrom are unsound as regards the true financial status of the Corporation.*

6851. That is the same thing over again?—The conclusion at which (page xlii) Mr. Gomme appears to have arrived is that in order to adjust the revenue and expenditure at the present time it would be necessary to impose upon the inhabitants of the City an additional year rate of $2\frac{3}{10}$ of a penny in the pound upon the present rateable value, viz., 4,163,655*l.*, I think, which it is estimated would produce 39,902*l.*,† in order to make up the deficiency Mr. Gomme suggests that it will be necessary for the City or for the body which may afterwards become responsible for the matter to impose a County rate; and to arrive at this conclusion Mr. Gomme has assumed that the whole of the surplus income from the markets will be applied towards the extinguishment of the debt on the markets and no part applied towards the general municipal expenditure of the Corporation. The unreasonableness of such an assumption is urged on the following considerations, that the Corporation as proprietors of the markets have a just claim to the profits of the markets.

6852. Let us not go further for a moment. Any ordinary Corporation which had got markets of its own, and incurred a capital debt for rebuilding those markets, do not you think it would be found to be expedient to keep the revenues separate, and to make a charge upon that separate revenue for the debt until it was extinguished?—The revenues of the markets are in the City's accounts stated perfectly distinctly, the total revenues of the markets on the one side, and the interest and charges for management, and so forth on the other side, so that every one referring to the City's accounts, taking the receipts on one side from the payments on the other side can bring out the surplus revenues of the markets.

6853. If it is to be held as a duty of the City or any other Corporation to extinguish its debt within a definite number of years, it means either keeping the market revenue separate for that purpose, or if it passes its market revenue in with its other revenue, it must raise a rate for that purpose?—The Corporation are not under the Municipal Corporations Act; they are not bound to form any sinking fund for the discharge of their debt; and, if you allow me to go on, I will show you why they ought not to be, at the present time, expected to do more than they have done towards the discharge of the debt on the markets.

6854. (Mr. Smith.) If you can tell us why they should do less than any other Corporation I should be interested to know?—I have some reason to show why, as proprietors of the markets, they have a just claim to the profits. That is a statement I would like you to allow me to make, that in the year 1854, when the construction of the new markets commenced, the Corporation was in receipt of a net revenue from the profits of the markets amounting to 12,893*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and which revenue had always been applied towards its general municipal expenditure. That since the year 1854, viz., from 1855 to 1892 inclusive, the Corporation has expended 2,618,943*l.* 5*s.* $3\frac{1}{4}$d. on the establishment and construction of new markets. That between the years 1855 and 1892 the whole of the net profits of the markets have been spent either in meeting the deficiences of some of the markets or in works of construction, and at the present time the amount expended on the markets out of the City's cash is about 30,000*l.* in excess of the net surplus profits of the markets received during the whole of that period.*

6855. (Chairman.) What do you mean by your last statement "exceeds the net surplus profits of the "markets received during the whole of that period"? Do you mean the average surplus profits?—The whole of them for the whole period. I am prepared to put in an account of the markets for the last 10 years. My statement refers to the whole of the markets, and is deduced from an account kept in the Chamberlain's Office and laid before the Markets Committee—a mere record account, not a ledger account—by which we have traced from year to year, all through the years, the effect upon the City's cash of the expenditure with respect to markets, and how far the revenues from the markets, or the loans raised upon those markets, have gone towards meeting that expenditure; and the result is shown that the City's cash has not benefited by applying the surplus of the markets to the relief of its general expenditure, taking the whole of the period. The whole has been spent upon markets, and the markets account, if it had been kept a separate account, which it has not, being only part of its ordinary revenues, would owe the Corporation about 30,000*l.*

6856. Now, I think, I understand; if you add together all that has been spent on the markets between 1855 and 1892, out of the City cash, and all that has been received as profits on the other hand, the actual subventions out of the City cash would exceed the actual profits realised by 30,000*l.*?—Yes; on the markets account alone.

6857. The markets represent a debt in respect of annual income you would say of 30,000*l.*?—Yes.

6858. (Lord Farrer.) That is taking annual expenditure and annual income?—For the whole period.

6859. From 1855 to 1892, taking the whole 37 years, adding the items when there was a surplus together, and adding the deficiencies together, the total deficiency would exceed the receipts by 30,000*l.*?—Yes.

6860. (Chairman.) Because the markets have not been profitable in the past you are not going to attempt to reduce the debt at present?—Well, I will explain what has been done already, and what we propose to do in the future.

6861. (Mr. Smith.) That is exactly the question I was going to put to you. You consider it is not your duty to pay off capital on an unremunerative undertaking?—That is so; there is no obligation on the Corporation so to do.

6862. (Chairman.) No legal obligation—no?—No legal obligation.

6863. The question is whether it is an obligation of prudence?—Only last year, 1892, we expended capital to complete the system of markets.

6864. (Lord Farrer.) The markets other than Deptford market have produced no surplus, or very little?—Yes, there has been a surplus, but not sufficient to meet the deficiencies and the expenditure on their construction.

6865. That is to say it meets the annual expenditure, after deducting payment of interest on loans. But has the revenue of the markets other than Deptford been sufficient to meet that?—It has for the last 10 years.

6866. The last five years—has the annual income from the markets other than Deptford market been sufficient to meet the whole of the annual expense?—Yes; the whole.

6867. Including the interest on the debt?—It has certainly. The whole—I am speaking now of the present revenue. The average annual surplus of the City markets for the last 10 years has been 9,000*l.* That would make 90,000*l.* But the Corporation had deficiencies, &c., in previous years to a larger amount out of its cash, and this amount partly recouped it, as far as their cash was concerned, in consequence of loss on previous years. For instance, there was a loss of about 60,000*l.* in connexion with the attempt to create a new market for fish. It was urged on the Corporation that they should do so. They made the experiment, at a total expenditure of about 60,000*l.* out of revenue. The deficiency arose from interest on the capital which had been raised for the purpose and expenses of management.

6868. (Mr. Crawford.) That was an inland fish market?—That was an inland fish market—a complete failure; and that 60,000*l.* deficiency and other deficiencies had to be made up according to my statement, resulting in a net deficiency of 30,000*l.* as against the markets.

6869. (Lord Farrer.) My question pointed rather to the future. Do you calculate that now there will be surplus revenue upon your markets other than the Deptford Market, we will take that separately?—I have no doubt of that. We had last year a surplus revenue of 12,000*l.*

6870. On the markets?—Yes; about the same surplus we had in 1854 before the Corporation began to reconstruct the markets.

6871. Then you say if you kept them as separate accounts the markets owe the Corporation something or loss?—They do.

6872. When that is repaid you assume there will be a surplus on the markets account?—Oh, undoubtedly there will be.

6873. When that happens, do you not think you should lay aside something every year to pay off debt, or would you put the surplus to the City cash?—Allow me to go on.

6874. I have another question to ask, Does your 30,000*l.* deficit include the expenses of the Markets Committee, which amounts to 600*l.* a year or 24,000*l.* for the whole period?—Yes; but not to so large an amount as 24,000*l.*,—about two-thirds of that sum,—the allowance having been less than 600*l.* a year before 1875.

The above reasons account for the fact that no sinking fund has been established for paying off the debts on the markets, and justifies the Corporation in delaying the creation of a sinking fund for the present, and until the increased revenues of the markets enable them conveniently to do so, more especially as all the market debts are charged contingently on the general estates and revenues of the Corporation, thereby affording bondholders ample security for their money.

6875. Let me ask you with regard to Deptford Market; it has been paying off debt rapidly and profits have been large?—Yes.

6876. Those profits have been falling off, have they not?—Yes.

6877. In consequence of the change of the trade, the importation of dead meat instead of living?—Yes, they have.

6878. I presume, if that should go on, it will very seriously affect the revenues that the Corporation receive from markets?—25,000*l.* a year surplus we have had for several years; if that should continue the debt will soon be entirely extinguished; if our prospects are not realised with regard to the Metropolitan Market debt, it will be a very serious matter; but at present we only suppose this decrease in the income to be temporary.

6879. (Mr. Crawford.) The Metropolitan Market has also suffered in the same way?—It suffered very much last year—a deficiency of 13,000*l.*, whereas the average annual deficiency before that was only 6,000*l.* or 7,000*l.*; the circumstances were such I think they will not recur.

6880. (Mr. Smith.) Can you tell me if you have ever calculated what annual sum would be required to provide a sinking fund equal to that which would be required from any other local authority in England in regard to these markets?—I have not made any calculation at all.

* See Gomme, 10,685.

6881. What is your total debt?—2,587,000*l.*, I think.

6882. Take 2,500,000*l.* ?—I have not calculated how long it would take.

6883. You do not quarrel with Mr. Gomme's figures and assumption ?—No.

6884. What does he make it? Could you refer me to the figure? What does he say the sinking fund ought to be on the whole ?—I think it is on pages xxi and xxii.

6885. I only want you to give me the total, which is one figure ?—I do not think that figure is given by Mr. Gomme how much per annum; he calculates a sinking fund. Of course it could be easily told by means of the table how many years it would require at a given rate per cent. to discharge that debt. I have not got my books with me, but if you put your question I could give an answer.

6886. It would be a very large sum, would it not ?—It would be a very large sum. I do not dispute what Mr. Gomme states as to the amount that would be required and what the Corporation would have to provide.

6887. Does he give the amount; perhaps you could tell me what it is? If you have not got it, never mind; but it would be a very large sum.

6888. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Gomme thinks that "at the estimated income of 122,000*l.* per annum it "will take about 20 years to repay this debt"?—20 years.

6889. (Mr. Smith.) But I think you would get more than 20 years allowed? You would get a longer time, certainly.

6890. (Mr. Smith.) Supposing all this 2,587,000*l.* had to be repaid in 30 years, which is the term under the Municipal Act?

6891. (Chairman.) It is 20 years from 1907.

6892. (Mr. Crawford.) It is 20 years from 1907?—It would be a very large sum.

6893. Thirty-four years altogether ?*—The calculation could be easily made.

6894. (Mr. Smith.) Supposing you had to pay it back in 30 years, it would be a very large sum ?—It would be a very considerable financial operation for the Corporation. I go on to say that the debts on the markets have, however, been reduced, as shown by Mr. Gomme, 85,000*l.* having been repaid so recently as 1892 on account of the London Central Markets by the sale of Farringdon Market, in addition to the annual payment of 25,000*l.* on account of the Foreign Cattle Market in 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892. The Corporation reduced the debts of the London Central Market 85,000*l.*, also the debt on the Foreign Cattle Market by 125,000*l.*

6895. (Chairman.) Then you sum up your position, do you not ?—To hand over the property in and management of the markets, without the consent of the Corporation or compensation, to any other body notwithstanding the immemorial right of the citizens to their exclusive possession and the labours endured and responsibility incurred in their reconstruction and management hitherto, at the moment when they begin to produce fruit, would, in my humble judgment, be a flagrant infringement of every principle of equity and justice known to the constitution, and would, of course, be strenuously resisted by the Corporation. They always have had the fruits of their markets in former years, and looked to them to meet their municipal expenditure, and to compel them to pay off the debts within a certain limited time would, I think, be an infringement of the liberty of the Corporation, I think it would be quite wrong to take them all away.

6897. I did not say they were; they are a very extraordinary authority, but I ask why they should be exempt from the ordinary obligations of a Local Authority as regards finance particularly ?—I think they are in a very different position as a Corporation. The Corporation as a Local Authority are not taxing the ratepayers; they have not taxed the ratepayers for the purposes of the Markets.

6898. But they would have to tax them if they would face the proper demands, would they not ?—The proper demands ?

6899. For the Sinking Fund ?—That is a question for them to determine whether they would be prepared or not; I do not know. They might not have to tax the ratepayers; they might economise the expenditure under other heads of the account. The Corporation has no reason to expect to be called upon to pay off the capital of the markets, from the markets alone. The Corporation has raised the capital for the markets on the credit of their other estates as well, and their assets are liable. There is not likely to be any future charge upon the ratepayers in respect of the markets.

6900. (Mr. Crawford.) There is ample security for bondholders ?—Ample security for the lenders, they have the assets of the Corporation, the property of the citizens, without the rates.

6901. (Mr. Smith.) There are other corporations with assets ?—There are a few.

6902. And yet they are subject to the obligation of repayment of loans ?—Those assets probably are not sufficiently themselves for the maintenance of markets.

6903. Do you know that there are many corporations who make no borough rate because they have a surplus on their borough fund ?—Possibly they would be obliged to make a borough rate under the compulsion to pay off their debt.

6904. They do pay off their debt, and they do not levy a borough rate ?—I think the Corporation would be able to pay off the debt on their markets without any borough rate by economy in expenditure. We hope to do it in the future by increase of the revenue of the markets. They surely ought to increase now the markets are completed, and the trade of London is not at all likely to be diminished. The probability is that the revenues of the markets will be greatly augmented in the future.

6905. (Chairman.) But the course of trade has changed and is changing ?—Not as regards City markets, the markets are not showing any falling off.

6906. As respects Deptford Market ?—That is an exceptional market at present; that certainly affects the Metropolitan Market, but as regards the other markets there is the usual tendency to increase.

6907. (Lord Farrer.) I think you said, or Mr. Crawford said, that the business of the Metropolitan Cattle Market was falling off too ?—Last year was an exceptional year; the market had to be closed.

6908. (Mr. Crawford.) There was a sum of 4,000*l.* had to be expended under the orders of the Board of Agriculture ?—Cleansing, and so on.

6910. (Mr. Crawford.) Foot and mouth disease prevented the importation of live animals.

6911. (Mr. Smith.) Well, you are rather wandering from my point. I want to know why a good economical rule that is observed in municipal boroughs about paying to a sinking fund should not apply to the Corporation of London ?

6912. (Mr. Crawford.) You must not forget, Mr. Smith, that the question of the markets has been before Parliament on several occasions. Take the case of Billingsgate Market. Parliament was clearly informed, of course, of the state of the market finances of the Corporation, and yet, notwithstanding that, I see in the statement that is before me, under Section 19

* See Gomme, 3895–6.

Mr. W. Payne.

13 Jan. 1894.

of the Billingsgate Market Act of 1871 :—"All stallages, rents, and tolls received under this Act by or "on behalf of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons "shall be received by them for the use of the "Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of the City of "London, and shall be paid and applied as the Mayor, "Aldermen, and Commons from time to time direct." I think you will agree with me that in ordinary Corporations you would not have these words.

6913. (Mr. Smith.) I was only wanting to know the reason why not?

6914. (Mr. Crawford.) Because Parliament has not directed it.

6915. (Mr. Smith.) As reference has been made to high financial, moral, legal, and equitable grounds, I was rather puzzled to know what distinction you would draw.

6916. (Lord Farrer.) The Corporation of London can part with its capital and sell its property?—That is a legal question I am not prepared to answer.

6917. (Mr. Crawford.) It never has done so?—It never has done so. If by way of exchange for other properties, or for convenience, it has parted with any of its property, the custom is to invest the proceeds in the names of the Corporation trustees, if a small amount, or if a large amount in the Court of Chancery, with the view of their ultimate re-investment in other freehold property. There are large sums of money now in the Court of Chancery waiting for re-investment in freehold property.

6918. (Lord Farrer.) Can the Corporation borrow without any limit and without any special authority?—There is no limit.

6919. That is in their own discretion?—Yes. Parliament has authorised certain sums to be raised upon the markets; certain sums of money are required to complete the markets, and put them in a more efficient position. The Corporation have considered that they were in a position to borrow additional sums, subject, of course, to existing charges, and to borrow those sums upon the additional revenues of the markets, which would be provided by the expenditure of the loan, and of course also upon the security of their estates and revenues generally.

6920. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Rotton, I think, confirmed that view that the Corporation had the power to do so?

6921. (Mr. Smith.) Oh, yes; there is no denying the power.

6922. (Chairman.) Mr. Payne, we will get on?—It has been alleged that the Corporation has not followed the example of most public bodies in connexion with the repayment of loans I have already stated the reasons why it has not been considered obligatory on the Corporation to provide a fixed sinking fund for the ultimate discharge of the general debts upon the City markets. It must not be overlooked that Parliament itself has from time to time recognised the right of the Corporation to deal with its market profits in its own way. It is to be remarked moreover that as regards the debt on the Metropolitan Cattle Market (which is the only market which is unable to bear the interest on its large debt and the other charges), the surplus revenue of the Foreign Cattle Market will be applicable (in accordance with Statute) to its discharge as soon as the debt on the latter market has been satisfied. Its ultimate discharge is, therefore, already provided for.

6923. But the surplus revenues of the Foreign Cattle Market have not been kept up the last year or two?—Not the last two years; they fell off last year rather more than the previous year, but we are hoping for a revival of the revenues. I beg to hand in a statement of the revenue and expenditure, capital, &c., of the Corporation markets for the last 10 years.

6924. Does that differ from what we have already had?

6925. (Mr. Crawford.) It is more complete than the statements which have been made in the course of the enquiry.

6926. (Chairman.) Yes, this is more complete?—There are statistics there which are shown to correspond with the figures which have been given, bringing out a 30,000*l.* deficiency, and so on.

6928. (Lord Farrer.) Can you tell us what the amount of that debt now is, and what is the value of the assets which are primarily liable to meet it?—Yes, I calculate that there will be about 400,000*l.* ultimately cast upon the City's cash in respect of that debt: the assets have not yet been entirely realised, as we are not able at once to discharge the debt, because the bonds are not falling due. As opportunity arises, when a bond is offered for cancelment, they purchase the bond and cancel it, but they cannot require a bondholder to bring the bonds in. They have been asked to do it, but they prefer holding them, for they have no doubt about the credit of the Corporation. We are not able to obtain the bond for extinguishment; we are obliged, therefore, to keep the money applicable for the purpose invested in our bonds or other securities, which is as broad as it is long. We are getting interest upon them, and as the bonds fall due, we shall extinguish them so far, but I believe there will be an ultimate deficiency of 400,000*l.* to fall upon the estates of the Corporation.

6929. (Mr. Crawford.) This is the Holborn Valley Debt?—Yes, this debt is being gradually reduced by the realization of securities applicable thereto and may be further reduced by the disposal of rentals arising from the Holborn Viaduct Buildings, Lodging Houses for the Labouring Poor (Artizans Dwellings) and houses forming part of the structure of the Viaduct. There is no surplus land belonging to the Fund. So soon as the action of Parliament in relation to continuing the 4*d.* Coal duty for one year only was determined, and the Corporation became assured of their liability to discharge the balance of this debt out of their own Estates, they began to make provision for its reduction and appropriated the following sums towards its discharge out of their own estates and revenues, besides charging themselves with the payment of interest on the outstanding debt, viz.:—In the year 1887, 22,558*l.* 10*s.*; in the year 1888, 10,000*l.*; in the year 1889, 32,497*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*; total 65,056*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* That has been already applied towards the discharge of the Holborn Valley Improvement Debt. As regards the debt charged primarily on the City of London Grain Duty; the Act of 1872 provides that the amount authorised to be raised should be discharged on or before the 31st October, 1902. The estimated annual surplus of the revenue from the duty on grain would have been probably sufficient to provide for the discharge of the debt by that period, but in the year 1884 the corn trade and others refused to pay duty on grain unless it was brought into the Port of London exclusively for sale and not for manufacture only, which they had done from 1872 to 1884, and the duty paid was thereafter strictly limited to grain brought into the port for sale, which caused a falling off in the produce of the duty to the extent of about 7,000*l.* per annum, and left no margin for establishing a sinking fund for the discharge of the debt contracted by the Corporation for the purchase of Epping Forest, and other open spaces on the faith of receiving the duty upon a more liberal construction of the Act than that ultimately adopted by the trade, who raised technical objections involving the Corporation in costly litigation and reduction of revenue.

6929*a*. (Lord Farrer.) What does that debt amount to?—214,000*l*. is the amount of the debt now. The Corporation, however, in the year 1890 initiated a sinking fund for the discharge of this debt by the appropriation of the money arising from the commutation of fines on the renewal of rents payable in respect of their estates in St. George's, Hanover Square, and other parishes. This commutation of future fines for a present cash payment is, of course, optional on the part of the tenants, and should the offer of the Corporation be universally accepted a sufficient sum would be raised to discharge this debt. The result up to the present time has been that about 25,000*l*. has been received under this arrangement of which 15,000*l*. was applied in reduction of debt in the year 1892. That is the provision made.*

6930. (Mr. Smith.) This is applying capital to capital practically?—Well, yes. It is doing that instead of out of revenue; we have no revenue to spare. The debt was to be paid off at the end of that time, and we shall find some means of doing it.

6931. (Chairman.) That would not be allowed in the ordinary action of an ordinary Corporation?—No, the Corporation are masters of their own action in that matter. The debt on the City of London Pauper Lunatic Asylum, amounting to 8,000*l*., will either be paid off when the bonds fall due in 1898, or continued as may be most convenient to the Corporation, although had the Corporation not considered the pecuniary interests of the citizens of London, this amount could easily have been met by means of a county rate. Then Mr. Gomme makes remarks about the City making sales of their property. I request permission to make an observation with regard to that. With reference to Mr. Gomme's statement, pages ii and iii——

6932. (Lord Farrer.) Are you leaving the debts now?—Yes, the debts.

6933. Then I will ask a question on another point. Have you any general statement showing what are the aggregate debts of the Corporation, or the aggregate liabilities, and what is the value of the assets which they have to meet those debts?—No.

6234. You have nothing of that kind?—No, only a general statement in the book with regard to the amount of the debts, but the value of the assets against them is not set out, nor are the value of the Corporation's estates with regard to the value of assets of those funds. As to many of those debts the Corporation are only liable as guarantors, and possibly there might be recourse to the Corporation estates for those debts; but those assets are not set forward and neither are the assets of the Corporation as regards their debts. The City has never had its assets valued.

6935. I find in the accounts of the Corporation for 1869 they give a statement of liabilities, and then after giving the loans and the liabilities upon loans, there is given on the other side: "By "estimated value of property liable to meet bonded "obligations, as per contra." Then there is a list of assets and property which will meet those loans. Now that statement seems to have been discontinued after 1869; what was the reason of that?—It was only a special report.

6936. (Mr. Crawford.) What is the report as to that?

6937. (Lord Farrer.) "The Chamberlain in "account with the Corporation of London in respect "of the City estates for the year 1869; also in "respect of various public and trust funds with the "Chamber of London."

6938. (Mr. Crawford.) Can you tell us whether there was one for 1868?

6939. (Lord Farrer.) That I cannot tell you.

6940. (Mr. Crawford.) You made the remark, "it "seems to have been discontinued?" Why did you make that remark?

6941. (Lord Farrer.) Well, it was at any rate given in 1869, and it has not been given since.

6942. (Mr. Crawford.) Your observation would imply that it was given anterior to that.

6943. (Lord Farrer.) It may have been, or it may not have been given prior to that. It seems a satisfactory item to give. Why it was given in one year and not in others is what I want to know.

6944. (Mr. Crawford.) I did not know whether you were supposing that it had been discontinued for some particular reason which required explanation. Your remark led me to think that it had been discontinued for some reason which required explanation?—I think that until that year you will find that there was no general statement of the liabilities and assets of the Corporation.

6945. (Lord Farrer.) It may not have been given previously to that?—I don't think you will find that stated in any other year. That was discontinued advisedly by the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee. These statements are submitted year by year to the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee, and they settle the form in which the statement of assets and liabilities should be rendered and should be published. I think that this was a form which was adopted in that year only.

6946. (Mr. Crawford.) Will you tell me what you have before you; look on the outside and you will see?

6947. (Lord Farrer.) It is the account of the Chamberlain?—They are stated here in that form. It really passed from my memory that they were ever passed in that form. I think that undoubtedly was discontinued. I think probably you will not find it in the next year. But they have been continued for a great many years without stating on the opposite side the amount of the assets. You will see that the assets are all set down at precisely the same amount as the liabilities. I think, so far as I can see, as much appears on the liability side. It is merely a debtor and creditor statement. They are put on the other side to meet the liabilities. In future statements they do not carry out the liabilities, and, therefore, of course, omit the assets.

6948. No, but let me take the year 1893—in this No. 11—in the accounts of 1892, published in 1893, we have a statement of the liabilities of the Corporation, just as given in the other account, and then a note to this effect: "Special revenues are applicable "as primary security for payment of the above loan, "which security, if of sufficient amount, will prevent "recourse to the City's Estates; the amount of the "said bonds is not therefore carried out, while on the "contra side the values of the rents, renewing fines "and interest, market revenues, rates, tolls, duties, "&c., and of the City's Estates, are not included. "The above balance statement has been considered "and approved by the Corn and Coal and Finance "Committee." The only question that I was asking was whether it would not be a satisfactory thing to have a statement similar to that which is given in the accounts for 1869 of what are the assets which the Corporation hold in order to meet those liabilities?—The form of statement was determined by the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee in their inquiry into the accounts in the year 1870 and 1871, and I have no doubt, although I do not know, that they reported to the Court on the subject. But the Finance Committee are responsible for the issue of this account, and for the mode in which the cash assets and liabilities of the Corporation are stated, and they have not deemed it desirable to continue the form of 1869. That was merely putting the liabilities on one side, and then putting on the other side the assumed value of the property, which has never been ascertained. The value of the property, if the whole value had been put down, would have been no doubt double that amount. But they merely put the value of the property against the amount of the debts in order to balance the amount of the debts—in order to show that in the hands of the Corporation there is no liability on the City's cash in respect of those debts.

6949. You answered my question to this extent that you said that it is the opinion of the Committee concerned that these items should not be published, but you have not given me any answer why they came to that conclusion?—They have the same opinion at the present time. They never publish the assets.

6950. I want to know why?—I should not consider this a complete statement of the assets and liabilities of the Corporation by any means as it stands there.

6951. (Mr. Crawford.) May we take it, Mr. Payne, that at the present moment you are not able to say why; but there is no difficulty in ascertaining the reason by referring to the reports?—The Corporation have not thought it necessary or prudent to do so.

6952. Lord Farrer asks you why it was discontinued in that year?—I cannot say.

6953. By reference to the reports you can easily ascertain that if necessary?—I am not sure whether that matter was referred to. The statement of 1869 was prepared by the Chamberlain and approved by the Committee for that year. Next year the accounts were prepared by the Chamberlain, and got out in a different form. The note at the present time is that the form has been approved by the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee. I have not got the accounts of the next year, but I think the next year, 1870, was the first year in which they were published in the new form, the form which has been used ever since.

6954. (Lord Farrer.) I quite understand that; but in the accounts of the London County Council, when they give a statement of their assets and liabilities, they state, on the one hand, their liabilities, and, on the other hand, they state at length and completely the whole of their assets; that is to say, the items of their property and the debts that are due to them from other bodies. Do you not think it would be a convenient and desirable thing if the Corporation of London, in stating their accounts, were to give a full statement of their liabilities on the one hand, and of their assets on the other. We really have no knowledge at present of what the assets and the liabilities of the Corporation of the City of London are?—The Corporation state their accounts in such a plain and such a lucid and comprehensive form that I think any accountant or any ordinarily practised statistician or financier would be able from the accounts as they now stand to deduce as satisfactory a result as to the assets and liabilities of the Corporation as could be published by the Corporation themselves, and which if they did so might involve thousands of pounds in making the estimate.

6955. Is there anything whatever in this book that tells us what the assets of the Corporation of the City of London are?—The assets of the Corporation are shown by the revenues of the Corporation.

6956. And only by the revenues?—There is a rental of 163,000*l.* a year. Anyone knowing the character of that revenue, being good freehold property, 163,000*l.* multiplied by 25 would give a very fair idea of the assets of the Corporation.

6957. (Mr. Smith.) I took it at 35 years, a good deal of it?—You may make a larger sum than the Corporation would think it desirable to publish to the world.

6958. (Chairman.) That was a very incomplete statement of your assets?—Very incomplete.

6959. It did not give your property?—It did not in any way.

6960. (Lord Farrer.) It gives more information than has been given subsequently?—Practically, I do not say that it gives any more information; it merely sets the assets against liability which is assumed to be of the same amount.

6961. (Mr. Smith.) If you made an ordinary sinking fund on the markets undertaking, there would be an annual deficiency on the City accounts?—On revenue.

6962. On revenue; and, as you say, everything has to come to revenue, at last, multiplied by so many years purchase. It might force the Corporation to make a rate.

6963. (Chairman.) A twopenny something rate?—Yes.

6964. (Mr. Crawford.) From your experience of the Corporation's finance, are you able to tell the Commissioners one way or the other if there is or is not ample security to meet every obligation on the City?—Most decidedly; I have no hesitation in saying that the Corporation could pay 40*s.* in the pound upon all their liabilities.

6965. (Lord Farrer.) Referring to the question I was asking you before we rose, can you tell me if the Corporation has a capital account, that is an account showing the value of their estates, the value of their assets as set against their liabilities?—They have not.

6966. Can they make one out?—Oh, of course there could be no difficulty about making out such an account if it were the will of the Corporation so to do.

6967. You have told us distinctly that assets were of such value as to outbalance the liabilities; that is to say, the assets are more than the liabilities?—Yes.

6968. (Chairman.) Well, that of course must be founded on a knowledge of what the assets are; can you make us out and furnish us with a statement of the assets of the Corporation, including their estates?—Certainly it could be done.

6969. Well, will the Corporation do so?—I cannot answer that question. I am not in a position to answer that question at all.

6970. Will you put that question to your superiors?—To the Committee, I will.

6971. You are no longer an official?—No, I am not really an official.

6972. (Mr. Crawford.) I think, Lord Farrer, the better plan would be for the Commissioners to ask the Secretary to send a letter to the Town Clerk, and that would be laid before the Committee.

6973. (Lord Farrer.) They send this witness to us as representing them on matters of finance. I thought it quite fair to put that question to him in order that there might be no loss of time.

6974. (Chairman.) There can be no difficulty in valuing the assets?—By rule of thumb?

6975. Estimates might vary as to what certain things were worth, but inasmuch as you know what your income derived from the real estates, and what the character of the real estate is you could always get an estimate of it?—I am not in a position to give such a document, but I have prepared one already for my own information, but I am not in a position to put it in. I am not authorised to do so.

6976. We broke off just as you were beginning to tell us about the sales of property. I do not know that you have anything very material to tell us. You do not quite make out the sum brought out by Mr. Gomme?—No, but the difference is not of much consequence. It was not strictly a sale of property in the sense that its disposal can be described to be a sale of property. It was sold under the order of the Irish Court of Chancery, a compulsory sale. They were obliged to take their share. The legal officer reported that he was not prepared to say that such purchase money could be re-invested in freehold property without special license in mortmain, and, therefore, there was nothing for the Corporation to do but to apply it to their ordinary revenue. There is no accumulation fund.

6977. (Mr. Crawford.) It was not a sale by the Corporation for some specific purpose?—It was not.

6978. (Chairman.) It was a forced sale to the amount of 6,000*l.*?—Yes, a forced sale.

6979. Which might have been applied in payment of debt?—Well, yes, the first claims on the Corporation were in respect of bonds and other charges.

6980. It is not a very big sum?—No it is not. There is also another sum spoken of as a sale of property to Taberer and others, 3,375*l.* That was also a forced sale under the Markets Act of 1860, and that was paid to the credit of the City and was applied to market matters, in the construction of the markets, which so far limited the amount necessary to be raised by loan.

6981. (Mr. Smith.) That was not applied to capital?—Strictly speaking to capital.

6982. That would not be applied to capital?—Neither of those sums was used in relief of revenue.

6983. The first seemed to go to revenue and the second to capital?—Yes.

6984. The second was properly allocated to capital?—The second was properly allocated to capital. The Corporation is not in the habit of disposing of freehold property, but when it does so the amount realised is either invested in the names of corporate trustees with a view to re-investment in similar property when opportunity offers, or paid into the Court of Chancery. I believe I have given that evidence previously.

6985. (Chairman.) I do not think that there is anything to stop us until we get on to an observation about provision for future exceptional expenditure?—I should like to make an observation about the market profits. Dealing with Mr. Gomme's remarks on page iii of his statement, the receipts from market profits should have been included in receipts from general estates and revenues, and the balance carried down diminished by these sums as follows:—1889, 4,067*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*; 1890, 12,533*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*; 1891, 14,546*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*; 1892, 10,056*l.* 6*s.* 8*d. The surpluses on the markets, which have been regarded as being properly appropriated to the general expenses of the Corporation, have been deducted from the general revenues annually, which makes it appear that there was a deficiency beyond what there really would have to be provided for had the revenues of the markets been included. Then as regards the City of London Court surplus which has been mentioned by Mr. Gomme at page vi, there has been simply a misapprehension on his part.† I should mention that the Corporation determined in 1887 to bring the surplus into the general account of the assets of the Corporation, as it had a clear right to do, and in 1888, as appears by the Chamberlain's accounts for that year, pages 80 and 81, a sum of 9,500*l.* City bonds belonging to the fund was sold out, and 9,500*l.* was applied towards the erection of the new City of London Court. No sales have been made between 1889 and 1892, but cash amounting to 5,300*l.* was received from bonds maturing at dates indicated and not reinvested. This amount was retained towards providing for the cost of new offices, &c. for the Mayor's Court, for which the income of the Mayor's Court was insufficient. On reference to section 33 of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, it will be observed that the Corporation had a right to credit its revenues with such surplus, and, of course, to deal with it as part of the City's cash. There is some further explanation I have noted with regard to Mr. Gomme's remarks at page vii where he speaks about investments on account of Grain Duty Sinking Fund.‡ The amount paid to the Grain Duty Sinking Fund in the year 1892 was 1,429*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* and not 1,829*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*, and it should have been placed in column for that year. The investments sold, viz., 15,701*l.* 10*s.*, formed part of a separate fund (the Grain Duty Sinking Fund), which had been accumulated in previous years, the produce of the sale, viz., 15,000*l.*, having been applied in the part discharge of loans raised for open spaces, &c., charged primarily upon the City of London Grain Duty. That appears in the Chamberlain's accounts for 1892. This is only an explanation of Mr. Gomme's statement. The next is provision for future exceptional expenditure. With regard to provision for future exceptional expenditure, Mr. Gomme asserts that "for any exceptional expenditure in future years no provision exists," but omits all reference to the fact that there is vacant land belonging to the Corporation on the Thames Embankment, valued at over 12,000*l.* per annum. Then as to page xii, "estates and funds at the disposal of the Corporation,"* the omission of the receipts from the Mayor's Court fees, school fees, and market profits from this account serves to create an erroneous impression, and leads to deductions as regards the sufficiency of income to meet expenditure, the accuracy of which I dispute. Then with regard to interest on cash balances—page xv of Mr. Gomme's statement,†—the interest on cash balances of the Commissioners of Sewers and the Police Fund do not go to swell the funds of the Corporation—Mr. Gomme says that they do,—but are applied primarily towards the cost of the Chamberlain and his establishment in respect of the management of the accounts, for which no other charge is made.

6986. (Chairman.) That does not make very much difference does it; the Chamberlain must be paid for?—It does not make any difference in balances, but the profits arising from the cash balances do not go to swell the funds of the Corporation; in all his accounts Mr. Gomme has placed the profits as if they were direct receipts of the Corporation.

6987. (Mr. Smith.) But did you not tell us this morning that over and above his own salary and his office staff it went to the payment of other officers?—The surplus.

6988. It is practically the same thing?—In the way he uses it, I think not; he places that as a receipt on which he charges a number of expenses which certainly could not be paid out of these profits.

6989. (Mr. Crawford.) The statement of Mr. Gomme to which exception appears to be taken by Mr. Payne is as follows: "the interest earned by the "cash balances of the City Commissioners of Sewers "and the Police Commissioners, instead of going in "relief of rates, as in all other rating authorities "throughout the kingdom, go to swell the funds of "the Corporation," which is what Mr. Payne is endeavouring to explain.

6990. (Mr. Smith.) It goes to pay the salaries of Corporation officers.

6991. (Mr. Crawford.) He will tell you actually what the officers do in respect of it; will you go on with your statement, Mr. Payne?—Not only does the Chamberlain keep the accounts of the Commissioners of Sewers, but the duty is cast upon him of receiving the amounts collected direct from the collectors, checking their accounts and rendering the same to the Commissioners, and the same remarks apply to the police fund. The City police inspectors attend weekly at the Chamber for the money for the men's wages, thereby involving much labour, for which nothing is charged to the ratepayers. He also assists both bodies with overdrafts when necessary, only charging a nominal rate of interest, so that instead of the City ratepayers being taxed by the Corporation the very reverse is the case, the ratepayers being saved expense by this economical arrangement being more favourable to the ratepayers than the ordinary arrangement with a banker.

6992. What do you mean by the nominal rate there?—Well, perhaps the bank rate, or some such rate as that, whereas if they had to go into the market to borrow money they would have to pay a larger rate of interest.

6993. (Chairman.) That is an arrangement any Corporation would make; it would not pay interest on one debt when it had got money to Corporation account.

6994. (Mr. Smith.) That is always the way; for instance, the Corporation of Birmingham has several banking accounts, but if there is a minus balance on one account with the same bank we are allowed to draw on the others. At all events, we pay no interest?—The Chamberlain derives these profits for his own salary from the interest on the balances left in his hand.

6995. (Chairman.) He pools the balance?—It is expected that the balance in his hands would be equivalent to the expense which would naturally fall upon these accounts for keeping them; a large staff of the Corporation is occupied in keeping them.

6996. (Mr. Smith.) In other words, he is the banker as well as the treasurer of the Corporation?—He is the banker as well as the treasurer of the Corporation. There is a remark I have here, perhaps I may as well state it. It is well known that the London County Council derive a material pecuniary advantage from lending to the different vestries and district boards——

6997. (Chairman.) I think you had better not go into that?—No. Then as to the Reserve Fund.* The Report presented to the Court of Common Council states briefly but accurately the origin and disposition of the Reserve Fund. It consisted chiefly of accumulated savings of income of the Finsbury Estate, the lease of which terminated in 1867, and the accumulation of which commenced in 1838. About that year the ground rents of the Finsbury Estate began to fall in and the premises were let upon rackrents for periods of about 21 years, producing a very large augmentation of the rental of the estates, amounting eventually on an average to over 40,000*l.* per annum. In 1838 a plan was formulated for saving $\frac{3}{5}$ths of the annual produce for the purpose of forming an accumulation fund to provide against loss of income at the expiration of the lease. This formed the nucleus of Reserve Fund, which was directed by the Court of Common Council on the 25th June 1857 to be kept separate from the City's cash and its income accumulated. In the year 1858 a sum of 350,000*l.* was raised upon the credit of the City's estates and revenues generally for the purpose of providing for the repayment of loans then outstanding. This precaution arose out of the fears which were engendered that the credit of the City might be endangered by the agitation initiated about that time for the reform of the Corporation. This sum was added to the reserve fund, and the accumulations from the investment of the savings of income of the Finsbury Estate, and of the remaining portion of the 350,000*l.*, amounted in the year 1873 to over 500,000*l.* At the falling in of the lease of the Finsbury Estate in 1867 the income of the Corporation from its other rents had so increased as to render it unnecessary to supply the loss of income from this cause, and the Reserve Fund was thereafter appropriated to special expenditure, in some cases for remunerative and in others for unremunerative purposes. Also to supply the City's cash with such amount as might be necessary to bring the annual income up to the annual expenditure.

6998. How did the other income of the Corporation increase, through refusal to lease?—By the renewal of the leases. The leases of the ground rents falling in and the increased value of property in the City generally in the City, in fact nearly all in the City and Southwark.

6999. It was not like the Finsbury case, by the Corporation refusing to let on lease, but by increase in the reserve rents upon a regrant of leases?—Upon a regrant of leases, yes. As to the statement that the reserve fund is a mere transfer account that is quite incorrect.

7000. (Lord Farrer.) Was that applied partly to capital payments and partly to annual payments. You said so, I think?—It was mainly to meet any deficiency in the income of the Corporation to meet its expenditure of whatever character.

7001. It is annual expenditure?—It is annual expenditure, but very much of that annual expenditure was applied to remunerative objects, and it was spent by the Corporation so as to augment income. These were savings of income, not strictly speaking property, and the money which had been raised by loan was regarded as a cash fund, not a property fund, if I may say so. Savings of interest which had been invested for the purpose of augmenting income were accumulated, and when the City required money for any special purpose they appropriated this fund which had been so kept in reserve to make up deficiency of income. If they had carried the accumulated fund arising from the saving of money year by year to the City's estate we should have had a larger income than was necessary each year, therefore they kept it in reserve, accumulating it until it was wanted—until circumstances arose in which it was desirable to spend it. When the City gave up portions of their revenue as in the case of the coal duties, the grain duty, and brokers' rents, of course, this reserve fund was required to make up the deficiency arising from the loss of those revenues.

Mr. Gomme says, "For the last four years the "reserve fund has consisted mainly of the repayment "of advances formerly made to the Clerkenwell "Improvement Fund on the credit of the surplus "lands, being the produce of the sale of such land "amounting in

As regards this, I have to say that on the 31st December 1875 the Clerkenwell Improvement Fund was indebted to the Reserve Fund, in respect of advances made for the completion of that Improvement and for the repayment of Bonds which had been raised upon the credit of the surplus lands, in the sum including interest to 30th June 1875 of 341,350*l.* As the surplus lands were sold the amounts realised were from time to time repaid to the Reserve Fund, the last repayment of 10,000*l.* having been made in the year 1892. No interest has been charged to the Clerkenwell Improvement Fund since the 30th June 1875, the total repayments of principal have been 313,000*l.*, leaving a balance due to the Reserve Fund at the present time of 28,350*l.*, besides interest from the 30th June 1875. Such interest at 3½ per cent. would have amounted to 96,050*l.* making altogether 124,000*l.* which the Corporation have contributed out of their own funds towards that Improvement beyond the amount provided by Parliament.

7002. (Chairman.) What is that Clerkenwell Improvement?—It was the improvement of a street from the City to Coppice Row, Clerkenwell; its origin is very remote. Originally 25,000*l.* was granted to Commissioners for the purpose of carrying out an improvement which the City had begun, and made out of their own funds in connexion with Farringdon Street when Farringdon Market was erected. The City made the improvement as far as the borders of the City went. They could not go any further. Then Commissioners were appointed.

7003. (Mr. Crawford.) Unconnected with the Corporation?—Unconnected with the Corporation, in order to continue the street. They undertook to do it on a contribution being granted to them out of what was then called the London Bridge Approaches Fund (the Coal and Wine Duties); 25,000*l.* was granted by Parliament out of that fund. They commenced the improvement, and, in the course of a few years, instead of completing it as they expected, they were found to have a liability of about 39,000*l.* I am speaking now from memory, but the improvement was uncompleted, and the land unsold, and there was a liability of about 39,000*l.* upon the Commissioners.

7004. The Corporation took that over?—The Corporation took it over, and then had 88,000*l.* granted out of the same fund as the 25,000*l.* had come from, but they failed to affect the improvement within the 88,000*l.* It is now completed, and the whole of the land is now sold, but it has been at a cost to the Corporation of 124,400*l.*, beyond the amount granted for the purpose out of the Metropolitan funds—I may call them the more public funds.

7005. And that is a metropolitan improvement?—Undoubtedly that is a metropolitan improvement; they paid for their own part of the improvement—within the City—but the other part was all a metropolitan improvement.

7006. (Lord Farrer.) Before leaving the reserve fund, you can tell us whether the Reserve Fund is not reduced to very little now?—Yes; there was only 10,700*l.* left at the end of 1892 and that has been absorbed, I understand, this year. So as to the Clerkenwell Improvement Fund, the whole of the land has been sold and the whole thing has come to an end. As regards the sale of Farringdon Market the sum of 98,100*l.*, referred to by Mr. Gomme, was the gross produce of the sale of the site of the market, and also the site of freehold premises belonging to the Corporation, part of the City Lands which immediately adjoin the market. After allowing for the auctioneer's expenses, &c., the proportion for the sale of the site was about 85,000*l., which was applied in paying off that amount of Central Market Bonds, and the balance, being the proportion of the produce of the City's property under the control of the City Lands Committee, was invested in 1893 in the names of the Corporation Trustees, and remains applicable for reinvestment in freehold property. The whole of the proceeds of the sale of what belonged to the market has been applied as the Act of Parliament directed in discharge of the debts of the London Central Markets. I have some remarks to make with regard to the loan for the Metropolitan Cattle Market of 78,600*l.*†

7007. (Mr. Crawford.) That is page 20 of Mr. Gomme's statement?—Page 20. This sum of 78,600*l.* was raised for the extension of lairs and slaughter-houses and completion of the market, and was charged upon the tolls, rents, and payments of the said market (subject to the existing charges thereon). The revenues derived from these additions are carried to the account of the market forming part of its general receipts. The annual interest on this loan of 78,600*l.* (see page 19, Chamberlain's Account) is paid out of the general receipts of the market, and the ultimate discharge of this debt will have to be provided for out of the surplus revenues of the market if sufficient or, in the event of their being insufficient, out of the general funds of the Corporation. This amount should, therefore, be regarded as a market debt, and not at present as chargeable upon the general estates of the Corporation exclusive of the markets. The surplus revenues of the City markets are as much the property of the Corporation as the net revenues of its house property, and are equally applicable to its general Municipal purposes, and at the full disposal of the Corporation, and are as much applicable, if required, to the payment of the general debts of the Corporation as to those of the markets and are not exclusively hypothecated to discharge the debts on the markets. All our Bonds contain clauses which thoroughly provide for that.

7008. (Chairman.) Yes; we understand?—Then I desire to call attention to the fact that the "deficit "in annual income after allowing for payment of "debt" in each of the years 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892 referred to in page 34 of Mr. Gomme's statement, does not include the surplus income derivable from markets. In estimating a deficit, clearly credit ought to be given for the full income of the Corporation, and before conclusions are drawn attention should be called to other available sources of income such as the future rental to be obtained from the very valuable vacant land on the Victoria Embankment estimated at 12,000*l.* per annum.

7009. (Lord Farrer.) That would appear in your capital account of assets if you give it?—If it were given the value of that land would be set down as part of the assets of the Corporation. "Estimate of total "debt falling due on general estates exclusive of "market debts.

Holborn Valley Improvement -	429,432
Grain Duty (Parks and Open Spaces) - - -	189,370
Metropolitan Cattle Market -	78,600
Highgate Woods - - -	5,000
Leadenhall Market Approaches -	148,800
Pauper Lunatic Asylum - - -	8,000
Total - - -	859,202"

That is one of the deductions of Mr. Gomme.

7010. (Chairman.) Then you point out that he assumes the duty of repaying a debt which does not exist. I think that is all, is it not?—That is all. Mr. Gomme assumes that provision should be made for the discharge of the above debt by an annuity for 30 years amounting to 43,836*l.* per annum, and after allowing revenue available for debt charges upon the basis of the four years 1889–90–91–92 shows an assumed deficit in annual income after allowing for payment of debt as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
1889 - - -	25,359	5	8
1890 - - -	18,706	11	8
1891 - - -	47,007	16	5
1892 - - -	40,096	8	2

Average of the four years 32,792 10*s.* 6*d.

7011. Of course that makes a totally different balance to what you would otherwise have had. Then what is the final result?—Such an assumed deficiency may be used to operate detrimentally to the financial credit of the Corporation, but as there is no legal obligation on the Corporation to discharge its debts within 30 years, and to set aside a fixed sum for that purpose, it may be safely left to its discretion as to the period of their discharge, the increasing revenues being sufficient for the purpose, without recourse to taxation of the ratepayers in relief and for the benefit of whom the Corporation has mainly incurred the expenditure.

7012–3. (Lord Farrer.) The best way to meet any suggestion of that kind would be to show what the assets of the Corporation are, would it not?—I go a little further into that. Mr. Gomme's estimate of complete transfer and re-organisation of Corporation funds will be found set out on page 42, wherein he shows the following surplus and deficits of revenue:—

	£	s.	d.
1889 - - -	+ 6,296	13	2
1890 - - -	+ 20,303	1	7
1891 - - -	— 7,413	0	3
1892 - - -	— 3,532	13	7

or an average of a surplus of 3,934*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* per annum. This is based upon the hypothesis of a complete amalgamation, transfer, and re-organisation of the City's Estates and Public and Trust Funds, but shows that in the event of such amalgamation there would be at present a surplus revenue of under 4,000*l.*, which could be applied for the relief of the Metropolitan ratepayers, such surplus, however, being obtained by levying upon the already overburdened City ratepayer. The fallacies resulting from the indiscriminate amalgamation of the funds of the Corporation follow the accounts throughout, but assuming Parliament should legalise the misappropriation of funds to the extent assumed, and that the revenues of the Corporation could be dealt with on the hypothesis indicated, it is estimated by Mr. Gomme that an additional special county rate would have to be levied upon the City of $2\frac{3}{10}d.$ in the £, producing an estimated revenue of 39,902*l.* to balance the receipts and expenditure on the basis of the year 1892, leaving a deficit balance of 3,532*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* to be provided for. By a just appreciation of the resources at the disposal of the Corporation it may be, however, proved that the revenues of the Corporation are sufficient to meet its current expenditure without the imposition of any additional charge upon the ratepayers. To unravel the analysis of the accounts of the Corporation as stated by the statistical officer of the London County Council would perhaps be as laborious as its construction ; indeed it is impracticable without being furnished with the particulars of the items merged together, but the process is happily unnecessary seeing that the Commissioners have been furnished with the accounts of the Corporation for the four years in question as published by the Chamberlain. The accounts as arranged by Mr. Gomme are to me, I must confess, bewildering instead of demonstrative, and his explanations darken counsel by words without wisdom. It is true that the Chamberlain's published accounts are not all divided into capital and revenue accounts, but every item of receipt and expenditure is truthfully set forth in considerable detail, and the distinction between capital and revenue is easily discernible in all. In the City's cash abstract a line is drawn dividing the items of receipt and expenditure regarded as capital or investments from ordinary items of revenue and expenditure. The Corporation issues in addition every year a broad sheet setting forth its receipts and expenditure in respect of the City's cash for the previous 10 years under a large number of separate items, and distinguishing ordinary from extraordinary expenditure. From the various totals shown on such sheet by the easy process of omitting the last figure in the pounds, the average per annum for the past 10 years under each head of receipt and expenditure can be ascertained.*

7014. (Lord Farrer.) Are you referring to any statement in these accounts?—Yes, my Lord, it is the 10 years' statement which is on the table.

7015. (Mr. Crawford.) It is before the Chairman, I think ?—I have an extra copy.

7016. (Mr. Smith.) I think these documents must have been printed with the view to the public in this shape ?—They are circulated among the members of the Corporation, the usual number is printed, as many as of the City's printed accounts ; they are in that sense.

7017. I thought perhaps it was a running and reading account that would be interesting to the citizens ?—Yes, they are published every year, a 10 years' statement, taking out the first year and putting in the last one, but I think these tabulated figures rather forbid general readers.

7018. I should not think there is much demand for them ?—No. It summarises the City's accounts for 10 years, and the items of expenditure are set out in a more detailed form, not so detailed of course as in the City's audited account, but more so than in the abstract of the accounts.

7019. (Mr. Smith.) Posting bills more than anything?

7020. (Mr. Crawford.) This is what you would call an amplified summary, Mr. Payne.

7021. (Mr. Smith.) Are these put on the church doors ; they seem to be designed for that purpose.

7022. (Mr. Crawford.) No, nor on the City's portals. With reference to the analysis of the Corporation's accounts by Mr. Gomme, which comprehends the period of the four years ending December 31st, 1892, objection is taken on account of the indiscriminate amalgamation of City's cash and trust funds in deducing the figures.* The following figures which are exclusive of loans and capital receipts and expenditure have been deduced from the last 10 years' statement, and may likewise be derived from the annual printed volumes. As you will see from the 10 years' statement, the receipts are divided into ordinary and extraordinary, and the payments are divided into ordinary and extraordinary. I have taken the total at the bottom without making a distinction between capital in the first instance.

7023. (Chairman.) It is not ten years, it is four years ?—Four years. This is deduced from the ten years' statement. Perhaps when reading out the figures I may say that adding the ordinary and the extraordinary receipts together, and the ordinary and the extraordinary payments as they are placed there, not capital items but as revenue and expenditure, shows a difference in the four years of 38,200*l.* 16*s.* $7\frac{3}{4}d.$

7024. A deficiency ?—A deficiency—I put that against the 74,000*l.* which Mr. Gomme has made out.

7025. (Mr. Crawford.) That is your statement ?—That is my statement.

7026. (Chairman.) You make it out as 38,000*l.* instead of 74,000*l.* ?—Yes ; 38,000*l.* instead of 74,000*l.* The result of these figures shows a gross deficiency of receipts on the four years of 38,200*l.* 16*s.* $7\frac{3}{4}d.$ This amount was provided for out of the balance of City's cash in the hands of the Chamberlain at the commencement of the four years' account. I contend that there was cash to meet that already in hand, and that the cash balances alone were diminished by that 38,200*l.* He had less in hand in cash, but he did not need to have recourse to capital. Although the Corporation has expended the above amount of cash in excess of its revenues during the last four years—1889 to 1892—it has added to the value of its property a larger amount.

7027. (Chairman.) That is to say, it has expended 40,000*l.* on what you would call capital expenses ?—Yes.

7028. It may have added to the value or not ?—Well, the erection of Billingsgate Buildings — that adds to the value ; and the making of Leadenhall Market Approaches has been an addition to the value of premises which are bringing in rents. Then the Mayor's Court new offices : I apprehend it is able to do its business better and to take more fees in consequence of having better offices ; the Guildhall new offices necessarily increase the value of the Guildhall and the provision for the teaching of natural science and technical education in the City of London School —that means the improved capacity of the school to earn money ; and besides, the sum of 20,394*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* was also expended towards a sinking fund for discharging debt.

7029. Open Spaces Fund. That is apart from loans ?—Apart from loans.

7030. On loans and capital there is a small balance ? —I have separated loans and capital, and there is apparently a surplus of 1,121*l.* 11*s.* $6\frac{1}{2}d.$ there, and that makes a net deficiency of 37,079*l.* 5*s.* $1\frac{1}{4}d.$

7031. Of altogether about 38,000*l.* in four years ?—Of altogether about 38,000*l.* in four years, an average of 9,269*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* That is admitted as a matter of

* See also Gomme, 10,683–4.

* See also Gomme, 10,683–4.

9,269*l.*, of cash spent, expended by the Corporation in excess of the cash coming into their hands through the ordinary revenue, but much of the above expenditure not being obligatory, need not recur. The Corporation, however, as already stated, holds land upon the Victoria Embankment, at present unlet, exceeding in value 12,000*l.* per annum, and it has reason for expecting a progressive increase of its revenue from its general estates and markets. That is the answer to the deficiency of cash during those four years—that it need not recur; and if it should recur, then we may look forward that there will be an increase of revenue on the other side to meet it.

7032. At the present time that is not income-producing land?—No; we have had offers for it. Then I would desire to remark that the disappearance from time to time of many items of revenue from these statements shows what the Corporation has sacrificed for the benefit of the metropolis at large; and the expenditure under many heads of account shows likewise the exalted public spirit which it has manifested in the liberal expenditure of its funds for the advantage of the inhabitants of the metropolitan district, as well as of the citizens. Among the sources of revenue which have disappeared may be instanced the income from the street tolls, which disappeared in 1856—these items may be derived from those statements which have been put in—and which realised 5,500*l.* a year; also the coal duty which disappeared in 1860, the gross annual value of which was 73,881*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*; also the corn metage which was given up in 1872, and which produced annually a gross sum of 15,696*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*; and also the brokers' rents which were stopped in 1884, and which yielded a sum annually of 9,945*l*, making a total of 105,023*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Those were sums the income of which had been derived from the metropolis generally, and persons who contributed towards them, were not represented on the Corporation, and those were the revenues that, when the Corporation's own funds were found to be sufficient for paying their municipal expenses, they thought it right to give up.

7033. (Lord Farrer.) Under pressure?—Well, I think it was a matter of principle with them.

7034. (Mr. Crawford.) I do not know where the pressure came in with regard to the tolls?—They were spending them for the Metropolis; they were spending them and not touching them at all.

7035. (Chairman.) They lost them?——

7036. (Mr. Crawford.) It is hardly fair to say that they lost them, because certainly with regard to street tolls and the coal duty in 1860—it was a voluntary giving up in 1860 resulting in the forfeiture of 400,000*l.* of their own funds. They not only lost their own coal duties, but they brought upon themselves a charge of 400,000*l.* upon their own estates by giving them up; and the same thing will happen possibly in regard to the grain duty, with the result in a few years' time of bringing a large charge upon the general revenues of the Corporation?—Now I think that the only matter of figures that I desire to bring before the Commissioners is this. The following statements show the large amount of expenditure out of its own revenues since the year 1850 on street improvements, public buildings, and educational and sanitary purposes, &c., for the benefit of the City and Metropolis amounting to 781,255*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* That amount includes a sum for remunerative expenditure of 161,503*l.* 13*s.* producing income, and being as well property applied to useful purposes. And then I have added a list of the amounts spent for Royal and other receptions, which have been for the benefit, no doubt, of the citizens, and to a great extent for the benefit of the country at large, amounting to 251,132*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, together 1,032,388*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* That money was spent out of the City's funds in a voluntary way; they were not compelled—it was not obligatory upon them—but it was an expenditure which they have considered it proper and right to incur in the fulfilment of their municipal duties. I would wish to read the totals of these sums; it would only take a minute or two. They are as follows:—

7037. (Chairman.) They are spread over a great many years?—A new Council Chamber, and several remunerative objects, such as purchase of leasehold property, and Billingsgate Buildings. Then a very large amount for entertainment of royal, imperial, and other personages.

7038. 16,000*l.* for the Shah of Persia, I see?—That was in 1873, and the Sultan and the King of the Belgians in 1867, 30,000*l.*; and the reception of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in 1876, on his return from India——

7039. I think we may take it that the City has distinguished itself by the functions of that kind?—Yes.

7040. (Lord Farrer.) Just one or two further questions I should like to ask. I think you said that the fines on the renewals of leases had been used to pay some obligation of the City—some capital obligation of the City?*—To the reduction of the debt for the open spaces, for Epping Forest, and other open spaces which, the City are anticipating, will ultimately fall upon their revenues so they thought they would begin to pay off at once, and so would apply these funds to it.

7041. And is that the case with the whole of the funds received upon renewal of leases?—No, only those fines which are agreed to be commuted—future fines.

7042. Future fines, that is capital applied to pay off capital?—Future income applied to pay off capital.

7043. In general do fines go into revenue account or into the capital account?—They go into the revenue account.

7044. You treat fines as income?—As income—anticipated income—once in 14 years they come, we look upon it as an extraordinary receipt for that year, but regard it as income spread over the 14 years.

7045. The City have transferred certain expenses, not large expenses, to the Commissioners of Sewers, that is, they have transferred the hydrants or something of that kind, they have transferred certain expenses from their cash, or from these City funds to the rates which are levied by the Commissioners of Sewers; to what extent has that been done, do you know?—The City has expended at the present time in connexion with sanitary matters a considerable sum of money in connexion with the erection of hydrants in the City, and it was thought that was properly the work of the sanitary authority—the Commissioners of Sewers; and they have handed over to the Commissioners of Sewers those hydrants, not making any charge for the great outlay—the cost of the hydrants—the Commissioners of Sewers being willing to take them over and to maintain them in the future; it is only in that way that there is any charge made upon them.

7046. Do the City claim to have a right to throw any charges of that kind upon the rates levied by the Commissioners of Sewers, such, for instance, as street improvements?—No; they have never thrown any street improvements on the City Commissioners of Sewers.

7047. They have not thrown anything, but do you know whether they claim the right to do so supposing the City funds were not sufficient from the falling off in the market rents. Do they claim the right to throw any charge upon the rates levied by the Commissioners of Sewers? Do they regard the rates of the Commissioners of Sewers as anything to fall back upon?—No.

7048. There has been a question, I believe, a rather difficult legal question, as to whether the City have power to levy a county rate within the City. Do you know anything about that?—I do not know what the legal difficulty has been.

7049. No such rate has been levied?—Not for many years; it has not been required. If the City required a county rate, as Mr. Gomme suggested would be required in certain eventualities, I do not think there would be any difficulty. I do not in the least believe there is any difficulty in their levying it.

7050. You think the City might levy a county rate to meet about 57,000*l.* of their expenditure at the present time?—57,000*l.* a year? They spend 57,000*l.* at the present time, which might possibly be levied on the ratepayers.

7051. If they had not the money they might levy a rate to produce 57,000*l.* a year?—It has been so estimated.

7052. Do you know for what expenses that would be?—For Magisterial expenses, Coroner, Administration of Justice, Maintenance of the Sessions House—merely county expenses—not for expenses for the Lord Mayor, or any ordinary municipal expenditure. They might levy a rate to raise money in respect of libraries under the Libraries Act; but I mean under the Common Law, it is within the right of the Corporation to levy a county rate. It might be levied to the extent of something like 57,000*l.* a year to meet expenses the City now pay out of their own general estates.

7053. In some respects we have some figures before us, showing rather large expenditure by the City upon certain items. I do not know whether you have noticed the table which is contained at page 60 of a paper handed in by the London County Council which gives the salaries of various officers?—Yes. I have seen that.

7054. (Mr. Crawford.) It is No. 1 statement, I think?—I have seen that. I have it in my hand.

7055. (Lord Farrer.) You have not looked at that table to see whether it is accurate or not?—I believe it is. In the first table I saw an inaccuracy in which it set the salary of the Town Clerk at 5,000*l.*; that has been corrected; they have put down the correct amount, 3,500*l.*

7056. You believe it to be accurate?—I believe it to be accurate. I have read it down more than once. I believe that it is a correct statement of the salaries as they exist. Well, the Recorder's salary is 4,000*l.*,

* See Questions 6929–31, 6985.

that is stated at 3,500*l.* The salary of the present Recorder is 4,000*l.

7057. There would be some room possibly for economy in that direction if the City found itself in difficulties ?—Undoubtedly, that is quite possible.

7058. (Chairman.) Those are scarcely questions within your purview ?—No. The officers generally, I think, would not approve any reduction of salary.

7059. (Mr. Crawford.) Lord Farrer asked you with regard to the question of hydrants; was not the main reason why the hydrants were handed over to the Commissioners of Sewers that they were used for the cleansing of the streets and the streets were under the Commissioners of Sewers ?—That is a sanitary matter.

7060. Now Lord Farrer seems very anxious that there should be a statement of the assets and liabilities of the Corporation. Just tell me, Mr. Payne, from your experience of very many years connected with the finances of the Corporation, do you consider the financial position of the Corporation to-day better than it has been for several years ?—I should say better than it ever has been in any time of its history.

7061. Better than it has ever been in any time of its history ?—I should think so.

7062. What is the amount of the security which is given by the Chamberlain ?—30,000*l.*

7063. And I think an additional 30,000*l.* by guarantors ?—Yes, additional by guarantors.

7064. (Lord Farrer.) Are the accounts in such a state as to enable you to give figures for 1893 ?—They are in a rapid state of preparation. They will not be published till after they have been audited; according to the regulations of the Corporation they cannot be, and that cannot take place for some months.

7065. For instance, such general questions as these. What was the cash balance with which they began the year 1893, and what was the cash balance with which they finished ? What transfers have been made from the Reserve Fund ? What property has been sold ? What loans have been raised ? Have any loans been paid off, and if so to what amount ? What investments have been made ? What expenditure on capital account has been incurred in the year 1893 ? What was the amount of the rents received ? What exceptional expenditure took place ?—Oh yes, no doubt if you ask for that, if asked for they would be returned in the course of a short time.

7065*a*. (Lord Farrer.) I will give you this.

Perhaps I might refer again to Mr. Crawford on that point.

7066. (Mr. Crawford.) I would suggest that it would be far better, if any further information is required by any Commissioner, that the usual application should be made by the Secretary. I could not ask Mr. Payne to come up here to-morrow, he has come up at great inconvenience to oblige the Corporation and oblige the Commissioners.

7067. (Lord Farrer.) I am addressing my questions to the representative of the Corporation on this particular subject.

7068. (Chairman.) Your answer, Mr. Payne, is, that you are no longer an officer of the Corporation ?—No, I have no access to the books.

7069. You attend here from your past experience, and you can hand the question over to the Corporation if asked to do so ?—The Chamberlain will be the proper person.

7070. (Lord Farrer.) You are here, I understand, in the place of the Chamberlain. Perhaps you are in sufficient contact with him to pass on my question to him ?—I will pass it on.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel T. Davies Sewell, Clerk of the Chamberlain's Court, called in and examined.

7071. (Chairman.) What is your position, Colonel Sewell ?—Clerk of the Chamberlain's Court.

7072. You have been there for some time ?—Eight-and-forty years.

7073. What is the character of the Court ?—It is a Court for the adjudication between masters and apprentices; it also has the duty of admitting all freemen, and enrolling all apprentices bound according to the custom of London.

7074. Are your sittings quasi-private in cases between masters and apprentices ?—Quasi-private, sir.

7075. The public do not come in in a body always ?—No, they do not, sir. They are not excluded.

7076. But they are not welcomed ?—It is desirable to keep these matters private.

7077. Not excluded and not welcomed ?—Quite so, sir. A very good way of putting it.

7078. (Lord Farrer.) And I daresay they do not want to do so ?—Sometimes they do, sir, from curiosity. Perhaps a fellow apprentice might like to come; there are a lot of people in the world who would like to come in.

7079. (Mr. Smith.) Come to see the punishment, perhaps ?—Yes, sir, probably they rejoice at that.

7080. (Chairman.) There are two judges in this Court when it sits ?—Not two judges sitting at the same time, sir. The Chamberlain is one judge and the Comptroller, who is here to-day, is the deputy-judge.

7081. How often does it sit ?—Whenever required, sir, excepting during the month of August.

7082. Practically, how often does it sit ?—Possibly there are 14 cases a year—not many more; it varies of course according to circumstances.

7083. You commit an apprentice to prison, do you ?—There are two there now.

7084. Blackfriars, or where is it ?—Blackfriars; there are six cells there.

7085. (Mr. Crawford.) That is Bridewell ?—Bridewell.

7086. (Chairman.) What kind of offences are the two there now charged with ?—Idleness, sir, coming late in the morning, and insubordination; those are the three principal—and absence generally. There is a case now in Bridewell where the boy absented himself for three months—played truant.

7087. There is another jurisdiction ?—Concurrent, sir, with the magistrate.

7088. Concurrent jurisdiction ?—Yes.

7089. But yours is preferred, as a rule, is it ?—Very much, sir; in fact, they come back; after having been to try the Justice room they come back to us saying that they prefer it.

7090. Who return to you, the masters ? — The masters, sir.

7091. Are the apprentices represented by any official person ?—No, sir; as a rule the father generally comes with them, but if the apprentice desires to have a solicitor he is there as a friend, but not in his legal capacity.

7092. He does not appear as a solicitor ?—Not as a solicitor, sir; there are no expenses connected with the Court. A shilling is the extent for a summons, and that is not always enforced.

7093. Do you have cases of apprentices against the masters ?—Sometimes, sir. There was a case this last week.

7094. What was the character of that ?—He refused to work overtime, sir.

7095. Who ?—The apprentice. The master wished him to work overtime and the apprentice refused to do so. The apprentice came to complain of his master.

* See Harrison, 968.

Colonel T. D Sewell.

18 Jan. 1894.

7096. For doing what?—For asking him to work overtime.

7097. Is asking an offence?—The apprentice considered it so.

7098. What was the result?—The complaint was dismissed, sir.

7099. Have you got any case of a successful complaint of an apprentice against the master?—Not for overtime, sir, but for working too long hours. In the printing trade unless there were some overtime as you know, sir, the trade would be almost at a standstill.

7100. Are there many cases of misconduct alleged by apprentices against masters?—Not now, sir; very seldom. There are very few masters who do not act justly by their apprentices.

7101. There are some small fees paid in relation to these cases?—No, sir, none except the summons 1*s.*, and that, as I say, is not always enforced; in fact they do not want a summons in most cases; they come voluntarily.

7102. Are there many apprentices now annually bound in the City?—As far as I can calculate, sir—it is difficult to ascertain—I think there is something like 2,000 serving at the present time.

7103. 2,000 serving?—I think so, sir.

7104. What is the average length of servitude?—One can hardly tell, sir, because there has been a new system introduced by the Corporation, of reducing the term to four years; that has only been in existence three or four years, and I have no means of striking an average.

7105. This Court also keeps a roll of freemen, does it not?—It does, sir.

7106. Of freemen.

7107. Honorary freemen solely, or all freemen?—Oh, no, freemen by service, patrimony and redemption, as also honorary freemen.

7108. And how many get admitted in the course of the year?—On an average, sir, I think it is nearly 500 a year during the last 30 years.

7109. Have you a roll of freemen—of living freemen?—We cannot tell, sir, after they have been admitted. We do not know whether they are living or not; we do not follow them.

7110. (Mr. Smith.) They are immortal?—I dare say they wish they were themselves.

7111. (Chairman.) Have the Livery Companies anything to say to your Court?—They all present their freemen to us, sir, for without having been recorded by the Chamberlain they cannot admit to the Livery.

7112. On the other hand, you can admit a freeman without his being a member of a Company?—Oh, yes; since 1835.

7113. No one can be admitted a liveryman without being a freeman of the City?—He may be admitted a freeman, but not a liveryman.

7114. (Mr. Crawford.) A freeman of the Company?—A freeman of the Company, yes. There are three distinct phases, as it were—freeman of the Company, freeman of the City, and liveryman.

7115. (Chairman.) And a lad may be bound an apprentice within a Company?—Oh, yes; and he usually is.

7116. Without coming to you?—He must afterwards be enrolled in our Court, otherwise the Master cannot enforce the apprenticeship after 12 months. When enrolled the Chamberlain sees that the binding is perfectly regular in every way according to the custom of London. If not enrolled he can sue out his indentures without asking his master's consent.

7117. (Mr. Crawford.) To what date does this Court go back?—To 1307: and before then, I think, but certainly as far back as 1307.

7118. Is it a Court that is still much appreciated by trade interests in the City?—Very much, and I think that is shown by the very influentially signed petition some time ago, when Sir William Harcourt brought in his Bill for the abolition of the Court.

7119. Has the jurisdiction of the Court been upheld by mandamus by the Superior Courts?—Oh, yes, always.

7120. Can you tell the Commissioners the number of freemen admitted during the last 30 years, about?—I think it was 17,000, sir. 17,494 I think it was, speaking from recollection.

7121. And what is the voting number in Common Hall of the Livery?—Between 8,000 and 9,000.

7122. (Lord Farrer.) How many cases did you say you had of apprentices in your Court in the year, 14?—About 14.

7123. (Mr. Smith.) What can you do to a master if his apprentice complains against him, and in your opinion has just cause of complaint?—The Chamberlain makes an order, and that order if not obeyed would go to our upper Court where penalties exist and are enforced.

7124. What would happen in the Upper Court?—He would be mulcted and fined by a jury as was the case——

7125. (Mr. Crawford.) The Upper Court, being the Mayor's Court?—The Mayor's Court. It is not desirable to mention names, but I could put on paper the name of a very first-rate firm who allowed the order to go to the Upper Court and suffered penalty.

7126. It is a pecuniary remedy?—It is a pecuniary remedy. In former times the Master was committed to prison.

7127. (Mr. Smith.) I had read that somewhere?—It has not been exercised for I should think 100 years.

7128. (Mr. Crawford.) It is on the records of the Court?—Yes.

7129. (Mr. Smith.) As far as you know the law is not repealed?—I think it is custom to a great extent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. H. F. Youle.

Mr. Henry Frederick Youle, Clerk of the Special Sessions, called and examined.

7130. (Chairman.) What is your position, Mr. Youle, in the City?—I am Clerk of the Special Sessions, that is Clerk to the Justices, and I am also Clerk to the Visiting Committee of the City of London Lunatic Asylum, Stone, near Dartford.

7131. Is your work principally connected with the Lunatic Asylum?—Oh, dear no, sir; my work is specially connected with the Sessions; the justices. I am also Clerk to the Police Summons Court, which sits at Guildhall twice weekly, and disposes of an average of 34 summonses at each sitting.

7132. The Corporation is the Local Authority in respect of lunacy in the City?—Yes, that is so, sir.

7133. The asylum is at Dartford?—At Stone, near Dartford—about two miles from Dartford.

7134. When was it built?—Completed in April 1866, I think.

7135. And how is it supported?—It is supported by contributions received from the Board of Guardians of the City of London Union, who pay for the different pauper patients chargeable to the Union, and is also to a small extent defrayed from the City's cash, sums received from the City's cash for the maintenance of what may be termed wandering lunatics or paupers who have no settlement in the City of London and who would be otherwise paid from the county rate and are now paid for from the City's cash. That is the minor portion of it. The greater sum of money is derived from the Union funds.

7136. It might be supported by a rate?—The asylum itself?

7137. Yes?—No. I take that not to be so. It is not the asylum itself as it now stands. The patients chargeable to the union are paid for from the poor rate. There can be no doubt in the world, sir, if a county rate were made that those paupers, the expenses of whom are now defrayed from the City's cash, would be paid for from that county rate.

7138. But the City's cash relieves the county of the obligation?—That is so, sir.

7139. It would be within their power to levy a rate for that purpose?—In the early days, until some recent Act was passed, the name of which I have forgotten for the moment, the power of levying that county rate was in the County Justices; but now it is vested in the Court of Common Council.

7140. (Mr. Crawford.) That Act is the Local Government Act of 1888?—Yes, the Local Government Act of 1888, I am much obliged, I had forgotten for the moment.

7141. (Chairman.) What is the amount spent out of the City's cash in respect of this?—I have not got the figures here, but the amount is 1,200*l.* or 1,600*l.*; but the facts can be easily ascertained if it is thought desirable.

7142. About 1,200*l.* or 1,600*l.* a year?—A year.

7143. And the capital cost of the asylum?—The cost was about 77,000*l.*

7144-5. How was that defrayed?—That was defrayed from the City's cash.

7146. Is there any attempt made to repay that cost as a part of the expense of the asylum?—To repay the 77,000*l.*; not that I know of.

7147. That 1,200*l.* or 1,600*l.* is quite independent of anything in connexion with the original outlay?—Oh, yes.

7148. (Mr. Crawford.) Was there originally a county rate made by the justices for the building of the original asylum, and subsequently was that resolution rescinded upon a petition from the ratepayers of the city?—In the early days the justices prepared a basis or standard for a county rate. That was never actually put in force. There is no doubt in the world that at the time you refer to the citizens were very strongly opposed to the making of a county rate, and petitioned, I assume, against it. That was before my time.

7149. And so the Corporation bore the cost out of its own money?—Bore the cost not only of the original buildings, but also of subsequent additions.

7150. (Chairman.) You have got pages 22 and 23 of the City's Blue Book before you?—I have, sir.

7151. That gives an account of the number of licenses which were granted or renewed at your sessions?—That is so.

7152. How many attend, as a rule, those sessions, forming the bench?—Are you speaking of the General Annual Licensing Meeting, or of the ordinary transfer sessions?

7153. The Annual Licensing Meeting?—Seven justices are appointed to form a Licensing Committee, that being the maximum number allowable by the Licensing Act.

7154. Seven aldermen, that would be?—Seven aldermen, as justices.

7155. And the renewal sessions?—The renewal sessions would be the same sessions.

7256. Transfers?—At transfers there is a rota for six aldermen to attend. Two are quite enough, but the rota is made for six to attend, so that there will be no fear or difficulty in securing the attendance of a proper number, but usually four or five attend.

7157. Are applications often contested?—For new licenses?

7158. Yes?—Oh, yes.

7159. By whom?—By persons in the immediate neighbourhood who are not desirous I suppose of having any licensed house there, and secondly of course, by members of the trade.

7160. Do the City police get represented at these sessions? Do they ever appear?—The City police are there to answer any question that may be addressed to them by the bench; in the ordinary way they would not oppose.

7161. But they are ready to answer any question?—They are ready to answer any question, yes.

7162. Is it usual to appeal to them; are they frequently asked the character, for example, of a house before transfer?—If necessary, the police are sworn as witnesses, and depose to any particular facts anyone is desirous of asking them about, the solicitor for the applicant, or for the persons who are opposing.

7163. (Mr. Crawford.) Is there not a usual question put by the Clerk of the Court to the Police whether there is any complaint?—That is in all cases of transfer matters. One of the questions put by the Clerk is are there any complaints against the applicant or the premises. The answer is generally in the negative. If it should be in the affirmative, he asks, of course, what are the complaints?

7164. (Chairman.) The number of licenses seem to be in process of reduction slightly?—That is so, yes.

7165. (Lord Farrer.) Is that in consequence of the fact that in the City premises are now more occupied for business purposes?—It may be put down to that to a very large extent, but the tendency of the age seems to be not to grant new licenses.

7166. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a difficult thing to get a new license in the City.

7167. (Lord Farrer.) There are more eating-houses without alcoholic liquors?—Quite so, and in later years there have started up aerated bread shops which has made very great difference.

7168. (Mr. Smith.) Is that a substitute for drinking?—Oh, yes, very largely.

7169. (Mr. Crawford.) I asked you a question a little time back; it is a very difficult thing, is it not, to get a new license in the City?—New licenses are very rarely granted, and prior to new licenses being granted a committee of the magistrates go round and inspect the premises to see whether it is a fit and proper house and whether it is wanted by the public—not by the individual.

7170. (Lord Farrer.) How many days do the sessions altogether take for their business—how many days in the year do the sessions occupy?—On every day of the year, including of course the transfer sessions. Well, there is first the meeting which may be called the call over or renewal day, the day fixed for the inspection of the houses, then there would be a day fixed for hearing the applications, and then when the new license is granted by the Committee it has to be confirmed by the whole court, which makes the fourth day.

7171. I do not mean how many days are taken in each case, but how many days in the year are the sessions sitting?—I should say about 16 or 17 days during the year, perhaps not so many, but there are eight special sessions, probably four or five, in connexion with the general annual licensing meeting, probably 13. I was a little bit in error when I said so many.

7172. (Mr. Holt.) There would appear to be very few appeals against the decision of the justices?—Very few.

7173. I suppose the appeal is to Quarter Sessions, which are again a body of justices, which are the same body?—Not the same magistrates as hear the applications, but other magistrates with the Recorder in the chair.

7174. Other magistrates of the City of London?—Certainly.

7175. (Mr. Crawford.) You also act as clerk to the Visiting Committee, as far as the Corporation is concerned, of Her Majesty's prisons at Newgate and Holloway?—At Newgate and Holloway, yes.

7176. May I take it, Mr. Youle, generally, that the various statements which appear in this Blue Book from pages 22 to 30 have practically been prepared under your supervision?—Yes, undoubtedly.

7177. And you are ready to speak as to the accuracy of the statements here made?—Yes. I should have preferred to have added one or two little things to have brought the matter up to date.

Mr. H. F. Youle.
18 Jan. 1894.

7178. What do you wish to add?—I had a paper down here, it is not very material, if you look at page 26 the following is the number of applications for transfer of licenses heard during the past seven years' 1887, 88, 89, 90, 91, and 92, and part of 93; I have since made it up for the whole of 1893.

7179. It is merely bringing it up to date?—Merely bringing it up to date.

7180. Still the figures here are a very fair example?—Are a very fair example.

7181. And they are accurate?—To the best of my knowledge certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. W. White, M.B.

Mr. Ernest William White, M.B. Lond., M.R.C.P. Lond., Medical Superintendent of the City of London Lunatic Asylum, called in and examined.

7183. What is your position, Mr. White?—I am the medical superintendent of the City of London Lunatic Asylum.

7184. That is the one near Dartford, about which we have been hearing?—Near Dartford.

7185. How long have you been there?—I have been there since July the 1st, 1887.

7186. You have seen the account put in by the Corporation, the statement put in with respect to the asylum?—I have, yes.

7187. And it is an accurate statement?—Yes, it is accurate. In my evidence to-day I should rather explain one or two paragraphs.

7188. What is it you wish to modify?—With regard to the various improvements when they were done, for instance the alternative water supply was made in 1887, the sewage system in 1890, the improved system of lighting and ventilation in 1888, the enlargement and redecoration of many of the wards in 1891 to 1893, and the renovation of the dormitories and laying out of the grounds extended from 1888 to 1893. Then I should like to say that the expenses of taking over the additional land mentioned, the 107 acres, from the tenant, and compensation for unexpired lease and crops was borne out of the maintenance fund.

7189. Does it more than pay its way, then?—The farm is just beginning to get straight, it has been a great trouble to us as the land was very much run out. I should like to state that the cost of maintenance per patient for 12 months ending June 30th last, was 10*s*. 2*d*. per week, the average cost of maintenance per patient in the borough asylums of England and Wales for 1892 having been 10*s*.

7190. What does that include?—That includes the maintenance of the patients; it is really for their board as apart from their lodging, you know.

7191. Does it include establishment charges?—The ordinary establishment charges, yes.

7192. Also, but nothing for lodging?—We have two funds, the maintenance fund and the building and repairs fund, which are kept absolutely separate. The building and repairs fund falls upon the City's cash; the maintenance fund falls, for the City of London Union patients, upon that Union, and for the Corporation patients, upon the Corporation.

7193. How many patients have you got?—We had on Saturday last 211 males, and 241 females, total, 452, the present accommodation of the asylum being for 455 patients, there being 215 beds for males, 19 at the Cottage Hospital, and 240 for females.

7194. Then you are very nearly full?—Therefore the institution is practically full. You will see set out in the Corporation statement the maintenance of these patients as it falls, how they are chargeable. There were 350 on Saturday last chargeable to the City of London Union. There are 37 who, being without a settlement, are consequently chargeable to the Corporation. This is brought up to Saturday last, my present statement, there are 20 chargeable to unions and parishes outside the city, and there are 45 paying patients of the private class, received in pursuance of a resolution of the Visiting Committee of the 1st January 1892.

7195. Were there none admitted before that?—Not till the 1st January 1892.

7196. That was a new class?—That was a new class, and we have 45 at the present time; they pay a guinea a week. Now the average number of patients in residence during the past seven years has been 421. The admissions during these years have been as follows: in 1887, there were 98 patients admitted, in 1888, there were 84; in 1889 there were 59; in 1890, 51; in 1891, 50 in 1892, 114; in 1893, 100. If you deduct the 61 private patients admitted, this gives an average of 70·7 pauper patients admitted annually. These patients come from the City of London Infirmary, the justice rooms of the Mansion House and the Guildhall and some few from their homes. Our recovery rate as you will observe, sir, has been very good for some years past: the combined average reco very rate for the years 1888 to 1892 inclusive for the City of London Asylum was 52·24 per cent. calculated on the admissions, the recovery rate for England and Wales for the decade 1883 to 1892 being 39·73.

7197. How do you account for that great superiority of the power of recovery of a city patient?—Well, I account for it to a considerable extent from the limited size of the asylum. It is generally accepted at the present time that asylums with not more than 600 patients are those which offer the best prospects of recovery, for the individual cases are known to the superintendent and the acute and recent cases are not lost sight of amongst the chronic. Our death-rate you will observe has always been below the normal asylum death-rate for England and Wales. I have here a chart which shows this very distinctly.

7198. Your numbers are small and that makes a considerable variation?—Yes, it does.

7199. You are not large enough to have a perfectly steady rate?—No, but that is the rate since 1866; this dot represents it from year to year, and a line represents the average asylum death-rate for England and Wales, we have never reached it.

7200. You had an enormous jump up last year?—Owing to an epidemic of influenza; we had a very bad epidemic of influenza last year.

7201. (Lord Farrer.) And that affected the death-rate?—That affected the death-rate.

7202. Of the lunatics?—Of the lunatics, yes.

7203. (Chairman.) That great variation represented, I suppose, about 20 deaths above the average, did it, in last year?—No, not so many as that; I think I can tell you in a moment; the deaths in 1892 were 35.

7204. In 1891?—And in 1891, 19.

7205. Sixteen is the difference?—Sixteen it was.

7206. In 1890 there were still fewer?—In 1890 there were still fewer; I think the death-rate falls there again.

7207. It has dropped down again?—It has come down in 1893, and our recovery rate has gone up this year.

7208. How is your visiting committee composed? The visiting committee is composed of 12 members, all appointed by the Court of Common Council; four are aldermen and eight are commoners.

7209. How often do they come and see you?—They held 45 meetings during the year ending July 1893, of which four meetings were those of sub-committees. I should state that the present asylum buildings could not be further enlarged, because of the limited area of the administrative centre and the proximity of roads on the east, west, and south. A second asylum or annexe as it is termed on the new land which is not well adapted for a building site would alone be possible. We have roads in somewhat close proximity on the east, west, and south of the present building. I have appended to this statement extracts from the Lunacy Commissioners reports from 1888 to 1892 inclusive, made after their annual inspection.

Mr. E. W. White, M.B.

18 Jan. 1894.

7210. They appear to give a very good account of it?—Thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Arthur Tempest Pollard, M.A., Headmaster, and Mr. George Robert Renwick, Secretary, of the City of London School, called in and examined.

Mr. A. T. Pollard, M.A., and Mr. G. R. Renwick.

7211. (Chairman to Mr. Pollard.) You are the headmaster of the City of London School, Mr. Pollard?—Yes.

7212. How long have you been there?—Four years.

7213. In succession to Dr. Abbott?—Yes.

7214. Had you been there before?—No.

7215. Are you appointed by the Corporation?—Yes, by the entire body of the Corporation.

7216. Was there a selecting Committee?—There is a selecting Committee consisting of three professors of University College and three professors of King's College; they read through the testimonials and submit three names to the Court of Common Council, and then the Court of Common Council choose one from among the three.

7217. The Court of Common Council is the body that votes with respect to these three?—Exactly.

7218. You have read the memoranda put in in respect of the school and the criticisms of Mr. Gomme?—Well, I have read the one criticism that there is no reason in law why the fees of the school should not be regulated so as to make it self-supporting. On that point I should like very much to advance further evidence; should I read what I have written here?

7219. Yes?—With regard to this statement I beg to say that the fees at present charged together with the railway fares which in the great majority of cases have to be paid by the parents or guardians of the pupils—who live mainly away from the City—come to an amount that brings them pretty much on the level of a school where the fees charged are 20*l.*, which is a distinctly high fee. If the fees were raised beyond what they are now, 15*l.* 15*s.*, the probability is there would be a considerable falling off in the attendance. There was a great falling off in applications when the school was removed from Milk Street to the Embankment. Before the removal the fees were ten guineas, and there was a considerable excess of applications over admissions. When the school was removed to its present site on the Victoria Embankment the fees were raised to 12*l.* 12*s.* and 15*l.* 15*s.*, and the applications for admission have been only sufficient to keep the school full.

7220. They are still 12*l.* 12*s.* and 15*l.* 15*s.*, are they?—They are still 12*l.* 12*s.* and 15*l.* 15*s.* with an extra guinea or two guineas according to the time devoted to drawing.

7221. What is the number which constitutes a full school?—Well, the school is built for 680; as a matter of fact we are a trifle over; we are 698, and we have a few more boys waiting. The whole of last year we had 10 or 12 more boys wanting to come in than I could admit.

7222. When the fees were 10*l.* 10*s.* there was a crowd of boys waiting to come in?—Yes.

7223. (Lord Farrer.) But you are full at present?—Yes. We are full at present, with just enough applications, practically, to fill up the vacancies. It will be seen, therefore, that in order to compete with other schools the fees must be kept fairly moderate in amount having regard to the necessary expense of reaching the school. The absence of playing fields would also prevent the coming of a class of boys who would be disposed to pay a higher fee.

7224. How do your fees compare with the University College School?—Well, the University College School fees are about 24*l.*, but it is most instructive if you pursue it further with regard to the history of that school. I do not know that I am entitled to say anything about another school, but there were 600 boys there some time ago and the number I saw in the returns of the County Council was 452. The King's College average was formerly some 400, and now it has been reduced to nearer 200. St. Paul's, by going to the West End, has affected both these schools. Still it is an argument in point when the question of our fees is to be considered. The fees at the Merchant Taylors' School are a fraction lower than ours. I have calculated it out, and it comes, I think, to 10*s.* per head less than ours. That would be the school with which we should compete. I do not think 24*l.* schools with railway fares added, as everybody lives out, will be able to hold their own in future. In the case of St. Paul's School where the fees are 24*l.* 9*s.* most of the boys are resident round. Our fees are higher than yours at Birmingham, Mr. Smith. At the high school there, according to my recollection, the fee is only 12*l.*

7225. (Chairman.) You are very favourably situated with respect to railways?—Yes, we are on the whole, except the North London Railway. It is a long way to come from Broad Street; but except that we are very favourably situated. There is one thing we have to consider in the immediate future, namely, that the Mercers' Company are going to bring their school which is now near Cannon Street Station into Holborn on the site of Barnard's Inn, and instead of being a school for 150 boys at 5*l.* a year, they are, I am informed, to raise their fee and have a school of 300 boys. That will be competition at our very doors.

7226. Are they going to pull down Barnard's Inn? Yes, they are going to pull it down and erect a school there. That is the educational outlook all round. I should not like to give my opinion as to these schools, except under reserve as to its perfect accuracy. Another point to be considered in this connexion is the fact that very many of the masters are young men who will be paid progressive salaries, and this will, of course, entail a larger expenditure in years to come. The practice of the Court of Common Council, I may just interpolate, is not to give the full salaries at first, but to begin at lower salaries. For instance, I might give my own salary. My own salary is 1,000*l.*; well, that is about 500*l* less than the salary attached to any similar post, but it is known that in course of time a person's salary is raised to a higher amount if he gives satisfaction; well, it is the same all down.

7227. What is the salary of the Master of Christ's Hospital?—That I cannot tell you. The salary of the similar headmaster in Birmingham I can tell you, it is 2,000*l.* The salary is about 2,000*l.* in St. Paul's, 2,000*l.* at Dulwich, at Manchester Grammar School 1,400*l.* to 1,500*l.*, so that the amount paid with us is not excessive. The Secretary tells me that he thinks the salary of the Head Master of Christ's Hospital is 1,300*l.* and a house, or it used to be.

7228. At Christ's?—That is apparently what it used to be once upon a time. I do not know of my own knowledge. I should not like that to be taken as perfectly certain, but I know the others are accurate to a hundred or two.

7229. (Mr. Smith.) You are right as regards Birmingham?—Dulwich, for instance, depends on a capitation grant, so that you can never be right as to that. Mine is a new appointment. I have only been there four years. When I went there there were five or six masters of great age—one over 70; they have retired and their places have been taken by young men, so at the present moment the amount paid in salaries is small—is distinctly small. In a most valuable report of the London County Council on technical education they gave the average cost of various schools, and we come out far the lowest, which was partly due to that.

Mr. A. T. Pollard, M.A., and Mr. G. R. Renwick.

18 Jan. 1894.

7230. In that respect you are rather peculiar in the city of London?—I do not know about other posts.

7231. (Lord Farrer.) Are there pensions to retired masters?—Yes, there are pensions to retired masters.

7232. Those have to be taken into account?—In the past they had, but now there is a pension scheme to which the masters contribute. Those who have been fortunate enough to serve before the pension scheme have got their pensions without paying for them.

7233. (Mr. Crawford.) That is of very recent origin?—That is of very recent origin. I think it affects all present masters; they will have to pay in order to get their grants.

7234. And all the officers of the Corporation?—And all the officers of the Corporation, too; so that it will not in future have to be taken into account.

7235. (Chairman.) The question of raising fees was recently considered by the Corporation?—There is a very important report on that subject, the substance of which is given here. It was considered most carefully, and our Committee went into every detail. We got information not only about Birmingham, which Mr. Vardy, who was an old City of London boy, supplied to us; but we also got some information about another school in London. I ought not to mention that, perhaps. Then I got information from Manchester. I knew a great deal about Dulwich, where I have been a master. I had got most of the information, and with the County Council report giving the amount of expenditure elsewhere we were able to see that in cheapness of working, owing rather to the accident of new masters coming in at this moment, we took a very high place. However, this is the point to bring before you; the Common Council, when the report was presented to them accepted it without debate, it was felt to be so conclusive.

7236. (Chairman.) You have a standing committee for your school?—A standing committee of 35, I think, is the number, a certain number of aldermen and common councilmen.

7237. With some alderman as chairman for every year?—No, a common councilman is chairman; an alderman is never chairman.

7238. Has that always been so?—I cannot say that an alderman is never chairman. (Mr. Renwick.) Mr. Alderman Hale was Chairman year after year, and then he was made president; because they objected to his being Chairman he was made President and so he sat above the Chairman for several years. (Mr. Pollard.) Yes, of course, long pre-historic to me. It is important to remember that other schools in the Metropolis have very generous assistance accorded them—7,000*l.* a year is given by the Merchant Taylors' Company for the conduct of their school. I think I am accurate in my recollection of the headmaster's statement at the headmasters' conference, we could not hold our own, of course, except under somewhat similar conditions. Then to come to the next point I put here. The curriculum of the school is a very wide one in order to meet the varied wants of the large number of scholars. The object of the School is not only to give the old classical and mathematical training but to afford a thorough commercial education, including scientific and manual instruction. Great developments have been made during the last 4 years by the creation of a modern side and by the increased facilities for teaching natural science. For instance, we have something under 200 boys in the junior section. Then we divide into two sides and we have 224 boys on the classical side. On the science and modern sides together we have 280 or 290, there is a little excess towards the modern education.

7239. (Lord Farrer.) Do you get anything from the London County Council now?—No, nothing whatever.

7240. (Chairman.) Is there any relation between your school and the Cowper Street School?—None whatever.

7241. Do they get anything from the London County Council?—I think not, now that they have got an endowment out of Dulwich College. I should think it is very doubtful. There is one point in connexion with the composition of the school that may be stated. It may be mentioned that although the sons of freemen have the preference in admission to the school, 12½ per cent. only of the scholars are sons of freemen and householders. Really, boys come from all parts, from Surbiton, Blackheath, Plumstead, Potter's Bar, Barnet, and Chingford. Then from Hampstead and Finchley, West Kensington—everywhere all round; in the East Central District and the West Central District, added together, there are not 50 boys who reside. So that you can see how the school is mainly made up of boys who have to pay railway or tram fares, or something of that kind. Then, next to this class of boys (sons of freemen), preference is given to boys holding scholarships under the London School Board, of whom there are a considerable number in the school, many of whom have done remarkably well. This is the only similar school in London where Board School scholars are thus taken, and we have had a senior classic, Mr. Barker, who was the first Board School scholar that came to the school.

7242. He has just died in New Zealand?—Yes, he has just died in Australia. Then Mr. Pond, a professor in New Zealand, was a fellow of St. John's, and took a very distinguished position, and he was a Board School scholar. Then, only half-a-year ago, a Board school scholar was elected to a fellowship at one of the Cambridge colleges, he had got two first-class distinctions for classics, and was one of the selected for the Chancellor's medals, so that those scholars have held very high positions indeed. The Corporation is very proud of its attitude on this question 7243. How many do you get a year of Board School boys?—(Mr. Renwick.) Six. (Mr. Pollard.) Well, it is not absolutely, but it is generally, six. It is five or six, I think. At the present moment we happen to have 24 altogether; but this has varied since I have been head-master considerably. It varies from 17 or 18 to 24. Those are the points that I wished to add to what has been said.

7244. (Mr. Crawford). One point I wanted to ask you about. The Corporation has lately contributed largely in connexion with the technical classes, has it not?—Yes; during the last four years it has been necessary to make great extensions in that direction. The Corporation gave 1,200*l.* for building new rooms, and has given 500*l.* a year—about 500*l.* having being spent before—in order that everything should be complete in a scientific direction. It has spent money tremendously in order to give effect to modern requirements during the last four years.

7245. (Lord Farrer.) Have you any prospect of getting anything from the London County Council?—Well, I do not see how any steps that have been yet taken will be likely to affect us.

7246. Not in the way of laboratories?—Well, everything is provided—practically everything has been provided for in this expenditure.

7247. Or scholarships?—I do not think the boys that pay our fees would be boys that could get them.

7248. (Mr. Crawford.) I take it that the Corporation has really expended something like 5,000*l.* a year in excess of receipts on the school?—I can speak to that as being so for the last two years, and it has been over 5,000*l.*; with the statutory annual grant of 900*l.* it has been over 5,000*l.*

7249. Over and above receipts?—That is, of course, including the pensions, and reckoning the pensions at

1,200*l.*, take 1,200*l.* off and it would give you the amount spent on the school. That has been partly due to the expenditure on the building, but the same amount—about 5,000*l.* a year—will be required in future, partly on account of the comparatively low salaries at present paid.

7250. (Chairman.) The pensions will die off, and the salaries will increase?—That is about what it will come to. The pensions will come out of a separate fund altogether.

7251. (Mr. Crawford.) I take it that the statements which appear in the Corporation Blue Book are correct?—As far as they are within my knowledge they are correct, and I tried to verify all that I reasonably could.

7252. (Chairman.) Are the scholarships at all increasing in number?—Scholarships gained at the University or held in the school?

7253. Leaving scholarships or other schoiarships, I mean those founded by private benefactors, and not founded by the Corporation?—No, practically not. One was founded by subscribers in memory of Dr. Cuthbertson, but practically, they are what they were five years ago.

7254. (Lord Farrer.) Where do boys go when they leave you?—Into business, largely.

7255. Not many to the Universities?—There have been six scholarships gained at the Universities each year. We keep up the tradition. A large number do not want to go, but there is the ladder. The classical side, although it provides for them, is largely taken advantage of by boys who go in for the London Matriculation examination, and who have not the ability to distinguish themselves by getting scholarships: but the ladder is there for any clever boy in the school. It seems to be an ideal school in that way, we do not send up a number of boys who starve afterwards, who are not good enough to make their way, but a select few go to the University, and most go into business.

Mr. A. T. Pollard, M.A. and Mr. G. R. Renwick.

18 Jan. 1894.

7256. (Chairman.) Six gain scholarships at the University?—That is about the average.

7257. Do many go without getting entrance scholarships?—Hardly any, perhaps an average of one or so.

7258. (Mr. Smith.) At what age does the average boy leave your school?—It varies slightly, but it is about 16. With regard to that I ought to state that there are always a certain number who come to us and who after coming for one or two terms, leave, as the railway journey does not suit them, they say. That pulls it down below 16.

7259. They are removals rather than leavings?—Yes, they are removals, and those you have always to allow for. Of course the boys that go to the University go at about 19, and other boys will leave at about 15 to 16, with a leaning towards 16. Of course several boys going into business leave at 17½, but it is very difficult to define the matter further. I think that what I have said gives you better information than taking a mere average.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Edward Montague, Master of the Freemen's Orphan School, M.A., called in and examined.

Mr. R. E. Montague, M.A.

7260. (Chairman.) You are the master of the Freemen's Orphan School?—Yes.

7261. How long have you been so?—For three years and a half.

7262. Is that a school for boys?—It is for both boys and girls. There are 100 boys and 50 girls.

7263. Are they boarded as well as taught?—They are boarded,—fed, clothed, and educated.

7264. At what age do they go in?—They may come in at between 7 and 10. We sometimes have them over that age, but never after 12. They remain until they are 15. We can keep on two boys and two girls as monitors and monitresses respectively, and they remain until 16—for another year.

7265. Where is the school?—At Brixton.

7266. You have read this portion of the Corporation's memorandum apparently?—I have not only read it, but I may say that I have had a considerable hand in the preparation of it.

7267. And upon reconsideration have you anything to add to it?—I think not, sir.

7268. The cost of the school is entirely defrayed by the Corporation?—By the Corporation.

7269. That is by actual money out of the City cash, and by allocation of Freemen's fees?—Yes, sir.

7270. There are some other receipts?—There are some receipts, I believe, which you will find at page 287.

7271. (Mr. Crawford.) A small sum, 50*l.*, invested in Consols?—It is very little, sir.

7272. (Chairman.) It is 600*l.* of other sums? At page 287, sir, it is stated, "The school has a very "small amount vested in Consols (bringing in less "than 50*l.* a year), and also some freehold property, "but as before pointed out, is mainly supported by "contributions from City's cash."

7273. (Lord Farrer.) Is it a perfectly free school?—Perfectly free, my Lord, except with this restriction, that it is only open to the sons of freemen or the daughters of freemen.

7274. But I mean nothing is paid?—Nothing is paid; there is no fee of any description whatever.

7275. How do children get there?—They are elected by the Court of Common Council. They are first approved by the Committee and afterwards they go to election by the Court of Common Council.

7276. Do the Committee select at all?—No, my Lord, they do not select at all. You might say, if there is a selection at all, it is in the hands of the doctor and myself, and then it would depend entirely upon physical ability, or upon qualifications of an educational nature. If a child could not read or write, he or she would probably be rejected until he or she could read and write.

7277. Are there many more applications than you can deal with?—They vary. Now last year we had a superabundance of applications on the boys' side; but at the present moment we have an abundance on the girls' side, and we have rather a paucity of applications on the boys' side. We have three short. This time last year we were full, and the year before. Next year we shall probably have the same thing again.

7278. What age do they come about generally, and what age do they leave?—Well, they average coming to us between seven and nine. You see the mother, as soon as she is a widow, would make application to get her children into the school. You cannot always depend upon what age they will come to you. Some children have, perhaps, come to the age of 10 or 11 before the father dies.

7279. What age do they leave you?—Fifteen.

7280. They always leave you at 15?—Yes.

7281. What do they do?—They go into business. At the present time we have one with the City Solicitor who is doing very well. Many of them go into business, some are also engaged in teaching.

7282. (Chairman.) You send them in for the University Local Examinations?—Yes, for the last three years and with very great success, we have only had one failure in the school on each side.

7283. You send them up to the winter examination?—We send them up to Cambridge. We have our own annual examination in June, and it would be inconvenient to have two examinations at the same time.

7284. (Mr. Crawford.) You have what is called an Apprentice Premium Fund, have you not?—Yes, we have. A sum of 300*l.* a year is allocated to this purpose.

7285. The children are apprenticed to particular trades?—Yes, I was going to say, in regard to children who leave, that the Committee will apprentice them to any trades that they choose to select. Many are and have been apprenticed in that way. Apprenticeship, however, seems to be dying out, and children seem to prefer to go into a place where no apprenticeship is necessary. The idea of binding them down seems to be objected to very much nowadays.

7286. (Chairman.) And what becomes of your girls?—The girls mostly are apprenticed either to dressmaking, millinery, or something of that kind. Some of them go into the Telegraph Department of the Post Office, and some into the Post Office. Others become teachers in the Board Schools and private schools. I know of one or two instances now of children who are being trained for teachers, whilst one is at the present time a mistress in the school.

7287. I see you say that some of your boys go to the Universities; do they go direct?—No, they never go direct, but go to some other school first. I believe it is now in contemplation to form a scholarship between this school and the City of London School, to form a bridge to enable them to go from this school to the University.

7288. First from your school to the City of London School?—Yes.

7289. And from it to the University?—And from it to the University. With regard to the salaries, I do not think you would have any cause for thinking that they were overpaid at this school. There is no question whatever in regard to the Assistant Masters and Mistresses.

7290. I think I may say that we are not going to revise your salaries?—I know. Of course the great idea is that City officials are too highly paid, and I think that is not so always.

7291. (Mr. Crawford.) I sympathise with you.

7292. (Lord Farrer.) That idea does not apply to the Educational Establishments of the City?—No, I am afraid it does not, my lord.

7293. (Mr. Smith.) I noted the exception?—We have a staff of three assistant masters, and we also have three mistresses.

7294. (Chairman.) You are the head of both sides?—I am the head of the school, but the mistress has control of the teaching on her side of the building.

7295. (Mr. Crawford.) I see that, since 1850, 162,422*l.* has been granted by the Corporation in connection with this school?—Yes, sir.

7296. And I think in recent years—the last two years—there has been a considerable cash expenditure in connection with sanitary works, has there not?—There has, and not only in connection with sanitary works, but also in connection with the introduction of technical education. We have lately started a carpenters' shop, and we also have a brass band there; so that the children, in addition to having a musical education, may be able, if necessary, to earn their living by carpentering.

7297. So that you are quite up to date?—Quite up to date; and if the County Council have any surplus money to spend upon technical education, we shall be most happy to receive it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

At the Westminster Palace Hotel, Westminster, S.W., Friday, 19th January 1894.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, M.P., CHAIRMAN, presiding.

LORD FARRER.	MR. HENRY HOMEWOOD CRAWFORD.
MR. ROBERT DURNING HOLT.	MR. EDWARD OFFORD SMITH.

MR. GEORGE EDWARD YORKE GLEADOWE, C.M.G., Secretary.

Sir C. Hall, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P.

19 Jan. 1894.

Sir CHARLES HALL, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P., Recorder of London, called in and examined.

7357. (Chairman.) How long have you been Recorder?—I was appointed in the early part of 1892.

7358. You are the first Recorder appointed since the Local Government Act of 1888?—Yes, that is so.

7359. That made a difference in the form of appointment, so far, at all events, as judicial action was concerned?—Yes.

7360. Will you tell us how the Recorder is now appointed?—The Recorder is elected by the Court of Aldermen, and they appoint him Recorder, but by the Local Government Act he is not able to exercise judicial functions within the City without the assent of the Crown; and it is, therefore, necessary that he should receive that assent before he exercises those powers. But so far as I can see, so far as being Recorder of London and acting as Recorder of London, irrespective of his judicial functions, he is appointed by the Court of Aldermen, and their appointment would be valid whether the assent of the Crown were given or not.

7361. If the Crown refused to confirm the appointment, so far as judicial functions were concerned, what would happen?—Well, it is very difficult to say. There would be a deadlock, I think, and I only trust the occasion may not arise. I had thought at one time what would happen—whether the Aldermen would insist upon their prerogative of still appointing a Recorder as their Recorder, and leave it to the Crown to appoint some one to exercise judicial functions within the City. But, as I say, I really have not considered what should be done, because I do not think the contingency likely to arise.

7362. All other Recorders are now appointed by the Crown?—They are appointed by the Crown—yes.

7363. And they are paid by the Corporations?—Paid by the Corporations, I believe, in every case.

7365. Those are judicial functions?—Those latter are judicial functions. You will then find (it is nearly at the bottom of the page), "To advise the "Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen for their better "direction in administering law and justice." You will find here that the Recorder attends the meetings of the Court of Aldermen, and the committees of the Aldermen whenever he can, and he invariably attends when any point arises upon which his advice can be of any use. There is also a very important duty which has been acted upon, as to which there are instances in the proof before you, Mr. Courtney, as to the custom of the City of London. It is a privilege of the City which is very highly prized, and, if I may say so, I think it is a very important privilege, and a very useful privilege in the courts of law; because, when a question arises in a pending action, as to the custom of the City of London, the judge may refer the matter to the Recorder. That custom is not recorded arbitrarily by the Recorder, but what is done is this: the Recorder prepares a draft as to what is the custom of the City in respect to the matter in question; he then submits that draft to a Court of Aldermen; and if the Court of Aldermen and the Lord Mayor approve of the statement, they sign that statement, and then the Recorder states that that is the custom.

7366. (Mr. Crawford.) But he reads it as a rule, because it must be by word of mouth?—He reads it.

7367. It must be by word of mouth, as you will see by the charter?—Yes.

7368. By the charter?—By the charter. But in order to prevent the Recorder reading out the alleged custom merely out of his own mouth upon his mere ipse dixit, if I may say so, it is thought best that he should consider the matter with the Court of Aldermen, and that the custom should be signed by a majority of the Court of Aldermen before the Recorder states it to the Court. That has been done in many instances which you will find in the proof before you, coming up to quite recent years.

7369. (Chairman.) What was the latest?—The latest was in regard to Grant v. the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, in 1876. But many of the customs are well known, luckily, owing to this—because a record is made of them in writing; that is the reason, perhaps, why questions have not arisen since then. But of course they may arise, and very important questions of custom are raised in the courts. Of course, on an ordinary question of custom—for instance, the custom of warehousemen, that is testified to by evidence given on both sides by the parties, and then it is left to the judge or jury to decide; but when a judge thinks it necessary to have a custom stated authoritatively, especially in the case, for instance, of a Chancery judge sitting without a jury, he can refer the matter to the Recorder of London to state what the custom is.

7370. (Lord Farrer.) How does the Recorder form his opinion about a custom?—Well, I have never acted myself, but what I should do certainly is this:—I should first of all make inquiries. The matter would come before the Court of Aldermen in the first instance, and I should say: "I must ask you to give "me information, and let me have information from "people who are qualified to speak upon this matter" —experienced merchants if it be a mercantile question, and so on; and I should then endeavour to form my own opinion, first of all, as to what the custom was. If I was not satisfied that there was a custom I should so record at once; but if I thought there was strong evidence of a custom and that was established to me in my own mind, I should then submit a draft to the Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen to that effect, and if they approved of that and thought that an undoubted usage and custom existed, so I should return. But I see myself the very great importance that no statement as to a custom should be accepted unless the evidence is overwhelming as to the fact. In fact, I should act as a judge would direct a jury to act upon evidence of custom—they can only find a custom when the evidence is practically overwhelming, and there is no evidence to the contrary on the other side.

7371. (Chairman.) It begins with an allegation in the cause in which reference is made?—Yes—that so-and-so is the custom of the City of London.

7372. That gets referred to you?—Yes, probably. It is usually done by a writ of certiorari. You will find the instances on page 4 of the proof.

7373. I see that the last one referred to the custom of foreign attachment?—Yes. That was a vexata questio; it was a matter of very great importance, and it was alleged that it was exceedingly inconvenient to bankers—the process that was adopted, and it was resisted. As a matter of fact, foreign attachment has not been resorted to since then; though Lord Justice James, I think it was, in his judgment, pointed out that the decision was not that the right of foreign attachment did not exist, but that very great care must be taken to show that the custom was observed in its entirety or else the proceeding would be bad. In that case the officer who served the writ would stand in a very awkward position. The custom, as the Lord Justice pointed out, must be adhered to to the letter in order to give the right to act under a foreign attachment.

7374. (Mr. Smith.) I suppose such an ordinary custom as the custom of market overt the Court would take judicial cognizance of, would it not?—That has been always recognised, the custom of market overt in the City. It has never been disputed because it has been acted upon for so many centuries.

7375. It is almost part of the common law?—Almost part of the common law, and it is a very valuable custom, and a custom which is very much prized in the City of London.

7376. (Mr. Crawford.) But the customs which the Recorder for the time being records are principally customs of the Corporation?—Exactly.

7377. And the Corporation having existed for many centuries knows how ancient a custom is?—That is so.

7378. According to the wording of the Charter the moment the certificate of the Recorder is given to the Court by word of mouth, that is to be accepted?—That is so; that is clear.

7379. No question can arise upon it to be submitted to a jury according to the Charter?—No; it has always been held in the courts of law that the oral statement of the Recorder is binding. You cannot go behind the statement of the Recorder on a matter of custom.

7380. (Lord Farrer.) The only question that could arise was whether the custom was a good one at common law?—I do not think the courts would entertain that; they would treat a custom as a custom. An immoral custom could not be set up. No Recorder could set up an immoral custom. It could not be a custom at law, but so long as a custom was proved to exist the Court would recognize it, and would not discuss the question whether or not it was a custom good at law.

7381. (Mr. Crawford.) I have before me here a return of a certificate alleging a particular custom so far back as 1392?—1392.

7382. So that it appears to be a very ancient privilege?—Yes.

7383. (Chairman.) That was before the Charter.

7384. (Lord Farrer.) Was the whole custom of foreign attachment set out in the Recorder's statement of 1876? You were going to give the particulars, I think?—I have not got the particulars here. I have no doubt that the custom was set out at length for this reason, that Lord Justice James, in dealing with the question, pointed out that the custom was one that must be observed in all its terms. I presume he had the custom before him set out in full. I have not got that here. I daresay I could get it for the Commissioners.

7385. (Mr. Crawford.) The London Joint Stock Bank v. The Mayor of London was a great case. It was shown that certain forms had to be gone through with regard to foreign attachment, but the Lord Justice said, assuming you follow these forms strictly, there was nothing to interfere with the custom?—That is my reading of the report. I have not read it for the purposes of this Commission. But I may say this, I began my civil practice in the Lord Mayor's Court, which I was told by men of great experience and authority on the Bench was the best school for young men to go to to begin law on the civil side, and I therefore had cause to read Cox v. The Mayor of London very often. I have not read it for many years, but that is my recollection of the judgment.

Sir C. Hall, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P.

19 Jan. 1894.

7386. (Chairman.) You have read this book; you have seen the Blue Book?—Yes, I have. I have been through all the parts connected, or rather referring to my duties and to the Courts in which I sit.

7387. And so far as you have been able to discover the statements are accurate?—Yes; I believe the whole of the statements are accurate. I have got some supplementary statements which may be of use to the Commissioners. If you think it necessary, I have got the work of the Mayor's Court, brought down to the end of the last year, and it shows that the business is still increasing there. Perhaps I may mention this: when I first began to sit there as Recorder, no doubt there were a great many actions brought for sums under 10*l.* which could be perfectly well brought in the County Court. I thought that it was an injustice to the jurymen of the City of London that 12 jurymen should be summoned there to try cases under 10*l.* when they could be tried in the County Court; and, therefore, I did my best to discourage suitors proceeding in the Mayor's Court for such small amounts, and I gave notice that the Judges of the Mayor's Court would not certify for counsel in cases under 10*l.* as I thought the suitors could get their remedy in the County Court.

7388. In the City of London Court, that is?—City of London Court. But I shall ask the Commission to allow me presently to point out that although that, of course, avoids the necessity of instructing counsel, I have also had prepared, very shortly and concisely, by the learned Registrar of the Mayor's Court, a statement showing the comparative costs in the Mayor's Court and the County Court, and so far from it turning out that the Mayor's Court is an expensive court to suitors, you will find that the costs in the Mayor's Court are, in uncontested actions, considerably lower than those in the County Court. Not only are the costs lower, but there is another matter, which is also of some importance, and that is, that in the Mayor's Court we charge no fee for summonses that are taken out. If a summons is proceeded with and an order eventually results, then, of course, there is a fee upon that; but we do not charge any fee upon summonses. So that we give, I submit, justice cheaply, and as you will see from the statement in the book, very expeditiously.

7389. It is in the nature of an application for an order?—Yes, that is what it is.

7390. If an order is made, then of course, a fee becomes payable upon the order?—Yes.

7391. (Mr. Smith.) There is no plaint fee?—Yes, there is an original fee on the plaint; but what I am talking about are applications for orders in Chambers.

7392. (Mr. Crawford.) Assuming an application for particulars—notice is given for an order for particulars—unless the order is made, no fee becomes payable?—Yes. I do not, of course, wish to take anything out of order, but, perhaps, as I was on that point the Commissioners will allow me to state what the comparative cost is between the Mayor's Court and the County Court, as there have been statements made in the newspapers to the detriment of the Mayor's Court as to the costs there. Well, now, they have been worked out very carefully by the learned Registrar. And this fact appears:—A new scale of costs in the Mayor's Court came into operation on the 1st July 1890. As the Commissioners, no doubt are aware, all scales of court, all rules and orders in the Mayor's Court, have to be authorised and approved of by the Committee of Judges—the Rule Committee of the High Court,—and the new scale of costs was practically taken from the scale of costs in the County Court. Now, if you add the fees and the costs allowed, together, for issuing plaint and signing judgment by default, the results in nearly all cases are less in the Mayor's Court than the County Court. Now, for example, if you take the amount under 10*l.*—9*l.*; in the Mayor's Court the fees would be 4*s.*; in the County Court they would be 11*s.*; the costs in the Mayor's Court would be 11*s.* 6*d.*,—that is the only case in which the costs are higher in the Mayor's Court—in the County Court they would be 8*s.*; the total in the Mayor's Court would be 15*s.* 6*d.*, the total in the County Court would be 19*s.* Now, that is under 10*l.* Then if you take under 20*l.*—19*l.*; in the Mayor's Court the fees would be 4*s.* 6*d.*; in the County Court they would be a guinea. If you take the fees and the costs together, you will find that in the Mayor's Court the fees and costs are 1*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*; in the County Court they are 1*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* If you take over 20*l.*, you will find that the fees and the costs in the Mayor's Court are 1*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, in the County Court they are 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Now, that is before judgment signed. Well, now, if you add together the costs and fees in each case of signing judgment, the suitor in the Mayor's Court has a still greater advantage—as you will see. Under 9*l.* the costs and fees, up to judgment, come to a total of 1*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*; in the County Court they come to 1*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* Over 10*l.* and under 20*l.* the Mayor's Court, 1*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, and the County Court 3*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; over 20*l.*, in the Mayor's Court it is 2*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, in the County Court it is 3*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* So that there is a very large difference in the actual costs incurred by suitors in the Mayor's Court as compared with the County Court.

7393. Is that compared with the Sheriffs' Court?—That is the County Court for the district.

7394. The Lord Mayor's Court is a cheaper court than the County Court?—It is a much cheaper court in cases which do not go for trial; and I may point out, as you are aware, a great majority of causes are never placed for trial at all; so that we prevent suitors going to great expense in cases under 20*l.* in which very likely they never get their money at all.

7395. (Mr. Smith.) In the City of London Court the fees are the same as the County Court?—That is so—the County Court scale. I should add that if you take cases contested to trial I do not think there is much difference between the two as far as I can hear and find out. There is this, and I think it is fair to point it out, at the Mayor's Court we have a privilege which is greatly prized; a privilege which is shared by Quarter Sessions, that is, that counsel have exclusive audience, except when a party appears in person. That certainly has this great advantage It enables the work to be done more speedily; there is less garrulity, and that saves the time of the Court; that is of comparatively little importance, but it distinctly saves the time of the jury, men of business, who are taken away from their work in the City. But I should point out that in contested actions in the County Court where the sum is over 10*l.* in a great majority of cases counsel are certified for as a matter of course.

7396. (Chairman.) Have counsel exclusive audience?—Yes, in the Mayor's Court; as they have at Quarter Sessions.

7397. Not universally?—At the only Quarter Sessions I had any experience of, counsel had exclusive audience; in the County and Borough Sessions I was in the habit of practising at. I cannot speak as to any others.

7398. At Quarter Sessions in Cornwall, counsel applied some years since for audience, and were told they would be welcome; they applied later for pre-audience and were refused, and then they retired again.

7399. (Mr. Crawford.) I presume that principally arose from the fact that there were so few of them that they were refused pre-audience?—There is no doubt of this, that the Court is very much better able to do its work if counsel do represent suitors that come before it; and, after all, the majority of cases in the Mayor's Court are cases more or less of a commercial character. I may say this; I do not want to puff up the Mayor's Court as compared with any other court, but I believe we have a much larger number of commercial cases in comparison than the ordinary courts of law; we have much fewer actions of tort, libel, false imprisonment, and so on.

7400. (Chairman.) But actually causes arising out of contracts?—Arising out of contracts in the City.

7401. (Mr. Crawford.) And for large amounts?—Yes, large amounts.

7402. (Chairman.) The jurisdiction is unlimited?—The jurisdiction is unlimited where the cause of action has arisen entirely within the City.

7403. (Mr. Crawford.) Suitors have the advantage of a jury of 12, and, if necessary, a special jury?—Yes, with regard to juries, I hope I am not giving evidence beyond what the Commissioners require, but I should like to say this; it appears in the book, and I should like to emphasise it; one cannot speak too strongly of the City juries that we get in the Mayor's Court. They are first-rate juries. I have been on Circuit a great many years. I have seen a good many juries, not only on my own Circuit, but when I was younger. I had the great advantage of going as Marshal on the two great Circuits, in those days, the Northern Circuit and the Midland Circuit. I have seen something of juries, and I do not hesitate to say that the juries in the City of London are far better than elsewhere.

7404. (Chairman.) No alteration in the system of of Local Government would affect the quality of the mercantile men in London?—I should think not. I am not such a pessimist as to suppose that.

7405. (Mr. Smith.) Amalgamation does not necessarily have that effect?—No.

7406. (Lord Farrer.) Nor would it necessarily interfere with the Lord Mayor's Court?—No.

7407. (Chairman.) The City of London Court is a lucrative court to the Corporation?—That I cannot speak of; I have not looked at the table of fees. I should think it was, because an enormous amount of business is got through there, uncontested business. Very many cases where there is no trial at all, and where fees have to be paid.

7408. There is a balance to the good?—I cannot say, I really do not know; but I should think a very large balance to the good.

7409. I suppose that is not the case with the Mayor's Court?—Well, with respect to the Mayor's Court, I do not know, the fees are set out here; I should think there was. I really have not looked into them. If you come to the cost of the Chambers and the salaries of the judges, I do not know that it is a profitable court.

7410. (Mr. Crawford.) I think it is beginning to get better now, but it did fall off?—It fell off; the business is increasing in it because we have been able to get through it a good deal quicker. Since the present Common Serjeant was appointed we have been able to get through the business in the Central Criminal Court quicker, and I mention that for this reason: we have a court, as you are no doubt aware, every month in the Mayor's Court and in order to insure the Mayor's Court cases being tried, as I consider they ought to be, by the Recorder or by the Common Serjeant, I fix the sittings of the Mayor's Court so as to be a continuance, as it were, of the Central Criminal Court. I allow a time that I consider an average of time for the Old Bailey calendar to be tried out, and, as I have said we have been able to get through the work of the Old Bailey in a shorter time than formerly, owing in a great degree, to the great experience of the Common Serjeant who practised in and was a leader of that court. I then fix the Mayor's Court sittings to commence as soon as possible after the time occupied with the disposal of the Old Bailey calendar, and only on two occasions am I unable to do this, and that is before Easter and Whitsuntide, for we cannot have the Court sitting on Good Friday or Easter or Whit Monday. I have arranged that we should try the Lord Mayor's Court cases ourselves as much as possible. I mention that because of late years the Recorder and Common Serjeant, who no doubt had business else-where, were not able to sit so often, and the work devolved to a great extent upon the Assistant Judge, and I think it right to point that out, because it does not appear in that book. Up to the time the present Common Serjeant was appointed the Assistant Judge sat a great number of times. In fact, for several years he sat more days than the late Recorder and the late Common Serjeant together. We are able to do the principal part of the work, and we have the services of the Assistant Judge at Debtors' Summons Courts and in Chambers. He also sits in the Mayor's Court in the absence of the Common Serjeant and myself.

7411. If you turn to page 90 it gives you the fees; it shows a falling off in several years, but they are coming up again. For 1889 the fees were 7,955*l.*, in 1890 they fell down to 6,909*l.*, in 1891 to 6,854*l.*, and in 1892 to 6,482*l.* Then if you compare the fees received between the 1st January 1892 and the 30th of June 1892 and those received between the 1st January 1893 and the 30th June 1893 you will find that really they have increased?—Yes, that is so, although I have done my best to discourage these petty actions under 10*l.*, which of course means a considerable loss of fees to the Court if we tried these out. I am glad to say that substantial cases are taking their place, so that we have as long a list as we had before, and the place of these small cases is being taken by commercial cases, and, as far as I can see, the work of the Mayor's Court is certainly improving in character to a very considerable extent.

7412. (Lord Farrer.) Where do you sit?—I always sit in the Guildhall, for the Mayor's Court. When the Queen's Bench Judges go into the City for the London sittings—they are only there for a few days—I have to hold the Court in a small court—the South Court—when the Judges are not there I sit in the North Court or in the Council Chamber, which is a fine court, but it is very cold in the winter, and owing to serious illness I have not been able to sit there lately, but we have always a court to sit in.

7413. Will cases be tried in your court now which would otherwise have been tried in the Law Courts?—I think so. We have now more questions connected with freight, and connected with shipping, which is, perhaps, owing to the fact that I had a very considerable practice in the Court of Admiralty.

7414. Have you Admiralty jurisdiction?—No; but I try a common law case, whether arising in the Thames, or in the streets of London. I have not sat yet with assessors, but the parties can, of course, agree to my doing so, and they have asked me. Yes, I have sat with assessors once; but I took good care to get the assent of the parties, and I understand that the Trinity House are prepared to give facilities to allow the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House to sit.

7415. With reference to the constitution of the Court, although it is called the Lord Mayor's Court, the position of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen as judges is merely nominal?—That is so.

7416. You are just as much a judge in the Mayor's Court as a judge of the Supreme Court is the judge in his court?—Yes, and in the Old Bailey too.

7417. Is much of your time taken up in advising the Corporation, which is, of course, somewhat different from the judicial functions you have to discharge?—Yes, there are a good many cases where a point may arise as to the construction of Acts of Parliament dealing, for instance, with markets in the City, or dealing with water, any question of that sort; they are always submitted to the law officers; but with regard to the opinions and appeals from the decisions of the justices those are appeals to quarter sessions. I sit there as a member of the Court and not as the Recorder of London only.

Sir C. Hall, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P.

19 Jan. 1894.

7418. I am asking about advice given?—Yes, I have to give considerable advice.

7419. Is that in the form of a case sent to you?—It is either in the form of a case, when it is felt that the matter is so important that it should be referred to the law officers to advise, or very often my opinion is asked in the Court of Aldermen, and if they are satisfied with what I say it is not necessary to observe any formalities in the matter.

7420. Without putting it on paper?—Without putting it on paper.

7421. You advise in two ways—sometimes to the Court of Aldermen and sometimes to the Court of Common Council, and generally, I presume, through our colleague at the end of the table, the City Solicitor, Mr. Crawford?—Entirely through the solicitor, Mr. Crawford, when he is instructed to draw up the case on behalf of the Lord Mayor and the Corporation. Beyond what you asked me, beyond the ordinary case of quarter sessions, there are cases in which evidence is given and they are cases where legal assistance is of very great importance. I refer to appeals from the Police Commissioner to the Court of Common Council under one of the Police Acts.

7422. (Mr. Crawford.) Appeals in connexion with pensions to police constables?—Under the last Act.

7423. (Lord Farrer.) Is that under the Act of 1890?

7424. (Mr. Crawford.) No, under our own City Act (1889).—A policeman had been deprived of his pension owing to his misconduct, and he appealed. This appeal is a somewhat cumbrous way of doing it, as he is heard by the whole of the Court of Common Council. It is very desirable that in such cases there should be someone there to keep order and examine the witnesses, and so on, from the bench as it were. I have only tried one of these yet.

7425. That is similar to an appeal from the Licensing Committee of the London County Council?—Yes, so far as I can judge.

7426. I mean to say that there is nothing very singular about it?—No.

7427. (Mr. Smith.) And of course an appeal of a constable in connection with a pension made by the Watch Committee in a large town since the passing of the Act of 1890, would be heard very much in the same manner, so that you arrive at the same result?—The same result.

7428. (Mr. Crawford.) It is rather to the advantage of the police constable that he gets the sympathy of some members of the Common Council.

7429. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose in a case of that kind, the Court of Common Council take your opinion?—I have only heard one of these cases, and after hearing the evidence all I did was to sum up to the Court.

7430. (Mr. Crawford.) In the case you are referring to of an appeal of a police constable, the matter was thoroughly threshed out as if it were a trial?—The City Solicitor is there and the proceedings are carried on just as if it were tried in Court, and then I sum up to the Court of Common Council.

7431. (Chairman.) And they gave a multitudinous vote?—They do; they gave practically a unanimous vote in that case.

7432. (Lord Farrer.) When I asked you what other sort of business you had to do I was thinking of advice; the same advice that counsel gives to his client—you act in that capacity?—Yes.

7433. (Mr. Crawford.) And also in committees too?—And also in committees.

7434. (Lord Farrer.) They refer a point to you?—A very common thing is this. Some matter may arise and the question may be asked, is there any section in the Act of Parliament which prohibits a certain course of action being taken? Some may like to hear the Recorder on this. Then I tell them my view by word of mouth, if it is a case not raising any difficulty; but if it is a case of the construction of several Acts of Parliament I do not care to give an opinion off hand in that way. It is referred to me, and I advise in conjunction with the law officers of the Corporation.

7435. Which is part of your duty as Recorder?—Oh, yes; that is all in my duties as Recorder. I have no fees at all.

7436. I suppose if you go into Court for the Corporation you would have a fee?—Well, I suppose I should.

7437. (Mr. Crawford.) Indeed, no, I am sorry to say not?—I may say this with regard to that. I also sit—I am engaged now—trying a very heavy compensation case: I try compensation cases under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act; and I have assumed that my salary, which was increased and which is a very handsome and proper salary, covers those duties. I made no inquiry as to whether I was to have a fee or not, I do the work as Recorder.

7438. If you look at the Report regulating your salary you will see that your salary covers all your duties?—I have never asked for a fee and I never intend to for such duties, but where is that?

7439. You will find it in the duties which were settled before the appointment?—What page?

7440. In page 153—that enumerates your duties—or rather page 155, paragraph 13:—"To peruse and "settle all Corporation Bye-laws or Bills of Common "Council, and other important legal or official docu- "ments, and, without fee, to give advice to the "Corporation, or to any of its Committees or officers, "on matters relating to the City's interests, whenever "he may be required; and, when so ordered, to "appear before any tribunal as an advocate for the "Corporation, but not in other respects to practise "at the Bar"?—I cannot agree that your last paragraph says anything about fees when I appear as an advocate.

7441. (Chairman.) The same wording appears to go with all?—I really have not noticed.

7442. (Mr. Smith.) It is one of the matters that would be referred to the Recorder?—I need not say what the answer of the Recorder will be.

7443. (Chairman.) Now your association with the City seems to have impressed you with the excellent quality of the persons with whom you are associated?—Yes, I have been very much struck with the experience of the Aldermen as men of business, and I have found, and learned judges have told me the same thing—I could quote the names of very eminent judges on the bench who have had great experience of criminal matters—and they have told me that they have found, as I have found, really considerable assistance from the fact that Aldermen sit on the bench at the Old Bailey. We have so many cases to try in connection with banking and commercial matters and in regard to the system of keeping books. I may give as an illustration what happened the other day, where a man destroyed his books, and his defence was that he had done so because they were getting so numerous and so cumbersome that he really had not got space for them. Well, upon all matters like that one is able to get someone sitting beside him who can give one practical information on the point, although on a question of the destruction of books I must say I should scarcely require the advice of anybody as to the opinion I should form upon the matter.

7444. (Mr. Crawford.) The Aldermen form part of the court at the Central Criminal Court?—Yes, they form part of the Court; they are obliged to be there.

7445. And the Lord Mayor opens the Court, does he not?—The Lord Mayor opens the sessions always.

7446. (Lord Farrer.) And there must be two Aldermen sitting?—There must be one Alderman in attendance and there must be a court of two commissioners; but it is not necessary that there should be two Aldermen sitting besides the judge. That point was raised in the celebrated case of Madame Rachel, and it was held there that if an Alderman was within the building that was all that was necessary.

7447. (Mr. Crawford.) It is not necessarily two magisterial authorities?—A judge and one Alderman were sitting, and if the judge sits rather late an Alderman must remain with him. I sat rather late last Saturday night to finish a case, and an Alderman stayed with me to form a quorum.

7448. (Chairman.) You make some observations here about the City Police?—Yes, that of course is a matter I do not profess to have much knowledge of; I do not wish to go beyond this. In the City we have a great admiration for the way in which the police do their duties, and they have very important duties; the amount of property they have to watch and take care of is enormous, and it is admirably done; and certainly the class of constable that come before me to give evidence shows that they are a remarkably good body of men.

7449. Do you venture the opinion that they are on the average better than the Metropolitan Police?—Well, one knows the proverb upon comparisons. I certainly think on the whole they are better.

7450. (Mr. Smith.) There is not much practical management of the police on the part of the Corporation, is there?—It is done principally by their officers.

7451. (Lord Farrer.) By the Commissioner?—I should say almost entirely, as far as I know.

7452. You do not know whether the pay happens to be any better than that of the Metropolitan Police?—I cannot say as to that; I do not know.

7453. (Chairman.) I observe that you make an observation on the City's hospitality?—A very short observation. I think it is a valuable thing. I think it is very important that distinguished foreigners visiting these shores should have a reception by somebody, and I do not know who is to take the place the City fills at present, or what is proposed?

7454. It would be rather a waste of the City's cash if it were altogether unavailable for that purpose?—Yes, not wasteful; it would be wasted.

7455. Wasted?—Yes.

7456. Arrangements might possibly be made for preserving some of these valuable things in the event of any change?—Oh, of course, I see that, but in giving my evidence, my mind is a blank as to what would be provided to take its place.

7457. (Lord Farrer.) That is an important point?—It is an important thing to bear in mind.

7458. (Mr. Crawford.) I should like to ask you, Sir Charles, having regard to your experience as a member of Parliament, and one who has taken an interest in London Government, whether you can suggest to the Royal Commissioners any convenient practicability of an amalgamation between the Corporation and the London County Council?—No, I cannot; I do not at present, there being no scheme before me. I do not see what convenience is to arise.

7459. Do you see any advantage in the difference in the mode of election of an Alderman, by direct representation and in that of selection by a large body?—Yes, certainly. I think the way in which an Alderman is elected, is a very strong guarantee that you will have men with very considerable experience, and men, if I may say so, who have been through the fire several times before eventually they exercise their functions. Because an Alderman is not elected right off the reel, he has to go through various processes before he becomes an Alderman; and an Alderman does not rise to the position which he attains until the Livery of the City of London and his fellows in the City are able to judge of his capacities, and have come to the opinion that he is fit to represent them.

7460. An Alderman is, of course, oftentimes in direct communication with his constituents?—Yes, oh, yes; he is one of them, and he knows what the requirements are—what is necessary in the City, and what is desirable in the City.

7461. (Chairman.) He is entirely independent of them after he is elected?—Oh, yes. That, to my mind, is a very important fact; he has learned his experience, and he knows exactly what is wanted.

7462. (Lord Farrer.) Do you think it is an advantage that he should be independent of his constituents?—Well, I think, as a member of Parliament, it is an advantage that anybody should be independent of his constituents. Perhaps I may say that, because, happily, I represent a constituency who are kind enough to place me in the position of being almost absolutely independent; but I have been a member of Parliament before, and I did not enjoy such advantages.

7463. (Mr. Crawford.) Although independent of his constituents he is not independent of his brethren of the Court of Aldermen, is he?—No, the Court of Aldermen have the power and do sometimes exercise it, although, I am happy to say, such occasions are very rare of dealing with an Alderman. If there is any reason why an Alderman should not exercise his functions the Court of Aldermen have the power practically to relieve him of those functions, and they do.

7464. (Mr. Smith.) I suppose, Sir Charles, you would not at all quarrel with the election of Aldermen under the Municipal Corporations Act, whereby the Aldermen are elected by the whole body of the Council?—Well, I should be sorry to give an opinion as to that. I have not considered that.

7465. (Chairman.) Are not the two cases entirely different. Perhaps the chief function of an Alderman in the City of London, besides being part of the Corporation, is to act as a magistrate?—Yes.

7466. The Aldermen of an ordinary municipal corporation are not magistrates?—No, that is so.

7467. Had we not better keep those two branches of work entirely distinct. Considering the Aldermen as magistrates, do you consider that they are appointed in the best way by being appointed by the electors of a ward, or would equally good men be secured if they were appointed by the Lord Chancellor from amongst merchants in the City?—That would depend upon the fact whether or not the Lord Chancellor—I will answer the question on the assumption you put it—whether the Lord Chancellor in selecting such gentlemen would select them from amongst the leading merchants of the City. To my mind it is of importance that they should be representative men who have the respect of their fellow-citizens, and they show that, and the proof of that is that they had become Aldermen. They go through the necessary steps before they become Aldermen, and they do not become Aldermen until they have shown their fellow-citizens that they are fit to be entrusted with such work.

7468. Would you be prepared to extend the same system to other municipalities?—No, I do not say that I am. I take it as an institution that works well in practice. I do not look at it in the abstract at all. What I find is this, that the magisterial work at the Mansion House and the Guildhall is done admirably. I do not like to compare that with other work, but it cannot be better done.

7469. (Mr. Smith.) Might this not be the reason? that in the City of London the cases that come before the magistrates, both at the Mansion House and the Guildhall, are principally of a commercial character?—Yes, they are commercial principally, that is so.

7470. And there are more of such cases in the City, and one or two other large centres such as Manchester, Liverpool, and Birmingham, than in an ordinary borough?—Yes, that is so, no doubt; every important bank case, every important case of embezzlement, and cases like that are more frequent certainly in the City of London than they are in any ordinary borough.

7471. (Chairman.) The City of Manchester?—No, when I talk of a big city I talk of Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, or any large city, but they do not deal with 100 prisoners in all, assize cases, a month, and that is the average criminal calendar at the Central Court. With regard to Liverpool the assizes are now held four times a year, but my recollection of the calendar at Liverpool when there were only two Criminal Assizes a year, was that it was thought a long and heavy calendar if there were 100 prisoners, and there the assizes are general gaol deliveries, so that a good many of these cases were cases that might have been tried not at the Assizes but at Quarter Sessions, whereas at the Old Bailey they are all really heavy cases, Assize cases.

7472. Putting aside the judicial functions of the Aldermen, do you conceive that the municipal functions of Aldermen as discharged by the Court of Common Council are better and more satisfactorily performed under the present method of election of Aldermen than would be secured if the ordinary method was adopted?—Yes, I do, because I think you have got the men who assist the Common Council, also the Common Councillors who sit are experienced. Look at the way by which they have worked their way up to the Aldermanic Chair. I think their experience gives them a position which certainly is very valuable in a Court of Common Council.

7473. But the ordinary process is for a person to be approved of as a member of the Council?—Yes.

7474. And then as emeritus he gets to the Aldermanic Chair?—Yes, still I think I ought to preface any observations I make on this point with this remark, that I really know very little about Local Government. I am not prepared therefore to say much about it.

7475. (Mr. Smith.) My question had reference very much, Sir Charles, to the discharge of municipal functions apart from the judicial, and I was only going to put it to you that it was rather an advantage that a man should not only have the approval of his fellow citizens, but also of his colleagues, as illustrated by the election under the Municipal Act?—Yes.

7476. You have a double advantage. I do not know any case since the Corporation of Birmingham elected their Aldermen, in which a man was elected who had not served many years as Councillor, securing in that way first of all the approval of his fellow citizens in returning him frequently, and secondly, the approval of his colleagues in electing him an Alderman?—Yes.

7477. (Mr. Crawford.) The Court of Aldermen has a veto, therefore he gets the approval of his constituents, and is bound to get the approval of the Court of Aldermen?—Yes.

7478. (Mr. Smith.) Except in a very strong case that veto would never be exercised.

7479. (Mr. Crawford.) For very good reasons?—It has been exercised.

7480. (Mr. Smith.) It would not be exercised if a man were not particularly competent, but otherwise bore a good character.

7481. (Mr. Crawford.) If a man were incompetent to discharge judicial functions, they would not be likely to add him to the number of Aldermen.

7482. (Mr. Smith.) I was asking with regard to the municipal functions, which I regard as much more important in this matter.

7483. (Mr. Holt.) The Recorder spoke of the importance of having mercantile and banking gentlemen upon the Court of Aldermen to act in a judicial capacity in trying commercial cases?—Yes.

7484. Do we understand that you have in the Court of Aldermen leading bankers and leading merchants of the City of London?—There is a banker of very high position indeed in the City of London now, he sat next to me when I was trying a case the other day, Mr. Alderman Dimsdale.

7485. (Mr. Crawford.) From whom you derived assistance?—From whom I derived assistance.

7486. (Mr. Holt.) Do you think merchants and bankers are fully or well represented in the Court of Aldermen?—I do not like to use the word fully without saying what should be the ground of representation; I think they are fairly represented.

7487. The leading merchants and bankers?—Yes. I do not say necessarily all the leading financial houses, or even all the merchants in the City are represented.

7488. Merchants?—Yes, I think so, so far as I know.

7489. (Mr. Crawford.) At all events, taking the case which has been cited, namely, Alderman Dimsdale. There was a recent contest, was there not, for the position of Sheriff of London, and Mr. Alderman Dimsdale was largely supported by the bankers and merchants who came to vote for him?—That was so; no doubt there was a very strong muster of the best men in the City of London, if I may say so, who came to the Guildhall on the occasion of the election.

7490. (Chairman.) Is there any Alderman on the Court of the Bank of England?—I think not 7491. Has there been lately?—No, not that I am aware of.

7492. (Mr. Crawford.) We have been told lately that there are not many bankers on the Court of Governors of the Bank of England?

7492A. (Chairman.) That was not the question; the question was whether any directors of the Bank of England was upon the Court of Aldermen?—No, I think not.

7493. There was a member of the Court of Governors of the Bank of England, an Alderman, but he retired owing to not being able to give sufficient time.

The witness withdrew.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

Sir Forrest Fulton, Q.C., Common Serjeant of the City of London, called in and examined.

7494. (Chairman.) You are the Common Serjeant?—Yes.

7495. How long have you been so?—I was appointed in August 1892.

7496. You were appointed under the new system?—Yes, I am the first Common Serjeant appointed under the Local Government Act, that is to say, I was appointed directly by the Crown.

7497. You had had long experience before at the Bar?—Yes, particularly in the administration of the criminal law; I was Treasury Counsel at the Middlesex Sessions for some years, and then I was Senior Counsel for the Post Office at the Central Criminal Court. Ultimately I succeeded Mr. Poland as Senior Counsel to the Treasury at the same Court.

7498. And you are well acquainted with the administration of justice within the City?—Yes, I practised very largely at the Police Courts of the Metropolis, including of course, the Mansion House and Guildhall Justice Rooms. I should like to say, supplementing what has been already said by Mr. Recorder, that I think it should not be lost sight of that at the Mansion House the Lord Mayor presides every day. I am speaking now of the rule: in his absence the Chair is taken by one of the Aldermen who have passed the Chair. It is very seldom that an Alderman who has not passed the Chair sits at the Mansion House.* The result is, that as it takes ten years on an average, at least, for an Alderman to become Lord Mayor, that ensures at the Court a very experienced magistrate.

7499. And at the Guildhall, does a man sit as a magistrate as soon as he gets an Alderman's gown?—He sits at once.

7500. (Mr. Crawford.) As a rule—interrupting you—though an Alderman sits at once, I think that in practice he generally sits with another Alderman for some few months, in order to gain experience?—Oh, quite so; he sits at once because he is placed upon the rota, but an Alderman who is immediately appointed, if he has not had experience as a Justice of the Peace, which some of them have had, would be assisted for some little time by one of his brethren of the Court of Aldermen; and, of course, there are very experienced clerks who assist there, who probably have a larger acquaintance with the practice at the Mansion House and Guildhall Justice Rooms than anyone else.

* See also Douglas, 7634–5.

7501. (Chairman.) Is it a usual thing for two Aldermen to sit at the Guildhall?—No, not when an Alderman has had the necessary experience, he generally sits alone. With regard to the Central Criminal Court I notice in the evidence given before you that the presence of the Aldermen at the Central Criminal Court is referred to. For my own part I think it of the greatest possible importance that they shall continue to attend, because they acquire there almost an unique experience. There must always be a certain number of the Aldermen present at the Central Criminal Court, there is a regular rota; two or three of the Aldermen are in one or the other of the courts and in that way they acquire a very considerable knowledge and experience of the administration of the criminal law, not only by the Recorder and Common Serjeant but by Her Majesty's judges, of whom one always attends, and when there is a heavy calendar two. That is, as far as I know, an advantage which very few magistrates in the country have—an advantage and special opportunity of acquiring practical experience. I must also say that I have found very considerable assistance from the Aldermen from time to time in commercial matters. For instance, I tried a case two or three sessions ago—a very heavy case. It was sent from the Guildhall Justice Room—a charge of forgery in connection with bills of exchange—a highly complicated case—which took me eight days to try, very long days. During that time, I received immense assistance both from Mr. Alderman Dimsdale, a banker, Mr. Alderman Vaughan Morgan, who is an exceedingly experienced commercial man, and also Mr. Alderman Ritchie (brother to the late President of the Local Government Board), who is a merchant of the City of very high position.

7502. I see you are prepared to institute a comparison between the election of Aldermen in the City and Aldermen in the County Council?—Yes, I think myself that the system of election of Aldermen directly is in the first place more democratic, and I may say that, as a member of the House of Commons at the time that this Local Government Bill was passing through the House, that seemed to be the general opinion. I was referring to Hansard, and I think it will be found that that was the general opinion, and also the opinion of the late Mr. Firth, who opposed the method of electing Aldermen which was ultimately adopted by Mr. Ritchie, or rather which was imported by Mr. Ritchie into the Bill and adopted by the House. It seems to me that the City system is much more democratic, and also it does show that what certainly has been a considerable difficulty—at least, I think so, in connection with the election of Aldermen for the County Council, because when the Aldermen were selected——

7504. The Aldermen of the County Council have no such functions?—No; they have no such functions.

7505. Are you prepared to uphold a system of elective magistrates?—I think myself that experience is always the best guide; and, as we have the experience of centuries of the method of administering justice in the City by elected Aldermen, and as far as I know, no complaint has ever been made of the administration of justice, either at the Guildhall Justice Room or at the Mansion House—I see no objection. In these days of microscopic criticism of the acts of every public man, if there was any reason to believe that the Aldermen, as magistrates, did not efficiently discharge their functions, some notice would have been taken of it. I have never heard any adverse criticism. On the contrary, I have over and over again heard Her Majesty's judges express their extreme satisfaction at the admirable way in which cases are sent from those Courts, and compare them most favourably with the way in which they are sent from other Courts. I have never heard any adverse comment of the way in which justice is administered by the Aldermen, and from that I would argue that the system has worked very well in practice.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

19 Jan. 1894.

7506. Would that very favourable experience encourage you to suggest the election of Aldermen for parishes outside the City?—No. For this reason: there would be no analogy between the electorate in the City and outside it. In the City—speaking of the City one loses sight of this fact, that the City is strictly commercial—the resident population is very small. If you take any other district—take, for instance, such a district as Poplar or West Ham, which is just outside the County of London, the electorate is entirely different. I do not think it would be at all wise to trust the election of magistrates to a purely popular constituency like Poplar or Limehouse.

7507. Take one nearer to the centre of affairs—take the Strand district. Would there be a very considerable difference between those inhabiting half-a-mile west of Temple Bar and east?—Yes; because there is a much larger resident population.

7508. Between Farringdon-Without and the Strand?—Yes; because there is a much larger resident population. You must remember you could not pick and choose. You must either make it general or limit it to the City.

7509. Does not that depend upon where you are going to extend the City to—whether it is to go into the wilds of Poplar or only into Bloomsbury?—I should not extend largely, because I think it discharges its duties admirably as it is.

7510. (Mr. Crawford.) I see you refer to Mr. Firth. I notice in an extract from Hansard that Mr. Firth informed the House of Commons that the first point he desired to make was that "to give the "County Council Aldermen by a system of triennial "election is a retrograde policy"?—Yes, I remember distinctly his saying so myself; he expressed a preference for the mode of election adopted by the City.

7511. (Mr. Smith.) I think you can hardly claim Mr. Firth or the democratic principle in aid anyhow. Now you tell us you are only in favour of electing magistrates where the population is non-resident. That is rather a conflict, is not it?—No, I do not think it is, because I am asked whether I should be prepared to extend it. I say no, I think it is only in a peculiar constituency, such as the City of London is, that the election of magistrates would be either necessary or desirable.

7512. It is of a select rather than a democratic character?—Exactly. I do not object to that description at all.

7513. I think then you must leave out the democratic part of your argument?—No, the principle remains democratic.

7514. The principle, but the accident of circumstances renders it oligarchic?—Well, not oligarchic; because an oligarchy means a Goverment by a small number; the number is not small.

7515. (Chairman.) Difference of circumstances. Is not the older part of Southwark now very much like in the character of its population what the resident inhabitants of the City was 80 years ago?—Yes, I should think that it was.

7516. Aldermen were elected within the City 80 years ago?—Oh, yes.

7517. With as good results conformable to experience?—Yes, as far as I know.

7518. Why do you hesitate to apply the instance of Southwark?—I think I have already answered that question, if you could pick and choose, the case would be different. St. George's, Hanover Square, does not elect its magistrates, but I think it might safely do so.

7519. (Lord Farrer.) Or the Inns of Court?—Or the Inns of Court. I have no doubt they would return most admirable magistrates; but when you extend a principle you want to know is the constituency peculiarly fitted for the experiment.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

19 Jan. 1894.

7520. (Mr. Smith.) Democracy tempered by selection?—Yes, wise selection.

7521. (Mr. Crawford.) But I think the late Mr. Firth, when dealing with it from a municipal point of view, expressed his preference for direct election rather than selection, and he instanced the City, where Aldermen are really directly connected with their wards—in fact, he described them as Chairmen of wards?—Yes, he did; and I think he was rather referring to the general municipal functions of an Alderman rather than to the judicial functions to which I understand Mr. Courtney is directing my special attention. I was going to say that one of the great objections to the selection of Aldermen by the Council itself, as appears to many people in connection with the County Council, is that, as large bodies such as this tend to become political, they are inclined to select the Aldermen entirely from the majority composing the Council, with the result that, as only half of them retire every three years, they can practically keep themselves permanently in power. That seems to me to be a very great evil. So far as the City of London is concerned that is never possible, because the City knows no politics.

7522. (Chairman.) You are aware that only the elected councillors have a voice in the election of Aldermen in the County Council?—Yes, the County Council itself elects the Aldermen.

7523. Yes, but only the elected councillors—the Aldermen themselves have no voice in the County Council of London in the selection of Aldermen?—Oh, certainly not.

7524. Therefore they could not keep themselves permanently in power?—They would assist very much in doing so, because on all general questions they would have a vote.

7525. No, I mean if one elected body choose Aldermen to support their policy, and to give them larger majorities, then possibly that power would disappear if the elected body changed its character—if not disappear at the first election, then disappear at the second election?—Half of them would remain.

7526. At the first time half of them would remain; then half of them at the second election would have to go?

7527. (Mr. Crawford.) You would have to wait for three years?—You would have to wait for three years before you make any change at all.

7528. (Chairman.) In the ordinary municipal elections, it is possible to maintain a party permanently in power because the Aldermen themselves join in the election for filling up the vacancies?—Yes.

7529. But where the Aldermen do not join in the election for filling up the vacancies it could only keep the body adverse to the voice of the majority in power during one period?—Three years.

7530. (Lord Farrer.) Supposing that the majority of the London County Council were Tory on the next occasion, the Aldermen who have been elected on the Radical side would be powerless?—It depends upon what majority they had. Supposing they had a majority of one?

7531. They would remain for three years exercising whatever influence they had?—If they had a majority of one, an Alderman would turn the scale on all questions. I merely put one as one instance.

7532. (Mr. Crawford.) Your opinion is based upon the experience of the last five years?—Of course, I am only speaking of the County Council as it is. One would hope that it will not continue.

7533. (Chairman.) Have you a suggestion to make as to how Aldermen should be elected?—The City system is that Aldermen are elected directly.

7534. Yes, but if any change is going to be made?—I think if any change is going to be made, that the Aldermen ought to be elected directly, as they are in the City.

7535. For what period?—It depends on the body. If you are going to have, for the sake of argument, a huge municipality, you would no doubt have to limit the period of time. The question might be as to what that should be—my own opinion is that probably ten years would be the best time—such a time, at any rate, as would secure that the body should always have a number of most experienced Aldermen among them.

7536. (Mr. Smith.) You would not quarrel with the Municipal Corporations Act, which says six years, would you?—No.

7537. It has worked very well, I think?—No; I would not object to that at all. I merely mention ten as a number that occurred to me. But I would not object to six. When there is not direct election in Corporations consisting of opposite political parties—with frequently secret deliberations and cabals—there is a great temptation if they have the power of selecting from within their own body. I do not know how far it has been carried out in other large municipalities, but it certainly seems to be the system adopted in this County Council of London.

7538. (Chairman.) You highly approve of the way in which the Lord Mayor reaches his post?—Yes. First of all, he has to serve for many years as an Alderman. As such he has, first of all, as I say, been directly elected; it is not necessary that he should have been a member of the Court of Common Council; some are, some are not; and he must have been directly elected to the office of Sheriff by the Livery.

7539. (Lord Farrer.) What do you mean by "elected"?—That is one of the duties I have to discharge—to assist in elections in Common Hall. I believe that was the original function of the Common Serjeant many centuries ago. The Sheriff is elected first of all by show of hands in the Common Hall.

7540. Is there any real election at all?—Oh, yes.

7541. Is it not a matter of routine?—Oh dear no, not at all. At the last hall at which I presided, there was a show of hands and a poll demanded, and Mr. Alderman Dimsdale was returned.

7542. I thought you were speaking of the Lord Mayor?—I was coming to the election of Lord Mayor. First of all he is, as Sheriff, elected by the Livery: then the Common Hall select two qualified members of the Court of Aldermen—that is to say, two Aldermen who have served the office of Sheriff, and from those two the Court of Aldermen elect one, and in that way they preserve what I think is a most important right of veto which has been exercised on more than one occasion within my own knowledge—a veto of great importance; they have the absolute right of electing one; and although the one who is elected may not have had the majority on show of hands, the Court of Aldermen have an absolute veto in the matter; and if there be any reason, if they think that a particular Alderman, although otherwise qualified, would not fill the office of Lord Mayor satisfactorily, they can act accordingly. I think that in any change that was made, it would be highly desirable that that power should be retained.

7543. (Chairman.) Has the Common Hall ever persistently refused to elect an Alderman Sheriff, who wanted to be Sheriff, in order to qualify to be Lord Mayor?—I have never known any instance of it. There may be one, but I do not know of any; certainly not since I have had anything to do with it.

7544. So far as the aldermanic candidates for the Shrievalty goes, it almost becomes a matter of routine?—Oh, sometimes both the Sheriffs are Aldermen. This year both the Sheriffs were Aldermen; last year both the Sheriffs were Aldermen.

7545. But you say it is a portion of the education through which a man goes to be a Lord Mayor, that after being elected Alderman he must be elected in the Common Hall as Sheriff?—I do not say the education.

7546. Well, the preparation—the experience?—Not so much experience. What I desired to direct attention to was that he obtained the approval of his fellow citizens; that is what I wished to lay stress upon.

7547. And there is no case within your knowledge in which he has failed to obtain that approval?—Well, I do not think there is any case in which he has actually failed to obtain the approval. There are several cases in which, as I have said, an Alderman may have had a majority on the show of hands, but has not been necessarily elected by the Court of Aldermen to the office of Lord Mayor. That is the converse of the case you were putting.

7548. That is a different point, too. You were saying it is a good thing that an Alderman should obtain election to the office of Sheriff at the hands of the Livery, and thus obtain the approval of his fellow-citizens?—That is so.

7549. You have never known a man fail to obtain that approval?—No, I have not.

7550. Now you have heard the Recorder's evidence with respect to the Mayor's Court?—Yes.

7551. You assent, and confirm it, as far as your experience goes?—I do. I think the character of the court has enormously improved of late years—especially the last two or three years. There were circumstances of a very peculiar character which tended to depress it. Of course, with regard to the amount of fees—to which reference was made by the Recorder—the amount of fees necessarily depends on the state of commercial prosperity. I might say that at the present time trade is not as brisk as one might desire, and the necessary result is a falling off in business of a commercial character. People will settle a case rather than bring it to trial. The Registrar has the exact figures; but I think the Mayor's Court is not only a self-supporting court—that is to say, not only pays its judges and its officers, but I think you will find, when you have the Registrar before you, that it has been a court which at one time was very profitable, and is likely to continue so, and I think you cannot compare it in any way with the City of London Court.

7552. Is there any reason why the two should not under all changes go on and exist side by side?—No, I do not know that there is, but my objection is to amalgamating it with the City of London Court. The Mayor's Court has unlimited jurisdiction, exclusive audience for counsel, and a jury of twelve. There is no analogy between the Lord Mayor's Court and an ordinary County Court: outside the City, it has jurisdiction up to 50*l.* The jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor's Court outside the City is up to 50*l.*, but within the City actions for 500*l.*, 600*l.*, and 1,000*l.* are constantly arising. I have tried many such cases myself. I do not see any reason myself why the Mayor's Court should not do all the litigious business of the City proper.

7553. (Mr. Smith.) Have not some of our great municipalities cases of County Courts sitting side by side with similar courts?—I am not sure whether there is one in Birmingham. There is the Court of Passage in Liverpool, and a similar Court in Salford and Manchester.

7554. (Chairman.) Perhaps it is unnecessary at present to consider a fusion between the two Courts?—We desire to lay stress upon this, because sometimes the jurisdiction and fees have been made the subject of attack. But the Recorder has cleared up that matter of costs. There is no ground for saying the fees are excessive, on the contrary.

7555. You were in the House of Commons when the Government of London Bill, or rather the County Council Bill, was passing through?—Yes; I was in the House of Commons from 1886 to 1892.

7556. Representing a Metropolitan district?—The northern division of the borough of West Ham, quasi-metropolitan; it is not within the county of London.

7557. The part of that Bill relating to London was not much discussed in the House?—It was not discussed at all. It was perhaps one of the most extraordinary instances of a quiet revolution being effected without discussion that ever occurred in the history of any country. I do not myself believe that more than one or two days were spent in discussing the part of the Bill relating to London: this was because it was understood that the rights, privileges, and immunities of the City were absolutely preserved.

7558. Was that the sole reason?—That was one of them.

7559. (Lord Farrer.) There are some elements of discord outside the City of London, are there not?—Yes, there are. But if the rights of the City had not been preserved, unquestionably those clauses would not have been passed sub silentio.

7560. You think there would have been a little more delay?—A great deal more delay. I go further, and say that the London Clauses would never have passed into law if the City had not been absolutely safeguarded in terms by Mr. Ritchie. In fact, he contemplated, I think, in his heart (and I have been very intimate with him for a quarter of a century) the settlement of the whole question of the Government of London in the original Bill and the District Councils Bill which he proposed afterwards to introduce. But the District Council Clauses of the original Bill were withdrawn on account of time. He intended to supplement it by a further Bill establishing District Councils, and amalgamating the Vestry and District Board areas, and in that way bringing about a settlement, and of course keeping faith with the City, that is to say, preserving them in the position which they now occupy, they only surrendering those outlying and comparatively minor powers which were taken away from them by the Local Government Act of 1888; therefore the City has an uncommonly strong reason to complain of the present action.

7561. (Lord Farrer.) Do you think that if the City had contemplated what has since happened, and the London County Council becoming what it has become, these clauses would have passed sub silentio as they did?—Certainly not. I do not think they would. If they had known that the very first act of the London County Council would have been to try and bring about the destruction of the City, I am quite sure that the clauses never would have passed sub silentio: indeed I am quite sure they never would have passed at all; the whole of the London clauses would have had to be withdrawn. It was only by the forbearance of metropolitan members and the members of the City that it was possible to pass the London clauses.

7562. (Chairman.) You are prepared to offer us some opinions as to the practicability of amalgamation?—Yes.

7563. The first apparently is this, that amalgamation means the extension of the Metropolitan Police into the City, and they are not to be trusted by the inhabitants of the City?—Well, the City is, of course, a very peculiar place. During the night it practically is not inhabited at all, except by a few caretakers. The consequence is, that having regard to the enormous amount of valuable property stored in the City, it is very desirable that there should be a force quickly and easily concentrated and easily commanded. The City Police are not like the police of any other municipality; they are not managed by a committee, they are under the absolute despotism (if I may use the expression) of the Commissioner of Police. The conditions are entirely different. The conditions of living in the rest of greater London are entirely different from those in the City; owing to the enormous value of land and the necessity of using up every square inch in the City, practically nobody lives there.

7564. Is it not, in the first place, an assumption that amalgamation necessarily means the extension of the Metropolitan Police into the City?—Well, it would be very difficult to see how you could continue to maintain the City Police as a separate police force if you add to the area and extend the City, because naturally the new Lord Mayor would require that the police jurisdiction should be coterminous with his enlarged jurisdiction. Now, it is coterminous with the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor, which is an intelligible principle.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

19 Jan. 1894.

7565. You say the City Police depends for efficiency on the Commissioner?—Yes.

7566. He is the despotic head?—He is the despotic head.

7567. Could he be selected in any other way than he is at present?—He could be appointed by the Crown, by the Home Secretary, or by the larger municipality, if there were one. What I think is this, that you would not be able, logically, to advocate a continuance of the City Police as a separate force excepting under present conditions.

7568. I do not think we are very much afraid of logic?—I do not think practically it could be done either.

7569. (Mr. Smith.) You see, if the County Council of London were an ordinary municipal corporation your argument might apply. They would have a watch committee, which would have the control of the police. But there is a despotic head at present both outside and inside the City—a Commissioner appointed by the Home Secretary of the Government outside, and a Commissioner appointed inside by the City. But he is practically despotic inside the City?—Yes, that is so.

7570. There is no real conflict?—There never has been any conflict between the two police forces; both have acted in perfect harmony as far as my experience has gone. There never has been any practical difficulty, and there has been a long experience.

7571. (Mr. Crawford.) As a matter of fact, under a recent Act, it is possible to withdraw members of the Metropolitan Police and draft them into counties for the purpose of quelling a riot, whereas the City is exempted from that?—Yes.

7572. You cannot draft the City Police except to aid the Metropoliton Force in the care of the metropolis?—No.

7573. The principal reason being the unusual nature and character of the City?—Yes.

7574. (Chairman.) All that might be preserved; it is unnecessary that everything should be changed?—No, it is not necessary that everything should be changed; but I am afraid——

7575. (Mr. Crawford.) You are pointing out a main difficulty in your opinion?—That is what I think. The City Police force is so admirably adapted to the purpose for which it is used, having regard to the character of the area, that I think any change must be for the worse.

7576. (Mr. Smith.) There might be no change. If the future Commissioner saw the whole of the force was wanted, as you do, he would not remove from the City a force which was essential to the peace of the City?—It is not so much the peace of the City as the protection of the City.

7577. To compare large things with small, the position of the City of London to the rest of London is very like the centre of some of our largest towns in England compared with the suburbs, the centre is empty of all but caretakers practically at night?—Yes, I suppose that would be so.

7578. (Mr. Crawford.) What I take it you mean is this: assuming an amalgamated body, that amalgamated body would have to carry out the provisions of the City Police Act, whereas they would have no power to deal with the Metropolitan Police; therefore you would have the absolute anomaly of those who control the police of the existing smaller area, having no voice whatever in the police of the greater area?—I think that is so. I think more practical difficulties would arise, if the form of Government of London was entirely altered as some persons contemplate and desire. I think extreme difficulty would be found under new conditions; and I think it would not long survive. That is merely my own opinion. I merely express it as such.

7579. (Chairman.) Are not a good many of these difficulties like the difficulty of setting an egg to stand on its end?—No doubt eggs do sometimes turn over without standing up on end.

7580. You have some observations to make with respect to the City funds?—Yes, they would of course lose. The freemen of London would be prejudiced—must be so necessarily, because they have a prior claim in connexion with the election to City schools, City almshouses, and in some cases City offices. Nobody but a freeman is eligible for very many of the City offices.

7581. (Lord Farrer.) I do not quite understand about the offices?—Many of the offices under the Corporation must be filled by freemen of the City of London. It is one of the conditions precedent to his election.

7582. (Mr. Smith.) You are familiar with the report of 1835—the Commissioners of 1835?—Yes.

7583. You know that the rights of freemen were pretty freely dealt with there?—Yes, they were.

7584. (Mr. Crawford.) And I think you are also acquainted possibly with the case of Newcastle, where the freemen claimed and got compensation?—Yes, that is so.

7585. (Chairman.) You demur to amalgamation because of the injury it might do to the customs of the City?—Yes, it would undoubtedly involve difficulties. For instance, there is the custom of market overt, which was referred to by Sir Charles Hall. It is much prized as one of the customs, and it is part of the Common Law, but it would be very difficult to extend it beyond the present boundary of the City.

7586. (Lord Farrer.) Will you explain to us what is the great advantage of the custom of market overt?—Because it gives an absolute and indefeasible title.

7587. Is there any reason why that should exist in Fleet Street and not in the Strand?—I do not know that there is.

7588. If it is good for Fleet Street, is it not good for the Strand?—No, I should see no objection to its entire extension.

7589. (Chairman.) Is not its maintenance entirely independent of all municipal and political change? Is not there a similar custom in markets elsewhere? Prove the area of your market, then the custom applies?—Yes, it is possible that any change which might be made in the Government of London, might leave that custom untouched, because it is immemorial, and has the other things which go to constitute a good custom.

7590. I think two lines would do it if it is a custom worth maintaining and preserving?—Of course, it could be made a statutory right.

7591. It could be preserved by statute?—Preserved by statute.

7592. Then do you attach importance to the civic hospitality?—Yes, I should like to say that there is one custom to which reference has not been made, that is the right of the City to approach the Sovereign on the Throne. That right is greatly prized by the City, and is undoubted. It was questioned whether the City had the right to approach Her Majesty directly. That was conceded by Sir William Vernon Harcourt, when the previous Bill dealing with the Government of London was brought in, he conceded that it was an absolute right. Whether that would be continued in the case of any alteration in the ancient Corporation of London is a matter which might be open to very great doubt, I should think.

7593. (Lord Farrer.) Has it been asserted of late?—Well, it has not been asserted excepting in that case when Sir William Vernon Harcourt's measure was introduced.

7594. (Chairman.) It has not been asserted against a Recorder, has it?—Oh no.

7595. (Mr. Smith.) It has been exercised of late, Sir Forrest Fulton—I mean in the presentation of addresses?—Oh, yes. I attended myself in the absence of the Recorder.

7596. (Mr. Crawford.) But it is something more than presentation of addresses of congratulation. It includes addresses of remonstrance affecting Her Majesty's Ministers.

7597. (Mr. Smith.) You might have presented a remonstrance against this Commission.

7598. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation could have attended and presented a remonstrance against the appointment of this Commission if it had liked.

7599. (Lord Farrer.) You have not remonstrated lately?—No.

7600. (Chairman.) This right of approach to the Sovereign might be preserved if the Constitution of City were extended to greater London?—That is a matter about which I have grave doubt.

7601. I should have thought the Sovereign would have seen no objection?—I am not speaking for Her Majesty.

7602. (Mr. Crawford.) She might have preferred her ancient and loyal subjects of the City of London?—So broken up, it might well be not continued.

7603. The Corporation would be entirely altered—its historical constitution shattered.

7604. (Mr. Smith.) If the City of London had done what other places have done, extended its boundaries, London would be very much more important now than the City is at present?—Oh, no doubt. There is no doubt that the reason why the boundaries were not extended was jealousy on the part of the Crown of the enormous power and influence which the City exercised, and it was generally in those days opposed to the Sovereign and strongly in support of popular rights.

7605. Against despotic sovereigns?—Yes.

7606. I have just a question to ask. It became my duty to ask the question of the Lord Mayor—or rather the late Lord Mayor—and I observe you have spoken very highly of the Lord Mayor's duties as Chief Magistrate; but, assuming for a moment that in the City of London there were more municipal work to do than there is now, would you not think it rather a waste of power to make the Lord Mayor a police magistrate?—Well, the Lord Mayor has always been, for so many centuries, associated with the administration of justice, at the Mansion House, one could hardly think of the Mansion House without a Lord Mayor. He is a personage indissolubly connected with the place.

7607. It has been very much impressed on this Commission that municipal duties are thought less of than judicial duties in the City of London. It is a point which occurred to me?—I am not prepared to express an opinion upon that.

7608. Supposing the Lord Mayor were really Lord Mayor of the larger area of London you would not venture to suggest that he should waste his time sitting as police magistrate two or three hours a day?—For my own part, I do not see how it is possible for a Lord Mayor to discharge the duties of the larger area.

7609. If you relieve him of his judicial functions?—If you relieve him of those. The Lord Mayor—as I have particularly observed since I have been Common Serjeant—has his time fully occupied; and if his work were further increased by throwing on his shoulders duties connected with the whole of greater London, I do not see how he could do it.

7610. I am suggesting how you could relieve him of two or three hours a day?—No doubt the duties of the police court and the Mansion House would actually take two or three hours a day.

7611. They would naturally select for the head of a great municipality a man of supreme administrative capacity?—Yes, if they could get an ideal man.

7612. And it would be better to confine him, no doubt, to those duties as far as possible?

7613. (Mr. Crawford.) Would you consider it a waste of time, Sir Forrest, for the Lord Mayor to discharge judicial functions? Mr. Smith refers to it as a waste of time?—On the contrary, I have already explained that I think the citizens themselves attach great importance to the fact that the duties of magistrate are discharged by one of themselves who has peculiar knowledge and acquaintance with the business of the City.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

19 Jan. 1894.

7614. Is not there another very great advantage—that the Chief Magistrate of the City is resident, and therefore always available?—Yes, no doubt that is so.

7615. And do you not think it also another advantage for the person who occupies the high position of Chairman of the Court to be in direct touch with the various members of the Corporation?—Certainly.

7616. Take, for instance, the London County Council—there is nothing to prevent the Council, is there, from choosing as its chairman a man who has never had any experience whatever of County Council work?—Oh, of course they can do so.

7617. There is an immense difference with the Corporation? Before a man can become the head of the Corporation he must have had 10 years' or 12 years experience of municipal work?—That is so.

7618. Does not the Lord Mayor, as head of the Corporation, have a very large amount of municipal work?—Yes, that is so.

7619. He attends every meeting of the Court of Common Council and the Court of Aldermen?—Every one.

7620. And is he not invariably consulted by the representatives of the various committees?—Yes, invariably, I believe.

7621. And, therefore, if Sir David Evans put forward the magisterial work as of first importance, you would still admit that the Chief Magistrate has a large amount of municipal work?—Say enormous rather—I mean the duties which devolve on the Lord Mayor. That is under present conditions. What I desired to emphasise was that, assuming, for the sake of argument, that the period devoted to magisterial work were excised from the office, it seems to me he would have great difficulty in discharging the duties over so enormous an area as would appear to be contemplated by some people, namely, making the City coterminous with the County of London.

7622. You referred just now to what has been described as a huge municipality. With your knowledge of London government, do you think an immense municipality would be an advantage?—I think it would be an unmixed evil.

7623. Can you suggest to the Royal Commission any advantage of amalgamation between the Corporation and the London County Council?—I cannot see that any benefit can be derived at all. I think a reform in the internal government of the vestries no doubt would be desirable, by the completion of the scheme contemplated by Mr. Ritchie; that, I think, is most necessary and desirable, but I cannot see that anybody would benefit by lifting off the roof of the Guildhall, which is the way some people put it, and extending it over greater London.

7624. You cannot consider the proposal one of convenient practicability?—I have considered the question most carefully, and I cannot discover any convenient practicability.

7625. I suppose that you would consider that the County Council of London, leaving out the City, was to a great extent a county municipality at present?—I do not consider that it is a monster municipality; it is a monster county council. Their great ground of complaint is that it is merely a county council, and that a great many of a municipal council's duties devolve upon it.

7626. (Chairman.) You think that its municipalisation would be an evil?—Not particularly in regard to the County Council. Many people think that the introduction of political parties into municipal affairs is a great evil. That would be enhanced greatly if you create one huge municipality.

7627. That applies to some of the great cities of the Kingdom, does it not?—It does.

Sir F. Fulton, Q.C.

19 Jan. 1894.

7628. (Mr. Smith.) It has not been suggested, as a rule, that they are doing their work badly?—Many of them are doing their work extremely well, all the better if not political. At one time the feeling in Birmingham was very strong in regard to the political character of the corporation, but happily this is not so much the case now.

7629. You are not prepared to say that the work was not equally well done?—Nothing could be better done.

7630. (Mr. Crawford.) I think things have greatly improved under Mr. Smith, have they not?—I think his presence has tended to bring about good results.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. C. G. Douglas.

Mr. CECIL GEORGE DOUGLAS, Clerk to the Lord Mayor, called in and examined.

7631. (Chairman.) Mr. Douglas, you are the Chief Clerk at the Mansion House?—I am.

7632. You have been there for some time?—I have been at the Mansion House about six years as Chief Clerk.

7633. What was your experience before that?—I was, first of all, for about five years at Bow Street Police Court under the late chief magistrates, Sir Thomas Henry and Sir James Ingham; I was two or three years assistant clerk at the Mansion House Justice Room; four and a-half years chief clerk at the Guildhall Justice Room, and nearly six and a-half years chief clerk at the Mansion House Justice Room.

7634. The Lord Mayor, or in his absence an Alderman who has passed the Chair, always presides there?—Usually.

7635. What are the exceptions?—Occasionally an Alderman who has not passed the Chair would preside there, but that is very rare. In the last two or three mayoralties the Lord Mayor has sat nearly every day when he has been in England.

7636. And in your experience you are prepared to give us some view of the character of this Mansion House Court as compared with other police courts?—Yes. I may say that during the period I was chief clerk at Bow Street I acted temporarily as chief clerk at various other Metropolitan Police Courts. There were seven or eight of them, I think, and since I left that service I have been very much in touch with the Metropolitan Police Courts in various ways. The work of the Mansion House as compared with that of a Metropoltian Police Court is extremely different. In Metropolitan Police Courts a large number of cases coming before the magistrates are of the character of what are termed "night charges," such as assaults, assaults on police constables, minor offences, and a great number of petty summonses; whereas the work coming before the Lord Mayor or the presiding magistrate at the Mansion House is of a very serious character. I mean, further, that we get a very large proportion of long commercial frauds, such as fraudulent bankruptcies, large bank frauds, long firm conspiracies, intricate cases under the Merchandise Marks Act, falsification of accounts, matters involving a considerable amount of commercial experience and commercial knowledge, especially of book-keeping. The ordinary police court work of the Mansion House is, comparatively speaking, light, owing to the respectable character of the population and the small residential population.

7637. There must be similar cases to those mercantile cases occurring in our big provincial towns?—Probably; though the City of London being so to speak, the pulse of commercial life, I think our cases are probably considerably larger. Of course we get a very different class of litigants to our court also from what occur in the metropolitan courts. The persons having business in our court are, as a rule, merchants or commercial people who are generally represented by solicitors or barristers; whereas in the Metropolitan Police Courts the general average of litigants are poor persons without any legal advisers to conduct their cases. We get many more solicitors and counsel at the Mansion House than they get at the Metropolitan Police Courts.

7638. And perhaps a different quality of solicitors too?—Well, sometimes; I mean it is a very frequent thing to have counsel at the Mansion House, whereas one small table is all that is allowed for counsel at the Metropolitan Police Courts. We can accommodate ten or a dozen, and often have as many in the course of the day.

7639. Is there any difference between the two courts, the Guildhall and the Mansion House?—No, sir; the difference is simply this, that the City is divided for police purposes into six divisions, and the Mansion House takes three of those divisions, namely, the southern part of the City, and the Guildhall takes the northern part of the City. There are other classes of work done at the Mansion House that are not done at the Guildhall, and there are classes of work done at the Guildhall that are not done at the Mansion House. That is a mere arrangement for the general convenience of the public. For instance, all the Excise cases, all the cases by the Excise authorities in the City of London, are heard at the Mansion House for the convenience of the Commissioners of Excise, it being more convenient to come to one court. Then small tenement cases and bastardy cases, for convenience, are taken at the Guildhall.

7640. Do you wish to make any comparison between the cost of your justice rooms in the City and courts outside the City?—Yes, I have worked out the cost of the magisterial and clerical staff of a Metropolitan Police Court as compared with the cost at the Mansion House. These, of course, I may say, sir, do not include ushers or any persons of that character, summoning officers or anything of that sort, simply the magisterial and clerical staff. I find that a Metropolitan Police Court costs 3,980*l.*, my court costs 1,650*l.*

7641. The fact being that you include 3,000*l.* for the salaries of the magistrates in the case of the Metropolitan Police Court?—That is so, sir.

7642. Otherwise your court is a little more expensive?—Yes, it is a little more expensive; but I have included in my court a cashier and a junior clerk, which they have not got at the Metropolitan Police Courts, because they use other officers, who are not appointed to do clerical duty, to do the work. For instance, they have a cashier making out summonses, I have not included that; so my clerical figures do look higher.

7643. The main point of difference is that you do not pay for your magistrates?—That is the main point of difference, no doubt.

7644. How would the amount of work done at your court compare with the amount of work done, say, at Worship Street?—How do you mean, the work done, do you mean statistics?

7645. Yes?—These statistics the Commissioners will find——

7646. You cannot give a general view?—Yes, I can, sir, if you will allow me. I have not the least doubt that, taken statistically, Worship Street will look very large as compared with the Mansion House; but you must remember that at Worship Street perhaps in an afternoon they get 70 or 80 School Board summonses; each one of these will come in as a case in the statistics. We have a great number of long commercial frauds, which will, perhaps, occupy eight or nine or 12 days in hearing, and which will run to 500 or 600 pages of depositions, and in my return that only comes in as one case. Practically, the work that is done at the Mansion House, speaking from my best experience, which has been confirmed by more or less recent facts, is quite as heavy as that of any Metropolitan Police Court, only it is of such a different character. Our work is, in fact, more to be compared with that of the work of Bow Street, where they have very little district work to do, and where the time of the magistrate is taken up by what are called heavy cases.

7647. (Mr. Crawford.) I see you give us, in the Blue Book, a return of business transacted at the Mansion House for the past three years?—It is in the Blue Book at page 17. Then, of course, I should like to say, I do not know if the Commissioners have had statistics from the other courts; but in preparing these statistics the number of persons in custody include the remanded cases. I only included a remanded case once; for instance, a case coming up to-day and remanded 12 times only appears once; I know that in one instance, in the statistics they got from another police court, they put in that as 12, and you will soon mount up cases at that rate.

7649. You do have a good lot of small cases: summonses for poor and other rates, assaults, and other offences, amounting last year to more than 1,000?—Yes, that is so; but a very large proportion of those are units.

7650. I want to see how many big commercial cases you had as compared with the small cases; the number of persons in custody charged with offences, including remanded cases and persons appearing on summonses for criminal offences in 1891 and 1892 was 1,614?—Yes, in custody, and appearing on summonses for criminal offences; that does not include the number against whom summonses have been issued.

7651. That is an addition?—That is an addition.

7652. Can you tell what proportion of that 1,614 can be put under the head of commercial cases?—I cannot tell you that per-centage.

7653. Have you the slightest idea, a half, a third, or a tenth?—I think you may take it from me that 65 to 70 per cent. of the cases heard before the magistrates, not including the summonses for poor rates, relate to commercial offences.

7654. (Chairman.) Two-thirds?—Yes, about that; of course, I am speaking of that very roughly.

7655. (Mr. Smith.) Would you just define commercial offences?—Yes, certainly; false pretences, bank forgeries, frauds by general brokers, Stock Exchange swindles, frauds by directors of public companies, shipping cases, conspiracy, larceny by clerks and servants and falsification of accounts, cases under the Bankruptcy Acts, Companies Acts, Merchandise Marks Act, Factory Acts, &c., of which we get a great number.

7656. You think 70 per cent.?—I should say roughly 65 or 70 per cent.

7657. And that is a much larger per-centage than you will get at any stipendary magistrate's court except, I think you said, at Bow Street?—For this reason, Bow Street takes all the Treasury work; they get all the work there. In comparing the Mansion House and the Metropolitan Police Court, Bow Street is the only one that can be fairly cited.

7658. You had a large experience of stipendiary magistrates yourself?—Oh, yes, a large experience.

7659. Did you read Sir John Monckton's evidence upon that?—No.

7660. Should you agree with him—would you like to see a system of lay magistrates adopted all over London?—I think that the extension of such a system might be desirable at certain places, but not in others. You see there are lay magistrates and lay magistrates. The magistrates who are appointed in the City of London are all trained commercial men, and in my humble opinion very proper people to deal with purely commercial cases; but whether it may be desirable in Worship Street to appoint a Court tailor or skin merchant I do not know. That is a question I should myself hardly like to answer.

7661. Are you familiar with any of the courts of our large provincial towns?—The only one I am at all familiar with is Leeds; the magistrates' clerk is a friend of mine. I have been in there several times.

7662. You know they must have a large number of commercial cases?—Oh, no doubt; but I have been there on a Monday morning when there have been 70 or 80 cases of night charges.

7663. If they had a heavy commercial case would they take it before a lay magistrate or a stipendary?—I cannot say as to that.

7664. You have no prejudice as regards the employment of professional magistrates?—I have a prejudice in this way, for a purely commercial class of cases such as we get—I am speaking of the City Courts—I think if a commercial man is on the bench he is a far fairer judge than a professional man. I can give you an instance of that in my experience.

7665. It might be quite possible to find a professional man of the requisite experience?—It might be possible.

7666. From among gentlemen who have practised in the court for some years?—I do not think mere practice in the court gives a magistrate such experience as gives him an opportunity of understanding commercial principles. I mean many instances have occurred, in which the magistrate on the bench has said, even in cases where counsel or solicitors were employed, "Give me the books," and, after having seen them, and put a few questions, has evolved order out of chaos.

7667. Book-keeping is now part of the curriculum of a solicitor's education?—It may be part of the curriculum of a solicitor's education, but I am afraid not many of them know much about it.

7668. (Chairman.) You have seen Mr. Kemp's evidence?—Such portion as relates to magisterial work I have read, sir.

7669. And you would like to make one or two corrections upon it?—Yes.

7670. Now, about the special functions of the police magistrates—or Bow Street magistrate, in respect of extradition, is there a correction to be made there?—Well, sir, reading Mr. Kemp's statement, he has slightly misunderstood, probably, the practice of extradition.* Under section 5 of the Extradition Act, 1873, any justice of the peace anywhere may be authorised by the Secretary of State to take evidence in the United Kingdom for the purpose of any criminal matter pending in any court or tribunal in any foreign State. As a matter of fact the Lord Mayor takes a very great deal of evidence under this particular section, and I know that such evidence is returned to the Home Office in a most complete and accurate state, as is testified by the authorities there, who have complimented the Lord Mayor on the way in which the evidence has been returned. When I say a great many, I think we get 50 or 60 in the course of a year, quite.

7671. But the Chief Magistrate at Bow Street is the only person authorised to issue a warrant, is he not?—He is the only person authorised to issue a warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive from abroad. Any magistrate can issue a warrant for the arrest of a person out of the jurisdiction.

7672. To deliver up a fugitive here?—It must be done only by one of the magistrates at Bow Street as defined by the Extradition Act.

7673. You also desire to say that the City magistrates have power to give possession to deserted premises?—I think, sir, they have the same power that any two justices of the peace would have to do it. But the City police magistrate can do it by himself. The only distinction is that the metropolitan police magistrate can issue a warrant to a metropolitan police constable to view. I am wrong, sir. I think the City justices have to go themselves to visit the premises. This is a point upon which Mr. Savill, the Chief Clerk of the Guildhall, will give you more information about. I am rather rusty about it.†

Mr. C. G. Douglas.

19 Jan. 1894.

7674. It is not a matter of vital importance, I think?—Probably not.

7675. Have you anything else you desire to say?—Well, that is rather a wide question, sir. Would you mind particularising that slightly?

7676. I have exhausted your proof. At the end there is a statement that you have been visiting particular police courts?—That was simply with a view——

7677. It occurred to me that probably you desired to say something about that?—That was simply my memory, partly. But there is one point which strikes me very forcibly—that is the great punctuality of the City courts. I think that this is a very well-known fact among members of the profession, that if they have a case fixed for a definite time at a City court they can be pretty certain that it will be taken at that time. Arrangements are made for the sitting of magistrates at a particular time, and litigants and their advocates are not kept waiting. Many solicitors and members of the Bar have referred to this—to the great facilities afforded them at the City courts. With reference to visiting particular police courts, I have recently visited several of the courts, taking them merely by chance.

7678. You found, probably, a good deal of variation of practice in those courts?—Not in practice. I have found this—that there is very little punctuality.

7679. That is a universal failing?—Of all the courts I have been to; I went to one at which the magistrate was supposed to take his seat at 10 o'clock, and he did not put in an appearance until 11 o'clock. This I considered very hard upon poor people who had to make applications; such things in the City Courts are unknown.

7680. (Mr. Smith.) Such things have been said of Her Majesty's Judges?—That is so, sir. I merely give you my experience as I have found it. I have found the same thing in other courts. There is no doubt about it, punctuality is not observed. It was no matter to me: if I had been a person who had only an hour off, it might have been somewhat of a serious matter.

7681. (Mr. Holt.) Are you speaking of the metropolitan courts?—I am, sir. I purposely abstain from mentioning particular courts. I could give them if necessary.

7682. (Mr. Crawford.) I suppose, Mr. Douglas, the success of a magistrate may be well tested by the number of appeals from his decision?—That is a very fair way of testing success.

7683. Well, now, what has been the result of appeals in connexion with City cases?—There is a return in the Blue Book going back from 1889.

7684. What page are you at?—Page 17. In 1889 and 1890, there were no appeals at the Mansion House from decision given; in 1890 and 1891, there were no appeals; and in 1891 and 1892, there was one special case under the Oyster Fisheries Act, which was an extremely intricate matter, in which the judgment of the magistrates was reversed. But I can give the Commission some more extended instances than that. I am only speaking, of course, of the Mansion House.

7685. Just confine yourself to the Mansion House?—Since the 1st January 1888, there have been only two appeals to Quarter Sessions from convictions of the magistrates. In both of these the convictions were affirmed. From the same date to the 31st December 1893, special cases have been applied for or rules nisi moved for to the number of 20 altogether. In only one special case, viz., that one under the Oyster Act I have just mentioned, has the decision of the Alderman been reversed, and only two rules made absolute; and in one of those the Lord Chief Justice said the Court made the Rule absolute with reluctance. Further than that, there were a large number of informal appeals to the Home Secretary for reduction of sentences of which I have no exact record. Speaking from memory, and my memory is pretty accurate, we have had no cases since the 1st January 1888.

7686. (Mr. Smith.) Do you know whether that record is better or worse than the record of an ordinary police court?—I have not compared it. I could not tell you at all.

7687. (Mr. Crawford.) You have spoken of punctuality. Do you find it also a great advantage in the City to have a Chief Magistrate resident?—Unquestionably I do. I could give the Commissioners a very recent example of that. We had a man and a woman shot in the City of London; inquiries were made as to whether it was necessary to take the man's depositions; the house surgeon said he did not think it was. Later in the day, about half past five, an urgent messenger came down to say the man's depositions ought to be taken. The Lord Mayor, resident on the premises, made arrangements to go as speedily as possible, the only reason for delay being that we had to fetch the prisoner from Holloway Prison. Now, if that had occurred at a metropolitan police court, the magistrate would have by that time left the place altogether, and they would have had to go to some magistrate's private house, wherever he could be found. I have known cases where it has taken three or four hours to find a metropolitan magistrate.

7688. Speaking of metropolitan magistrates, you have been asked several questions respecting lay magistrates. Having regard to your experience both of metropolitan magistrates and magistrates in the City, do you consider it an advantage to the citizens of London that they should have lay magistrates in preference to stipendaries?—For the particular class of work which is presented in the City of London, I think that as long as they get magistrates of the commercial experience and ability of our present bench, they certainly make, for the particular class of business they have to perform, better magistrates than professional men.

The witness withdrew.

Mr H. G. Savill.

Mr. HERBERT GEORGE SAVILL, Clerk at the Guildhall Justice Room, called in and examined.

7689. (Chairman.) You are the clerk at the Guildhall?—I am.

7690. You have heard Mr. Douglas's evidence?—I have.

7691. You agree with that evidence so far as it was within your common knowledge?—Yes, I agree with it.

7692. Have you anything to state to us with respect to the Guildhall as distinguished from the Mansion House?—The work at the Guildhall is not exactly the same as at the Mansion House. For instance, at the Guildhall there is no resident magistrate: an Alderman attends from the rota for each week. And then there are certain differences as to the business that is transacted at the Guildhall.

7693. One Alderman, as a rule, sits there?—One Alderman—yes.

7694. You were at the Marlborough Street Police Court, I see, for some time?—For about five years—for over five years.

7695. How would you compare work done at the Guildhall with the work done at Marlborough Street?—Do you mean as to quantity?

7696. No; I mean as to the character of the work?—I should say that, as to the Guildhall, but I agree with Mr. Douglas' answer to yourself, that at the Guildhall, as at the Mansion House, the quality of the work differs very essentially from the work in the other police courts. At most of the police courts (Bow Street excepted, because there their work is of a very special character)—the ordinary charges are no doubt charges of drunkenness, disorder, violence, petty larcenies, and a great many summonses for assaults. Of course, in the City there is a very large proportion of commercial frauds—very heavy cases; some cases we had in this last year—I think there were five persons charged with fraud in connection with a company—that was in 1891; there were ten different hearings—four of them whole day sittings. Last year, there was a man named Hills, afterwards convicted, charged with other persons with offences in connection with bill transactions; there were ten hearings—five of them lasted the whole day, and on two days the Court rose at half-past 6 at night. We have had cases that took a week at the Old Bailey to try.

7697. Similar cases are not absolutely unknown in borough police courts?—Not absolutely unknown; but the proportion of them is far less—infinitely less.

7698. The proportion and also the absolute number is less?—And also the number.

7699. What proportion of your cases are of this important mercantile character?—As to what proportion are of a mercantile character or of an important mercantile character is a question of degree; it is rather difficult.

7700. Embezzlement by a clerk may be of the smallest possible importance?—It may be of the smallest possible importance. I cannot say that I can give you an exact per-centage. It is very difficult to find that out. You would have to examine the record of each case specially, and all the other cases which have been gone into in the course of the whole year, no doubt.

7701. Do you get a case of that serious character,—such as you have cited before us illustrations of,—once a week?—Oh, no; that was a very special case indeed. We get heavy cases—cases that last some considerable time very frequently. The reason I mentioned that case, if I may be allowed to say so, was to show the statistics as to the amount of work done simply gave no real criterion as to the time occupied and the important nature of the cases.

7702. (Mr. Crawford.) You give us certain particulars, too, I see, Mr. Savill, in the Blue Book; page 20 shows the work done, I see, for three years?—Yes.

7703. I see there are a large number of police summonses down there; are those summonses taken in a different court to the usual court?—Those cases are not taken in the Guildhall Justice Room. There is a special court, which is held twice a week for that purpose.

7704. Is that for the police summonses?—For the police summonses—summonses taken out by the police for offences in the streets—against omnibus conductors and people of that class.

7705. Therefore they would not be included among the cases you are referring to of which there is a large number too?—No; not included, certainly.

7706. (Chairman.) You have studied Mr. Kemp's evidence?—I have read it.

7707. Is there anything in it you think it desirable to correct?—There are one or two things, if you think it important. Mr. Kemp mentioned, at Question 5925, cases of pawnbrokers who have bought goods from a person who was not entitled to them. That is with reference to the point of market overt. I have not the evidence before me; but I think he said there are frequent cases. I am not sure as to that. I would say this: I do not recollect one such case in the City, or in the metropolitan district, of pawnbrokers having bought goods as distinguished from pawnbrokers having advanced money upon them. Then there is the question of deserted premises.* That has been already touched upon; and it is simply as to the question of the jurisdiction of metropolitan police magistrates I wish to speak. Although when sitting at any police Court, a magistrate's jurisdiction legally extends over the whole of the metropolitan police district, yet as matter of practice it is, when he is sitting in any one court, confined to the area laid down in the Police Court Division allotted by the Order in Council to that particular court.

7708. (Chairman.) I think we have that stated before us?—It has been stated. I mean to say the prosecutor in any case arising outside of any particular division would be referred to the division in which the offence arose, although he might live in another place.

7709. (Mr. Smith.) I just want to get at one question, Mr. Savill. I think there is a good deal of difficulty, I agree with you, in the classification of these charges; embezzlement may be a very serious complicated affair, or it may be a very simple affair—so also falsification of books. Tell me, if you can, how many cases a year you have occur at the Guildhall that are decided without difficulty by a lay magistrate, that would embarrass or present difficulty to an experienced police magistrate?—That is exceedingly difficult for me without going carefully through——

7710. Would there be half-a-dozen?—Oh, yes, considerably more—very much more. I could not, without going into the figures, give you any idea whatever.

7711. (Chairman.) That Bread Union fraud—would that have embarrassed an ordinary police magistrate?—I should not like to say that; but I think it strictly is a case, I have no doubt it was a case in which the commercial knowledge of the Alderman was of very great assistance in eliciting the facts.

7712. (Mr. Crawford) Is it not common knowledge, Mr. Savill, that many of the stipendiary magistrates are gentlemen who, at the time of their appointment, have had no experience at the criminal bar?—That has been my experience in many cases.

7713. (Mr. Smith.) It is equally within your experience that the other gentlemen have had no legal education whatever?—No; but they do not sit till they have had a certain amount of experience. As a rule, they are successful business men, with good business experience before they are appointed magistrates.

7714. (Mr. Crawford.) You are speaking of the advantage of their commercial knowledge?—Yes, certainly.

7715. There is one question I omitted to put to Mr. Douglas; I will put it to you. Is it not often the practice for the Lord Mayor, or some other presiding magistrate, to certify for professional aid to be given to a particular prosecutor, or to assist the police at the expense of the City?—In many cases. In many cases that arise before him in which, in the circumstances, he thinks there is a serious offence against the public, and in which the prosecutor is not able to bear the expenses, that is frequently done.

7716. So that the City cases, which outside the City would be taken up by the public prosecutor, are, as a rule, taken up by the City Solicitor on the certificate of an Alderman?—Yes. A very recent case of that kind was that of the fire at Aldgate.

7717. And the expense, so far as not recoverable out of the county fund, is borne by the Corporation?—By the Corporation.

7718. Will you tell us what has been the result of appeals from decisions at the Guildhall?—In the year 1890, there were no appeals to Quarter Sessions, and no appeals to the High Court. In 1891, two appeals to Quarter Sessions, in both of which cases the decision of the magistrates was confirmed; and in the High Court there were three, two were successful, and one confirmed. With regard to one that was successful, I may say that the decision that the judges gave with very great regret is in the case under the Public Health Act, in consequence of which an Act was passed to extend its scope.

7719. A recent Act?—A recent Act. In 1892, there were no appeals to the Quarter Sessions, and only one appeal to the High Court, in which the decision of the magistrate was confirmed. There are certain appeals made to the Home Secretary, when a prisoner thinks he is in prison for too long a time and suffers injustice; and of these informal appeals there have been five since I was appointed to the Guildhall, and in every case the Home Secretary has refused to interfere with the decision of the magistrate.

* See Kemp, 6021. Douglas, 7673–4.

Mr. H. G. Savill.

7720. So that according to statistics, lay magistracy in the City has not been unsuccessful?

7721. (Mr. Smith.) You do not know that it has been better or worse than the stipendiaries outside?—I have had no experience except in the Metropolitan Police Courts.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. F. S. Jackson.

Mr. FRANK STATHER JACKSON, Registrar of the Mayor's Court, called in and examined.

7722. (Chairman.) You are the Registrar of the Mayor's Court?—Yes, sir.

7723. You have heard the evidence of the Recorder and of the Common Serjeant?—Yes, sir.

7724. What do you desire to add—some figures as to the amount of business?—Yes, sir. They are set out in the Blue Book. The Recorder went into nearly all the figures. I was particularly going to say something as to the costs—the comparative costs of the Mayor's Court and the County Court; but the Recorder has gone into that matter.

7725. The Recorder gave us evidence upon that point?—He gave you evidence.*

7726. Do you wish to supplement it in any way?—No, sir; not in addition to the statement which has been already put in the Blue Book. Since the new rules have been applied to the Mayor's Court recently, the practice has been very much modernised, and is now similar to that of the High Court. We have got most of the important rules of the High Court applied to the Mayor's Court, and the business—the important business—of the court is increasing.

7727. The small business is being diverted?—The small business is being diverted. The Recorder is very much opposed to very small actions being brought into the Mayor's Court.

7728. Then, you appear to desire to say something as to your being appointed a commissioner to administer oaths?—Formerly the Bankruptcy Court had an office in the City and there affidavits were taken without any fee to persons in the City, and the Corporation, when the Bankruptcy Court was taken away from the City, requested the Registrars of the Mayor's Court, and of the City of London Court, and also another officer, to continue that practice which the citizens consider a boon.

7729. (Mr. Crawford.) Or rather the Corporation applied to the Lord Chancellor to appoint those officers as commissioners to take affidavits?—The Corporation applied to the Lord Chancellor to do so.

7730. And they provided an office, for some time I believe, gratis, did not they, for the officer who used to take affidavits?—They did, I believe, at the old Bankruptcy Court.

7731. And then subsequently they applied to the Lord Chancellor to have several officers appointed in order that the citizens might get their affidavits taken without a fee?—Without a fee; that is so.

7732. (Chairman.) We have all the rest of the evidence?—All the rest of the evidence—yes.

7733. (Mr. Crawford.) It might be convenient to have this on the notes: your figures differ slightly from those in the Blue Book?—I have been able to get out the 1893 statistics.

7734. You have brought these statistics up to date? You will remember that the Recorder told us that the work of the Mayor's Court was increasing,* and without that explanation it might look as if the work had been falling off recently?—The judicial statistics that I have for 1892 show that there were 11,457 actions entered in the Court; in 1893 there was 11,897, and there was the same number of equity suits—12; that made a total of 11,909 as against 11,460 in the previous year. And the amounts are correspondingly increased for which the actions are brought; I see in 1892 the total was 291,870*l.* and last year it was 339,448*l.* And these are chiefly composed of actions over 50*l.*

7735. Actions are now being brought in the Mayor's Court for very large sums?—Yes, for very large sums indeed. There are several actions at the present sittings of considerable importance.

7736. You are constantly having cases in which Queen's counsel appear?—Yes, constantly; and more often than formerly. There is an increase in actions for sums over 50*l.*

7737. (Chairman.) It is a case of recovery. It does not appear to amount to so much as is did four years ago?—No, sir. It fluctuates from time to time. We find that when business generally is bad in the City that has some effect upon our returns. I may say, the appointment of our present Recorder has added to the business of the court.

7738. You get more cases brought into your court?—We get more cases, sir.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. A. Wild.

Mr. JAMES ANSTEY WILD, Registrar of the City of London Court, called in and examined.

7739. (Mr. Wild.) I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if I am in order; there is one slight error in the report of the Corporation at page 53. It mentions that the Registrar of the City of London Court and the High Bailiff of that Court are subject to annual election. That is not so.

7740. (Chairman.) These asterisks should be removed?—Yes.

7741. (Mr. Crawford.) It is a printer's error?—It is a printer's error, I think.

7742. I do not think you will find that in the revised edition?—Well, I have only got the first edition.

7743. (Chairman.) How long have you been Registrar?—I was appointed in May 1889.

7744. Are you a solicitor?—I was a solicitor; I am a member of the Bar now.

7745. The City of London Court is organised exactly as a county court?—We work under the same rules as the county court, but we have our own private Act, the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852.

7746. But you have the same rules and the same fees?—And the same fees.

7747. The same procedure?—The same procedure.

7748. (Mr. Crawford.) With a special jurisdiction?—With a special jurisdiction under our Act.

7749. (Chairman.) You have read these, pages 92 and those that follow relative to the Court?—Relative to the Court, yes.

7750. They are accurate?—They are accurate to the best of my belief, perfectly accurate.

7751. Do you desire to add anything to that?—I have nothing; I do not know that I might add that the returns for the last year, 1893, show a still larger increase in the business of the Court.

7752. A continuous increase?—A continuous increase.

* See Hall, 7392–5.

* See Hall, 7410–1.

Mr. J. A. Wild.

19 Jan. 1894.

7753. Do you know how much was realised in the way of fees?—I am now speaking from memory, but I think it was 20,500*l.* odd.*

7754. An increase of about 1,000*l.*?—About 1,000*l.* over last year.

7755. That has been a continued increase for the last six years?—For the last six years.

7756. The Court more than pays its expenses?—Decidedly.

7757. It is a valuable property to the City?—A very valuable property to the City I should say.

7758. Are there any complaints made against the Court, or any desire to alter its character?—No, I have never heard of any. I can only say this, that if any complaints are made, I always feel it my duty to lay them before the Law and City Courts Committee, who pay the greatest attention to anything so submitted, and always endeavour to remedy any defects if it lies in their power to do so.

7759. The judge has hitherto been appointed by the Common Council?—Yes; in future he will be appointed by the Crown.

7760. Now he is under the appointment of the Government, under the Local Government Act?—Yes.

7761. (Lord Farrer.) Where does the Court sit?—At the Guildhall in its own buildings; it is opposite where the old Bankruptcy Court used to stand.

7762. (Chairman.) Except so far as the balance of income over expenditure is concerned the Court might be considered to be entirely detached from the City?—Hardly, I think, sir.

7763. What authority has the City got over it?—The City has got authority, so far as I myself am concerned; all Registrars of other County Courts are under the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor, I, on the other hand am accountable to the Corporation, and the Lord Chancellor, I believe, has no jurisdiction over me. I am removable, the Corporation can removes me for just cause.

7764. (Lord Farrer.) Has the plaintiff any special privilege?—Yes, sir, he has a special privilege in this way. In the first place, in the ordinary County Court he must file an affidavit where the defendant resides out of the jurisdiction and get leave of the Registrar to issue his plaint. In our Court, under our private Act, he is not bound to do that. Then, on the other hand, a plaintiff can sue a defendant who is merely a clerk in the City; that is, the fact of his having employment within the City gives the Court jurisdiction.

7765. Without residence?—Without residence.

7766. (Mr. Crawford.) That is a special jurisdiction?—That is a special jurisdiction.

7767. Provided by the Local Act?—It was upheld the other day in the case of Hutner v. Phillips.

7768. You recently have had considerable extra work thrown upon your Court, I think, in connexion with the Companies Winding Up Act?—Certainly, a great deal of extra work has been cast upon us.

7769. And I believe that the special privileges that you have referred to were specially reserved to the City under the County Courts Act of 1888?—Yes, the last section in that Act, if I remember right.

7770. Section 185 safeguarded the rights and privileges of the City so far as your Court was concerned?—Yes.

7771. I think the Court has been very recently re-built, and at the present moment is being added to?—Added to now.

7772. (Lord Farrer.) There is a very considerable fund which the Corporation get from the Court, is there not?—Well, I am afraid I cannot speak of the fund because I simply pay the money over, and there is an end of it, so far as I am concerned.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Alexander Brand, the Comptroller of the City of London, called in and examined.

Mr. J. A. Brand.

7773. (Chairman.) Mr. Brand, you are the Comptroller?—I am, sir.

7774. How long have you been such?—I have been upwards of 14 years Comptroller and have been 42 years in the service of the Corporation.

7775. Can you tell us what the duties of the Comptroller are?—Well, the Comptroller really is a sort of steward that manages the City's estates. I do all the conveyancing work, the legal work of the Corporation as far as conveyancing is concerned. I have to attend the Court of Common Council and the Court of Aldermen, and I am clerk to the City Lands Committee, which committee has the letting of the City property, and I am also clerk to the Bridge House Estates Committee, who have the management of Bridge House estates.

7776. (Mr. Crawford.) And you are also Vice-Chamberlain?—I am also Vice-Chamberlain.

7777. (Chairman.) Is all the landed property of the City in your charge?—Yes.

7778. (Lord Farrer.) All the landed property?—At least, all under the control of the above Committees. I look after it, and see when leases are expiring, and I keep the rental, a copy of which I supply every year to the Chamberlain, and I also prepare a statement of the amount that ought to be received by the Chamberlain during the year. The Chamberlain's and the City's accounts are kept upon the principle of charge and discharge. I prepare an account of the receipts of the Corporation, and that is laid before the Court of Common Council every year, and in about two months afterwards the Chamberlain has to make a return showing how he has disbursed the money.

7779. (Chairman.) You charge him with the revenue he ought to receive?—Yes, with the revenue he ought to receive.

7780. Has the Comptroller charge of the unoccupied lands?—Yes.

7781. As well as the occupied or let land?—Well, I cannot say that I am in charge of the unoccupied land, the surveyor is in charge of that, but still I know what it is; I keep an account of the vacant land.

7782. Then you would be enabled to make out a complete list of the property of the City in that regard?—Certainly, sir.

7783. (Lord Farrer.) Can you do that for us, or do you feel justified in giving it to us?—I have not the slightest difficulty about that; the fact is there is very little unlet now.

7684. Are you able to give to this Commission an account of what the property of the Corporation is, or would you require their authority before doing that?—I would prefer their authority before doing that; but the land under the control of the City Lands Committee is situate principally in the City.

7785. (Mr. Smith.) Have you a terrier of all your estates?—Well, I keep it in the way of rental.

7786. I mean have you a terrier with the plans of the property?—Yes; it is in the possession of the architect: I also have a plan for reference, one of the Ordnance plans, in which all the City property is coloured; the architect has, of course, a better plan, a fuller plan of the whole of the City property.

7787. A detailed plan of the buildings, and so on?—Yes.

7788. But I mean a plan of the estates?—Only in that way, we have an Ordnance map and City Surveyor's plans.

7789. The principal City estates are in the City, and in Conduit Street in the West of London?—Yes; in Bond Street and Conduit Street.

7790. Have they large estates outside London?—Not the City.

* The exact amount is 20,439*l.*

Mr. J. A. Brand.

19 Jan. 1894.

7791. The Bridge House Estates?—The Bridge House Trust has large estates outside the City, in Southwark and Lewisham; they have a little property in the City, but the principal property is in Southwark and Lambeth and Lewisham, and some parts of Essex.

7792. You work under the City Lands Committee?—Yes; as Comptroller I am clerk to the City Lands Committee. I attend them, take their minutes and prepare all the reports of the Court.

7793. That is regarded as the most important committee of the Corporation?—It is, sir, the Chairman is called the Chief Commoner.

7794. He is always a commoner?—The Chief Commoner he is always called.

7795. But he is never an Alderman, is he?—Well, he may be an Alderman, but it is very rarely. I do not remember an Alderman being Chairman in my time; they have all been members of the Court.

7796. What proportion of your property is let on lease?—Almost the whole of it; there are a few houses let on weekly tenancies.

7797. On repairing leases?—On repairing leases.

7798. On rack rents?—On rack rents, of course, building leases are held at rack rents.

7799. What is the usual term of the lease?—80 years, but in one or two cases, land on the Thames Embankment, for instance, leases have been granted for 90 years.

7800. And you receive premiums on letting?—Only for public-houses.

7801. For what period do you let a public-house?—For 80 years or 21 years, rack rents 21 years; building leases, 80 years; but public-houses, I may say, are the only cases in which we receive premiums.

7802. When a lease runs out what is your procedure, do you advertise for tenders?—No, it is done this way. Two years before the lease expires we communicate with the occupying tenant and ask him whether he wishes to take the property on lease. That is done because the Corporation have always thought that it is the fairest way to grant the lease to the man who carries on his business on the property, and if he applies it is referred to the architect to report as to what he considers the value of it. If the Corporation can come to terms with the occupying tenant then the lease is granted to him, if on the other hand they cannot come to terms then it is put up to let by public tender.

7803. (Lord Farrer.) Are your rents increasing on the whole?—Yes, increasing.

7804. They are increasing?—Yes; as far as the City is concerned, I do not think we shall have much of an increase for a few years to come, but on the Bridge House Estates we shall. It is a very old custom treating with the tenant; I saw it stated in a minute book of the reign of Charles the Second, that it had been the practice of the Corporation to do so, and it has been carried it out ever since and a very fair custom I think it is.

7805. Are the Bridge House Estates managed on the same principle?—On precisely the same principle.

7806. (Chairman.) By the same Committee?—No, that is by the Bridge House Committee.

7807. (Mr. Holt.) It is the custom to let the leases run out, is it then?—No, two years before the lease expire we treat with the occupying tenant; we do not treat with the old lessee.

7808. It is not your custom when a period of years, 10, 15, or 20 years, has run off a lease to renew the lease, to put in it the full 80 years period again, is it?—That is only on the Conduit Mead Estate; those are renewable leases which are granted for 40 years, and there is a covenant that the Corporation will renew the lease at the expiration of 14 years for another term of 40 years.

7809. (Lord Farrer.) Every 14 years?—Every 14 years?—Every 14 years, that is only on the Conduit Mead Estate, those are renewable leases. The lease is granted for 40 years, and then there is a covenant, that the Corporation will renew it at the expiration of 14 years for another 40 years.

7810. On payment of a fine?—On payment of a fine.

7811. What is done with these fines?—They go to the City's cash.

7812. Are they treated as income?—I think so, for the purpose of paying off old debts.

7813. (Mr. Crawford.) Mr. Payne told us they had been specially applied in connection with the payment of the Grain Duty debt?—As far as the commutation of fines is concerned, that is quite a new scheme; it was introduced about two years ago.

7814. (Chairman.) How did that obligatory renewal arise at Stratford Place, do you know?—I think it was in the reign of Charles II. The property belonged to the Corporation and they granted a lease to—I forget now to whom they granted it—but a lease was granted for a long term; when the lease expired most of the land was vacant; but there were some buildings upon part of it which were in a very dilapidated condition, and the Corporation wishing to improve the property and encourage people to build houses upon the Conduit Mead estate, specially granted these renewable leases. It was a most unfortunate thing for the Corporation to do, but it was rather done in the interest of their tenants and the interest of the public, that they granted them. Of course builders would not build upon a short term like 14 years, so they granted a lease for 40 years, renewable every 14 years. Upon that there was a ground-rent payable, and they took a fine of about four years' original ground-rent for granting the renewable lease. It is rather difficult to get at the exact figure, but as far as I can make out it is about four or five years' original ground-rent.

7815. (Mr. Holt.) The payment to the Corporation then is not upon the present value of the property?—Oh, no, I wish it were for the sake of the Corporation, for many of these houses we only get about five or six pounds a year, and I know that in one or two cases they are let at 3,000*l.* a year.

7816. (Chairman.) The real estates of the Bridge House Estate extend much beyond London apparently?—Yes, they go down principally round into Southwark, Lewisham, Esher, and Ewell.

7817. (Lord Farrer.) Building ground, chiefly?—Yes, building ground; of course they are building over it now. The Bridge House Farm was a large farm and has just been let on building leases.

7818. (Chairman.) Have there been any additions made to the Bridge House Estates in recent years?—Yes; the last five or six years there have been great additions in the way of building.

7819. In what way?—Well, by leases expiring, and new leases being granted at increased rentals, the last two or three years there has been an increase in the rental of 10,000*l.*, and in 1892, the rental from the Bridge House Estates amounted to 90,000*l.* per annum.

7820. That is an increase of the rental?—Yes.

7821. But the property itself has not increased?—Not any increase. Of course the Corporation and the Bridge House Estates Trust cannot purchase property without a license in mortmain.

7822. Has it a power of sale?—No, not a power of sale.

7823. (Lord Farrer.) The Committee; have not the Corporation a power of sale?—No, it always been held that we have no power of sale.

7824. That is of the Bridge House Estates?—The Bridge House Estates; if any money is paid by a railway company for any of their property, it is always paid into the Chancery Division of the High Court under the disability clause of the Lands Clauses Act.

7825. Have not the Corporation a power of sale in respect of their estates?—Well, we have held that they have not.

7826. The Corporation have not?—No; and it is precisely the same with the Bridge House Estates, where property is taken, the proceeds are paid into the Chancery Division of the High Court.

7827. So they never alienate?—Of course, the proceeds are invested in the usual way in the funds, and are re-invested in the purchase of lands, but the Corporation cannot alienate its freehold property.

7828. (Chairman.) I see; although you have no power to sell, a long while ago you presumed to lease some part of the Bridge House Estates for 999 years?—Yes, that is rather curious. I do not know why that was done, although it looks very much like some little private arrangement for the public benefit.

7829. (Mr. Smith.) It is practically alienation?—At a very small rental.

7830. (Chairman.) How much was the property itself, do you know?—I do not know; I give the date.

7831. 1698?—1698, yes. Of course, not only railway companies have taken our property, but some special Acts have been obtained; I think the South Polytechnic Institution acquired some land for educational purposes.

7832. (Mr. Crawford.) Sion College?—Sion College.

7833. (Lord Farrer.) The London County Council?—Yes, the London County Council.

7834. (Mr. Smith.) The School Board I should think?—The School Board have taken land under their Act of Parliament; the South London Polytechnic took the land and buildings under a special Act and entirely for the purposes of public education.

7835. The annual rental of your Bridge House Estates is over 90,000*l.*?—That is so, 92,000*l.* Of course it is all charged with the expenses of re-building Blackfriars Bridge, and purchasing Southwark Bridge, and erecting the Tower Bridge, which has cost a large amount.

7836. There is a very considerable debt at present?—Yes, sir, but very good security.

7837. Oh, yes, I know.

7838. (Lord Farrer.) Are you paying off debt?—There is so much paid off every year, the bonds are drawn.

7839. On the Bridge House Estates?—On the Bridge House Estates, the Tower Bridge, yes.

7840. Is there any regular rule for paying off?—Yes, every year there are so many bonds drawn, and those are paid off.

7841. (Mr. Smith.) That is prescribed by your Act of Parliament?—That is prescribed by our Act of Parliament.

7842. (Lord Farrer.) Do you calculate that when that is paid off that there will be a surplus upon the Bridge House Estates?—Well, no doubt as soon as it is paid off we shall begin to do something else for the benefit of the Londoners; perhaps build a new bridge, or tunnel, or something.

7843. (Mr. Crawford.) Of course you have got the maintenance of the Tower Bridge to consider?—But I say after that is provided for.

7844. But the maintenance?—The maintenance of the Tower Bridge is very heavy; I should think it would be between 5,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* a year.

7845. It is estimated at 6,000*l.*?—It would be about that, 6,000*l.*; of course they would be obliged to have double gangs of men.

7846. (Lord Farrer.) It is under a special Act of Parliament that you apply the money to the Tower Bridge?—Under a special Act of Parliament.

7847. But the ruling idea has been that this money is to be applied to something of that description, to a bridge or something of that kind?—The trust of the Bridge House Estates is for the support and maintenance of London Bridge.

7848. Yes, I know?—Those are nearly all the words used in almost all our title deeds for 1200 years, a number of which I have inspected. They have always used these words "for the support of London Bridge," or the "maintenance of London Bridge," or the "sustentation of London Bridge;" but after that when the estates of the Bridge House began to increase then the Corporation looked about to see for what other purpose they could apply the estates for the benefit of the citizens and for the benefit of London at large. And therefore they took under their control, first, Blackfriars Bridge; they expended a large sum of money repairing Blackfriars Bridge, and when the Thames Embankment was commenced it rather endangered the foundations; the Corporation thought it would be a wiser thing instead of repairing the bridge again to build a new bridge, and under the Blackfriars Bridge Act the erection of that bridge was charged on the Bridge House Estates.

7849. An analogous purpose to that of London Bridge?—An analogous purpose to that of London Bridge.

7850. (Chairman.) A cy-près purpose?—A cy-près purpose.

7851. (Mr. Crawford.) In all these cases the Corporation have done that voluntarily?—Entirely voluntarily.

7852. (Chairman.) Under the sanction of Parliament?—They applied to Parliament for sanction to carry the schemes out.

7853. (Lord Farrer.) But that fund, notwithstanding all these new Acts, is always treated as applicable to purposes of that kind?—To purposes of that kind; it has never been applied in any way to the City's cash or for the benefit of the Corporation themselves. They have carried out the trust I think most faithfully and most honourably.

7854. (Chairman.) The north end of the Tower Bridge is not in the City, is it?—It will be in the City for the purposes of the Bridge, that is to say, it will be under the control of the City Police.

7855. (Lord Farrer.) But it is beyond the City limits?—It is beyond the City limits, yes; the City boundary ends at the Minories, and there is a very small piece, I think about 50 yards between that and the bridge, and that the Corporation will have the control over.

7856. (Mr. Smith.) By statute?—By statute, by the Tower Bridge Act.

7857. Geographically it is within the limits of the Liberty of the Tower, is it not?—Whitechapel.

7858. (Chairman.) That is the first bridge you have had anything to do with, the north end of which is outside the geographical limits of the City?—Yes, it is.

7859. The south ends of the bridges are all outside the City?—The south ends of the bridges are all outside the City.

7860. What are the limits of the City in the Thames?—Well, when this bridge has been erected it will be under the control of the Corporation. The bed of the river belongs to the Crown, I suppose, but in all these Acts, for instance, in the case of London Bridge, we have the control up to the abutments.

7861. On the Surrey side?—On the Surrey side; the same with the Blackfriars.

7862. (Mr. Smith.) And the bed of the Thames would be Crown property?—Yes.

7863. (Lord Farrer.) It belongs to the Conservators of the Thames, as successors to the Crown or the City.

7864. (Mr. Crawford.) The Corporation used to be Conservators of the Thames, and there was a dispute between the Corporation and the Crown as to the ownership of the bed of the river, but the Corporation settled that dispute by an agreement made between the two bodies, by which a certain sum was paid to the Crown, and eventually that was followed by the Act of 1857 which created a new Board of Conservancy.

7865. ((Mr. Smith.) I rather wanted to get an answer to Lord Farrer's question whether it goes to the middle of the river, whether the City claims the right of an ordinary riparian proprietor.

7866. (Mr. Crawford.) I am sure that could not be so under the terms of the Act, and there was a special agreement come to, embodied in a subsequent statute?—The Corporation paid the Crown for erecting the abutments on the foreshore.

7867. (Chairman.) And the foreshore and the river above the City belong to the Crown?—Yes.

7868. When the Thames Embankment was built the foreshore was claimed by the Crown?—Yes, by the Crown. The Corporation paid the Crown for the erection of the abutments of the Tower Bridge on the foreshore.

7869. (Mr. Smith.) Then you have no rights probably as to the shore itself?—I think not.

7870. (Mr. Crawford.) Could you give me a reference to the clause in the Act which compels the City to pay off so much per annum? I was under the impression that that was a voluntary arrangement on the part of the City?—It might be a voluntary arrangement. I think you are right. I think it was a voluntary arrangement.

7871. I think it was?—Yes, you are quite right; the Corporation raised a larger sum of money than was required for the actual wants of the bridge; on this ground the Committee of the House of Commons thought that the interest of the bondholders should be looked after; therefore the old bondholders should be paid off. Then they paid off all the old bondholders on the Bridge House Estates, and raised a larger loan which provided for that as well as the expense of the bridge. As I have just said, now these bonds are drawn every year in the month of March.

7872. (Mr. Smith.) The Bridge House Estates, I suppose, are able easily to make their annual payments; they have no other demand on the finances of the Corporation?—None.

7873. It is not like the City's cash which is liable to a number of demands for services?—No, it is strictly administered for the purposes of erection and maintenance of bridges and other powers and duties that the Corporation have under Acts of Parliament.

7874. So far it is conducted on the principles of sound finance?—Yes.

7875. (Mr. Crawford.) The Act of 1885 gave an alternative to the City; they could either borrow under the ordinary clauses of the Act or under the Local Loans Act of 1875?—Under the Local Loans Act of 1875, which required that the loans should be repaid within 60 years, which is the period under the previous clause, but it is a voluntary arrangement on their part.

7876. (Mr. Smith.) They borrowed on an actual mortgage of their freehold estates.

7877. (Mr. Crawford.) Yes.

7878. (Mr. Smith.) That is not quite the same thing.

7879. (Lord Farrer.) I suppose there would be nothing to prevent the Corporation coming to Parliament and saying: "We have all the bridges that are "necessary and all the ferries that are necessary. "There are certain other purposes in which London is "very much interested; we ask Parliament to allow "us to apply these funds to those purposes"?—No doubt they could; but I think there will be many opportunities for making ferries and tunnels for a good many years to come before we apply to Parliament for that.

As Comptroller and Vice-Chamberlain I have to try the apprentices in the absence of the Chamberlain; and I thought, that from what fell from Colonel Sewell yesterday, that the late Home Secretary thought that was a court that was very beneficial, and my experience is that the court is most beneficial in the interest of the apprentices. It is really an open court; but of course no one knows when it is going to be held, so very few people come except those who are interested. The apprentice is not brought up before the police magistrate, which is the case outside the City; he is brought before the Chamberlain or myself, and no one knows that he has been sent to prison, it is kept perfectly quiet, and the boys' character is not in any way damaged.

7880. (Mr. Smith.) As far as apprentices are concerned amalgamation would seem to be desirable, so that your jurisdiction should be extended?—I cannot tell you about amalgamation outside the City, but it is the feeling of the Corporation, I think, that it would be very desirable to have the jurisdiction of this court extended.

7881. I only seized upon it as the first word I had heard from the City in favour of amalgamation.

7882. (Mr. Crawford.) You have been acquainted, of course, with the finances of the City for a great number of years?—Yes.

7883. And the mode in which the accounts are kept?—Yes.

7884. Can you tell us whether there has been any expression of approval on the part of any Government authority with regard to the mode in which the City's accounts are kept?—I have always heard that some years ago there was a Committee of the House of Commons upon the mode of keeping the Government accounts, and they recommended that they should be kept in the same way as the City's accounts were kept; that is to say, they would adopt the mode of "charge and discharge."

7885. Now with your knowledge of the Corporation's assets and liabilities outstanding, for you have the preparation of the bonds, do you agree with Mr. Payne that at the present day the financial position of the Corporation of London is better really than it has been for some years?—Certainly; far better.

7886. And that there is more than ample security for any outstanding loans?—Ample security; any one who advanced money on City bonds would be perfectly safe. I may say that my uncle—who was formerly Comptroller—by his will authorised his executors to invest money in City bonds. As he had been Comptroller for 50 years he knew all about the finance of the Corporation and was evidently satisfied with the security.

7887. You are aware that it is constantly the practice with the Court of Chancery to authorise the Corporation trustees to invest in City bonds?—Certainly.

7888. And is it not also a fact that in connection with the various Market Acts and otherwise the accounts of the Corporation have been continually brought before committees of the Houses of Parliament, and the late Chamberlain examined in regard to them?—Yes, certainly.

7889. (Lord Farrer.) I think we were told that the City had been considering the question whether, if their expenditure increased, they would be able to supplement their revenues by a rate?—No, I do not remember that. There was some talk some time ago of making a rate for the expenses of the lunatic asylum, and it was brought before the Court of Common Council, I believe. I think I am correct in stating so, and the Court of Common Council said, "No, we "will not charge the citizens of London for keeping "and maintaining the lunatic asylum; we will keep "it out of own funds," and they have been paying for it ever since.

7890. I think Mr. Payne told us, that last year they had been considering the question, and he thought there was 57,000*l.* a year which might be raised by rate, if necessary.

7891. (Mr. Crawford.) I think that arose in this way, Lord Farrer. It arose in reference to the dispute between the City Guardians and the London County Council, as to what should be thrown on the general county rate in London. It was found that there were certain matters hitherto included by the London County Council by mistake in their county rate, which, being exempted, necessitated the making of a special county rate; and that these matters, supposing they had been met by rate, would amount to the sums Mr. Payne mentioned, and would be met, as he says, by the City out of a county rate. But there has been no desire or intention on the part of the Corporation to avail themselves of the power. That is what I gathered.

Mr. J. A. Brand.

19 Jan. 1894.

7892. (Lord Farrer.) Could you (I asked the question of Mr. Payne yesterday), give us a statement on one sheet of the whole liabilities and assets of the City, including in that all the matters for which the City is liable?—I heard Mr. Payne's evidence. I think he said he would apply to the Committee for that—for their sanction.

7893. He represented the Chamberlain. But could you give it us if they consent, or would you prefer that we should ask them?—I think, sir, it would be better for you to ask for it, and then it would be submitted to the Special Committee.

7894. We have not any such statement on behalf of the City anywhere, whilst in the case of other corporations we have a distinct statement of assets and liabilities; we have no such statement in the case of the City?—Well, the City have so much land, I suppose they would have to have the land valued.

7895. That is an asset, of course?—An asset; from my own knowledge and my own experience I should say that the Corporation have ample assets.

7896. Well, it would be very satisfactory to have that?—Not the slightest doubt; large assets.

7897. If that is so as you stated, it would be very much to the advantage of the City if you were to publish such an account?—Mr. Payne stated that he had authorised an application.

7898. (Mr. Crawford.) What I suggested was that we should send a formal communication to the Town Clerk to furnish the Royal Commissioners with such a statement—give it officially—I think that would be the better way of doing it?—I think you would get that very easily if you took the rents of the City and put them at 27 years' purchase.

7899. (Mr. Smith.) More than that?—More than that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. A. Murray.

Mr. Andrew Murray, the City Surveyor, called in and examined.

7900. (Chairman.) You are the City Surveyor, Mr. Murray?—I am, sir.

7901. How long have you held that office?—About three years, nearly.

7902. Had you any connexion with the City before that?—Yes; I have been nearly 40 years in the service of the City; for 17 years before I was appointed Surveyor I was Chief Assistant in the same office.

7903. You have worked up to your present position?—Yes.

7904. Will you tell us what your duties are?—Briefly, I have to attend all meetings of the Court of Aldermen and the Court of Common Council, and the several committees; and during the last year I find I attended some 146 meetings, and made about 500 reports. My duties generally are those of an architect and surveyor—making surveys and valuations of the estates, and advising as to lettings; preparing all plans necessary for leases, and surveying property agreed to be let to see that the terms of the contracts whether for new buildings or repairs are carried out; directing sales of old materials, settling questions of party walls and other matters of dispute between tenants; examining all drawings relating to intended new buildings and improvements, and regularly every year surveying premises the leases of which are expiring within the next three years, and preparing schedules of dilapidations thereon.

7905. Your duty extends to all the property of the City—whether City lands, Bridge House Estates, or of any other character?—Or of any other character.

7906. What is the gross number of houses and offices you have to look after?—Well, the total of all kinds is something over 5,000—5,467 buildings—houses, warehouses, shops, and other descriptions of buildings.

7907. What is the exact method of supervision you carry out?—Well, on an agreement being entered into, whether for a building lease or a rack rental lease, the premises, the works, are supervised regularly within the term allowed in the agreement. To a building lease we generally allow 12 months, and three or four times during that period the building would be supervised by myself or one of my assistants, and the state of matters reported. Similarly, but within a shorter period, with rack rental houses as to repairs.

7908. You inspect the houses from time to time that are out on lease. That is to see that the covenants of the lease are observed?—Yes.

7909. Have you had trouble on that matter?—No, on the whole. There are always some people you never can get to do anything.

7910. Has the City suffered in past times by negligent supervision?—Well, I think in past times the supervision was not so rigorous as it should have been, especially in the case of smaller property which was let in blocks to the class of house-farmers who are generally more or less an impecunious class, and if they do not do the works at the time there is no chance of getting repairs or money out of them.

7911. You had middle-men?—Middle-men, yes.

7912. Have you any middle-men now?—Well, we have some, but on the expiration of leases comprising small-class property, the Committee has decided to take it in hand, to see to the property, and collect the rents directly.

7913. You keep as much as possible in direct relation with the occupier?—Yes.

7914. And your leases contain covenants against assignment without consent?—Yes.

7915. And against sub-letting?—No; not against sub-letting.

7916. But in a case of sub-letting, do you look after the original lessees?—Yes.

7917. Pretty closely?—Yes.

7918. And have you much to do in connexion with exchange, or selling, or buying?—Yes, not lately. Under an Act of Parliament, for a railway or otherwise requiring property, we should have to sell under the powers of that Act in the same way as where we promote Bills to buy.

7919. And sometimes you have exchanges?—Sometimes we have exchanges between ourselves and other bodies or other owners.

7920. Have you had work to do of your own in the way of building?—Yes.

7921. Or repairing?—Well, we have a great deal of repairing; some of our own jobbing work repairs is done by a staff under my own direction. New buildings are done by contract always. Constantly some business is going on. During the past year we have had a new school for girls—Ward's school.
